We do not fear the antagonism of the agricultural interests, because there is nothing in our demands that will not at the same time promote the interests of the farmer. The natural market for American wool is America; and as the cheapening of the products will necessarily promote their consumption and curtail importations, whilst it will at the same time encourage the use of wool instead of adulterants, we can not see why a change of the law which would vouchsafe to us steadier employment could fail to be a benefit to the wool grower.

The removal of the duties would also open the foreign markets to greater American competition, which would so measurably drive up prices there as to neutralize the advantage the foreign manufacturer has from cheap wool. We have too good an opinion of the intelligence and acumen of the farmers to believe for a moment, as the protectionists profess to do, that they would antagonize their own interests by asking for the removal of duties from those things which consume their wool if such duties were necessary to maintain the woolen industry of the country.

A return to the tariff of 1867 would in no wise be a remedy for the evils we suffer from, as the same incongruities, inequalities, and discriminations against labor characterized every feature of that law, and in some respects it was even worse.

Hence we request that wool and all other raw materials be placed on the free-list, and that in arranging the schedule of duties on the finished or partly manufactured articles labor should be duly considered. Yarns, for instance, are the raw materials of the cloth-maker, and if both yarn and cloth are placed under the same duty it will be a discrimination against the cloth, because in the manufacture of the cloth the yarn will lose by waste and shrinkage in weaving, dyeing, and finishing, and hence the duty per pound on the yarn will somewhat exceed the duty per pound on the cloth, and there would therefore be an inducement to import the cloth in preference to the yarn, as it is now preferable to import the yarn instead of the wool, and the yarn spinner would have all the protection and the cloth weavers, dyers, and finishers none at all as against the yarn importations.

While it is as yet difficult to obtain positive data as to the differences in the wages between this country and Europe whereon to base a scientific schedule, it is yet safe to follow the line here indicated, and if the duties are fixed to equal the entire labor cost in the product no interest will have any cause to complain if we wish to come nearer to justice.

With free raw materials we will soon demonstrate our superiority in the industrial field, and do our share in making this country what nature appears to have destined it to be, the workshop of the world and the ruler of the seas.

Hence patriotism joins with national pride in appealing to the law-makers of the nation to give to labor those measures of fair play and justice to which it is entitled as the foundation-rock of our national greatness and prosperity.

In the name and on behalf of the textile workers of Philadelphia, Pa.

F. H. HERWIG.

PHILADELPHIA, March 26, 1888.

We, the undersigned, committee of the Workingmen's Tariff Reform Association, No. 1, of Philadelphia, principally composed of textile workers, upon due and deliberate consideration of the foregoing memorial, do hereby fully and freely indorse the same, and request that its recommendation be granted as a simple act of justice, not only to us but to the whole people, and we will ever pray.

Mr. KELLEY. I am glad the gentleman will give the petition prominence and permit me to explain.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I wish it to be distinctly understood that if the gentleman can answer the argument of the petition I am going to put in it will add greatly to the well-earned reputation of the gentleman as an orator.

Mr. KELLEY. We will see.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to remark that as soon as I can find the paper I will have read some of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], in which he speaks of the shoddy industry in a very different manner from that in which he now speaks of it.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rattans and reeds, manufactured, but not made up into finished articles.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the word "rattans," in lines 174 and 175.

The majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, who, as the House has observed during this debate, know everything, are undoubtedly entirely familiar with this industry, and are undoubtedly equally familiar with the effect of this provision. It is possible, however, that the House is not familiar with the effect of this clause, and as those persons interested in it, many of whom I represent, and as I myself had no opportunity to appear before the committee, I am going to trespass on the time of the House for a few moments to explain exactly what this provision means and what its result will be.

Rattan, which is grown in China and does not grow in this country, comes in free. I think it always has come in free. The rattan, of which I hold a specimen in my hand, is used in two forms. The outside is used for chair-cane. It is stripped off in this form [illustrating]. It is the ordinary stuff used for seating chairs. When the outside of the rattan is thus stripped off there is left what is called the pith or reed of the rattan, which I have here [holding it up].

The late Cyrus Wakefield invented or developed processes and machinery by which those piths were used in making furniture, and the chair-canes were stripped from the rattans. Out of his inventions and processes a large industry has been developed. The village in which he lived has become a prosperous town, supported in large measure by this industry; and large public buildings there bear witness to the munificence of the man whose talents and ingenuity founded a new industry in this country.

The process of making these piths and stripping these chair-canes from the original rattan is a principal value of the business. This paragraph proposes to put the manufactured reed, that is, the pith and the chair-cane, on the free-list. The chief competitors whom our manufacturers and workingmen have to meet in this business are the Chinese. Some of the furniture is made in Germany, but it is inconsiderable, I think, in amount, and the furniture, moreover, still remains protected; but in the manufacture of the reeds and chair-cane, which lie at the root of the business, the real competitors and the competitors to be feared are the Chinese. The chair-cane is stripped by the Chinese and used for baling tea chests and everything of that kind.

It is in very common use. The result is that they will sell the pith out of which our furniture is made for almost nothing. So eager are they to get control of this business that they have sent men to San Francisco, where the Wakefield Rattan Company has a branch house, and have offered, in order to get in there and learn the processes of this business, to work for nothing. To-day if you pass that paragraph you take directly from the hands of a large body of skilled mechanics the employment which they have in making chair-canes and reed-piths and give it to the Chinese. That is the precise, direct effect of that paragraph. From a small industry it has grown in the single town of Wakefield into the employment of a million and a quarter of capital. In that single town they pay $300,000 a year of wages and employ 700 hands in their factory.

The same company has a branch, as I have said, in San Francisco. The business is extended; it is no monopoly, and there is no "trust." Haywood Bros. & Co., at Gardner, Mass., have $1,250,000 in the business, and employ 1,200 hands. W. F. Whitney, of South Ashburnham, Mass., has a $50,000 business, and employs 150 hands. The New Haven Rattan Company have $25,000 capital invested, and employ 75 hands. The Union Rattan Manufacturing Company, of New York City, have $150,000 capital, and employs 150 hands. E. Newton & Son, of New York City, have $25,000 capital, and employ 50 hands. The Chicago Rattan and Reed Company have $50,000 in the business, and employ 100 hands. These are the principal people engaged in the business in this country, and these statistics, I may say, are furnished to me as close estimates by the manager of the Wakefield Company. There are many others engaged in the business, but they are small makers. It is a business which can be carried on very well without large capital, by men of small means, employing only a few hands. Now, sir, I will read a further extract from the letter of Mr. Lang, the manager of the Wakefield Company. He says:

The effect upon our business, should articles manufactured of rattan or rattan reeds be admitted free of duty, would be a tendency to reduce wages——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HATCH. By leave of the gentleman, I will move that the committee rise, simply for the purpose of correcting an error made in regard to the agricultural appropriation bill, and which it is necessary to correct in order to get the bill into conference. It will occupy the House but a moment.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the collection of revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, in asking on yesterday evening that the House agree to the conference requested by the Senate on the agricultural appropriation bill, I was under the impression that the Senate had asked for a conference and had appointed their conferees, but upon examination of the bill I found that I was in error. I now move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The conferees have already been appointed?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

TARIFF.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] be permitted to continue for five minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I will continue the extract I was reading from the letter of Mr. Long. He says, further:

We have a branch house and factory in San Francisco. Last year several attempts were made there by Chinese to bribe our foreman to admit them to employment, so that they could get an idea of our way of doing things. One offered $75 and to work three months for nothing. We have, or did have, in our possession photographs of chairs which came from Hong-Kong, and which illustrated to the minutest detail several of our patterns. This is conclusive evidence that the Chinese are at our heels, and that a specific duty should be levied upon chair cane, rattan reed or piths.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] suggested to me that there was already a duty on rattan, and it so appeared on the Treasury schedule, but upon looking at the comparison of the pending bill with the existing law, I find that the duty is only upon manufactured rattan, as I stated. I was quite certain that I could not be mistaken about raw rattan being on the free-list.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the result of the use of these piths in this business has been the employment of a hitherto unused part of the rattan, and the introduction of a graceful and cheap furniture which has continually fallen in price, and has been of great advantage to the people of this country. The Chinaman can put these piths into this country, after using the chair-cane for their packing purposes, at almost nothing, and the result will be to take the work out of the hands of just so many American workingmen and give it to the Chinese. I do not mean to say that the business will not go on. Undoubtedly the business of making the furniture will go on. But I do mean to say that you will greatly injure the business, will take from just so many American working men their employment, and lower the wages of just so many more, and in doing so, will simply benefit the Chinese, a people whom we have excluded from our shores, whose labor we do not propose to admit here, but which it is now proposed to admit in the concrete form of a manufactured article. Mr. Chairman, this blow falls upon this industry because it is a small industry, because it is a Northern industry, and because it is not believed there are many votes in it, and the blow that strikes it is as ignorant as it is cruel. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has certainly adduced very extraordinary statistics for the consideration of this House. He has built up here some millions of dollars of industry, and the entire amount of the unmanufactured material on which he has built this vast aggregation of industry is less than half a million dollars. There is an error somewhere, beyond all question.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand what your point is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I want to understand how he can get millions of dollars of products when there is nothing complicated in handling rattan, and when our entire imports of rattan——

Mr. LODGE. I did not say "millions of dollars of products."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think your statement will clearly show it.

Mr. LODGE. I said three millions of capital were employed in the manufacture. That was my only reference to "millions."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Does the gentleman mean to say that three millions of capital do not give rise to at least three millions of products? Then the gentleman stands in this attitude: He asserts that three millions of capital are employed in working up $464,000 worth of rattan and produces less than three millions of products.

Mr. LODGE. The rest of it is labor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then three millions of capital, with the attendant labor, are engaged in making the light wickerwork that requires only $464,940 of the imported material.

Mr. LODGE. There is no duty on rattan; it is on the free-list.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I did not say there was any duty; I said that the cost of the rattan imported (and the gentleman if he turns to the import tables will see I am correct) was $464,940.

Mr. LODGE. What of it?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Your statement is absurd—perfectly absurd on its face.

Mr. LODGE. But your saying it is absurd does not make it absurd. The value of the raw material is no guide to the value of the manufactured product.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But the official fact is as I state it, and this is a remarkable as well as a sample case if it be not absurd. The gentleman gets up here with another equally absurd plea. He wants us now to take this rattan with the outer coverings and the pith and make the manufacturers of New England pay for 10,000 miles of ocean transportation and 3,000 miles of land transportation upon what is really nothing more than the sawdust that is in the material, in order that they may have something to work up. Sir, if it takes all that labor and all that capital to work up this little pittance, I say it is time that we should do something more for the laborers of the gentleman's State than to make them pay for 13,000 miles of transportation upon the waste material that does not enter into the product of their labor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The amount of the rattan worked up is perfectly trifling in connection with this question. The great value of this product, as the gentleman will find, is in the furniture. Upon the rattan goes the labor. This parting of the chair-cane pith, as I tried to make clear, is only a part of the process. That does not touch the furniture.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Does not the gentleman know that the furniture is protected?

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly aware of that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman made no such line of argument. He argued here that $3,000,000 of capital were engaged in working up this rattan.

Mr. LODGE. Why, Mr. Chairman, I can not be responsible for the gentleman's ignorance of industries which he has never seen.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman need not concern himself about any responsibility for me. He put himself on record as saying that $3,000,000 of capital was engaged in working up this rattan. I am perfectly willing to let the statement of the gentleman be discussed by intelligent people anywhere. I say it is a perfectly absurd proposition. Those furniture factories——

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor. I stated that three millions of capital were engaged in making rattan furniture. It is perfectly true; there is no question about it. A part of that process—I hope the gentleman will gradually get to understand it—is the conversion of the raw rattan into the piths and the chair-canes. After that comes the manufacture into furniture, which is protected. I said especially—and every gentleman who did me the honor to listen to me knows I so said—that this removal of duty was not going to stop the business. I said the business of making rattan furniture would continue; but I said a part of that business would be taken from American workmen and given to the Chinese. That is the opinion of men who have given their lives to this business, who know it through and through, who have to meet the competition. There may be in Arkansas factories engaged in this business which the gentleman may understand, and from which he draws his statistics. I take only those of which I can get a list.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not believe a single word of the statistical statement—I say this in no personal sense—I do not question that the gentleman believes it—that $3,000,000 of capital are engaged in working up less than half a million dollars' worth of rattan in this country; and when you analyze that statement I think you will find that you have $3,000,000 making up rattan furniture and a large lot of other kinds of furniture in the East.

Mr. LODGE. I never said that, Mr. Chairman. I said there are millions of dollars in the rattan furniture business, and whether the gentleman believes it or not is to me a matter of complete indifference.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend the amendment so as to strike out the words in lines 174–5, "manufactured, but not made up into finished articles." I do so because the present free-list contains rattans and reeds.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be again read.

Mr. FARQUHAR'S amendment was again read.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that the importation of rattans and reeds, while it belongs to the chair-cane and to the manufacture originally established, the capital invested in it has in the last twenty-five years increased in the cognate industries of the country until 114 concerns were directly using rattan and reeds, and these 114 concerns produce annually eighteen millions of finished products. One house employs 600 hands, and turns out annually 8,000 gross of parasol handles, 6,000 gross of umbrella handles, and 2,000 gross of rattan walking-canes. Every feature of the imported reed and rattan is used. Its pith, its fiber, and all have gone into eight great American industries.

I wish to say to the House all these industries have grown up since the Morrill tariff came into existence. They employ now, as I know from the president of the Cane-Workers' Association in America, a man whose honesty and word can not be doubted—that over 12,000 industrious men, earning from $1 to $2.75 per day, are employed.

This industry has been domesticated in this land. It has entered into the ornamentation of our every-day life. It is in fact a new industry. There is that one fear that enters into the minds of these workingmen—I am speaking for them. I know none of these owners of patents, Mr. Wakefield or any other. I believe, however, the patent expired a year or two ago.

Now, whatever the result may be certainly under this entering-wedge—and I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the fact there is one clause inside this Mills bill which shows the animus of its free-trade sentiment, and that is this one in reference to rattans and reeds in favor of Asiatic labor. That bears the mark of the free-trader and none more so than the last part of the clause we are now considering. What is the intention? Simply by putting rattans and reeds on the free-list to admit a few manufactured articles you cut down one-half of the wages of the American workingmen. It is an entering-wedge. It is unfair in business and it is not fair in politics.

I want to say if the committee has blundered, possibly in not knowing this industry, they have certainly stabbed American labor, and although it might not be widespread in its effects, it is one of the attacks made on the other side which strike at the American workingman.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LODGE. I wish simply, Mr. Chairman, without extending the discussion, to read a few extracts from the testimony of Mr. Cyrus Wakefield, who was the inventor of some of these processes. In his testimony in 1882 he says:

The manfacture of reeds has grown up in this country chiefly in the last twenty-five years. The capital now directly employed in this business is not less than $2,500,000—that of the corporation I represent being one million, and the number of persons directly employed is not less than two thousand. It is now proposed to destroy or reduce the duty on one of the products of this industry, namely, "chair-cane."

That was in 1882, six years ago—

This, as the gentlemen are well aware, is only one of the manufactured products of rattan, being the outer rind or shell which by ingenious machinery (the patents on which have now expired) is separated from the pith or reed, dressed, shaved, and stripped into strands suitable for the seating of chairs and other like purposes.

That bears out fully all I have said. Three millions of capital are employed in making rattan furniture, wholly or in part formed of rattan pith and chair-cane. Part of that product of rattans is reed and pith, another is chair-cane. By this clause it is proposed to put chair-cane and rattan pith on the free-list and give the work of making chair-cane and reed pith to the Chinese. That is the whole case. I hope this time I have made it clear so that any one can understand it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman has just substantiated what he charged me with erroneously stating awhile ago.

The 10 per cent. charge on the refuse part of this product is just that much of a hinderance and burden on the working people engaged in working rattan into the furniture they make for use. It is to their relief this would come. It would, with the change in furniture, be that much taken from the proprietor and added to the laboring man and consumers of the country. I think that we are ready now for a vote on this amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. Do I understand the gentleman to mean that he understands he is helping the American workingmen by taking away from them the material on which they can work or the means by which they work?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. There is 10 per cent. simply for the machine. The real labor is in putting the material together as furniture, and if the great body of the workingmen who put the material into the furniture can get this raw material that much cheaper, it is just that much better for them in the labor they are called upon to perform.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I understand the gentleman would relieve the workingmen by stopping the machines on which they are engaged?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The point involved is too immaterial to weigh against the benefit conferred upon the great body of the working and other people.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted and no further amendment is in order until the pending amendments are disposed of, which are substantial amendments.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 66.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I demand tellers. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and Mr. FARQUHAR were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 72.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring upon the amendment of Mr. LODGE, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paintings in oil or water colors and statuary not otherwise provided for; but the term "statuary" shall be understood to include professional productions of a statuary or of a sculptor only.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to strike out from line 176 to line 179, inclusive.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BRYCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to put pictures and statuary back on the free-list. We practically allow the product of European authors to come in free on the principle that cheap literature is a benefit to the people. Why not admit pictures for a like cause, since it seems to me they are less the luxuries of the rich than the educators of the poor? Good pictures encourage the artistic talent that lies dormant in a country, thus giving occupation to numbers of people, and by building up a native school they will tend to save our going to Europe at all for our purchases.

As one of the early members of the Students' Art League of New York, I am somewhat familiar with the growth of these native schools. Originally the members of this society were the pupils of the National Academy, but so intolerant were the officers of the latter institution—so bitterly opposed to the more progressive forms of art instruction—that the students rebelled, and, following the example of our forefathers, set up independently. To-day they are in a prosperous condition, and the Students' Art League is destined to assume a leading part in the artistic development of our country. Take, however, any young man or woman of this training school; they are generally obliged to finish their course of instruction in Europe because of the comparative scarcity of museums and good pictures here. Now this instruction which they receive in Europe is given to them gratis, and I know that I voice their sentiments when I request that a reciprocity should be shown by allowing the works of European artists to come in free.

Mr. Chairman, I ask this not alone on the principle of common fairness, but rather for the purpose of building up, by increasing the number of museums in America, schools of instruction at home, and thus making our art education cheaper for our poor boys. As a nation we are rapidly developing, building up great cities and seats of trade. It becomes of paramount importance that our development should be on lines that will appeal to the taste of future generations. This can only be accomplished by having the best examples always before our eyes, the best pictures, statuary, and works of beauty generally, which all enter into the science of architecture.

Mr. Chairman, these are not sentimental considerations. The beautiful contributes to the sum total of happiness in the world and lifts up to a higher enjoyment of life those very classes who have as now so little to interest them.

The rich man's gallery is in nine cases out of ten open to the poor man's enjoyment, and the rich man's picture by bequest or the mutation of events generally finds its way at last into the public museum. Increase these museums and you decrease prisons; encourage art and you encourage the growth of a healthier tone in our cities. You not alone improve the buildings in our cities, but the very parks and the streets in our cities, and will add new pleasure to those who find the streets their only home.

Mr. Chairman, I think pictures and statuary should be put back on the free-list. The American artists themselves desire to see them there, for the duty does good to no one. It is asked for by no one; it protects no one, and injures most severely those very classes whose interest a popular Government ought most zealously to guard.

The Clerk read as follows:

Stones, unmanufactured or undressed, freestone, granite, sandstone, and all building or monumental stone.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I move to strike out lines 180 and 181.

I offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, in good faith, and hope it will be adopted. Any person who would class stone unmanufactured or undressed as raw material certainly must be entirely ignorant of the manner in which it is quarried. Stone does not lie on or even near the surface, and can only be placed in the market ready for the stone-cutter's skill after the expenditure of a vast amount of labor.

In sandstone—and I speak from personal knowledge and experience—it is necessary before reaching the stone to remove the earth bank lying above, varying in depth from 15 to 35 feet. This requires labor, and the cost of this stripping is one of the expenses that add to the cost of production. For every thousand dollars' worth of stone laid on the bank, $900 at least have been expended for labor. In my district there are now ten quarries in operation. The wages paid to those employed in these quarries are from $1.50 to $2.75 per day. Those receiving $1.50 per day are the unskilled laborers who handle the pick and shovel, and are engaged in stripping off the earth, loading up the wagons, etc. The rockmen and scabblers receive from $1.75 to $2.75 per day, this work requiring skill and experience. The amount paid for wages in our quarries is from two to two and one-half times more than the wages paid in Europe or Canada. Up to this time the duty, which is but 21.22 per cent. ad valorem, has been sufficient to prevent any considerable importation, the amount collected for import duties on this article for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, being but $3,513.18.

The freight charges on the stone which is imported, coming over 3,000 miles, are less than those paid here for inland transportation of only a few miles, as it comes mostly as ballast. This committee has already, on motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], stricken out line 168, which placed marble of all kinds in block, rough or squared, on the free-list. The duty collected last year on this article was $250,588.86, and I respectfully submit to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that the reduction of the revenue being the object of this bill, it is inconsistent to leave on the protected list marble, an article which brings over seventy times more revenue, and at the same time place on the free-list sandstone, when the cost of both productions is almost exclusively the wages paid to the workingmen.

I will ask the committee whether wage-workers engaged in quarrying sandstone in my district are not as much entitled to protection as those engaged in the marble quarries in Tennessee? If anything, they should have more protection for the reason that they come into immediate competition with the articles imported. Marble, and stone of all kinds, quarried in the Western States, or any point over 500 miles from the Atlantic coast, are sufficiently protected from foreign competition by reason of the cost of freight.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to occupy the time of the House on this amendment any further, nor to enter into a discussion of what political effect it may have in the coming election on the people engaged in that industry; but I do desire, on the presentation of the facts I have given, to have the amendment fairly considered and adopted. I believe if this character of stone is placed on the free-list that it will be imported largely into this county and come in competition with the people who are engaged in its production in my district and also in other parts of the Eastern States, and as it is merely a question of protecting the present wages paid to the men employed in it, I ask the committee to strike out the lines and allow the present duty to remain.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, there is a marked difference between marble and stone of the character enumerated in these lines, marble being more costly, and freight that might be a perfectly ample protection on cheap stone may not be an adequate protection for the more costly kinds; and that difference should be distinctly kept in view.

I think it very likely that gentlemen will find upon investigation that the freight on stone of the character herein enumerated will amount to as much as the wage per ton for getting it out.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would like to state to the gentleman for his information that this character of stone which comes in now is free as far as freight is concerned, because it comes as ballast.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is doubtless stated over and over again in countries like protected Germany that everything that comes from America comes as ballast, and it is stated in protected America that pretty much everything that comes from Germany and other such countries is ballast. And yet gentlemen state that we pay $150,000,000 a year freight on articles that go annually between us and other countries.

Mr. BRUMM. But the marble comes from Italy—free trade.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, marble comes from Italy, and marble comes as ballast, we are told, and the Italian will no doubt tell you that your wheat goes as ballast to Italy. It is all ballast when gentlemen have anything to protect.

Mr. LEHLBACH. But does not the gentleman agree with me that more than 90 per cent. of the cost of production of stone is the wages paid, whether it be stone or marble?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am not willing to say that that is true of marble; but whether it be true of sandstone or not I hold that the difference is made up in freight, which is, perhaps, more than the wage paid for the quarrying, and therefore I do not see where the difference comes in.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It makes just this difference——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It makes this difference, that you simply add the tariff to the proper price, so that the consumer must pay more than he ought to pay, and thus consumption and production are lessened, wages are lessened, and the wage-worker and consumer alike are unnecessarily and unjustly deprived of money for the proprietor.

As for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], who is a member of the Ways and Means Committee, but who is not now in the House, I will say to the gentleman that he opposed any duty upon marble. Marble is produced in Vermont, marble is produced, I believe, in Massachusetts, and it is produced in New York, if I mistake not. It is produced in my own State. I was in favor of free marble. It is produced in Tennessee, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] was in favor of free marble. Not only from the several Northern States, but from one Southern State, Georgia, have we heard a desire for a duty on marble.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Why did your Committee on Ways and Means authorize the striking out of the line which put marble on the free-list; at whose request was it done? That is what I want to know.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have substantially told the gentleman I do not now remember the names of all the people who desired a duty retained, but I will tell him that the States in which marble is produced are the States through which their people and representatives urged that it would not be just at this time to put so costly an article as marble on the free-list. I have enumerated New York, Vermont, and Massachusetts. I have stated to him that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], did not ask for the retention of the duty. I did not ask it for my own State; indeed, I opposed it. If that does not satisfy the gentleman I am unable to satisfy him.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not believe the representatives from one State have any more influence in the Democratic caucus than I have. I am here to represent my district——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I say to the gentleman that a man need not be a Democrat to get impartial and just consideration on the part of the committee. We are not seeking to combine for political purposes, nor are we seeking to present a sectional bill. We are giving you a broad and patriotic bill, one appropriate to all the industries of the country. When the gentleman sees it, he can not rise to a conception higher than a mere political combine. I think the time has come for us to have a vote on this amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I can not but admire the stupendous boldness of assertion, to call it by no other name, of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] when he states that in this particular at any rate the committee has sought to give us a fair, impartial, unsectional, and patriotic bill. The stone industry is one of the great industries in my State. We employ thousands upon thousands of men in it. The granite when it is taken out of the quarry, when it is split, is transported all over this country. It is transported before it is worked up. The granite which has gone into the New York state-house, one of the largest public buildings in this country, was almost all of it taken out of the rough in my own district, transported there, and then worked up by skilled labor after it got there. The anchorage of the Brooklyn bridge was split out in the same way and taken there. All the paving-stone that is transported to the great cities on the Atlantic coast and elsewhere comes out in the rough and will go on the free-list under this section.

Mr. BRUMM. That is, the Belgian block.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes.

Now, my friend states that the difference in freight is equal to the cost of the production of the granite. Does not my friend know that the difference in freight between granite produced in New Brunswick, where the quarries of red granite and gray granite and all kinds of granite are as inexhaustible as they are in Maine, and the granite produced in the State of Maine is no difference at all? The gentleman can not stand up here and deny that granite is brought as ballast in vessels from Scotland. Is not the freight greater upon marble? Who is to compete with him? Not New Brunswick; not any contiguous foreign country; not any lands that lie next to us; not any country as near as Scotland. His marble competes with Italy. Is not the freight upon marble from Italy here greater than the freight upon granite from Scotland, even if it does not come in as ballast? The truth is, the gentlemen strike us in this bill right upon the industries that have to compete with foreign industries close along our border. Putting granite on the free-list is only another instance. They put brick on the free-list. They put lumber on the free-list. They put building stone on the free-list. This wonderfully unsectional and impartial bill puts those articles upon the free-list which are of Northern production, which are along the northern border of the country and have to compete directly with production in Canada close to our borders.

I have further to say, Mr. Chairman, that if there is any one industry in this country the value of which is almost entirely labor it is this production of granite. The quarries are worth almost nothing. You can buy them almost by the square mile. The stone lying there is raw material. That is one material that is raw material, not one that is the product of human skill or human labor; and when a paving-block is produced 90 per cent. of the cost of it is for labor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. While rough marble has been stricken out from the free-list, yet it is the purpose of the committee to take more off rough marble when we come to it in the tax-list than is the present duty on stone.

As to this matter of competition in stone, I happen to be interested somewhat in a stone quarry property near the northern border. I and my family and some friends own a quarry which furnished stone of which the court-house at Milwaukee is built, of which the Chicago Tribune building is built, of which the most beautiful church I ever saw, a church in Milwaukee, is built; and if we can not sell that stone fairly and squarely in competition with foreign stone we will not ask any subsidy to enable us to do it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Where is the gentleman's quarry?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. In the Apostle Islands, in Lake Superior.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Ah, but you do not have to compete with Canadian granite from New Brunswick there.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We will ask no subsidy to enable us to do it. And I know not what stone may be on the northern shore of the lake.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the cost of transportation from New Brunswick to where you sell your stone would be so great as to afford ample protection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Our locality has to pay the freight from the Apostle Islands down to Chicago; and does not the gentleman know that the New Brunswick stone will come as "ballast?"

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the Chair will regard the formal amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 180.

In the district which I have the honor to represent there are extensive granite quarries, in which the owners have a large amount of capital invested and employing thousands of laborers.

If this clause of the bill is permitted to stand and stone of the various kinds mentioned therein is admitted free of duty, one of two things will happen to the people who are engaged in this industry. The quarrymen will either stop operations or the wage-earners will have their wages reduced 20 per cent., or sufficient to offset the present duties. In support of that proposition I will send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, two letters that I have received from men who are engaged in the business.

The letters were read, as follows:

WESTERLY, R. I., June 18, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 14th instant is duly received, and, in reply, we submit the following:

We are not specially interested in sandstone, freestone, or marble, except as we are sometimes obliged to purchase a small quantity to complete some contract, and so you will understand us as speaking particularly of granite.

	Per week.
Common laborers in Scotland	$4.50 to $5.00
Common laborers in America	10.80 to 12.00

	Per week.
Paver-cutters in Scotland	$7.00 to $8.00
Paver-cutters in America	18.00 to 21.00
Granite-polishers in Scotland	4.50 to 5.00
Granite-polishers in America	10.20 to 11.40
Cutters (skilled) in Scotland	7.00 to 7.50
Cutters (skilled) in America	15.00 to 19.50

With granite placed on the free-list it would be impossible to compete with European cheap labor in our business, and, in our opinion, this great industry would be paralyzed.

With the enormous difference in the price of labor which we have shown, the duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem should be doubled in order to give full protection to this business. Duties on foreign imports, made for "revenue only," is a pernicious doctrine which should be repudiated, together with the party which invented it.

The vicious reduction of the tariff, as proposed in the Mills bill, would deprive intelligent labor as well as capital of its just reward and degrade all of our great industries to the foreign standard.

We regard it to be the duty of every patriot to oppose such a destructive measure.

Yours, respectfully,

THE SMITH GRANITE COMPANY.
ORLANDO R. SMITH, Treasurer.

Hon. WARREN O. ARNOLD,

DALBEATTIE GRANITE WORKS, Westerly, R. I., June 20, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 14th instant, sent to your brother, was duly handed to me, and in reply I have much pleasure in answering the inquiries contained therein so far as within my knowledge. We own two quarries in Scotland, one near Peterhead, where we procure what is known as the red Scotch granite, and the other at Dalbeattie, where we quarry the gray stone, and in all we employ about 400 men. For the last twelve or fifteen years we have been importing considerable granite to this country, both for monumental purposes and building work, the duty on same being 20 per cent. ad valorem, which makes the price on cars, New York or Boston, to be much the same as for American granite; but with the low rates of wages in Scotland we can import an all-polished monument to this country cheaper than it can be manufactured here. In my opinion, if the tariff was reduced it would simply cause a corresponding reduction in the price of work, and to enable the American quarriers to compete with those in the old country the price of wages must be reduced in proportion.

The following is the comparative rate of wages we are paying our skilled and unskilled laborers in this country and the old:

SCOTLAND.

Laborers		2 8
Quarriers	3 8 to 4	0
Stone-cutters, say		4 6

AMERICA.

Laborers	$1.50
Quarriers	$1.75 to 2.00
Stone-cutters	2.75

Those, I think, are the average; some more and some less. Now, as regards the condition of the people here and in the old country, a little incident which happened the other day will explain things probably better than anything else. When at the quarry a week or so ago I asked one of our laborers, who, by the way, has worked for us in the old country, how he liked this country and whether he preferred to live here or in Scotland. "Oh," was his reply, "since I have come to this country every day has been like Christmas"—no doubt referring to the food, where they certainly do not live nearly so well as they do here. Of course the purchasing power of money is greater in the old country than here, but withal I am sure the stone-cutters in this country would not exchange places with their brethren in England or Scotland, the great free-trade countries of the world. If there is any other information that I can give you, it will be most cheerfully tendered by,

Yours, respectfully,

DAVID M. G. NEWALL.

Hon. WARREN O. ARNOLD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "sandstone and all building," in line 181. Yesterday when we reached the item of rough marble, a gentleman upon the other side rose in his place and moved to strike out that line, taking it out of the free-list of the bill which his party had approved at St. Louis; but when we reach "sandstone," and rough building stone, objection is made to striking these out. It appears that we are ruled here, so far as this House is concerned, by the Democratic party. The Democratic party assumes to rule the country; the Democratic party, it appears, is ruled by a caucus, and it appears from the action upon this floor that the caucus is ruled by a section. It brings to mind a stanza of Burns's epitaph upon a man ruled by a woman, which, as I remember it, ran:

As father Adam first was fooled
A case that's still too common,
Here lies a man by woman ruled,
The devil ruled the woman.

[Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, we find ourselves in this predicament: the Democratic party rules the House; the caucus rules the Democratic party, and the devil rules the caucus. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, as to this item of stone, we have no explanation offered why these gentlemen strike out "rough marble," and keep in the free-list rough sandstone, freestone, and granite and all building stone. It appears by the records that the duty now is $1 per ton, or over 21 per cent. In the summary of imports given by the Treasury Department it appears that the importation of "stone and manufactures of, including slate," for the year ending December 31, 1887, was $385,000, and for the year ending December 31, 1886, $399,000.

In the report of the Tenth Census, which I have before me, four hundred pages of text are given to building stone and that class of material. There are, in addition, nearly forty plates illustrating the building and ornamental stone of this country; and the writer tells us as to the importation of stone into the United States, that—

The custom-house reports show such importation from nearly every country in the world. It is well known, of course, that stone comes from Scotland, England, Ireland, France, Germany, Belgium, Italy, and the British North American provinces. It is also known that onyx has been imported from Mexico, marble from Spain, Portugal, and Sicily; granite from Norway, Sweden, and Russia; marble from Africa. But it is not so easy to account for the stone imported from the British West Indies, and Central America. * * * The only countries from which stone is constantly in market in this country are Italy and Nova Scotia. The granite and sandstones from Scotland are imported on special orders, etc.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PARKER. I ask five minutes further time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have no objection, if it be understood that we can have a vote at the end of that time.

Mr. PARKER. I can not answer as to what time other gentlemen may desire.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If it is the understanding of the House——

Mr. SPOONER. I object.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I object to any such understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] be allowed to extend his remarks for five minutes?

Objection was made.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I rise to move an amendment, and I desire to yield my time to my colleague [Mr. PARKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain any amendment. There is already pending an amendment to strike out the entire paragraph; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] has moved an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to submit the question of order that no one rose in his place and made objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection was made.

Mr. PARKER. Objection was made; but no one rose in his place to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objected to the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not wish to appear discourteous. How much time do gentlemen on the other side desire—ten minutes? If so, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. PARKER. I do not ask any further time by consent. I think I can take care of myself.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will fifteen minutes on the other side and five minutes on this side, if we desire it, suit the gentlemen?

Mr. BURROWS. I understand that two gentlemen besides the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] desire to speak on this question. I think that at the end of fifteen minutes we shall be ready to take a vote.

Mr. MILLIKEN. We make no agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that fifteen minutes be allowed to the side of the House represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], and five minutes to the other side, if desired, and that then debate be closed on the paragraph and the amendments thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not object if I can have five minutes.

Mr. PARKER. I object. I protest against a request for a courtesy of this kind being made the basis for a blackmailing agreement.

Mr. SPOONER. I rise for the purpose of moving an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is in order, unless the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] withdraws his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is it understood that the other side of the House objects to occupying fifteen minutes to our five?

The CHAIRMAN. That was objected to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. MILLIKEN. We do not care how gentlemen on the other side use their time; we simply want enough time for ourselves.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How much time do you want? It was intimated on your side that fifteen minutes would be satisfactory, and that was granted.

Mr. SPOONER. This is an important matter, and there are several gentlemen on this side who desire to speak.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Well, go on; we will close the debate later.

Mr. PARKER. I move to amend by striking out the last four words. The census report to which I have already referred gives in detail a description of the building and monumental stones of America, and the most cursory examination of this document will show that Providence has been wonderfully lavish to our country in the provision of building stones, monumental stones, and ornamental stones. It is well known that a great portion of the value of almost all kinds of stone covered by this amendment is in the work which is put upon them. From the first uncapping of the stone labor begins to attach to it, and by this labor put on the stone, day by day and month by month, the immense value of the building and monumental stones of the country is created.

Therefore protection given to building stone is protection to the workman.

In order to show you how this question is regarded by stone-cutters, I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read the following from an experienced stone-cutter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TALES ON THE TARIFF.

P. B. Laird, an old stone-cutter of Syracuse, gives the Press the following:

"I am an old stone-cutter, and worked from 1851 to 1861 as a granite stone-cutter, most of the time in Boston, and during a period of Democracy and free trade. The best workmen among us did not earn in any year of that period more than $1.50 per day. From the time we got the tariff on monuments, in 1861, to the election of Grover Cleveland, good workmen were able to earn $4 per day, a difference in our pay per year of $750 in favor of protection.

"Up to 1861 the number of men engaged in manufacturing monuments for the home trade did not exceed 300. We were importing from Scotland. In 1884 20,000 men were engaged in making our monuments, and pauper-fed Scotchmen were keeping their work at home.

"Up to 1861 I did not know of a single stone-cutter who had been able to earn and pay for a home. In 1884 I knew of hundreds who paid for their homes with the work of their hammer and chisels. The tariff gave us these homes; the Republican party gave us the tariff. The Democratic party is trying to take it away. The Mills bill, indorsed by their convention, removes all the duty from monuments, which will injure the marble-cutters more than it does the granite-cutters. Stone-cutters in Italy do not earn more than 50 cents a day. I can show by a diary kept since 1851 that I have bought the necessaries of life for my family as cheap during the past twelve years as under the free-trade rule from 1851 to 1861.

"In conclusion, I will say the tariff has given me a good home and double the pay I would have made under free trade, and I hope my right hand may wither before I again vote myself and fellow-workmen on an equality with the pauper labor of Europe. Laboring men have been endeavoring for years to prevent convict-made goods from coming into competition with our own work. Now, will it not lower prices of labor just as much to have them made in Europe, and, if Democracy prevails, sold in our markets free from duty?"

Mr. PARKER. The amount of sandstone and crystalline siliceous stone quarried in the United States the last census year was over 45,000,000 cubic feet, valued at nearly $10,000,000.

Our coast cities and Northern cities can be readily reached by water at cheap freights from great numbers of the quarries of Canada as well as those of other countries, but there is no good reason, nor even plausible excuse, for inviting the bringing of the products of foreign quarries to the United States, thus displacing American stone-cutters, mechanics, and teamsters and those who furnish them supplies.

The duty of $1 per ton should be allowed to remain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and formal amendments will be withdrawn.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I correctly understood the explanation of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] he said that marble unmanufactured and undressed was taken from the free-list, while granite and these other kinds of stone were left on the free-list for the reason that marble was the more expensive or more valuable stone. From the Republican standpoint I think we on this side of the House are inclined to look at the question of labor involved, and to insist that labor is the material interest which should be properly cared for and protected in the imposition of tariff duties, and that while the labor required in quarrying granite and other stone is quite equal to that in quarrying marble and more valuable stone, there is no reason why protective duties should not be maintained upon granite and other stone in the same manner as upon marble. If not, I want to know why not. Do gentlemen on the other side of the House mean to commit themselves to the proposition that they are in favor of protecting the quarry-owners, protecting those who own the valuable deposits of marble in the quarries, and refusing protection to the labor engaged in getting out the granite and other kinds of stone? Do you intend to discriminate in favor of the owners of valuable marble quarries and against labor?

The position of our Democratic friends in this matter, however, is not inconsistent with their previous record, and is not surprising to those who have followed the course of this debate upon the various items of this bill. When we have come to an article upon the free-list which, when subject to tariff duty, produced but a trifling amount of revenue, gentlemen on the other side of the House have argued that it should be upon the free-list because it produced such a trifling amount of revenue; but when we have reached an article which they desire to place upon the free-list, the tariff duties upon which are producing a large amount of revenue, they have been able to make their argument or their alleged logic sufficiently elastic to permit them to urge that because the article produces a large amount of revenue therefore it should go upon the free-list, in order that a reduction to that large amount might be made in the increasing surplus in the Treasury.

I regard this matter from quite a different standpoint and in quite a different manner. If I find an article which during the last year has produced from the tariff duties collected from it a very small amount of revenue it is to me an indication at least that that article is well protected by the tariff duties already imposed upon it. Consequently I think in such case it may well be inquired whether it is not an article upon which the tariff duties might well be lessened—not removed, because if removed our ports are opened to the free importation of the product whatever it may be, and irrespective of claims for adequate protection. When, on the other hand, I find an article that has produced in tariff duties collected from it during the past year a large amount of revenue, it is equally suggestive to my mind that such article is probably not sufficiently protected by tariff duties and its importation not properly limited. The large importation of worsteds and the consequent large revenue therefrom is an instance strongly illustrative of the view submitted.

In such case, instead of putting the article upon the free-list, or, what is more absurd yet, reducing the duties, and thereby necessarily increasing the importations, I should say, if I knew nothing absolutely concerning it, that it was probably a case where the tariff duty should be increased in order to afford greater protection to the American product of the same kind, limiting to a greater extent the importation of that article and thereby reducing to the same extent that dangerous surplus which you gentlemen on the other side claim to be the purpose and object of this bill.

Why will you not deal with a practical business question in a practical, common-sense, business-like way?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I join with my colleague, Mr. MILLIKEN, in opposing the proposition to place on the free-list imported granite, freestone, sandstone, and all building or monumental stone, when unmanufactured or undressed. One of the most important industries of the State and district which I represent is the granite industry. Thousands of industrious, intelligent, and most deserving men are employed in getting out building and monumental stone and paving stones. The duty which is now imposed on such imported stones holds nearly all of this business in our own country and gives employment to our labor at good wages. It is now proposed to remove this duty and allow building, monumental, and paving stones got out by labor paid scarcely more than one-half such labor is paid here to come into our markets and compete with similar products of our own labor. I am opposed to this proposition, and hope the committee will adopt the motion to strike it out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. BRUMM. I renew it.

The theory of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Democratic caucus of this House has been, with reference to whisky at least, that it should be taxed because it is a luxury? This is evidently the theory notwithstanding the fact that the product which goes into the manufacture of whisky is the product of the farms of this country, and that by reason of the whisky rings they have so monopolized the manufacture of whisky that there are none but large distillers who can exist. The farmer's corn, his wheat and rye, must be shipped a great distance to the large distiller in order to be utilized. It can not be utilized at home by small distillers, and in that way his product is made the subject of monopolies by this terrible whisky ring, and is taxed, by means of which they invade every farmer's house in the country.

They claim the right to tax it simply because it is a luxury. When it comes to the question of sandstone, however, the lowest order of building stone, the stone that is used by the poor man of our country, in which his labor is employed, they say oh, no; we will put that on the free-list. But as you rise in grandeur and expanse, as you get up into the fine stone that is used by the wealthy, by those who not only dream, but actually dwell in marble halls, the stone that is used by the wealthy alone, the marble of the country, they say——

Mr. CANDLER. Did we not strike that off the free-list on yesterday?

Mr. BRUMM. Ah, but the gentleman did not allow me to complete what I was saying. Yes; you struck it from the free-list yesterday, but what was the object of that? Will the gentleman state the reason why it was stricken off? I will tell you. You struck it off because you want the marble to come in practically free, and marble is struck off that list with a view to regulate it when you come to that part of the bill under a pretext of a tariff that is merely nominal. But where is the consistency in this bill in placing this stone on the free-list?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to strike out the paragraph. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. KERR. I see the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is now in the Hall, and I desire to ask his attention for a few moments to what I am about to say.

On yesterday, when I proceeded to address the committee in regard to the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], in which he had accused the Republican party of being in favor of free whisky, the gentleman from Texas claimed that he had not made a remark of that kind, and I was diverted from the subject. I find, on reading the RECORD, that he had made that charge, and therefore I wish to say that the Republican party of this country is not in favor of free whisky. I wish to state further that a number of Republican States of this country are in favor of the absolute prohibition of the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in any form as a beverage, and the national party are in favor of temperance. And when the gentleman makes the statement that the Republican party is in favor of free whisky, he ignores the fact that most of the prohibition sentiment in this country is found in the Republican party.

But the gentleman from Iowa while he was on the floor made a remark which I did not hear at the time, but find in the RECORD:

Behold the Colossus of Rhodes.

[Laughter.]

By which I presume the gentleman means to accuse me of straddling on the question which we were then discussing—the question of the repeal of the internal-revenue tax on whisky. I do not think any member of this House on either side will seriously accuse me of taking a double or doubtful position on any question.

But, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Iowa for mentioning the Colossus of Rhodes, that great statue of ancient times which stood athwart the harbor of that city. It was noted for its long legs, so long, indeed, that the ships of that time could pass between them. And I will say that the gentleman from Iowa has the longest political legs and has more capacity for straddling than any man in this country at the present time. He can stand athwart and bridge the largest political chasm on the American continent to-day. [Laughter.]

Why, even now he has succeeded in securing the nomination for Congress of a small body of men who call themselves the labor party in his district; yet here he stands up as a Democrat on that side of the House and says, "We welcome the tariff issue." What does the gentleman mean by "we?" I suppose he means to have it inferred that he belongs to the great Democratic party that is controlling the nation in the House of Representatives. I thank the gentleman for that remark, because I think before the people of Iowa he will not succeed in standing athwart and bridging the political chasm in his district any longer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I desire before a vote is taken to correct any impression that may have been made upon the mind of any member of the committee by the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER]. He objects to this clause because he construes the language as admitting dressed and polished stone free of duty. The provision of the existing law, of which this is an amendment, is as follows:

Stones, unmanufactured or undressed, freestone, granite, sandstone, and all building or monumental stone, except marble, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, $1 per ton; and upon stones as above, hewn, dressed, or polished, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The proposed clause, which it is now sought to strike out of this bill, is as follows:

Stones, unmanufactured or undressed, freestones, granite, sandstone, and all building or monumental stone.

It will be seen that it is not sought to place hewn, dressed, or polished stone upon the free-list, but the same are left to bear the rate of duty now imposed.

Mr. PARKER. I am afraid it is left subject to unfriendly construction.

The Chair put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

All strings of gut or any other like material.
Tallow.
Waste, all not specially enumerated or provided for.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 184 insert:
"Photographic print paper not albumenized or sensitized; provided that nothing shall be deemed photographic print paper under either of the provisions of this act unless it has the name of the manufacturer stamped in water-mark thereon."

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of considerable importance, and I beg to invite the attention of the committee to my remarks, and especially of the majority of the committee which rules and dictates what shall go into this bill and what shall not. The proposition I make is to put photographic print paper, not albumenized or sensitized, upon the free-list. This paper is all, substantially, made in two European factories, one near Lyons, in France, and the other in Malmedy, in Germany. Attempts have been made to manufacture it in this country, but owing to the limited amount consumed in the arts and to the difficulties attending its manufacture its production has not been a success in the United States. It is imported into this country at an expense of about 50 or 60 cents a pound. After being imported it is subjected to two processes, one known as albumenizing, with a preparation made from the whites of eggs, the other as sensitizing, in the process of which great quantities of silver are consumed. To illustrate: in my own city we have two establishments engaged in the preparation of this imported plain paper, one in albumenizing, and the other in sensitizing. The albumenizing establishment to which I refer consumes about one thousand dozen eggs a day. The sensitizing establishment uses $5,000 worth of silver per month. Each establishment employs about one hundred persons in the prosecution of its business.

Under the law from 1861 to 1883 the duty upon this class of paper was 35 per cent. ad valorem. Under the tariff of 1883 it was reduced to 25 per cent., being included in the provision for "paper not otherwise provided for."

Now there is in Europe an establishment engaged in albumenizing and sensitizing this class of paper. I hold in my hand a specimen of the plain paper. After it is albumenized it comes out like the sample I now show to the House. The albumenizing and sensitizing processes enhance the value of the paper very largely. Under the decision of an inferior court in the city of New York it was decided that this albumenized paper had undergone such a change of character as to bring it under the class of "a manufacture of paper." Now, bear in mind here is the plain paper subjected to a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem. After being treated in this way and enhanced in value one or two or three hundred per cent. (just how much I am unable to state), it is classed as "a manufacture of paper" and rated at 15 per cent. ad valorem. Now you see the inconsistency of the classification and of this ruling of the court that charges 25 per cent. upon plain paper, and when it has been enhanced in value two or three hundred per cent. charges a duty of 15 per cent. only. Emerson says "consistency is a bugbear to men of small minds;" but I think in the construction of this law the courts and the Departments have out-Emersoned Emerson. Here is a plain proposition that ought to meet the candid approval of the members of this committee and of the House.

Later on in the bill I shall ask to have albumenized and sensitized paper specifically rated at 25 per cent. ad valorem. Plain paper is produced in such small quantities and the difficulties connected with its manufacture are so great that the efforts to produce it here, according to the statements of a letter addressed to me by the two firms engaged in albumenizing and sensitizing this paper, have not been crowned with success.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that I may have my time extended.

There was no objection; and Mr. BAKER'S time was extended for five minutes.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Now, as I stated before, this has been a subject of some consideration by the Department. On the 1st of March I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, calling attention to this subject, and on the 9th of March I received an answer thereto. My letter and the answer I will read and make part of the RECORD. They emphasize what I have already said, and the communication from the establishments in my city referred to I will read as part of my remarks, because it states the whole matter so plainly that I hope the House will realize the justice and reasonableness of this amendment and agree to the same. I trust that members will carefully consider this communication which so clearly exhibits the injustice of the law as it is administered to-day. This proposition, as I have stated, is to put the plain paper, when it is imported into this country unsensitized or unalbumenized, upon the free-list so that we shall be able to compete with the foreign establishments. Now, the foreign manufacturer imports into this country the albumenized and sensitized paper at 15 per cent. duty ad valorem, while the people to whom I have referred are compelled to pay 25 per cent. upon the plain paper. That certainly is not fair, and I submit to my good friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who I know wants to do what is right, that he ought to consent to have the plain paper put on the free-list and to subject the albumenized or sensitized paper to a duty of 25 per cent., as it will be contended is already provided for farther on in this bill. The paper in that form is a manufactured article which is used exclusively in photography, and this is only a matter of justice to new and struggling enterprises involving a large outlay for labor and plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from New York makes his appeal to us on the ground that we desire to put raw materials on the free-list. Now, while this is not in one sense a raw material, yet it is the base of an industry, and if it were not manufactured in this country, and if our action would produce no industrial complications it might, in an economic sense, be considered as a proper material to be put on the free-list; but the Committee on Ways and Means have not been able, with such examination as they have given to the subject—and I am not prepared to say that the examination has been very thorough—the committee, I say, have not been able to see their way clear to recommend that this article should be made free of duty. It is an article which is not fit for use until it is further treated. If a corresponding reduction were made in the duty on the finished product, that would of course leave the industry just where it is now, and would, to the extent of the change at both points, relieve the consumer; but if we put this upon the free-list it puts this class of finished photographic paper at a very great advantage over other classes of photographic paper.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I beg my friend's pardon—he is in error, and does not yet understand the case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Well, that may be so; but I am not satisfied on that point; and while I do not doubt that the gentleman is perfectly honest in his opinion, yet I have not been able so far to be persuaded that his view is correct. Furthermore, as the gentleman states, some of this article itself is produced in this country. Now, I think it is probable that if this were all there was in it, a base of photographic paper, the production in this country might be so small as not properly to weigh against the larger interests of those engaged in the photographic business, and in the finished paper; but, as I stated before, there are other kinds of photographic paper, and if there be a change in the business, it is rather a change in contemplation than an established change. The industry is not dependent upon it now, so far as I can see, and I would rather that the matter should receive further consideration than we have been able to give it before it is determined. If our bill goes to the Senate, as I have no doubt it will go, the gentlemen over there can look at these new matters more carefully and with closer scrutiny than we have been able to give to some of them. Doubtless there are some meritorious new propositions which we have felt compelled to reject, and if upon closer examination in the Senate they are found to be really meritorious, I have no doubt we can agree upon them.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I want to say to my good friend that I am very glad to find that there is one thing he is willing to acknowledge that he does not know all about.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not pretend to know all about anything; and I think that is an unnecessary remark.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I want to assure my friend that the manufacture of this particular paper, or the importation of it free, would not materially conflict with any American industry. Upon that point I am reliably advised. The paper itself costs 50 or 60 cents a pound, and is too costly to be used for any purpose except to be sensitized or albumenized for use in the business of photography. It will not interfere with any industry, while, on the other hand, not to make this change is to make a direct discrimination against an American industry in favor of a foreign industry—a direct discrimination, and I can tell you how much.

As it is, the discrimination in favor of the European and against the American industry is $5 a ream. If you put the duty at 15 per cent. ad valorem on the albumenized and sensitized as well as the plain paper, it would be a discrimination of $4 a ream against the American industry. If you make plain paper free and put 15 per cent. on the coated, the discrimination is $2.50 against the American industry. My proposition is to make the plain paper free and impose 25 per cent. on the coated, which is still a discrimination of 60 cents a ream in favor of the European industry and against our own. The letters produced and read by me during this discussion considered in connection with my remarks will, I trust, give gentlemen a clear understanding of the case and result in causing the proposed amendment to be adopted without opposition. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the letters may be printed in the RECORD in their chronological order at the close of my remarks.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., January 26, 1888.

SIR: As constituents of yours doing business at Rochester, N. Y., we desire to submit for your consideration, and through you to call the attention of Congress to certain facts and statements in support of the bill (H. R. 5660) introduced by you into the House of Representatives on January 23, 1888, to regulate the admission into the United States of photographic print paper, which bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Our business consists in the preparation of this class of paper by special treatment for the use of photographers. The plain paper of this grade is all made at two mills, one situated near Lyons, France, and the other one at Malmedy, Germany. The difficulties attendant upon its manufacture have been so great, and the consumption of the paper so comparatively small, that the two mills specified have for the past ten or fifteen years practically monopolized its manufacture, and, no doubt, will continue to do so. Some efforts have been made to manufacture it in the United States, but because of the small quantity of it used and the difficulties connected with its manufacture, these efforts have not been crowned with success.

From 1861 to 1883 the duty on this class of paper was 35 per cent. ad valorem, and under the tariff of 1883, now in force, it is 25 per cent., it being included under the provision for "paper not otherwise provided for," so that for over twenty-five years there has been a substantial protective duty on this class of paper sufficient to develop its production in this country if there was any likelihood of its being made a profitable branch of industry. It is of a peculiar character, readily distinguishable from any other grade or class of paper by any expert in paper; quite as much so as "printing paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively," or "paper sized or glued, suitable only for printing paper," for each of which classes special provision is made in the tariff at rates of duty far below those fixed on the general class of paper not specially named in the tariff.

Photographic print paper commands a very high price, costing, delivered in New York without duty, from 50 to 55 cents per pound. When imported in sheets the name of the manufacturer is impressed in a water-mark on each sheet, and when imported in rolls the water-mark appears on every 3 feet of the roll. Aside, however, from its distinguishing characteristics, its price is so high as to make it unsuitable for any other use than its legitimate one of printing pictures from negatives taken by photographers. There would, therefore, be no danger to the revenue in giving this grade of paper a separate classification under the tariff, no more so than in the case of paper for books and newspapers and printing paper, and the special provisions made in the tariff for these classes of paper have been attended with no difficulties in the way of their execution, the character of the paper being found to be a sufficient test to determine its classification. This statement will apply with equal force to photographic print paper.

II. Before the paper is available for the use to which it is to be applied it must undergo several processes. One is called albumenizing, which consists in coating the paper with the white of eggs. Another is in coating the paper with a mixture of gelatine and bromide of silver. This process is called sensitizing. The paper is imported in three conditions, namely, plain, albumenized, and sensitized. It is sold to photographers only in two conditions: first, sensitized, in which condition it is ready for use, and second, albumenized. When sold in the latter condition the photographer himself performs the work of sensitizing. The business of albumenizing and sensitizing paper in the United States was commenced only a few years since, but has already become an important branch of industry, and with proper encouragement can be enlarged both for our own and foreign markets.

Messrs. D. Hovey's Sons, one of the firms whose names are attached hereto, are engaged in the business of albumenizing the paper, and in this work they have been accustomed to use from six hundred to a thousand dozen of eggs per day, the whites of the eggs only being used for this purpose, the yolks being barreled and shipped to Gloversville, N. Y., to be used in dressing leather for the manufacture of gloves. This gives a large market to the poultry products of that region and is a material help to the farming interests.

In their business they have been accustomed to employ as many as one hundred hands, and about the same number are employed by the Eastman Company, the other firm signing this memorial. The latter firm, in their business of sensitizing paper, use about $5,000 worth of silver per month, or $60,000 per year. The machinery they use is intricate and expensive, and it has been invented and patented by persons connected with the company. It is only by their superior processes, aided by their machinery, that they have at all been able to compete with the foreign product, the foreigners having the great advantage of cheap materials and cheap labor.

In addition to supplying the home market, the Eastman Company are large exporters of coated paper, and if they could have their raw paper free and a reasonable duty on their finished product they could command a very much larger trade abroad. They paid duty last year amounting to some $2,000 on paper which they had coated and which was exported to foreign countries, which duty was not returned to them by way of drawback.

III. The duty on both the plain paper and the coated article was originally held to be, under the tariff act of 1883, 25 per cent. ad valorem, the article, whether coated or plain, being regarded only as paper, dutiable under the provisions for "paper not otherwise provided for." This arrangement still gave the foreigner an advantage, because it enabled him to import his finished product at the same rate of duty as was imposed on the plain paper, and it was then only by our improved processes and machinery, developed at a great expenditure of time and money, that we were enabled to compete with the foreign article and thereby control a part of the home trade.

But last year the Treasury Department put in force a ruling founded on the verdict of a jury in a case brought before a United States court that the albumenized and sensitized paper was no longer paper, but was an article which, by the distinct and additional processes it had undergone, was to be regarded as "a manufacture of paper," dutiable under the act of 1883 at only 15 per cent. ad valorem, and that ruling is still in force. This presents the anomalous condition of the finished product paying a less rate of duty than the raw material or plain paper from which it is made, and reverses all ordinary and well-established principles of tariff legislation.

It was a serious blow to an industry which, under the former condition of affairs, was already struggling for existence, and we believe that no argument is necessary to convince you or any other member of Congress that the present condition of the tariff in this respect should not be permitted to continue, but that a duty sufficient to encourage the domestic manufacturer should be placed on the coated paper, leaving the plain paper to be placed on the free-list or to bear a very low rate of duty. We do not seek to have the duty on the finished article placed so high as to increase the cost to the ultimate consumer, but we do ask that we may be placed in a position where we can furnish the article to the consumer somewhere near as cheaply as the foreigner does.

As the tariff now stands the foreign albumenized paper can be delivered here at a cost of $5 less than the article coated in the United States. If the plain paper is put at the same rate duty of as the albumenized the foreign article could be delivered here for $4 a ream less than the paper coated here. If the plain paper is made free of duty and the coated article is put at 15 per cent. ad valorem the cost of the foreign article would be $2.50 per ream less than that made here. If the plain paper is put at 15 per cent. ad valorem and the coated article at 25 per cent. ad valorem the foreign article can be delivered here for $2 per ream less than the home product. If the plain paper is made free of duty and the coated paper 25 per cent. ad valorem the foreign article can still be delivered here for 60 cents less than the article coated in the United States. Grouping these statements and numbering them for ready reference, we have:

No. 1. (Same as now) $5 against American industry.
No. 2. (Both at 15 per cent.) $4 against.
No. 3. (Plain free, coated 15 per cent.) $2.50 against.
No. 4. (Plain 15 per cent., coated 25 per cent.) $2 against.
No. 5. (Plain free, coated 25 per cent.) 60 cents against.

The propositions that we favor the most, and which should be adopted as a matter of fairness and justice to domestic interests, are those marked 3 and 5, in both of which the plain paper is made free and the coated paper is put at 15 or 25 per cent. ad valorem. A duty of 15 per cent. on the coated paper, with plain paper free of duty, would be a substantial benefit to us; but the only change which would really meet the situation and establish both branches of our business on a positive basis, would be the admission of the plain paper free of duty, and a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem on the coated article.

We respectfully ask that you urge upon the Committee on Ways and Means, and upon the other members of Congress, that a provision of the character last named be embodied in any tariff bill which may be adopted by Congress.

Respectfully, yours,

D. HOVEY'S SONS AND THE EASTMAN DRY-PLATE AND FILM COMPANY,
Of Rochester, N. Y.

Hon. C. S. BAKER,
House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1, 1888.

SIR: The inclosed memorial, addressed to me by constituents of mine engaged in business in Rochester, N. Y., having reference to the duty on photographic paper, will explain to you the embarrassing position in which they are placed by the present position of your Department, which admits coated paper at the duty of 15 per cent., and at the same time exacts a duty of 25 per cent. on the plain or uncoated paper. I had not intended to again trespass upon your valuable time in relation to this matter, but the importance of it and of some relief to the gentlemen who are concerned and the apparent hopelessness of any speedy relief through a tariff bill at the present session of Congress, constrains me to ask as a matter of justice and favor at your hands a re-examination of the subject. It must, I presume, be accepted that the legal duty on the uncoated paper is 25 per cent. The trouble comes in admitting the coated paper at a duty of 15 per cent. It is true that you had the decision of the United States court as a basis for such action, but that decision was by an inferior court, and I am informed that the law officers of the Government in New York City were not willing to accept that decision as final.

It would have been entirely in accordance with precedents to have either taken that case to the United States Supreme Court for review or to have ordered the trial of another case, and then, in the event of an adverse decision, carried that case up to the Supreme Court, meanwhile keeping the rate of duty 25 per cent. ad valorem. This latter course I beg most respectfully that you may be constrained to pursue, after you shall have given the subject due consideration. On trial of another case, the parties concerned will see that the United States attorney is put into possession of facts which were not produced at the other trial, and which they claim will have a controlling effect upon the same.

I believe it to be entirely within your power and hope you may conceive it to be your duty in the interest of justice and due protection to our industries to take this course, and which needs no argument, I apprehend, to satisfy you of its justice. I am convinced from the statement made to me by these constituents of mine that the coated paper ought not to be classed as a manufacture of paper, and that on a proper presentation of the facts a jury would so decide.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. S. BAKER, M. C.

Hon. CHARLES S. FAIRCHILD,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1888.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 1st instant, inclosing a memorial addressed to you by constituents engaged in business in Rochester, having reference to the duty on photographic paper, you are informed that the Department must at this time decline to take any steps looking to a change in the classification of the albumenized and sensitized paper covered by Department's decision of April 9, 1887 (S. 8169), a copy of which is herewith inclosed.

It will be seen that the decision followed the ruling of the court in the cases of Gennert vs. Robertson and The Scovill Manufacturing Company vs. Robertson, in both of which it was held that such merchandise was dutiable at the rate of 15 per cent. ad valorem under the provision in Schedule M of the existing tariff for manufactures of paper, or of which paper is a component material, not specially enumerated or provided for; and accords with the views of the United States Attorney-General, who expressed the opinion that the processes of sensitizing and albumenizing should, under the finding of the court in these cases, be considered as a definite and separate operation from that used in the manufacture of paper and sufficient to place the completed article of sensitized and albumenized paper within the purview of the provisions for manufactures of which paper is a component material.

Respectfully, yours,

I. H. MAYNARD, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES S. BAKER,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected, there being—ayes 47, noes 57.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "for," in line 184, on page 8, insert the following:

"Provided, That whenever any of the articles named in this section are imported in vessels having a foreign registry, the full duties imposed by the act of March 3, 1883, shall be levied and collected upon such article or articles so imported."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, during the general debate on this bill we were told repeatedly by gentlemen on the other side that our protective tariff had destroyed our merchant marine. I do not agree with that proposition. I believe there were other causes at work which resulted in the serious diminution of our portion of the world's carrying trade; and I can look back and see those causes operating during those memorable years from 1861 to 1865, when the skies of almost every navigable sea were reddened with the glare of the flames from burning American merchant vessels, fired by cruisers built upon the Clyde and manned by men who once were proud to be called American citizens.

Our merchant marine was further injured by the policy pursued by other civilized nations toward their marine, and not met by counter measures upon the part of our Government. Without detailing the amounts paid at different times, it is sufficient to say that almost every civilized nation except ours granted and now grants bounties or subsidies in one shape or another to its merchant marine; and we were compelled to compete upon the open seas with vessels thus favored. Why, sir, can it be that the protective tariff has injured our merchant marine when the very law in existence to-day provides, as it has been provided for years, that all articles entering into the composition of a ship built upon our shores for participation in the foreign trade shall be admitted in bond, and when thus used shall be released from all obligation to pay duty?

We propose by this bill to add largely to the free-list. In doing so let us impose the condition which is embodied in my amendment and which is so plain that any one can understand its purpose and effect. That condition is simply that if those countries which desire to send us the products of their labor will avail themselves of the permission given in this bill they shall send those products to our shores in vessels of American build, flying the American flag, and having an American register. If our people desire to go to the other side and buy these products, let them be brought here in our vessels. Let us retain what we can in this bill of the American spirit, American sentiment, American shrewdness, business tact, and capacity.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not wish at this time to enter upon any discussion of the causes which have led to the decline of our merchant marine, and will not do so if the matter is not pressed further on the other side of the House, for the good and sufficient reason that this whole question will be brought to the attention of the House in a very few days, as presented on the subsidy proposition in the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We shall be there.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. I ask the Clerk to read section 2502 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2502. A discriminating duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, in addition to the duties imposed by law, shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States; but this discriminating duty shall not apply to goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States, entitled, by treaty or any act of Congress, to be entered in the ports of the United States on payment of the same duties as shall then be paid on goods, wares, and merchandise imported in vessels of the United States.

Mr. DINGLEY. My object in having this section read was to call the attention of my friend from New Jersey and of the committee to the fact that by the Revised Statutes as they exist to-day, a discriminating duty of 10 per cent. is imposed upon all articles imported in foreign vessels, with the proviso that this shall not affect commercial treaties existing with foreign nations. If there were in existence no reciprocal commercial treaties between the United States and other nations, there would to-day be imposed upon all goods imported in foreign vessels a discriminating duty of 10 per cent. This is a matter, therefore, which can not be covered by legislation, but only by the abolition of existing treaties. Our legislation to-day does impose a discriminating duty of 10 per cent. upon all imports in foreign vessels; but by reciprocal commercial treaties entered into in years past with all the commercial nations the effect of this statute has been entirely nullified; so that if we should adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey it would in effect be no more than what exists now upon the statute-book. The reciprocal commercial treaties into which we have entered with all commercial nations would still rise above legislation and be the supreme law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman will allow me to say that I inadvertently omitted in my amendment the words which I have since added—"subject, however, to the provisions of existing treaties." The difficulty about the 10 per cent. business is that this amendment of mine is meant to apply to goods which by this bill are to come in free; and where goods come in free no 10 per cent. can be added, because there is nothing to which to add it.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman desires to press his amendment, I suggest that he add the words—

Provided, That this shall not conflict with existing commercial treaties.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have added substantially those words.

Mr. DINGLEY. With those words added, the amendment would of course have no effect, because we have such treaties with all commercial nations.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, as I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey amounts to nothing.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN was rejected.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. After line 184, I move to insert "primuline."

Now, Mr. Chairman, primuline is one of the new dyes produced by European chemists, that takes the same place in dyeing calicoes and cottons that alizarine does in dyeing woolens. None are made in the country, and the alizarine dye was put on the free-list in the tariff of 1883. That was guarded by an amendment I made the other day, because several varieties of alizarine colors were put on the market which were not accepted by the Treasury as alizarine dyes. Primuline is of a similar class and from the same source. It is one of the necessities of our calico printing, and I am sure the House will not object to putting it on the free-list.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Is that substance produced in this country?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Not an ounce of it is produced in the country or anything from which it is manufactured.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I thought there ought to be a tax for that reason.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. We will leave that to the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to strike out line 184. That line was read, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] moved an amendment to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Another line has been added to it and several amendments have been disposed of. But if there be no objection the Chair will entertain the gentleman's motion.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to strike out line 184, which reads:

Waste, all not specially enumerated or provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I desire to have read, in reference to this matter, a letter from Justice, Bateman & Co., of Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, April 28, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We send you a sample received this day from Liverpool, marked No. I, which is lap waste, such as by the recent decision comes in at 10 cents per pound duty, instead of 30 cents. This wool is selling in England at 50 cents free on board, duty 10 cents per pound, while the wool from which it is made costs 11½ pence, or 23 cents in the grease. The shrinkage is 51 per cent., and the scoured cost 47 cents, so you see that waste is 3 cents per pound higher than scoured wool in Liverpool. This is made up of broken pieces of top. The Mills bill admits top free, therefore this article will be free, and as 90 per cent. of Ohio wool is used for worsted purposes and the first process is to make it into top, under the Mills bill tops being free, they will be made in Europe. Therefore what is to become of the 90 per cent. of Ohio wool which at present enters into the manufacture of such tops as are made in the United States?

Very truly, yours,

JUSTICE, BATEMAN & CO.

Hon. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. However, gentlemen may differ as to what waste is and for what purpose it is used, for under the term "waste" vast quantities of wool have been introduced in various shapes. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas, of the Committee on Ways and Means, what he understands by the term "waste."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This is waste not taxed 10 cents a pound, as stated in the communication read at the Clerk's desk. It is therefore not rightly referred to in the paper the gentleman had read, as this means the waste of linen, and does not refer to the waste of wool at all. The article to which the gentleman has referred comes in at a later part of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In section 3.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Is there anything in the bill elsewhere which would distinguish waste of different kinds?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes; the other has a duty of 10 cents a pound upon it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This is not that waste, but it is provided for in another part of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. You will find it in the third section of the bill, applying to wool and the woolen schedule.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That on and after the 1st day of July, 1888, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed on the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rates of duty on said articles severally.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move this clause be passed over informally, as we may desire to change the date.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting the following paragraph after line 5:

Lime, 15 cents per cask.

The committee, on learning something of the facts relating to this industry, have with entire unanimity stricken manufactured lime from the free-list of the pending bill and restored it to the dutiable list. It was so evident that the placing of lime on the free-list, as proposed by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, would result in the destruction of this industry in the United States, that no one came forward to defend the proposition after the subject had received candid consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that a full consideration of the conditions which surround this industry will satisfy this committee and the House that the amendment which I offer, to substitute a specific duty of 15 cents per cask for the present ad valorem duty of 10 per cent., ought to be adopted.

When the existing duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem on lime was fixed by the low tariff of 1846 (20 per cent. having been the previous rate) it afforded a substantial protection of about 10 cents per cask. For many years it practically gave our markets entirely to our own lime producers. Up to 1884, even, Canada did not even supply her own markets, notwithstanding she imposed and still imposes a duty of 20 per cent. on imported lime. But about that time capitalists began to develop the lime quarries of Canada, using the most improved kilns and methods, and with the advantage of the cheaper labor of the Dominion soon supplied the Canadian markets and began to reach out to the markets of the United States.

Taking advantage of the fact that our duty on lime is ad valorem, and only 10 per cent. at that, the Canadian manufacturers soon learned the European trick of undervaluing their lime in the invoices and thus practically fixing the duty themselves, and gradually reduced it until, to-day, instead of paying a duty of about 10 cents per cask, as contemplated by the Walker tariff of 1846 and the tariff of 1883, they are paying but about 3 cents per cask duty on lime. This shamefully low duty is nearly 2 cents lower than it would be if a decision of the Treasury Department had not excluded the cost of the barrel from the invoiced value of the lime at the place of shipment.

The effect of this practical reduction of duty by means of undervaluations is already being seriously felt by our lime manufacturers. In 1886, 82,855 casks of Canadian lime were imported into this country. In 1887 the importations ran up to 132,239 casks, and it is thought there will be 200,000 casks imported the present fiscal year, with a prospect of a rapid increase in the future.

In view of these facts there is grave danger that unless something is done, not only to restore the duty on imported lime to the figure intended by all our tariff acts, but also to increase the duty so as to meet the changed conditions, within a few years the lime manufacturing industry will be in large part driven from the United States to Canada, unless the employés in this industry are willing to work at Canadian wages, and the 8,000 laborers now employed at liberal wages in this industry will be added to the army of the unemployed or be driven into other already crowded industries.

I am aware that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. MILLS] insists, as he did in the brick manufacturing industry a few days ago, and as he had previously in other industries, that notwithstanding the best class of laborers on lime-kilns receive in this country $2 per day and in Canada $1.25, yet that our laborers do so much more work in a day that the labor cost of producing lime, as well as the other products, is no more here than in Canada or Europe.

This is a very pleasant theory, one which the distinguished chairman has pressed with great earnestness, but which has no foundation of ascertained facts to rest upon. When the chairman asserted that this was the fact as to brick manufacture and rested his whole argument for placing Canadian bricks on the free-list on the assumption that the labor cost of manufacturing a thousand of bricks was no more here than in Canada, I could meet the assertion only with the expression of my conviction from observation that laborers in Canada performed as much work in any department of industry in a day as in this country.

Anticipating a repetition of this labor cost assumption when lime should be reached in this bill, I have obtained through intelligent and responsible gentlemen a detailed statement of the comparative cost of manufacturing a hundred casks of lime on the St. John River in New Brunswick, and in Rockland, Me., to which I invite the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and the committee:

Comparative cost of manufacturing one hundred casks of lime at Rockland, Me., and St. John, New Brunswick.

	Rockland.	St. John.	Excess cost at Rockland.
Lime-rock delivered at kilns	$21.00	$10.00	$11.00
Three men on kiln, $2 per day each	6.00	3.75	2.25
One man feeding	1.57	1.00	.57
One man trimming casks	2.00	1.25	.75
Wheeling fuel to kiln, etc	2.00	1.25	.75
Coal or wood used in burning	17.50	10.00	7.50
One hundred lime casks	18.00	18.00
Nails and liners	.30	.30
Delivering lime to vessel	.50	.31	.19
Kiln rent	3.00	3.00
Total	71.87	48.86	23.01
Cost per cask	.71 87/100	.48 86/100
Cost per cask delivered in New York	.90 to .93	.75
Excess of cost of cask of lime at Rockland			.23
Excess of cost of fuel for lime at Rockland		.07½
Excess of cost of labor in burning and delivering		.05½
Excess of cost of labor in quarrying and transporting lime rock (estimated)		.05

It will be seen by this comparative statement that it requires the same number of men working the same number of hours to make a hundred casks of lime in Canada as in the United States, thus demonstrating that the efficiency of the labor employed in Canada in lime manufacture is almost exactly the same as in the State of Maine, and I am confident Maine labor is as efficient as any in the country.

What becomes of the theory on which the distinguished chairman is constructing this bill, that notwithstanding labor is receiving 60 per cent. more as daily wages in this country than in Canada, yet that this is offset by 60 per cent greater efficiency of our own labor?

There can be no doubt that so far as the lime manufacturing industry is concerned the theory has nothing to stand upon, and I have no doubt the same is true as to other industries. The fact stares us in the face that Canadian labor in this industry is as efficient as our labor, and that labor in this country costs 60 per cent. more than in Canada.

The clear and unquestioned facts are that it costs 10 cents more per cask to quarry and transport lime rock to the kiln in Rockland than on the St. John, at least half of which is due to higher cost of labor in quarrying and transporting to the kiln; 5½ cents more per cask for the labor employed in burning, barreling, and delivering on the vessel, and 7½ cents (certainly 5 cents) more per cask for the fuel used in burning; which is largely labor. Total excess of cost per cask in this country over Canada, 23 cents, of which labor in some form gets 10½ cents more than the labor which does the same work in Canada, leaving 7½ cents to go to fuel and the balance to other causes. Delivered in New York Canadian lime costs 15 cents per cask less than our own lime, the balance being made up by the advantage we have in being nearer to our own markets.

It ought to be evident to the committee that unless the duty on imported Canadian lime is made sufficient to cover the difference in the cost of the labor employed in Canada and in the United States, the lime-manufacturing industry in this country will be gradually driven to the wall by Canadian competition, or our labor be compelled to accept Canadian wages.

In view of the changed conditions which have enabled Canadian lime manufacturers to come into ruinous competition with our own, there ought to be no hesitation by any one in voting to place the duty at the low rate of 15 cents, for this only covers the difference in cost of labor, in the materials and their manufacture, and even the Democratic national convention at St. Louis gave a pledge to workingmen that the Democratic party would maintain sufficient duties to cover this. I I now ask the Democratic majority of this House to redeem this pledge to the laborers employed in the lime industry.

It appears from the census of 1880 that the lime manufacturing industry produced in that year nearly six millions of casks of lime, valued in the markets at $5,772,318; and that in producing this lime $1,579,313 was paid in wages. This makes the wages paid 28½ per cent. of the value of the product—twice as large a percentage of labor as in the manufacture of glue, which the committee have transferred to the dutiable list, and as large a percentage of labor as is shown in a majority of manufactured products.

In the district which I have the honor to represent over two million casks of lime were made last year, furnishing the chief manufacturing industry of a county of over 32,000 population, giving employment to thousands of workingmen, supplying a market for every farmer, and promoting the prosperity of every citizen. What the views are of the enterprising men who are engaged in this industry in my own district will be seen by the following memorial to Congress, which has been signed by every lime manufacturer in Knox County, Maine, without distinction of party:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned, manufacturers of lime in the county of Knox, State of Maine, do most respectfully and earnestly desire to call your attention to the following important facts relating to and affecting the interest of the people of this and surrounding counties:

The vast beds of limestone in this county opened up an industry in the seaports of Thomaston, Rockland, Rockport, and Lincolnville in the manufacturing of lime, which has existed for over a century. Gradually increasing, it now amounts to a capital invested in kilns, wharves, and storehouses of about $1,000,000; in lime-rock quarries of about $2,000,000, and it is an investment worthless for any other purpose. There is besides a large shipping interest employed in transporting the lime and fuel for burning it. About 2,000,000 casks of lime are annually manufactured and shipped from this county at a cost, delivered in the markets, of from 90 cents to $1 per cask.

Excepting the rock in the quarry, the fuel and lumber on the stump at an average cost of 6 cents per cask, the whole cost of this article is made up of labor, which includes quarrying the rock, hauling same to kilns, gathering the fuel, making and hauling the lime casks by the inhabitants of the surrounding towns, burning the lime, handling and carrying the same to market.

Before and after the formation of the Dominion of Canada, Nova Scotia was one of our large lime markets, but at or about that time a duty was imposed on our lime by that Government which necessitated the abandonment of that market by us, the said duty still remaining in force. Since the decline in ship-building the manufacture of lime is the only industry of any importance at the ports above mentioned, affording as it does employment to a large number of men who have become permanently located here. We therefore deem it of the utmost importance that the Fiftieth Congress take some action to protect this great industry upon which the future of this county depends.

Near St. John, New Brunswick, are vast deposits of limestone, with fuel in abundance and at less than half the cost of the same used here, with labor much cheaper. Within a few years the business of burning lime has been begun and carried on there, and the product largely sent into our markets, namely: to New York alone there were shipped in 1885 less than 5,000 casks; in 1886, 41,000, and in 1887, 138,000 casks, and it is estimated that under the present arrangement 200,000 casks or more will be sent to that market this year.

The difference in the cost of this article here and there at the kiln ready for shipment is about 23 cents per cask in their favor, and there is now a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, or only 3 cents per cask, it being invoiced at 30 cents per cask, which is exclusive of the package.

Under the tariff bill as revised by the Ways and Means Committee we notice lime among the articles placed on the free-list. We therefore most respectfully petition your honorable body to not only remove lime from the free-list, but to impose a specific duty corresponding to that of the Dominion Government.

I commend this memorial to the considerate attention of the committee and the House.

There is another reason, Mr. Chairman, why there should be no hesitation in fixing this duty at the low rate of 15 cents per cask, and that is the fact that the pending bill leaves a duty of nearly 30 per cent. on bituminous coal, which is now being used extensively as fuel in burning lime, the cost of the fuel being nearly one-third of the cost of manufacturing. It would certainly be a grave injustice to the manufacturers and laborers engaged in this industry to impose a duty of 30 per cent. on the coal used in burning lime, and not give an equivalent protection on the manufactured lime.

I trust that the justice of the proposition which I have made will commend it to the committee and the House.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the Chair to recognize some gentleman in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, rose.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] can offer his amendment hereafter. This side of the House is entitled to the floor now.

Mr. Chairman, the duty on lime has been for a great many years 7 and never exceeded 10 per cent.

Mr. DINGLEY. Since 1846 only 10 per cent. Before 1846 it was 20 per cent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The proposed bill contemplates leaving lime at its present rate of duty; but as we restored the package clause, lime will really be taxed higher than it was before.

Mr. DINGLEY. Only 1.8 cents more.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But it is something more, nothing less. Whether it be much or little it is in the line of increase. Now, the gentleman proposes to increase the present duty on lime over 300 per cent. upon its present rate. It is 10 per cent., and the gentleman proposes to make it three and four-tenths times greater than it is. That is his increase.

Now, sir, I do not myself believe, though I yield to the judgment of others, that lime needs any duty whatever. We find that we are large importers of lime and cement; that we exported over 71,000 barrels in the last fiscal year.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is a very small export.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We export more than we import.

Mr. DINGLEY. We exported 71,000 barrels of lime and cement, and imported 200,000 barrels of lime alone in the present year.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I stand corrected. I find that I was making a statement of only one part. In our exportation of lime and cement we sent over 17,000 barrels from San Francisco, over 35,000 barrels from New York, over 5,000 barrels from Portland and Charleston, over 3,000 barrels from Detroit, and nearly 2,000 barrels from Oswego, N. Y.

It is perfectly evident that we do not need to import lime anywhere within the range of a natural market. I am unable at this moment to state the ports at which we bring in lime, but I would expect them to be those ports which are remote from the seats of the lime-producing industry.

Mr. DINGLEY. Largely Boston and New York, because they are so convenient to New Brunswick.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The returns show large exports from New York and from other cities upon the seaboard and the northern border.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is cement that is exported from New York.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The official returns do not distinguish between them, but we do know that the cement-men claim that they need more protection than do those who are engaged in producing lime, and it is perfectly evident that the present bill proposes to put lime at as high a rate of duty as it has paid since many years before the war, and a duty in the same form. We know also that the business is a prosperous one; that it is sustaining itself at home and seemingly to a great extent commanding foreign markets, and certainly there is no occasion for increasing the present tax over 300 per cent.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I move to strike out the last word. My purpose in making that motion is simply to correct an impression which my friends around me received from what I said in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL]. When that gentleman introduced his amendment to line 184, I asked him if the article mentioned in his amendment was one produced in this country, and his reply was, "not a pound." I then said that for that reason it should be taxed. I supposed that everybody understood me to express, not my own sentiment, but what I regarded as the sentiment of this proposed legislation. I understand right well that this bill is not in its form wholly a free-trade measure. It has in it protection to various industries, but I accept it as the men who favor it understandingly describe it, as "one step in the direction of free trade." I accept it as the reasoning of every man who has supported it, who has presented the shadow of a reason for supporting it, as a free-trade measure. Now it is based, I take it, upon a general proposition, which I will presently state. I do not know absolutely but what that proposition is true. I believe it to be untrue, and so I oppose this bill. But if it be true that a tariff is a tax to the amount of the duty, then I say that according to that principle revenue should be collected alone upon those articles which are not manufactured or produced in this country.

For instance, to make myself briefly plain, if we tax by a duty an article that is manufactured wholly in other countries, the entire amount of the duty goes into the Treasury, and there is no burden anywhere else; but if we tax an article that is partly produced in this country, and if the proposition which I have cited be correct, then only a portion of that tax goes into the Treasury, while another portion goes into the hands of the manufacturers or the laborers or somebody else, and thus the duty becomes obnoxious to the criticism that we have no right to tax one person for the benefit of another. Take iron; suppose that we produce in this country 90 per cent. of all that is consumed in this country, then it follows that a tax upon iron, according to this proposition, pays one dollar into the Treasury and nine dollars into the pockets of somebody else. Now, I will admit at once, and nobody could prevent my mind from coming to the conclusion, that such a proposition as that is not tenable or supportable for a moment. So in that sense, and in that sense alone, in the spirit of this bill and of the arguments that have been presented in support of this bill, I did say that our entire revenue should be raised by duties upon articles not produced in this country, because then the tax would be one and simple, and the whole of it go into the Treasury. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

A MEMBER. Let the amendment be read.

Insert after line 5, "Lime, 15 cents per cask."

The amendment was rejected—ayes 63, noes 75.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glycerine, refined, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out that line. I make that motion in order to call the attention of the House to the position of the Committee on Ways and Means and the estimates they have made as to the effect of the passage of this bill upon the industries of the country and the revenues of the Treasury. It has been repeated here over a dozen times, and it is simply a repetition of the statement made in the President's message, that the reduction of a duty implies a reduction of the cost of the article to the American consumer. I presume if I were to ask any member of the Ways and Means Committee what effect this proposed reduction of the duty on refined glycerine would have he would answer without question that the effect would be to make the article cheaper in the American market.

But if that is so, how absurd are the predictions of the Committee on Ways and Means with regard to the effect of this change in the law upon the surplus revenues of the Government. We have their predictions in the statement which I hold in my hand; and it seems that all through this dutiable list the gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee have calculated that the same amount of refined glycerine, for instance, will be imported into the country under the reduced duty that is imported under the duty now existing. The revenue from refined glycerine last year amounted to $89,337.40; and they predict that under the pending bill the revenue will be $53,602.44, which will be a relief to the overburdened Treasury of over $25,000. But, as gentlemen will find from an examination of this table, that calculation is based on the assumption that the same number of pounds of refined glycerine will be imported if the tax is reduced as are imported under the existing law.

Now, if it be true, as they say, that refined glycerine, or any other substance, will be cheaper to the American consumer in consequence of a reduction in the duty, it is inconceivable that this will happen except by an enlargement of the supply. Gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee can not suggest any way in which glycerine or anything else can be cheaper to the consumer except by a diminution of the demand or an increase in the supply. The theory on which they have gone is that the increase of supply will reduce the price; but if the supply is increased it can not conceivably be increased by an increase of the American part of the supply; the increase must come from additional importation. I admit that there will be this increase of importation, and that there will be for a time an increase in the total supply. The only question is whether the diminution in the profits of the American manufacturer will not cut off the American supply, the deficiency being made good by the supply from foreign countries. But I admit that the supply will be increased during the first six or twelve months after the passage of the bill. If that is so, what becomes of this argument that the surplus revenues of the Government will be reduced $25,734.96?

[Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The tax on glycerine was made specific in the revision of 1883. Prior to that time it was ad valorem, and no distinction was made between crude and refined glycerine. If you look back to the origin of the tax on glycerine, which is but a by-product in the manufacture of candles, you will find there was no tax until 1862. The tax laid under the first act of 1861 was laid professedly not for any need of protection, but for the temporary needs of revenue. It was laid as a temporary revenue tax, with a promise at the time that whenever the war needs of the Government ceased this tax would be dispensed with. Therefore you are doing nothing more than keeping your own pledge when you seek to put glycerine, at the present rate, and even if it were refined glycerine, and it were to put both on the free-list. You are keeping your own pledge because it had no tax upon it at all. We put crude glycerine back to where it was, and we leave a tax on refined glycerine of exactly the margin now existing between crude and refined, 3 cents.

As to the further question of the tax on refined glycerne, it was admitted by the manufacturers themselves in 1882 that the cost of refining glycerine was 3 cents a pound. We then leave it at 3 cents, covering the entire cost of refining. Yet gentlemen contend that this will hurt the workingman.

Mr. ADAMS. I made the motion to strike out this line to get some information. As the gentleman does not seem to be at leisure I wish some other member of the committee would give me his attention. The point I make is this. You have changed the duty from 5 cents to 3 cents, which is a reduction of 40 per cent. Do you think that will considerably reduce the cost of refined glycerine in the American market?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Of course I think it will reduce the price of refined glycerine.

Mr. ADAMS. Do you think it will have that effect except by enlarging the importation?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Certainly, especially as we import nearly all the crude glycerine we use.

Mr. ADAMS. I am talking about refined glycerine.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. So am I; but crude glycerine is its base.

Mr. ADAMS. Can there be any reduction to the American consumer except by the reduction of the tax on the imported article?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The same amount as the repeal may be the reduction involved, because crude glycerine is made less by the 2-cent tax being taken off, and the refined is correspondingly reduced from 5 to 3 cents, and then you will be able to charge the present price less 2 cents a pound and no more.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the gentleman suppose the manufacturers will sell for less because it costs less to produce it?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do. Price affects consumption, and hence production. Every customer gets it for the least price he can, it enters largely into the arts, and the change this bill will make in the cost of production and in the selling-price will increase the consumption of the product, will increase the importation of the crude article only, and will doubtless largely increase the domestic production and consumption of the refined article, and will doubtless cause much production for foreign markets.

The law states in distinct terms that if the manufacturers choose to stand together they can compel the customers to pay them 5 cents more a pound than it is worth in the markets of the world; but under this bill only 3 cents more.

Mr. ADAMS. As it is evident we can not understand each other on the question, I will abandon the attempt to discuss that point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It seems very clear.

Mr. ADAMS. It is my fault, perhaps, not to be able to understand the gentleman's mode of reasoning. But I will ask him this question: whether he believes that in consequence of the change of duty there will be any considerable importation of refined glycerine, the article we are discussing, and I refer now to refined glycerine exclusively?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It does not follow that there will be an increase——

Mr. ADAMS. Whether it follows or not, does the gentleman believe that will be the effect?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Upon the contrary, I think there will not be any increase. I will state to the gentleman that I think the effect will be to increase the domestic refining, and enable us, having the crude material free, to even sell our refined product in many of the foreign makets.

Mr. ADAMS. I am talking now of this item under consideration, refined glycerine, and its importation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And so am I. I say to the gentleman that if you make free and thus increase the importation of the crude material, which is the raw material or base of the refined, you enable us to increase the manufacture and begin the exportation of the refined material.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not understand the gentleman's mode of reasoning. It seems we can not understand each other.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in hearing the discussion which has taken place between the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Illinois upon this question; and I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. This is an article in general use which, if cheapened as he proposes to cheapen it, will greatly increase the importation and consumption of it in this country. If you take an article and reduce the cost of it 40 per cent., or any other per cent., I ask the gentleman if the consumption will not be increased, and if the consumption be increased will not the duties in the aggregate be increased, and will not the increased importation of the article increase the amount of money to be paid into the Treasury?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I suppose it is hardly worth while to argue the point with the gentleman. He is snagged upon a very simple proposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I do not hear the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman does not seem to see that the crude glycerine, for instance, is the base of the refined.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. That has nothing whatever to do with my question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Why, it has got everything to do with it; it is the whole question.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. You propose to cheapen a commodity; now, when you cheapen a commodity do you not at the same time expect an increase in the consumption of that commodity? In every single instance is it not true that by cheapening the commodity you increase its consumption?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Exactly, but the gentleman——

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. When you propose to take the tax off whisky in your platform, do you expect thereby to increase the consumption? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. It seems to me perfectly natural, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen on the other side of the House should always find it incumbent upon them to refer to whisky. No matter what is under discussion, no matter how disconnected the subject may be with that question, they in every case take to whisky just as familiarly as a duck takes to water. [Laughter.] I do not understand the reason for it, I must confess.

Now, there is no connection whatever between the American product and the imported product in the relation to which the gentleman has referred; and we all know that when you reduce the rate on a commodity you increase the consumption. When you reduced the postage on letters, you multiplied the number of letters, and the aggregate number of letters has increased. When sugar is cheaper the consumption is greater; and when you have reduced the price, the reduction of the duty has that effect upon any article, it at the same time increases the consumption. Such has been the case on wool and woolen goods, and these increased imports have increased the amount of money in the Treasury. With the Mills bill, if it ever becomes a law, the effect would be to increase the amount of money placed in the Treasury instead of reducing it. It can not be reduced so far as this question of reduction is concerned. Because when you place an article on the free-list, then you can reduce the duty paid into the Treasury; but when you only propose to reduce the duty, and to not place it on the free-list, you simply increase the importation and increase the consumption, and the amount of revenue is more than made up in many instances by the great increase in importation.

So it is here, Mr. Chairman. When you cheapen the price you simply increase the consumption, and by increasing the consumption you increase the revenues of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I suppose that argument is entirely satisfactory to gentlemen on that side of the House; and I now ask a vote.

Mr. ADAMS. If in order I desire to move an amendment by adding the words "or Brazil."

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order pending the consideration of the substantive amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. I will withdraw my former amendment, and now move to amend the line by adding the words "imported from Brazil."

I want to state as distinctly as possible my suggestion of a few moments ago, which I then tried to make clear to the gentleman from Arkansas, as to the result of the reduction of taxation on this commodity from 5 cents per pound to 3 cents per pound. That is a reduction of 40 per cent., a very considerable reduction. Now, what is the effect of the existing duty on this importation?

There were imported last year into this country of refined glycerine, 1,786,748 pounds; but there were manufactured in this country during the same time between thirteen and fifteen millions of pounds.

That is to say the 5-cent duty is almost prohibitory. Now, when you take a prohibitory duty and reduce it 40 per cent., is it conceivable that there will not be a large increase in the importation of the article?

Mr. REED. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that that is the very object of the bill—to increase importations. That is what they made it for.

Mr. ADAMS. Very well. If it is the object of the bill, and I have no doubt it is, then how can the Committee on Ways and Means estimate the effect of this change of the law on the surplus revenue of the Government, by assuming that precisely 1,786,748 pounds would be imported next year and the year after next, that being the precise number of pounds imported heretofore? If it be true that so large a reduction in the duty, which is now nearly prohibitory, will greatly increase the importation, what becomes of their prediction that $25,734.96 will be saved from the overburdened Treasury? And yet that same argument will follow almost all the way through the dutiable articles of this bill.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was, I believe, justified in saying that the effect of the bill as a whole might be even to add to the surplus. I have very little doubt that the dutiable part of the bill will considerably increase the income of the Government. As for what you put on the free-list and what you take from the internal-revenue taxes, there is no question that you diminish directly the surplus revenues of the Government. But when you take the bill as a whole how can you appeal to this House without giving some explanation of what you consider to be the probable effect of the bill upon the surplus revenue of the Government as a whole?

I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. REED. I ought to add that an effort was made to obtain the opinion of the Treasury Department as to the effect of this bill upon the revenues, but that the effort was resisted and defeated by the Committee on Ways and Means. Now, it seems to me the plain purpose of this bill (and it can have no other so far as these items to which we have arrived are concerned) is to increase importations. And yet the committee have come before the House and before the country with a system of figures founded upon a state of facts which the bill is itself intended to destroy. In other words, they produce a bill which is intended to increase importations and they deceive the country by insisting that the importations are to remain the same. Now that position is not uncharacteristic. It is rather natural. It is one that you would expect. As for their refusal to explain, to give you any definite facts to proceed upon, that is certainly in accordance with the plan of campaign which has been adopted by the other side.

I am glad to see it has been brought so distinctly before the House as it has been by the various arguments which have been presented. Here is a most delusive schedule, a schedule founded upon a statement of facts which this bill is intended to destroy, a statement which in its very nature must be untrue, and it is given to the country as true, and day after day they refuse and persist in refusing to give any explanation as to the effect of the bill. It is part and parcel of a pleasant plan they have. You see the only thing that troubles them to-day is the surplus, but they are engineering the surplus as a something against what they call the tariff tax. You notice how sedulously every gentleman on his feet emphasizes the word "tax." They are using it for that purpose. Now, when they get through this bill and it begins to operate, if it should succeed in passing, the sole effect of it will be to give us with the growth of the country as big a surplus as we have now. Then they will come in with another bill, not for the purpose of injuring the industries of the country; not for that purpose, gentlemen on that side will say, but for the purpose of cutting out the surplus again. Then comes the second step, and so it goes on until the procession ends just where it started, for while they go on denying that they intend to start for that point at all, nothing can show it more plainly than the very fact that they keep persisting in this statement they have made.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. As I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] he criticises the Committee on Ways and Means because of the method which they have adopted in estimating the probable reductions in the revenue to be made under this bill, and finds fault with that committee because it has not submitted to the House some more trustworthy information upon that subject. Mr. Chairman, it will be found upon examination that there accompanies this bill a more thorough and complete estimate of the reduction of taxes to be made by it than, as I am informed, has ever accompanied any tariff bill presented to this House. Of course no man can conjecture exactly what the importations for the next fiscal year will be, and the only estimate that can possibly be made is what would have been the revenue last year if the rates proposed by this bill had been in existence rather than the rates of the existing law. Now, I admit, as claimed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], that it is very possible that the reduction of duty upon some articles will increase the importations, and that the revenue from those articles will not fall off. But I have risen not so much to make these remarks as to show that the criticism which the gentleman makes upon the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means is one that he would not have made if he had recalled the debate upon the tariff bill that was brought into this House in the Forty-seventh Congress, under the leadership of Judge KELLEY, then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. I have here the RECORD in which Judge KELLEY's opening speech in explanation of that bill appears, and when he had concluded this question was put to him:

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KELLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CARLISLE. I think the House and the country will be very much disappointed at the gentleman's failure to state his opinion as to the amount of reduction of the rates of duty and the amount of reduction in the revenue to be effected by this bill. I should be glad to hear the gentleman's opinion.

To that question Mr. KELLEY responded as follows:

I cut my remarks short because I had an intimation that I would be interrupted directly by a message from the Senate. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that anybody can make a guess or an estimate, as the phraseology runs, of what the reduction of revenue will be. The Committee on Ways and Means bring to the attention of the whole House means of testing their bill such as I have never seen submitted under similar circumstances before. Here is a table showing articles, amounts, and rates of duty under existing law and those reported in House bill 7313, the computations being on the importations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

That, Mr. Chairman, is exactly what has been done in this case. We have made a calculation on the basis of the imports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and have brought into the House such estimates as could be made upon that basis, believing, as Judge KELLEY expressed himself in the Forty-seventh Congress, that after all it is largely a matter of conjecture and not a matter of accurate estimate.

Mr. REED. I have been so accustomed to something sharp and bright whenever the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] rises to his feet (and I regret that he rises so rarely) that I am a little surprised that he has not followed his usual custom this time. It must be evident to the House that he has failed to make any real answer to the suggestions that I have submitted. He shields himself behind a former chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means whom he is in the habit of repudiating upon all other occasions. He seems to feel that if he has come up to the level of something which has happened in the past he has done his entire duty.

But I call his attention and the attention of the House to the fact that a request was made to the Committee on Ways and Means for an estimate on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury giving us the benefit of the best resources at his command to show us what reduction would necessarily or probably be the result of this tariff bill, and to the fact that that information has been refused by the committee to the country. Now, the Treasury Department has resources in that direction which we do not know. Whether the same proposition was presented to the former Committee on Ways and Means to which the gentleman has referred I do not know. I do know that it was presented to this committee and that they refused to ask for the information. Instead of that, instead of saying to the House and to the country, as Judge KELLEY said, that they did not know what reduction would be made, they have boldly gone to the country with the statement that certain reductions would be made, that assertion being based upon a state of facts which their bill is intended to render—a state of falsehood. In other words, they tell the country that such and such will be the reduction when such and such things come to pass, which things their bill is intended to prevent from coming to pass.

Now, what answer has been made to that charge? Gentlemen on the other side have gone before the country announcing that this bill makes a total reduction of so much in the revenues, and then they get up here and admit that as to a large part of it they do not know whether it will make any reduction or not, while the experience of the past would indicate that it will probably yield an increase of revenue sufficient to counterbalance all that is put upon the free-list. If it does that we shall again be met with a surplus, and again we shall be told that "tariff taxes must be reduced;" but during the next campaign all these gentlemen will be scattering themselves over the country, as some of them have already gone to New York, to tell the people that they do not mean free trade. The Democratic party never "means" what it intends to do. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last two words. I wish simply to call the attention of the gentleman from Maine to the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, to which is appended the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, giving, as far as it was possible for him to give, his estimates of the reductions proposed by the bill, showing that he did not refuse to answer the request of the committee.

Mr. REED. I did not charge him with refusing to answer; I charged the committee with refusing to ask.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Which was equally a mistake.

Mr. REED. I am right.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Of course you are not right.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Here is the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. REED. Give us the letter addressed to him.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia (reading):

Mr. Talbott, clerk of your committee——

Mr. REED. Give us the letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. The Secretary begins his letter with a reference to the letter of the committee.

Mr. REED. Let us have the questions which were asked of the Secretary.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia (reading):

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1888.

SIR: Mr. Talbott, clerk of your committee, has presented me copies, respectively, of the proposed bill "to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue," and of the tables relating to the same, with the request that I communicate to you my views as to the probable effect the adoption of the administrative sections of the bill would have upon the revenue, and also that I cause the computations in the tables to be verified, and footings of the column of "values" therein to be made by experts in this Department.

Mr. REED. That is, you asked his opinion about the effect of the administrative parts of the bill, but not about the rest.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. We submitted the other tables with the request that he should have them verified.

Mr. REED. That is, add up the figures.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. No, sir; have them verified as to whether they were correct or not.

Mr. REED. Do you mean to affirm that the Secretary of the Treasury says your estimate about that is correct?

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. The Secretary of the Treasury does not give estimates, because it is impossible for anybody to do that, but he gives his opinion as to each matter in turn under the bill. The gentleman will find his letter in the report of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from West Virginia does not intend to mislead the House, or if he does he is not going to be successful, because that table is a plain statement of the importations of a preceding year, and the duty is figured under this bill as if the importations would be the same, when the bill intends that they shall not be the same. I beg pardon of the House for reiterating this, but after awhile the gentlemen on the other side will get hold of it.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. That is the very point I admitted in the beginning—that nobody could speak definitely as to the future importations; that we must content ourselves with proceeding upon the basis of last year's importations.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman give us his opinion on this point——

Mr. KERR. With regard to importations——

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Here is a reduction from 5 cents to 3 cents (being a 40 per cent. reduction) on an article of which last year less than two million pounds were imported, while from thirteen to fifteen million pounds were manufactured in the country. Now, will the gentleman from West Virginia say what, in his individual opinion, the effect of the reduction of duty will be—how much it will reduce or increase the revenue?

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I can not answer such a question as to any particular item. Possibly there would not be a single additional pound of crude glycerine imported, because, with the home supply, there might not be needed for consumption in this country more of the foreign glycerine than was brought in last year. On the other hand, the removal of the duty might increase the supply of the imported article. But in any event, whether we are decreasing the surplus in the Treasury or not, we are decreasing the taxes imposed upon the people. [Applause on the Democratic side; derisive cries on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. That is the point; the surplus is of no account; free trade is everything. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. On the other hand, with gentlemen on that side taxation is of no account, and subsidy for private individuals is everything. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. I am glad to hear the gentleman from West Virginia characterize protection in that way, because it shows what he is at heart.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. It is the truth.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] will be considered as withdrawn. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] renews it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] states that the Committee on Ways and Means refused to refer the bill proposing a reduction of taxes to the Secretary of the Treasury. Sir, that matter came before the committee more than once, and it came in more than one form. There is no doubt whatever in the minds of the Democratic members of the committee that every means possible was resorted to, principally under the leadership of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], to retard and delay and hinder the measures to reduce the surplus in the Treasury, until he and his associates felt constrained by the lash of an indignant public sentiment to cease their obstructive measures.

Sir, when they wanted to refer this bill to the Secretary of the Treasury in a way which involved nothing but delay the Democratic members of the committee were unwilling to enter into any such policy. But the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury is proof that we did refer the tables which are appended, and which the gentleman knows and which he can not deny, and if he does he can not bring facts to substantiate him, are the forms of tables officially employed to show the effect of a tax bill upon the revenues of the country. We were not disposed to stop in the consideration of this important part of the public business in order to wait until the figures of the Secretary could get back to us, because we had the same figures in the usual official form compiled by our clerk, who is one of the most painstaking and most experienced and accurate experts in such matters in this country.

It was a question of delay, and only a question of delay, which met with the opposition of the Democratic members of the committee. We had the tables compiled by the clerk, and we sent those same tables to the Secretary, and the Secretary's comment has been read by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON]. We subsequently put at their command the same figures in the form of this document which I hold in my hand, and which gives the estimated reduction at fifty-three millions of dollars. It gives every bit of information ever given that I know of in such cases. The gentleman suggests no different form of information. For my part I know of no better form. It gives every estimate. It gives more precise information in reference to every item than does any other statement, so far as I know, ever compiled by or for the committee or the House. It gives the page in the present law to which each item refers, the imports, units of value, and all that. The gentlemen have had all that was ever offered and more. They have had it unceasingly thrust at them. The gentleman from Maine can get up here and make the assertions he does, but he can not substantiate them by any documents, nor does he suggest any improvement on the tables at command.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman drops into oratory and talks about my being lashed, he is only indulging in that style of rhetoric so suitable to his own sunny clime, but so unsatisfactory in this region. [Laughter.] The fact of the case is, stripped of rhetoric, the demand was made, and this bill was reported weeks after that demand was made. Ample time there was and no delay designed or dreamed of.

As for the asseveration there has been any attempt to make delay the gentleman states a fact within his own knowledge that is not so. In the Committee on Ways and Means efforts were made for a short period of time to obtain information with regard to the reasons and facts which induced the opening of the various items of this bill.

As soon after careful effort as it was ascertained the other side had determined to afford to the House, to the country, and to their colleagues no information whatever, there was no more delay except to take votes on the items of the bill. And he knows and every man knows in this House that with the use of one-quarter of the powers which the parliamentary laws give us we might have detained the bill in the committee ten hours for every one which has been consumed. Here we have gone sedulously to work taking up item by item; men have risen to their feet as the interests of their constituents prompted them, and if debate has taken a wide range it only shows how wide in its extent has been the stroke against the industries of the country. [Applause on the Republican side.] If there have been many topics discussed during the consideration of this bill it is because of the fact that many of the industries of this country have been attacked; and I am very sure that the gentleman from Arkansas upon reflection will deem it desirable not to repeat that there has been any unnecessary delay with regard to the progress of the bill. When we consider that under the leadership of the present Speaker of this House, at the short session of the Forty-seventh Congress, seven weeks of the session were spent on one-half of the items of the bill, it is surprising that they should have the courage to make as many repetitions of this attack as they have seen proper to make. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, when the Democratic party, under the leadership of the present Speaker of this House, delayed the consideration of the tariff bill to which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] alludes, they delayed the consideration with the distinctly announced purpose of defeating the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED. They announced nothing of the kind.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I repeat, with the distinct announcement that they intended to defeat the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED. On the contrary, they denied that such was their intention.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have never heard it stated by any member on this side of the House that such was not the fact.

Mr. REED. The gentleman was not in parliamentary existence at that time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is true. I was not in parliamentary existence at that time, and I speak only of what I have read, heard, and believe, and not of what I can know of my own knowledge; but the fact has never been denied but often so stated by my associates on this side of the House.

Mr. REED. The gentleman is not familiar with all the facts.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. They have stated to me that they intended to kill it; that they condemned it; they make no secret here now that it was their intention to defeat it; that they fought it for the purpose of defeating it; and I know of none of my associates on this side of the House here now who were in the Forty-seventh Congress who will get up and deny that such was the fact.

Mr. REED. No; they never deny past history; it is always the present.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Now, sir, as regards the parliamentary power of the committee ——

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let me complete what I was saying first.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I want to ask the gentleman in this connection on that very bill——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I refuse to yield to the gentleman; I have not yet answered what has been stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

[Cries of "Sit down!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The gentleman will not yield?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will answer the gentleman after I have concluded my answer to the statements which have been made by the gentleman from Maine.

Now, sir, as far as the question of the parliamentary power of the committee is concerned, to which allusion has been made by the gentleman from Maine, the Democratic majority of that committee could have brought that bill out of committee and before the House at any time without asking anything whatever of the minority of the committee.

But, sir, we did put one month at the disposal of the minority; and while I do not care to go into a question of personal allusions with the gentleman from Maine, yet as a matter of evidence, as a matter of fact, which I believe to be absolutely true, I file my conviction in the statement that there is not a word or a suggestion that he makes about these questions, as he has now stated them to this committee, that is true. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I contradict it in toto. I contradict and deny it absolutely and emphatically; and I state my belief that under his leadership, a leadership the most discourteous, the most insolent and as brutal as any ever witnessed in even a degraded assemblage of degraded men, he hindered the progress of this bill until, in my opinion, he shrank under the lash of an indignant public sentiment which demanded a reduction of the surplus revenues of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not make any question contravening the statement of what the gentleman believes or asserts as his belief. With that I have nothing to do, but I resent with unutterable contempt the base insinuation he makes as to the integrity of my belief; and I file this statement in no spirit of animosity, but in a spirit of earnestness and zeal as distinct testimony of what I believe to be the truth of history, to go upon the records of this House to vindicate the Democratic party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the House during the discussion of the tariff in the Forty-seventh Congress, and being a new member I had little to do but listen. I remember distinctly that the present Speaker of the House, during that discussion repudiated all the while having in view any object like delay. He said he proposed to discuss the measure, and he did discuss it at length and with very great ability; but he denied having in view the defeat of the bill by the consumption of time, and he refused to take part in any filibustering that took place at that time or looking to that end.

This the record will show. I never heard it said during that discussion by any man on the Democratic side of the House, that the course of the Democratic party aimed at the destruction of the bill by the consumption of time. The Speaker, as I then understood him, was not in favor of resorting to any method except fair discussion followed by a vote, and I did not hear any one admit at that time that the course then pursued was intended only to defeat the bill by delay and by consumption of time.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal of discussion, not only to-day but in days past, about the difference of opinion between the members of the committee in the deliberations on this bill. That may be very material to them as men; but to this House and to the public generally, the people of the United States, it does not amount to anything. What we are here for is to represent the people, to look after their interests; not to look after the fighting interests of the members of that committee. I take it for granted more attention ought to be given to the bill than to quarrels between those parties.

I want to say this, with all due respect to the committee, if they had been in earnest and desirous of helping the people of the land, relieving them from taxation, they could have found a quicker, a shorter, and better method than the one they have adopted. They state that they propose doing what? To reduce the revenue $50,000,000 a year. That is all they propose doing. That is all they are asked to do by our worthy President. By that means the surplus in the Treasury will be stayed. If that is the only object they have in view, and if that is the only instruction they have received from their worthy leader, why did they not at once adopt the method of taking the duty off of sugar? That is $50,000,000 a year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Fifty-five millions.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Would not that have relieved the people of this country from their taxes? Why not select one item and not attack all the industries from Maine to California? That would only have destroyed one industry in this country. Yet I say to the committee I would not be in favor of that. I am glad they kept the sugar tax as it is. I only wish they had doubled it. It would be no hardship to the people of this country if they had doubled the tariff on sugar, for the reason that sugar to-day is cheap enough. It is cheaper than it has been for the last thirty years. It would have been very creditable to them if they had doubled the tariff on sugar. It would have encouraged the planting of sugar and the manufacture of it in this country. As it is now the tariff on sugar is not enough. It is not sufficient to encourage the planters to continue planting it. For that reason most of the sugar is raised in Cuba, Demerara, and other foreign countries.

But if the only object had been to reduce the revenue of the Government $50,000,000 it might have been done at one stroke. That would have saved all the discussion in this House, which appears to be likely to continue for a month longer. It would have reduced taxation and at the same time it would have relieved the people of the extra price on sugar.

I believe there is not a man on this side of the House but what would be willing to increase the bounty to the sugar-grower providing they had struck that out. I am satisfied that would have been the case. So either way, either by increasing the duty or striking it off, they would have accomplished the purpose and would have saved all this discussion which is alarming the country and disturbing the industries of the land. In every paper you will read that mills are shutting down and workmen are being cut in their wages. Why? Simply because this tariff bill is discussed. They apprehend a destruction of the industries by the competition that will come in from Europe. Any thinking man who will look at this question will see that the only element of this country to be benefited by the reduction of the tariff is the rich. The poor people pay none of the tariff except on whisky and tobacco, and those are the very items on which you want to keep up the tax. There is another case where you could have struck the duty off if you pleased. Why did you not do that? That is over $50,000,000. If you had struck out the two items of whisky and tobacco you would have saved the industries of this country instead of destroying them; and you would have relieved the workingmen from the tax they pay on whisky and tobacco. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] stated that it was the avowed purpose of the Democratic party in the Forty-seventh Congress to defeat the tariff bill that passed that Congress. Mr. Chairman, the Forty-seventh Congress elected the Hon. J. Warren Keifer, Republican, Speaker by a majority of only two votes. It was a House almost exactly divided, with a majority of but two members, and the Democratic party were able—oh, no; not the Democratic party, but the rebel brigadiers. [Derisive laughter and applause long continued on the Democratic side.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, they are always ready to applaud whenever the Southern brigadiers are mentioned. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] The Southern brigadiers [loud and continued applause on the Democratic side] could filibuster for a number of weeks to defeat the State tax bill, with a small majority even of their own party; and finally lashed the entire Democratic party into their measures this session. But, Mr. Chairman, in the Forty-seventh Congress, when the Republicans had a majority of but two, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] said the avowed purpose of their party was to defeat that bill, and yet they could not with their big vote defeat it, but allowed it to pass.

If they did intend to defeat it with that vote and failed to do it, that only shows that they were true to their record as cowards not to do that which they had the power to do. [Jeers and derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BRUMM. Half a minute more and I shall have done.

Several MEMBERS (on the Democratic side.) Take five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended?

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague [Mr. BRUMM] be extended for five minutes.

[Cries on the Democratic side of "Make it ten!"]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I move to amend by making the time ten minutes.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, if I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas has no time to yield. [Laughter.] Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRUMM. I have only a few words to add. I say, then, that the Democratic party, if they intended to defeat that bill and failed to do it, were either too cowardly to carry out their intent, or the gentleman from Arkansas showed his entire ignorance of the facts, or he maliciously and willfully misstated them on this floor. [Renewed jeers on the Democratic side].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to ask the gentleman, who is always so moderate and so well-informed, whether he ever heard of the Keifer ruling, by which the rules of the House were changed and the Democratic party here were completed gagged?

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn, and the question recurs upon striking out the line, which the Clerk will again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glycerine, refined, 3 cents per pound.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has raised between him and myself not exactly a question of veracity, but a question as to which of us would be most liable to be mistaken as to a fact. [Laughter.] He has asseverated in the presence of this Congress, the Fiftieth, that the gentlemen of his party in opposing the tariff bill of the Forty-seventh Congress distinctly and openly avowed that that was their purpose. I asseverate the contrary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not asseverate that of my knowledge, but of my belief. I was not present and do not know of my own knowledge. I have no doubt of it, however.

Mr. REED. I will give the gentleman the benefit of his explanation, and will now proceed. In the presence of the Democrats of the Forty-seventh Congress, who then knew what they were doing and what they were willing to avow they were doing, I made some observations, which will be found on page 2136 of the sixty-first volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I will not read the whole of what I then said, but I will read sufficient to show that the question was distinctly put to them.

They—

have, in the face and eyes of this country, for the last week and more, by dilatory motions, by resort to every parliamentary tactic derived from their fertile knowledge of such subjects, by the enunciation of every trifle they could think of upon unimportant points, indicated their disposition to beat this bill by any means—as was said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]—fair or foul; but they have not the courage even of their prejudices. They do not dare to-day to come here and say so. When there is a debate like this, when things must put on their best face, it is not the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. TOWNSHEND] who are put to the front. It is the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE], and he talks to us about the sacred liberty of speech, while the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], in his own proper person, illustrates the license of speech. The gentleman from Kentucky says he has not proposed any factious amendments. No; that is not his rôle. It would not sit fittingly upon him. He is of too high character to do that work; but others are set to do it before his very face and eyes. This country knows that these gentlemen mean to beat this bill. The country would be glad if they had at least the virtue of courage and would avow it.

Now, if they had avowed it openly in that Congress could I have used such language without dispute in their presence?

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman will do me the honor to admit that I did avow it, because he refers there to the fact that I made the avowal on this floor.

Mr. REED. The gentleman is the only one. Mr. CARLISLE distinctly denies it, as you will find by his remarks on page 2135 of the RECORD.

Now, it is perfectly well known by every man who was a member of the Forty-seventh Congress, it is known to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], that repeated charges of this kind were made and they were repeatedly denied. Instead of avowing it they absolutely refused to avow it; but took refuge in dilatory motions. Now, you can see the courage which it requires of gentlemen of the same party to come here after treating a tariff bill in that manner in a short session of Congress and object to legitimate, fair, and proper discussion of this bill.

Mr. BLAND. If I remember correctly, we had only one week's debate in Committee of the Whole on that bill before it was taken out of committee and passed.

Mr. REED. The gentleman's memory does not serve him correctly.

Mr. BLAND. I think that was stated by Mr. CARLISLE in his speech before the adoption of the rule.

Mr. REED. The bill was never passed; the Democratic party killed it by delays. We stopped when we were half-way through with it.

Mr. BLAND. But the bill from the Senate was taken up and passed.

Mr. REED. We passed the Senate bill in very short order.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. BAYNE. I renew the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has alluded to the fact that in the discussion of this bill the opprobrious name "taxes" has been almost invariably applied on the other side to tariff duties. That is the fact; and when the other side of the House has been charged by this side with advocating free trade, I have not observed during the whole progress of this debate a single gentleman rise in his place and protest that that side of the House was not in favor of free trade or in favor of a policy which would lead to free trade. But we have asserted that in the campaign of 1884 protectionist Democrats like my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] and others declared upon the stump that the Democratic party was not in favor of free trade and was in favor of protection.

I wish now to call attention to the fact that thus early in the campaign—almost immediately after the nominations of the two parties for the Presidency have been made—our amiable and kindly Speaker, in a speech delivered the other night in New York City, after declaring that the Democratic party is not in favor of free trade, proceeded to say:

After a careful investigation of the whole subject—

it was thought best to propose the abolition of the internal-revenue taxes upon unmanufactured chewing and smoking tobacco, not including cigars, cigarettes, and cheroots, and the repeal of tariff taxes on certain articles of necessity, with moderate reductions of the rates of duty upon others where the existing rates were unusually high; and accordingly the measure now so widely known as the Mills bill was prepared and reported.

Governor Hill, of New York, in making a speech on the same occasion, declares that the Democratic party is not in favor of free trade, and states also that the effort of the Democrats in Congress is to reduce the duties where they are too high, and to correct inequalities and absurdities in the existing law. It will be observed that the Democratic speakers who have already gone upon the stump, even while this bill is pending in the House, do not use the opprobrious term "taxes," but they adopt the more euphonious word "duties," and speak of the tariff as needing revision on account of "inequalities" and of reducing duties where they are "unusually high." The attitude thus taken before the country on behalf of the Democratic party by the Speaker of this House, when he appears before an audience of Democrats in the city of New York, and taken by the governor of the State of New York before the same audience, is inconsistent with the stand taken by the Democratic members of the House of Representatives, who characterize duties all the way through as "taxes," and endeavor by the frequent use of that term to bring opprobrium and odium upon the tariff system of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. YARDLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to occupy time, nor to interfere with the entertainment which has been in progress here; but I desire to call attention to the fact that the duty upon glass bottles, demijohns, and pickle and preserve jars is 1 cent per pound under the present law, while the Mills bill, as now presented, makes the duty three-fourths of 1 cent per pound. To show the unfairness and injustice of this reduction as affecting a great industry in my district, I desire to have read a letter which I send to the desk from the Diamond Glass Company.

ROVERSFORD, PA., March 9, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We notice in the Mills tariff bill, just introduced in the House of Representatives, that there is a proposed reduction on duty of empty bottles to three-quarters of a cent per pound, and makes filled bottles in many cases free. Have that committee an idea of what they are trying to do, or do they wish the glass manufacturers of the United States to shut down until our workmen submit to work for same wages as Europe is paying. Why, at the rate of duty now, 1 cent per pound, we meet with competition almost every week, and I have seen figures from Dresden and Belgium the same as ours on the same contract, and our figures were low at that. The imports on this line of goods were 75 per cent. greater last year than the year previous, and recent orders given by a number of small dealers at still lower rates than six months ago indicate still greater imports for next season at prices American manufacturers can not afford to meet.

As the present duty of 1 cent per pound does not cover the difference in wages between imported articles and domestic, any reduction on rates will decrease production in the United States, increase imports, and must of necessity increase revenue; you can see at first glance the foolishness of the proposed reduction.

Under existing tariff regulations green-glass bottles when imported, if filled, pay 30 per cent. ad valorem in addition to duty on contents. The difference between specific and ad valorem duty on same class of bottles, one being empty the other filled, is as follows: We will take a 23-ounce, green, quart bottle, of which there are hundreds of gross imported into the United States yearly, filled with just water, which can be emptied out and the bottles used for other purposes.

Items.	Empty, per gross.	Filled, per gross.
Cost of manufacturing in Europe	$2.14	$2.14
Packing and freight to seaboard	.82	.82
Freight to America	.35	.35
Duty	*2.07	†.64
Total	5.38	3.95

* Specific duty on 207 pounds of glass, at 1 cent per pound.
† Ad valorem duty of 30 per cent.

Making a difference of $1.43—a marked difference, and that of itself is sufficient to be brought before Congress.

The manufacture of glassware in your district is a young industry, and bids fair to grow considerably in a short time if it is not restricted by some tariff tinkers who know nothing about the business. You being our Representative we look to you for protection.

We are yours, etc.,

DIAMOND GLASS COMPANY.
J. M. SCHELLINGER, Secretary.

Mr. ROBERT M. YARDLEY.

Mr. YARDLEY. So far as I know there has not been a single petition and there is not a single individual asking for a reduction on these articles in this bill. My constituents, on the contrary, are protesting against it, and I ask to have read by the Clerk a petition signed by fifty-five laboring men in Montgomery County, in the State of Pennsylvania, against it.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, green and colored glass bottle blowers and other citizens of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, interested in the manufacture of glass bottles, most respectfully petition your honorable body against the 25 per cent. reduction in import duty on green and colored glass bottles proposed in the Mills tariff bill. Under the existing tariff on glass bottles a considerable importation takes place annually, and to reduce the present duty any would result positively in increasing importations to such an extent as to demoralize the trade, or would reduce the price of labor equivalent to the amount of the reduction in duty. Your petitioners claim the present duty to be as low as it should be to enable our manufacturers to compete with foreign manufacturers and pay wages that such exhausting labor is entitled to. And we most respectfully ask your honorable body that the present duty of one cent per pound should be retained.

And your petitioners shall ever pray, etc.

H. Kaltenbach, E. D. Martin, D. G. McCaig, Henry Schnell, Jos. F. Buzby, Andrew J. Christie, Henry Long, Chris. Cellars, Thomas Usherwood, S. Carnelo, S. M. Houck, J. B. Wentzell, J. Ruckel, F. Carmelia, W. Carmelia, J. W. Hiller, D. D. Holcombe, J. Merritt Schellinger, William J. Ralston, John B. Moser, A. W. Berks, H. S. Mattes, J. Stokeley, James F. Walsh, George Lewis, Jacob Wentzell, Arthur Roxby, J. A. Frederick, Chas. Raiser, Apey Busherd, John Crothers, L. B. Strouse, E. M. Lockhart, A. Eppehimer, E. Matthews, F. Matthews, E. S. Langner, John C. Rickle, B. Geisinger, Chas. A. Price, H. W. Fredirici, Patrick Hynes, John B. Lochrey, Theo. Porter, W. M. Stickle, Henry Ganner, Edward Thomas, T. A. Fry, Martin McJuane, John E. Schrack, B. McMahon, W. F. Buckwalter, Harry Carmelia, Frank Eppehimer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the formal amendments are withdrawn.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of having read, in answer to what has been read on the other side of the House, a card, which is only a sample of numbers I am receiving every day from the people of the First Congressional district of Kentucky.

IRON HILL, KY., June 20, 1888.

Mr. W. J. STONE:

We are watching Congress with eager interest. You say to them fellows they may as well agree to reduce that tariff. We clod-hoppers are going to patch our old wool hats and tie up our last winter brogans with hickory bark until it's done.

Yours, truly,

J. M. DEAN.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a petition from laboring men of Beaver Falls, in the Congressional district I have the honor to represent, on this same subject. It is one of strong protest against the passage of the Mills bill. The paper is signed by skilled laborers, men who make iron nails and glass, men who make machinery of the finest quality. The signers of the petition live in a town that has graded schools, numerous churches, and a flourishing college. They are industrious men, proud of the name of laborers. They are men who delight in the prosperity of their thriving city, which is a very hive of industry. They know the good effects of the American system of protection. They have seen the various industries in which they are employed grow and increase with protection. It has enabled them to receive good wages and support themselves and families in comfort. They have seen their town grow from a small village to its present size, and they view with dread your attack on their industries. They solemnly protest against the passage of the Mills bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

BEAVER FALLS, April 9, 1888.

Hon. O. Jackson and the Congress of the United States:

We the laboring class of this, your Congressional district, feel that if the present Mills tariff bill becomes a law that it will injure the laboring classes and the industries of this district. We would petition you and your honorable body to use your utmost to defeat the passage of said bill, as we feel confident that if passed it will be detrimental to all concerned.

PETITIONERS.

G. C. Hamilton, heater, New Brighton, Pa.; Alfred Turner, roller; William Ruckert, heater; Samuel Turner, blacksmith; James W. Murray, shearman; Jackson Vaughn, Joseph Tate, A. J. Hagan, G. W. Murray, Thomas Holt, Frank Kain, Christopher Keeling, Anthony Lloyd, Hamilton X. Gosneyr, Athea X. Fox, John Ritz, Jonathan Evans, Fred Small, H. Readman, Fred N. Harlan, B. Young, Joseph James, John Greenwood, Thomas Bates, George Hales, A. C. Ross, William Rogers, roller; Elmer Johnson, Thomas Hagan, William Cole, J. F. Wilson, G. W. Tomlin, tailor; Jno. C. Hart, Frank Boswell, S. L. Fridiger, C. H. Kelley, W. A. Heckathorn, molder; P. W. Boswell, John Boswell, John Martin, H. A. Moore, John Fagan, Richard Kennedy, James S. Paterson, Edward W. Jones, William Doyle, Frank McQuilla n, John E. West, W. N. Rea, Chas. W. May, Martin Mooney, John B. Barratt, Thos. Minehin, James Wynn, Charley Kure, William Stirling, Wm. Warner, G. W. Coates, D. A. Garden.

Mr. JACKSON. My friend from Kentucky says, as I understand him, that his petition for this bill is from the clod-hoppers or hickory-barkers in his district, and I hope he does not have many such as these—men who do not want to see thriving and prosperous communities growing up as the result of skilled labor and industry. The men I speak for, and who protest against the passage of the Mills bill in the petition which has been read, are those who are skilled workmen; who have built up a thriving town with prosperous industries. The petitioners in my district, as I have stated, are surrounded with schools and churches, whose wives and children are refined and educated women, as lovely as any the sun shines on, well dressed and happy. These constitute the class which this bill strikes at. If the constituents of my Kentucky friend would only visit our thriving towns and see the benefits of protection they would never favor the Mills bill again. It is to change the clod-hoppers to skilled laborers with happy homes in every part of our country that I favor the system of protection. I shall welcome the day when every part of Kentucky and the whole land shall enjoy its benefits. [Applause.]

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I believe my time has not expired, Mr. Chairman, and I only wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania tha I am proud to represent upon this floor men who cultivate the soil and who live on their own earnings and do not wish to take what belongs to others, but remain content with that which is their own. Their honest toil crowns them with honor, and they do not seek to impose burdens of taxation upon others in order that they may reap greater profits like the constituents who oppose the passage of the Mills bill. It may be the "clod-hoppers" do not wear the costly clothing or indulge in the luxuries of the gentleman's constituents, but it is equally true that they only spend upon themselves the money which they honestly earn, and that they do not indulge in extravagant expenditures which are paid for by unjust burdens of taxation imposed upon others who are least able to bear them. My constituents prefer to cultivate the soil and to labor in the fields and to live fairly and justly, and to do equal and exact justice to all. They are in favor, therefore, of doing away with the dangerous surplus by reduction of taxation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Acid, acetic, acetous, or pyroligneous acid, exceeding the specific gravity of 1.047, 5 cents per pound.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. ADAMS. I suppose this line will be understood as pending?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a joint resolution (H. Res. 187) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government, with an amendment in which concurrence was requested.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the House to consider the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution extending the appropriations for thirty days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, of the joint resolution, strike out the word "amount" where it occurs the second time.

Mr. RANDALL. The word stricken out was inserted by a clerical error, being a mere repetition of the word. It does not change in any way the purport of the resolution. I move, therefore, to concur in the Senate amendment. The error was made in transcribing.

Mr. ADAMS. Does this extend the appropriations for twenty days?

Mr. RANDALL. Thirty days.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the order of the House the House is to take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock to consider pension bills.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then I move that the House now take the recess.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

BETSY LOCKWOOD.

Mr. MORROW. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10244) granting a pension to Mrs. Betsy Lockwood.

Mr. MATSON. Unless there is some special reason for taking this up out of its regular order I shall object.

Mr. MORROW. This is an exceptional case. This is the daughter of a Revolutionary hero, and she is ninety-five years of age.

Mr. MATSON. I have no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Betsy Lockwood, daughter of Joseph Mather, deceased, and a commissioned officer of the war of the Revolution, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10579.

Mr. MATSON. If there is any special reason I would like to know what it is why this bill should be passed out of its order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MATSON. I object, and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent, at the earnest request of several members, that each member present may be permitted to call up one bill.

There was no objection.

SAMUEL MASSEY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 10579) to place the name of Samuel Massey on the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Samuel Massey, of Charleston, Swain County, North Carolina, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) is as follows:

At the beginning of the late war the claimant was a resident of Swain County, North Carolina, and a strong Union man. He was not regularly enrolled in the service of the Union Army, but received orders from General Carter, then operating in East Tennessee, by whom papers of loyalty were issued, authorizing said claimant to engage in recruiting men for the Union Army. He alleges that he made from 1862, first trip, to the time of the surrender of Knoxville, last trip, eleven round trips to Knoxville, carrying through to the Federal Army about four hundred persons from Western North Carolina and upper South Carolina.

He alleges that next to the last trip he made to Knoxville he and his guard had an encounter with Confederate soldiers near Waynesville, in which three Confederate soldiers were wounded, and thereafter on same day, at Davis Gap and Pigeon River, Recruiting Officer John Swanger and Pink Inman, who was with claimant, were killed. About one week thereafter claimant was captured on the headwaters of Cany Fork, and was carried to Webster and put in jail. A short time thereafter he was carried to Quallatown and put under guard of twelve men, and on the third night he succeeded in removing the handcuffs from his wrists. He threw ashes in the eyes of the immediate guard and escaped, but in doing so was shot through the right leg, through the muscle, from which wound he was confined to his bed and room for ninety days.

He alleges that he has never been able to do hard manual labor since the infliction of said wound; that the recruiting papers given by General Carter were on the person of John Swanger when killed; that he was at that time illiterate, could neither read nor write, and did not know the contents of the papers, except as informed by General Carter and others; that he was recognized and acted as recruiting officer for the United States, and during said service was furnished clothing, ammunition, and arms by the United States Army at Knoxville.

Lebo Gibson testifies that he has known claimant since 1860; that he was one of a party of twenty-seven conducted to the Union Army, eight of whom he remembers were Federal officers escaped from prison at Columbia, S. C.; he saw the recruiting paper of claimant, and knows that he was recognized and acted as recruiting officer for the United States.

Andy A. Crawford testifies that he has known claimant over thirty years; that he was engaged, as he understood and believed, over two years in the recruiting service of the United States; that he had to his (Crawford's) knowledge conveyed four different parties of loyalists from Western North Carolina to East Tennessee, about 125 miles, numbering from one hundred to two hundred men, up to 1863. He was one of a party of about thirty conveyed to East Tennessee by said claimant.

E. Everett testifies that he is acquainted with claimant; that after claimant's capture as alleged he was put in his charge; that he escaped by removing his handcuffs and throwing ashes in the eyes of his guard. The next he heard was that claimant had been shot in the leg while making good his escape.

D. K. Collins testifies that he was a soldier in the Confederate army and on duty at Quallatown when claimant was brought in a prisoner. While he was guarding him claimant made his escape, and he fired on him, the ball taking effect in the right leg, as he was informed.

W. J. Worley testifies that he was in the Union Army from 1863 to 1865. He knew claimant, and knows that for three years it was generally understood that claimant was serving as recruiting officer for the United States Army.

The evidence before the committee seems to fully establish the fact that the claimant was in the service of the United States as recruiting officer; that his services were of great value; that while acting as such recruiting officer he was taken prisoner, and in making his escape was shot as alleged.

The committee believe this to be a meritorious case, and therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: After "pension-roll," in line 5, insert "and pay him the pension of a captain."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES C. WHITE.

Mr. HUNTER. I call up the bill (H. R. 9344) granting a pension to James C. White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James C. White, late a private of Company I, Twenty-first Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) is as follows:

It appears that claimant was enrolled and mustered into the United States service in Taylor County, Kentucky, on the 29th day of September, 1861, for three years, and while serving in that command at Atlanta, Ga., he incurred a double rupture by heavy lifting while employed in the commissary department.

He filed an application for pension in the usual way on the 4th day of August, 1883, but the claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the 30th day of September, 1887, "on the ground that after a reasonable time claimant has failed to furnish the necessary evidence to establish his claim."

The character and location of the trouble was such as to preclude the possibility of comrades seeing the accident occur. Even the claimant was ignorant of the true nature of the injury for some time after its incurrence, hence his inability to furnish positive proof as to the exact time and place the hernia was produced.

It is shown by a joint affidavit of two comrades, James Anderson and Cyrus W. Murphy, furnished on the 19th day of August, 1884, that soon after the heavy lifting referred to claimant called their attention to the tumor; that they saw the hernia then and have heard him complain of it up to the date their statement was furnished.

W. G. Hunter, United States examining surgeon at Burkesville, Cumberland County, Kentucky, made an official examination of claimant on the 10th day of September, 1883, and stated as follows:

"I find this applicant afflicted with incomplete direct inguinal hernia of both sides, or double inguinal hernia. These tumors are reducible, and a double truss which he wears keeps the tumors back."

Your committee are decidedly of the opinion that claimant incurred hernia in the service and in the line of duty, as alleged, and therefore make this favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MOSES T. COFFEY.

Mr. MATSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 9878) granting a pension to Moses T. Coffey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Moses T. Coffey, late a private in Company H, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) is as follows:

Claimant enlisted February 10, 1865, as a private in Company H, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and was mustered out with company, by reason of close of the war, September 5, 1865.

In his application for pension, filed February 7, 1885, claimant alleges that while in camp near Nashville, Tenn., about March 15, 1865, he incurred a rupture of the left side, and at the same time and place he injured his back by a strain when making a leap or jump; that he also claims pension for erysipelas, resulting in deafness of both ears, said disease having been contracted near Pulaski, Tenn., about April 5, 1865.

The claim was rejected January 27, 1887, on the ground that the alleged rupture of left side and injury of back were not incurred in the line of duty; that the claimant has stated his inability to furnish the necessary proof to show that deafness resulted from erysipelas or is otherwise due to the service, and that erysipelas is not shown to have caused any disability.

The records on file in the office of the Surgeon-General, United States Army, show that claimant was admitted to Sixth Division Hospital at Pulaski, Tenn., April 5, 1865, with erysipelas, and returned to duty June 28, 1865.

The board of examining surgeons, under date of April 8, 1885, report as follows:

"Claimant has left inguinal hernia. The hernia is not down into scrotum, but has passed out of external ring to nearly size of fist. It can be reduced, and might be retained with a pad.

"Tenderness of lumbar region of spine and considerable atrophy of lumbar muscles, slight tenderness of left great sciatic nerve. The tympanum is perforated, the opening size of a pea; severe deafness of right ear. The tympanum of left ear is also perforated; perforations small; slight deafness. Rating ten-eighteenths third grade."

Several comrades testify that they were present and saw claimant injured as alleged, and the records on file in the office of the Adjutant-General, United Stated Army, show that claimant was in hospital at Nashville, Tenn., since March 14, 1865, and returned to company about April 3, 1865; cause for which sent to hospital not stated.

Claimant's neighbors testify that he was a sound, able-bodied man at the time of his enlistment in the military service of the United States, and that on his return home from the service he (claimant) was ruptured, and was continually complaining of his back, and at different times was almost unable to get out of his house.

From the evidence presented your committee fully believe that this soldier was injured as alleged, and that his deafness was caused by erysipelas while in the military service of the United States, therefore report favorably, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID A. YEAW.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 9595) granting a pension to David A. Yeaw.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David A. Yeaw, late a private in Company D, Eleventh Regiment of Rhode Island Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) is as follows:

David A. Yeaw was a private in Company D, Eleventh Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers. He enlisted in said service September 17, 1862, and was discharged for "hydrocele and general debility" February 14, 1863.

The soldier's claim for pension was rejected by the Pension Office because the statement appears in the surgeon's certificate of disability, upon which he was discharged, that the disability "existed prior to enlistment."

No suggestion of such prior disease or disability appears, except as stated in said surgeon's certificate, and nothing appears to indicate the origin or foundation of such statement; while, on the other hand, Dr. George H. Taft, who was assistant surgeon of the soldier's regiment, testifies that the soldier was injured on the march of the regiment, on or about October 10, 1862, and that said injury resulted in hydrocele and general debility, for which he was discharged in February following. Lieut. Henry S. Olney, of the same regiment, and the mother, brother, and uncle of the soldier testify from their personal knowledge that prior to his enlistment the soldier was in sound health and free from the disease for which he was discharged the service; and the same fact is corroborated, if not directly testified to, by the testimony of Dr. C. G. McKnight and Captain Goston of the soldier's company.

The examining board of surgeons at Providence, R. I., report a rating for existing disability; and other testimony on file shows that the soldier's disability has existed since his discharge.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDSON SAXBERRY.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 6193) for the relief of Edson Saxberry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Edson Saxberry, late private Company C, Ninety-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate prescribed by existing provisions of law.

The report (by Mr. LANE) is as follows:

The soldier entered the service on the 23d day of August, 1862, and was discharged July 31, 1865. In the latter part of the year 1863, on the march with his company up Teche River from New Orleans, he bruised his right leg, which became very sore.

The report of the Surgeon-General shows that he was admitted to Adams General Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., December 17, 1864, with indolent ulcer of right leg, and returned to duty January 6, 1865. About the time this soldier's leg began to heal his eyes became sore.

The application was rejected by the Pension Commissioner on the ground of disability prior to enlistment.

Neither the record of the mustering officer nor that of examining surgeon who received the soldier into service shows any disability at time of enlistment. This claim of rejection is based on the report of the special examiner, who reports that the soldier admitted that he had had sore eyes several times prior to enlistment. This report is strengthened by the statement of several neighbors to the special examiner that the soldier had weak eyes before enlistment.

The soldier filed an affidavit, in which he denies having made any such statement to the special examiner, and he is confirmed in this denial by the statement of two neighbors, who swear that they were present at the time that this statement was taken by the special examiner. In addition to this he filed several affidavits of neighbors, who state that he was sound and free from those disabilities at the time of enlistment.

The committee, from a review of the evidence, is inclined to the view that the soldier's prior soundness has been established; and inasmuch as the soldier served for over one year before the disability showed itself, the committee think that is sufficient, with the numerous affidavits of soundness filed, to bring this case within the line of pensionable cases.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MYRON TEACHOUT.

Mr. ROMEIS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 9894) granting a pension to Myron Teachout.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Myron Teacharet, late of Company G, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, subject to the limitations of the general pension laws.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Myron Teachout."

The report (by Mr. YODER) is as follows:

The bill proposes to grant a pension to Myron Teacharet, who served as private in Company G, One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteers, from December 17, 1863, to May 13, 1865. He applied for pension June 24, 1880, on account of chronic diarrhea and ulcers of right leg. This application has been rejected on the ground that there is at present no disability from chronic diarrhea, and the diseased condition of the leg is not satisfactorily connected with the service. The record establishes the fact that the claimant was treated during the latter part of his service for chronic diarrhea, and was mustered out from hospital. It is claimed that while under treatment for the latter disease the legs became dropsical, and in particular the right leg, on which sores broke out below the knee.

There is an abundance of lay testimony showing an extremely debilitated condition of claimant, and the existence of the ulcers of leg immediately upon return home, but the death of the physician who treated him at that time precludes the possibility of furnishing medical evidence on that point. Dr. Woodward testifies to treatment of leg from 1871.

Medical examinations show periostitis and necrosis of the tibia of right leg, from 2 inches below the knee to within 2 inches of the ankle, also an open superficial ulcer, size of a silver half-dollar, on lower third over tibia, for which the surgeons rate at total.

The medical reviewer of the Pension Office admits that ulcers may appear on legs as a result of dropsy, and that dropsy may result from chronic diarrhea, but to establish such sequences it must be proven that as a result of diarrhea the subject becomes very much emaciated, debilitated, and anæmic.

It appears to your committee that the evidence presented on that point is as strong as lay testimony can establish the fact, and could claimant produce the testimony of the physician who treated him upon discharge, the pathological connection between the chronic diarrhea of service and the present disability would be fully established. This, however, can not be done for reasons heretofore stated. But aside from the lay testimony showing the anæmic condition of the soldier at discharge, the record necessarily points to such a condition. He was admitted to general hospital July 10, 1864, for chronic diarrhea, and remained under treatment until discharged the service from the hospital, at a date subsequent to the close of the war, and when the authorities were closing up hospitals and discharging the inmates, whether cured or not.

In the absence of any evidence, medical or lay, questioning the origin of the disability, your committee feel justified in accepting the testimony as sufficient to show its connection with claimant's military service, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "Teacharet" wherever the same appears in the same or its title, and insert therein instead the word "Teachout."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH ANN WATERS.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I call up the bill (S. 1258) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Waters.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Ann Waters, mother of George Waters, deceased, late a private in Company G, Ninth Regiment of United States Colored Troops.

The report from the Senate committee is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1258) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Waters, have examined the same, and report:

This claim was fully considered by the committee at the second session of the last Congress, but lack of time prevented action on the bill, which was identical with that under consideration, and which is hereby reported favorably, and with the recommendation that it do pass.

The report of the committee of the last Congress, made by Mr. SAWYER, is hereby adopted, and is as follows:

"This bill is to pension Sarah Ann Waters as dependent mother of George Waters, Company G, Ninth United States Colored Troops. The record evidence shows that he died of Asiatic cholera at Brownsville, Tex., August 28, 1866. He was enrolled in 1863. His record is good. The application was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that he left a minor child. It appears that he left no widow; there is no evidence that he was married. The child was an infant, and its death and that of the soldier occurred within a few months of the same time.

"It also appears that the son before he enlisted was a waiter, and gave his pay to his mother, whose husband had been dead many years. It is the opinion of the committee that, if application had been made promptly after the son's death and evidence had been produced, as it might have been, the case could have been substantiated to the satisfaction of the Pension Office; but this poor old colored woman had no one to advise, no one to aid her, and was not probably sufficiently intelligent to proceed in obtaining the necessary proofs. It is very clear that she was dependent upon him; that she is now very needy; that there is no minor child; that there has been no minor child to dispute her claim or to be wronged by her being allowed a pension.

"The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAROLINE R. HASELTINE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call up the bill (S. 2385) granting a pension to Caroline R. Haseltine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline R. Haseltine, mother of Edward C. Haseltine, late ensign in the United States Navy from New Hampshire, and pay her at the rate of $15 per month.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2385) granting a pension to Caroline R. Haseltine, beg leave to adopt the Senate report as a part of their own, as follows:

"The claimant is the mother of Edward C. Haseltine, late an ensign in the United States Navy, who graduated at the Naval Academy in 1861. On December 27, 1862, he was appointed an ensign, and ordered to duty on the Housatonic, a man-of-war, then forming part of the South Atlantic blockading squadron. The Housatonic was destroyed by a rebel torpedo off Charleston, February 17, 1864, by which event Ensign Haseltine met his death. The father of this officer was a man of small means during his life-time, and died November 16, 1883. The claimant, his widow, is now destitute, and has no children to aid in her support.

"No application has been made to the Bureau of Pensions in this matter, for the reason that at the time of the officer's death his mother was not dependent upon him, and under the restrictions of the general law the application would certainly be rejected, by reason of the want of power to relieve in such a case, however meritorious.

"Your committee are of the opinion that this is an exceptional case, and that this lady is entitled to relief."

A member of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions has personal knowledge as to the present dependence of claimant, and as the Commissioner of Pensions has recommended a change in the general law making present dependence a sufficient ground for relief, your committee report the bill back favorably, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WASHINGTON T. OTEY.

Mr. LANDES. I call up the bill (S. 1307) to increase the pension of Washington T. Otey.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Washington T. Otey, late a lieutenant of Company F, of the Sixty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $12 a month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. LANE) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1307) to increase the pension of Washington T. Otey, have examined the same, and report:

This case was reported adversely on March 20, 1888, on the ground that the additional testimony in support of his application for an increase is substantially the same as that upon which the original pension was granted.

[Senate Report No. 660, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1307) to increase the pension of Washington T. Otey, have examined the same, and report:

Claimant enlisted in Company F, Sixty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, December 15, 1861; re-enlisted as a veteran volunteer December 23, 1863, and was discharged as a sergeant March 6, 1866. He is now receiving a pension at $8 per month, by special act of Congress approved June 24, 1886. His application for increase of pension was filed August 18, 1886, and rejected November 17, 1886, on the ground that claimant was pensioned by special act, which fixed the rate and prevents increase under the general law.

In his application for increase of pension claimant states that the injury to his back not only totally disables him for the performance of manual labor, but also causes much pain and suffering; that at times he is confined to his bed and not able even to turn himself; that men are sometimes detailed from the Grand Army of the Republic to wait upon him; that owing to the severity of his injury he believes himself entitled to a higher rate of pension.

In his subsequent affidavit claimant states that he has been unfit for manual labor ever since he came out of the service, by reason of injury of back incurred by having been caught by his left foot and thrown down stairs from the deck of a vessel by James Borgin, an insane comrade, whom he was taking to Washington, D. C., by special order of Maj. Gen. F. Steele; that his pecuniary means are entirely exhausted and that the charity of the Grand Army of the Republic has often been extended to him; that his small pension of $8 per month is not sufficient to keep himself and three children, seven, nine, and fourteen years of age, respectively; that his disability was incurred in the line of duty, while under special orders of his superior officers; that his disability is greater than the loss of an arm or leg; that he is compelled to have speedy relief.

"T. N. Browning states that the pension granted claimant, $8 per month, is entirely too low and out of proportion to the degree of his disability.

"William C. Jones states that claimant deserves a higher rate of pension.

"Dr. T. N. Rafferty, of Robinson, Ill., testifies that he has been acquainted with claimant during the last seventeen years; that claimant has been a constant sufferer from injury of back received in the service, and resulting in rheumatism of back and hip-joints, rendering him unfit for manual labor of any kind.

"It would appear that claimant is entitled to a higher rating than that at which he was pensioned by the former action of Congress, but as the additional testimony in support of his application for an increase is substantially the same as that upon which the original pension was granted, the committee do not find warrant for a favorable recommendation."

The bill was recommitted April 6, 1888, additional evidence having been filed, as follows:

In affidavit executed April 11, 1888, George W. Harper, of Robinson, Ill., testifies that he has known claimant during the last twenty-five years, more intimately for the last eight years; that claimant has been disabled, on account of a weak back, during all the years since the war, but especially during the last eight years; that claimant is a brickmason by trade, but owing to the weak condition of his back he is unable to follow his trade or to support himself and his large family by manual labor.

In affidavit executed April 11, 1888, Allen T. Baker, of Robinson, Ill., testifies that he has been acquainted with claimant during the last two years, and that claimant is crippled in his back, wholly disabling him from manual labor; that $8 per month, which he is now drawing, is inadequate to his necessities in his crippled condition, and that he has often to be helped by the Grand Army of the Republic.

In affidavit executed April 11, 1888, William Caughey, of Robinson, Ill., testifies that he has been personally acquainted with claimant since the year 1870; that, owing to his weak back, claimant is almost wholly disabled for manual labor; that he can not follow his trade as a brick-mason, because it hurts his back to stoop; that claimant is a poor man, with a large family dependent upon him.

In affidavit executed April 11, 1888, Samuel L. Bennett, of Robinson, Ill., testifies that he has been personally acquainted with claimant during the last five years; that claimant is greatly crippled in his back, disabling him for hard manual labor, and that he is understood in the neighborhood to be a physical wreck.

In affidavit executed April 11, 1888, Levi Goens and John A. Watts, of Robinson, Ill., testify that they have been personally acquainted with claimant for the last eight years, and know that he has a weak back, which prevents him from following his trade as a brick-mason; that he can do but little work at any time, and is a poor man, with a large family to support.

The report of March 20, 1888, is hereto appended, which, considered in connection with the additional testimony in the claim, warrants favorable action, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MANUEL GARCIA.

Mr. GEST. I call up the bill (H. R. 3521) granting a pension to Manuel Garcia.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Manuel Garcia, late of Company I, Eighth New Jersey Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3521) granting a pension to Manuel Garcia, submit the following report:

Claimant was a private in Company I, Eighth New Jersey Volunteers; he enlisted August 6, 1864, and was discharged July 2, 1865.

The reason a pension was not granted by the Department is that there is no testimony to show origin in line of duty, or to show condition at discharge, or prior to 1870, and no medical testimony. Claimant states that he is unable to furnish testimony as to his physical condition prior to enlistment for the reason that he was at sea for seven years prior to his enlistment; that he came into port on the 5th of August, 1864, and enlisted on the 6th August, 1864; that he was examined by Edgar Holden, Government surgeon, and passed into the service of the United States.

William W. Lamb, of Philadelphia, Pa., a physician in good standing, being sworn, says—

"That he did not know the claimant prior to enlistment; but that he knew of his being taken sick while in the intrenchments in front of Petersburgh, Va. That he treated him for rheumatism and varicosed condition of limbs. That while lying in camp in the rear of Alexandria, Va., the intense heat produced inflammation of eyelids. That claimant was then sent to the hospital and he saw no more of him up to the present time."

J. B. Davidson, a physician, testifies—

"That he examined claimant in 1866; that he found the veins of the legs in a varicose condition; that he found the second toe on the left foot stiff and useless."

Edwin H. Hollister and Reuben G. Hollister, of Coe, Rock Island County, Illinois, being duly sworn, testify—

"That they have known the claimant for five years; that he worked for them; that his eye-sight was poor and from some cause he was very awkward with his legs, and that from their own personal knowledge he could not do more than one-half a man's work."

As the claimant was examined by Edgar Holden, a Government surgeon, and passed as physically sound, and in the absence of testimony to the contrary, we assume that he was a sound man when admitted into the service. And the other testimony proves that he was taken sick in the service and was treated for rheumatism and varicose veins and inflamed eyes, and that from said causes he has been continuously disabled ever since. Your committee conclude from these facts that the claimant was disabled in the service and is entitled to a pension, and therefore respectfully recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM J. HEADY.

Mr. CARUTH. I call up the bill (H. R. 9910) increasing the pension of William J. Heady.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of William J. Heady, who was pensioned by act of Congress approved July 6, A. D. 1886, be increased to the sum of $100 a month from and after the passage of this act, owing to increased disability.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9910) granting an increase of pension to William J. Heady, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant is now in receipt of a pension at the rate of $20 per month for "general debility, lance wound of left hip, and varicose veins of both legs." He was a captain in Company E, First Kentucky Volunteers, Mexican war, and served from June, 1846, to October, 1847; and for the last ten months of his service he was a prisoner of war in the hands of the Mexicans.

Drs. Cary B. Blackburn and D. W. Yandell, his physicians, of Louisville, Ky., certify that the claimant is not able to do any kind of business or labor; that "he is suffering from chronic eczema of the whole body, and it is breaking down the old man rapidly. He has no family, and no one to help the poor old fellow," and is really in a dependent condition. He is now seventy-one years of age, and can not long be a charge upon any one.

Your committee believe that his pension should be increased, and report back the bill with the recommendation that it should pass, amended, however, by striking out the words "one hundred," in lines 5 and 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M'INTYRE.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I call up the bill (H. R. 7713) granting a pension to James McIntyre.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provision and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James McIntyre, late a private in Company G, Tenth Michigan Infantry.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7713) granting a pension to James McIntyre, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case enlisted in the Tenth Michigan Infantry in 1864. The officer who enlisted him, a man of large experience, testifies that he was at the time of his enlistment a sound, healthy man, and that he did good service in the field for some time afterwards. He claims that on July 19, 1864, his leg began swelling, either by reason of extreme heat or vegetable poison. On that day, at Peach Tree Creek, Georgia, he was engaged with his company in a skirmish, and up to that time had been able-bodied.

After the skirmish was over he was so lame that he was assisted into camp, by direction of his captain, by a comrade, who testifies to the fact. Since that time his leg has been constantly diseased and has incapacitated him largely from manual labor, by which alone he is obliged to support himself. By reason of this incapacity he is obliged to depend on public charity for his support. His leg has shrunk, and his great toe is gangrened, and the medical testimony shows that, while he has suffered from this disability ever since he left the service, it must and will shorten his life.

There is no doubt as to his health before and his disease after his discharge. His claim for pension was rejected on the ground that the proof was not satisfactory as to incurrence of the disability in the line of duty.

The reasons given for this are threefold: First, that only two comrades and no commissioned officer testify to the receipt of the injury; second, that claimant's witnesses were doubtful or untruthful, and third, that claimant has no hospital record. The first of these grounds and the second are virtually one, because it can not be conceived that the testimony of two honest soldiers is not equal to that of one commissioned officer.

The examiner alleges that the cross-examination of one of the witnesses by him evinces the doubtful nature of the testimony. This is a matter of opinion, and persons used to eliciting and weighing evidence will hardly agree with him. The lack of a hospital record is explained by the claimant on the ground that he dreaded the hospital and earnestly desired to remain with his comrades. He performed duty, so far as he was able, until his discharge, and the nature of his injury seems to have been progressive, so that his condition has grown worse and worse as the years have gone by.

We think this bill ought to be passed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH O'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. MACDONALD. I call up House bill 10034, to grant a pension to Elizabeth O'Laughlin, the helpless and invalid daughter of Dennis O'Laughlin, late a member of Company I, Ninth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension-roll, at $18 per month, the name of Elizabeth O'Laughlin, the helpless and invalid daughter of Dennis O'Laughlin, deceased, and late a member of Company I, Ninth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10334) granting a pension to Elizabeth O'Laughlin, submit the following report:

The person for whom this pension is asked is the invalid daughter of Dennis O'Laughlin, late a member of Company I, Ninth Regiment of Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, who died in said service and in his line of duty. A pension was granted to her mother as the widow of said soldier, and she continued to draw the same until the date of her death, which occurred October 7, 1886.

The evidence is conclusive to our minds that this invalid daughter of said soldier is afflicted with serious physical and mental disability. Two physicians, resident in the town in which she lives, testify in substance that, although of mature age, she is but 4 feet 10 inches high, and is suffering from double curvature of the spine, and has a serious organic heart lesion, which is the result of inflammatory rheumatism; also, that she is incurably idiotic and wholly incapable of maintaining herself by labor of any kind.

A letter of the honorable Commissioner of Pensions is submitted, showing that the claim was denied because the present law did not permit the Pension Bureau to allow pensions for mental or other infirmities to persons over the age of sixteen years.

In addition to other evidence, the honorable member who introduced this bill submitted a letter to the committee, in which he states that he personally knows the above-mentioned Elizabeth O'Laughlin, and knows her to be afflicted with mental and physical disabilities as above stated, and that he knows her to be entirely without means of support and dependent upon the charity of neighbors and friends, and that she was dependent upon her mother for support up to the time of the mother's death.

Her father and natural guardian having lost his life in the service of his country, the committee believe this to be a proper case for the relief asked, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment, adding to the same the following words: "And pay the same to her legally constituted guardian."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

COBURN D. OUTTEN.

Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky. I call up House bill 7624, for the relief of Coburn D. Outten.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension allowed to Coburn D. Outten be increased to $30 per month, to commence upon the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7624) for the relief of Coburn D. Outten, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

Coburn D. Outten enlisted August 1, 1862, in the Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, and was mustered out on the 17th day of September, 1863. He re-enlisted in Company I, Forty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, on the 1st day of February, 1864; was promoted to second lieutenant in Company G, in said regiment, and was mustered in as such on the 12th day of March, 1864. He served in that capacity until he was honorably discharged at Catlettsburgh, Ky., on the 14th day of February, 1865.

He was stationed at Louisa, Ky., and while there was detailed to act as issuing clerk at commissary headquarters, and while invoicing the commissary stores he was obliged to climb to the top of a large pile of hard bread; the front row gave away under him and precipitated him to the floor, he falling on an open barrel, breaking two of his ribs and injuring his back and kidneys. This happened about the month of March, 1865. He was carried to the hospital at that place (Louisa, Ky.) and was confined there some time. He claims to be greatly injured by said accident.

He further claims that while in the line of duty as second lieutenant of his company, his regiment, marching to Saltville, W. Va., was attacked by Confederate forces at Clinch River, near Laurel Gap, in said State, and that his regiment was ordered to charge; in so doing they were repulsed and forced into said river, and he was knocked down and trampled under foot in the water. His pack-horse, with his clothing, food, and blankets, were lost at Clinch Mountain in an engagement on the same day. He was left without change of clothes, and was obliged to wear wet clothing until they became dry on his person, and he was exposed to the most inclement weather. From said exposure he contracted a severe cold, which caused him to suffer intensely. He was compelled to swim Red River on his return from Saltville. His regiment arrived at Lexington about October 19, 1864, when he was confined to his room until about the 12th or 13th of November, 1864, when he was detailed to act as assistant adjutant-general Second Brigade, Fourth Division, Twenty-third Corps, in which capacity he served until about the 22d of November, 1864, when he asked to be relieved, not being able to attend to the duties devolved upon him.

He was suffering from hemorrhage of the bowels and rheumatism, and he asked for a leave of absence to go home, which was granted. He was afflicted with disease during the remainder of his term of enlistment. The disease developed into piles, and eventually fistula, for which he was operated upon. He claims that he has suffered almost continually ever since he left the service, that he has lost the use of his right hand with pen paralysis, and is disabled in his legs and feet so he can not use them well, which he claims was caused by rheumatism contracted while he was in the service in the campaign to Saltville, W. Va., October, 1864. He claims that he has been disabled from performing any manual labor on account of said disabilities, and can not support himself and family.

Outten applied for a pension May 31, 1884; alleged fracture of two ribs, injury to back and kidneys, hemorrhage from bowels, fistula, rheumatism, and resulting pen paralysis; declaration filed May 9, 1887, alleged disease of heart, contracted in the service from exposure in October, 1864; declaration filed December 29, 1885, alleges original disability, for which pensioned, and heart disease, result of other diseases contracted in the service. Approved for disease of rectum; other alleged disabilities stand rejected. Action, December 2, 1886. Pensioned from May 31, 1884, at $3.75, for disease of rectum; increased February 2, 1887, to $7.50 per month. Pension claim, No. 343346.

Archibald L. Scudder, in affidavit filed May 31, 1884, says "he understood that the claimant received an injury from a fall whilst invoicing goods, as he understood; he afterwards visited claimant in hospital and there were two or three ribs broken, besides other injuries."

Assistant Surgeon Samuel Maguire, Tenth Kentucky Volunteers, in affidavit filed August 7, 1884, testifies from recollection that claimant was brought to hospital at Louisa, Ky., about November, 1863, with two ribs broken and back and kidneys hurt; he says that said Outten was greatly disabled by reason of said injuries.

William B. Johnson, first lieutenant Company G, Forty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Volunteers, states in an affidavit filed May 31, 1884, that claimant Outten, on the retreat from Saltville, W. Va., was knocked down and trampled on in the water. He says claimant became sick by reason thereof.

John C. Means, private in Company G, Forty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Volunteers, in an affidavit filed May 31, 1884, says that claimant, during a retreat, while attempting to march on Saltville, W. Va., was knocked down, trampled on, and exposed to inclement weather, and became sick by reason thereof, and remained sick till discharge.

G. W. Bradshaw, private Company G, Forty-fifth Kentucky, testifies as to same.

J. W. Thornton, private in Company G, Forty-fifth Kentucky, in an affidavit filed May 31, 1884, says that after regiment returned to Lexington, Ky., from the Saltville raid, claimant was sick at Phœnix Hotel from hemorrhage of bowels and rheumatism, caused, as he believes, by the exposure incident to said raid. At Catlettsburgh, Ky., about February, 1865, claimant was also suffering from said diseases, and so remained up to discharge.

Capt. W. B. Shockley, Company B, Forty-fifth Kentucky, in an affidavit filed May 31, 1884, states that claimant was suffering from hemorrhages of bowels and aching from rheumatism, in his room at Lexington, Ky., about October or November, 1864, after returning from the Saltville raid; that claimant, when able to be about, was detailed to act as assistant adjutant-general of second brigade, but, not being able to perform the duties, was allowed to go home to recuperate; that he saw claimant at Maysville, Ky., after muster out, and he (claimant) was suffering from hemorrhage of bowels and aching from rheumatism. He lived a short distance from claimant, and saw him frequently.

Dr. W. G. Martin, in an affidavit filed May 31, 1884, says that he has been acquainted with claimant nineteen years, and has been his physician fourteen years, except three years, during which claimant lived in Portsmouth, Ohio; that he began to treat claimant in 1871 for rheumatism and progressive muscular paralysis, and in 1872 for writer's cramp; in 1873 claimant had to abandon writing with right hand. He has frequently treated claimant for said disabilities since. During the past five years claimant has been affected with progressive muscular paralysis of the legs, producing a sliding motion of feet and unsteadiness, causing him to fall sometimes.

Dr. C. M. Finch, Portsmouth, Ohio, late surgeon Ninth Ohio Cavalry, in an affidavit filed September 25, 1884, states that at the above-named place in 1874 he operated upon claimant for fistula and prescribed for him a considerable length of time.

Dr. A. L. Mahaffey, in affidavit filed August 7, 1874, says that at Portsmouth, Ohio, in March, 1875, he visited claimant six different times and treated him for a severe spell of rheumatism. Dr. E. E. Hume, Frankfort, Ky., in an affidavit filed October 12, 1885, states that in July and August, 1885, he treated claimant for hemorrhage of the bowels, and was also at the same time obliged to relieve claimant by drawing the water from his bladder.

Dr. John P. Phister, in an affidavit dated July 20, 1887, says:

"I am a practicing physician in Maysville, Mason County, Kentucky, and have been since 1848. I have known Coburn D. Outten from his earliest childhood. He has been very much disabled ever since his discharge from the Army, and for some of his disabilities is now receiving a small pension. I think he is entitled to an increase by reason of his great trouble with neuraigic affection of the heart, and the strong possibility of an organic affection of that organ.

"There is great pericardial derangement, in irregularity of beat and volume in his pulse; dyspepsia, that sometimes amounts to about suffocation, and an acute pain in the cardiac region. Were he sound and well otherwise, he would be almost entirely disabled from any continuous labor, even of the lighest character, from this trouble. I have treated him at irregular intervals for twenty years, and his disability increases. He had a violent attack in January and March of this present year, 1887, in which all the symptoms above given presented themselves in aggravated form. To the best of my knowledge and belief, and I had every opportunity of knowing, none of these conditions existed prior to his enlistment in the Army."

He further declares that he has been a practitioner of medicine for thirty-nine years, and that he has no interest, either direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

The proof in this case is conclusive that the claimant is at this time almost totally disabled. He was a good and faithful soldier; is poor, and unable to make a living by manual labor. The committee is of the opinion that this is a meritorious case, and they report in favor of the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AMANDA F. DECK.

Mr. WALKER. I call up the bill (S. 470) granting a pension to Amanda F. Deck.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amanda F. Deck, of Putnam County, Missouri, widow of William C. Deck, late a private in Company L, First Colorado Cavalry Volunteers, who was a pensioner at the time of his death, under pension certificate numbered 113521.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 470) granting a pension to Amanda F. Deck, having had the same under consideration, adopt the Senate report thereon, which is as follows, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"The claimant is the widow of W. C. Deck, late a private of Company I, First Colorado Volunteers. He enlisted in October, 1861, served under Colonel Chivington, and on September 25, 1864, was wounded in the right shoulder in a battle with hostile Indians. During his lifetime he suffered greatly from his wound, being unable to use other than partially his right arm and hand. In addition, he was subject to a chronic abscess of the joint. For his injuries the claimant's husband drew a pension from the Government.

"The three years' hard frontier service of the soldier whose widow now applies for relief, and the serious injuries from which he suffered, which prevented him from making provision for his family, taken in connection with Mrs. Deck's needy circumstances, clearly entitle her to relief.

"Your committee therefore report the bill favorably, with the recommendation that it pass."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CYNTHIA J. CARLTON.

Mr. CONGER. I call up the bill (H. R. 154) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Cynthia J. Carlton.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Cynthia J. Carlton, widow of Henry Carlton, late captain in the Twenty-second Regiment of Michigan Volunteers, and pay her a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 154) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Cynthia J. Carlton, have given the same due consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

Mrs. Cynthia J. Carlton was a pensioner as the widow of Henry Carlton, a captain of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment Michigan Volunteers, who was killed in service and in line of duty. She continued to draw pension until September 20, 1870, when she was married to one William R. Pratt, whereupon her pension ceased.

Her second husband died at Shoreham, Vt., in 1873, and she has remained a widow since. By a decree of the circuit court of Johnson County, Iowa, her name was changed from Cynthia J. Pratt to Cynthia J. Carlton. She is now poor and dependent for a livelihood upon her own labor. She is a woman of high character and worthy the continued recognition given by this bill of her husband's service and her loss in his death.

The Government has been relieved from the payment of this pension for eighteen years, but your committee believe this case a deserving one, and that, following the precedents of this and former Congresses, her pension should be restored.

Hence the bill is returned with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANDREW T. M'REYNOLDS.

Mr. FORD. I call up the bill (S. 1935) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds.

The bill is as follows:

Whereas Andrew T. McReynolds served as a captain of Company K, Third Dragoons, United States Army, in Mexico, during the war with that Republic, and while acting in squadron with Capt. (the late General) Phil. Kearny, the usual escort to the general-in-chief, was, on the 20th day of August, A. D. 1847, disabled by a grape-shot wound in a charge at the gates of Mexico, by reason whereof he was placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $25 per month, which pension he continued to receive until the 15th day of June, A. D. 1861, when he was mustered into the volunteer service as colonel of the First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry (the first volunteer cavalry regiment organized for the late civil war), and served as such until the 22d of August, A. D. 1864, when he received an honorable discharge, during all of which time his said pension was withheld from him, amounting in all to the sum of $959, no part of which sum has since been received by him: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the said Andrew T. McReynolds the said sum of $950, taking his receipt therefor in full discharge of said claim.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1935) granting relief to Andrew T. McReynolds, have considered the same, and report back the bill, recommending its passage.

The statements in the report of the Senate committee give the facts in the case as follows:

[Senate Report No. 757, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The preamble of the bill under consideration succinctly states the ground of the claim for the restoration of the pension, which was withheld more than three years, or while the pensioner was commissioned in the service during the late civil war.

Andrew T. McReynolds was captain of Company K, Third United States Dragoons, during the Mexican war, and while acting in squadron with the late Phil. Kearny, in a charge at the gates of Mexico, was wounded by a grape-shot, and so disabled that he was pensioned therefor at $25 a month. This pension he received up to June, 1861, when he took command of the First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry. He remained colonel of this regiment until his honorable discharge in August, 1864, during which period his Mexican pension was stopped. The bill is for its restoration.

The man who was so badly wounded in one war that he was considered to be entitled to a pension of $25 a month, and who on the breaking out of the rebellion showed such alacrity of patriotism that he volunteered and served as colonel of the first cavalry regiment organized for its suppression, should not be forced by the Government to pay a penalty to the Government for his loyalty and his heroism in its defense. The pay which he received during the rebellion was for service rendered therein, and was not, and should not be, held as commutation for wounds and disabilities endured as the heritage of gallantry displayed at the gates of an enemy's capital a generation before.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MATSON. That seems to be an unusual bill, to say the least. I would like to have some explanation as to why this man should receive arrears.

Mr. FORD. I will explain the bill to the gentleman. General McReynolds was a captain in the Mexican war, a comrade of Grant's. He was wounded by a grape-shot in the shoulder at the gates of Mexico. His arm was disabled in such a manner that he was granted a pension of $25 a month. In 1861, while he was not able to march as a soldier, he was able to ride a horse. He organized the First New York Union Cavalry and served the Government during the entire time of the civil war. During the time he served the Secretary of the Interior stopped his pension. At the conclusion of the war the general was a man of some wealth. He regarded his pension for service in the Mexican war as a vested right, but at the same time, not being at all in need, he never applied for it and never contested the decision of the Secretary of the Interior. Time passed. He is now a poor man. This bill passed the Senate in the Forty-eighth Congress, but came to the House too late to pass. It passed the Senate in the Forty-ninth Congress and failed to pass the House. It has again passed the Senate and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Pensions of the House.

That is the entire status of the matter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. At the expiration of service in the late war was General McReynolds's pension restored?

Mr. FORD. It was.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. And he has been drawing it since?

Mr. FORD. Yes. It seemed to me, and it seemed to the Senate committee that to withhold his pension because he served the Government in the late war would be putting a premium upon a lack of patriotism.

Mr. MATSON. Did he not get the full pay received by all other officers during the war?

Mr. FORD. He did receive pay for his service during the civil war; not as commutation for wounds received in Mexico.

Mr. MATSON. He did recover from his disability?

Mr. FORD. Not at all. He was able to ride a horse, although he had the use of only one arm. He received the pay of a colonel, and they stopped his pension.

Mr. MATSON. I presume there are many other cases like this.

Mr. FORD. I never heard of one like it.

Mr. MATSON. I suppose there were many officers who served during the late war who were wounded in the Mexican war, and who gave up their pensions. The question is whether it will not be a bad precedent to give this man arrears. There is a rule everybody has acquiesced in who comes here and asks the grace of Congress for the passage of an act, not to expect to have arrears given.

Mr. FORD. I understand the gentleman has reported a bill giving arrears.

Mr. MATSON. That is to all; not to a single individual.

Mr. FORD. I do not think that will affect this case.

Mr. MATSON. It seems to me it is hardly fair, although I do not know that I shall object. What committee does this come from?

Mr. FORD. The Committee on Pensions. I think there is no case like it, at least before the Senate committee.

Mr. MATSON. I do not pretend to know any case precisely like it that has been brought to the attention of the House committee. I have no doubt many officers who were wounded in the Mexican war and drew pensions served during the late war.

Mr. MACDONALD. What pension did he get?

Mr. FORD. Twenty-five dollars a month.

Mr. MATSON. My impression is that the highest rate of pension paid at the time the war ended was $8 a month.

Mr. FORD. This man was captain of dragoons in the war with Mexico. He drew $25 a month. The papers were in the room of the Pension Committee and examined by that committee. That was the pension he drew and draws now.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN H. CLAUS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I call up the bill (H. R. 8150) for the relief of John H. Claus.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Claus, late a private in Company K, One hundred and eighth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and also late a private in the Ordnance Department of the United States Army.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8150) for the relief of John H. Claus, submit the following report:

John H. Claus, the applicant here, has an honorable military record covering twenty-two years of service in the Army of the United States. He first enlisted November 6, 1858, and served in Battery E, Fourth United States Artillery, until his discharge, November 6, 1863. On February 16, 1864, he again enlisted as a private in Company K, One hundred and eighth Ohio Volunteers, for three years, and is reported present on the rolls until mustered out with his company July 22, 1865, as corporal.

January 27, 1866, he again enlisted in the regular Army for three years, and served in Troop A, First United States Cavalry, until his muster out, January 27, 1869. Within twenty days thereafter, namely, on February 15, 1869, he again re-enlisted for three years, and served until the expiration of his term in Battery A, Second United States Artillery, being discharged February 15, 1872.

On the 15th of March, 1872, he again re-enlisted, and was assigned to ordnance detachment, Vancouver arsenal, Washington Territory, and reported as a first-class private, and served with said detachment his five years' term, being discharged March 15, 1877. He re-enlisted on the same day in the same detachment, and was discharged to enter the soldiers' home, January 26, 1880. The records of the Adjutant-General of the Army show him present for duty on all rolls from March 15, 1872, to date of his last discharge.

On October 31, 1879, his captain, John A. Cress, Ordnance Corps, United States Army, says of the applicant, in a report concerning him made to the Adjutant-General of the Army:

"Private John H. Claus, of my detachment, has applied for his discharge for the purpose of going to the Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C., having served faithfully and honestly twenty years. He is fifty years of age; is not disabled, but is not an active man, and should have been loath to re-enlist him on March 15, 1877, but for his excellent record in the service."

There are other evidences of superior character which show that Claus is a reputable man and entitled to full credence. He alleges as the basis of his claim for pension that he contracted heart disease in 1874 from long service in the United States Army and exposure incident thereto. He was discharged last on January 26, 1880, and made application for pension June 25, 1887, to the Pension Office. There have been several hearings of his case and considerable testimony taken; a special examiner has reported the testimony, and the final rejection was made by the Pension Office June 30, 1884, because he could not establish by the testimony of officers or comrades that his disability originated in the service and in the line of duty. On appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, Assistant Secretary Hawkins sustained the action of the Pension Bureau.

There may be technical difficulties in the way of such proofs as would beyond a peradventure cover an allowance by the Pension Office in this class of cases. But the facts in this case are such that not only is there good proof in law, but the evidences of moral certainty as to the justice of this man's claim are many and convincing. Evidently when he first entered the regular Army in 1858 he was a young and sound farmer, and was critically examined by the army surgeon; hence it may be taken as proven that he was then sound. His next term is as a volunteer in the One hundred and eighth Ohio. After this, and after the war, and with but short periods between his several discharges and re-enlistments, he again enters army service, and in each instance, with the exception of his last enlistment, enters an entirely different arm of the service, in their order thus: First, artillery; second, infantry; third, cavalry; fourth, artillery; fifth, ordnance; sixth, ordnance. So that it is but a fair presumption that at each enlistment he was subjected to the medical examination usual for recruits in each arm of the service.

It is also fair to presume from the statement of Captain Kress heretofore quoted, that at the last enlistment in the Ordnance Corps Claus was not examined, for he re-enlisted immediately upon his discharge, and Captain Kress avers that he was loath to re-enlist him, except that the man's record was so good, etc. With regard to Claus having heart disease, Captain Kress reports to the Adjutant-General July 26, 1882:

"I do not remember ever having heard that he had heart disease, but if contracted in 1874 it was certainly while in service. He was on duty, to the best of my recollection, during the whole of that year."

This would seem to cover the objection as to service and line of duty, if the incurrence of the disability is reasonably proven. On this we have Claus's own statement, which is supported by the affidavit of Sergeant of Ordnance Robert Williams, who served with Claus and was sergeant of the detachment of ordnance in which Claus served. Williams, on February 13, 1884, makes oath before the clerk of the district court of said Territory that Claus complained to him several times that he had heart disease. He fully believes that Claus did incur the disease in his long service, and through the incident exposure; that as he grew older it grew worse. He remembers seeing Claus troubled with hard breathing, like as if he had asthma; his appetite was poor; and that Claus was a good and faithful soldier, an upright and honest man. In these last particulars the sergeant fully supports the high encomium of the commander of Claus. Those who have had command of such men know how they fight shy of the "sick-list" and go down for want of "hospital record," and Claus in all this long service has little, if any, to speak of. Four days in quarters with a sprained wrist, two days in quarters with intermittent fever, is the sum of his sickness certified from the Adjutant-General of the Army.

In further proof Claus alleges that at his last discharge the surgeon said he was touched with heart disease. The board of surgeons who examined him in 1881 find, and so report, that his heart is displaced downward, that its action is somewhat feeble—hypertrophy, with dilitation and valvular disease of the heart. They state his disability as permanent and fix his rating at three-quarters.

In 1883 the same board again examined him, and made the same finding. It is therefore evident that he has now disease of the heart. The proofs and presumption show that he had heart disease when he left the service, and also during the latter period of the service. It is furthermore beyond question that it was, as Captain Kress asserts, incurred in the service, if at all, for the man was nowhere else for the twenty-two years prior to January 26, 1880.

Among the files of the case is the report of the special examiner, dated June 29, 1884, which concludes thus:

"In the opinion of the examiner it is but fair to admit origin in service, and the claimant having declared his inability to furnish the testimony of comrades other than that of Sergeant Williams, the claim is submitted for admission on the best obtainable evidence."

After an exhaustive search of the files in this case, your committee is constrained to believe that John H. Claus did honorable service for more than twenty years for this country; that he is truthful and upright, and has the confidence and respect of his peers and superiors and their indorsements of his integrity; that he did contract heart disease in the service during those years while performing his duty; that he is entitled to the relief he asks; and therefore your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM M. DICKEN.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. JOSEPH) was the bill (H. R. 9467) granting a pension to William M. Dicken.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William M. Dicken, of Clinton County, Kentucky, late a member of Capt. Abijah Guthrie's company of Kentucky Home Guards, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9467) granting a pension to William M. Dicken, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

It appears from the evidence before your committee that claimant was enrolled as a private in Capt. Abijah Guthrie's company of Kentucky Home Guards, at Albany, Clinton County, Kentucky, on the 15th day of July, 1861; that this company was armed by officers of the United States Army, and subsequently co-operated with the Federal troops; that while claimant was serving with his command and in the line of duty in an engagement with the Confederate forces at Rowena, Russell County, Kentucky, on or about the 13th day of December, 1861, he was captured by the enemy and taken to rebel prison at Nashville, Tenn., where he was confined a few weeks, and then removed to Salisbury, N. C., prison, where he remained about one year. From this place he was taken to Richmond, Va., thence to City Point, where he was exchanged on or about the 13th day of February, 1863.

He was ordered to report to Col. W. A. Hoskins at Lebanon, Ky., but being unable to travel by reason of disease and an enfeebled condition of the system from long confinement in a loathsome prison, he was sent to hospital at Annapolis, Md., where he remained under treatment for some time.

He was a stout, healthy man when captured, and when exchanged he was a physical wreck. Since that time he has been tortured with rheumatism of the back and extremities, and he is now unfit for any kind of active manual labor by reason of this trouble, which was contracted in rebel prison.

As claimant has never been mustered into the United States service, his name can not be placed on the pension-roll through the Pension Bureau. He therefore seeks relief by a special act, and appeals to the generosity of Congress.

Your committee are decidedly of the opinion that this is a meritorious claim, and they therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Amend by striking out all after the word "guards" in the eighth line.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA SMITH.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana) was the bill (H. R. 2140) granting a pension to Eliza Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza Smith, widow of Clinton D. Smith, late first lieutenant of Company C, Eighty-fourth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and grant her a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2140) granting a pension to Eliza Smith, have considered the same and now report:

The claimant is the widow of Clinton D. Smith, who enlisted as first lieutenant of Company C, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers; was discharged April 2, 1864, and died December 18, 1884. At the time of his death he was on the pension-roll at $30 a month, for gunshot wound of left arm, received in the battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863.

The claimant made application for pension, alleging that soldier died from the effects of the gunshot wound received in service, but the claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that "cause of soldier's death from an overdose of morphine was not a result of his military service.

It appears from the papers before us that the wound nearly all the time since it was inflicted has been very painful, and continually gathered and broke, and frequently had to be lanced in order that the accumulation of pus could be removed.

Dr. Markle testifies that he prescribed for soldier for—

"Gunshot wound of left arm, close to shoulder-joint, for eight years or more prior to his death. He was subject to frequent inflammatory attacks and suppurations of the parts surrounding the wound. I have lanced these abscesses to relieve pain several different times. He was subject to severe and excruciating pain whenever he had the inflammation spoken of. Spiculæ of bone were discharged at times with pus; that to relieve the pain in arm when he had the attacks of inflammation he was in the habit of taking morphine or some other anodyne, and it frequently took large doses. I believe the wound the indirect cause of death."

The proprietors of the hotel where soldier died (Loyd Molen and Jane Molen) testify that he stopped at their hotel, and retired about 9 o'clock p. m., taking with him some water, pitcher, and tin cup, stating at the time that he wished to warm the water and drink it for his suffering for the asthma, and directing not to call him next morning, as he had been suffering from his wounded arm and was at the time. He was called next day about noon, but did not come down. He was called again about 5 o'clock, and said "Well." Suspecting he was in a bad condition, the door was afterwards forced open. He was then lying prostrate and helpless. When told he must get out of that condition, he remarked, "All right. I am willing to do what is right." Some coffee was given him, but he died in about half an hour after the door was forced open. He seemed to be suffering intensely from his arm all the time he was in our presence, during the time he was with us, until his death.

Dr. Proctor testifies that he was called to see soldier at the hotel, and found him in a very stupid condition, and was very hard to arouse. Gave him some medicine, which he took readily and willingly. After taking medicine said he felt sick. Thinks he was suffering from asthma. He died about half an hour after the doctor arrived. The coroner testifies that there was no call for an inquest, and none was held.

The committee, after carefully considering the evidence in all its bearings, do not believe that the morphine was taken with suicidal intent, but for the purpose of alleviating the pain caused by his wounded arm.

We are aware that some cases, when narcotics were self-administered, have met with the disapproval of the Chief Executive, but we think the evidence set out shows so clearly that the remedy used to relieve the pain from the wound was that prescribed by his physician, and was probably applied for the purpose of relieving pain only, that we submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA RUSSELL.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. WHEELER) was the bill (H. R. 24) for the relief of Eliza Russell, widow of Eldredge Russell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Eliza Russell, widow of Eldredge Russell, of General Harris's command, war of 1836.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24) granting a pension to Eliza Russell, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The husband of the claimant enlisted in Capt. Joseph Martin's company, of Alabama Militia, February 27, 1836, and discharged May 27, 1836, and was engaged in the war against the Seminole Indians in Florida. He was allowed a land warrant. His widow, the claimant, is now in her seventy-eighth year, and in needy circumstances, having been dependent on the county in which she resides for her support. She was married to the soldier in 1831, and lived with him until his death in 1862.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment added thereto, namely, "on the pension-roll at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. FLOWERS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. HIRES) was the bill (H. R. 5383) granting a pension to George W. Flowers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Flowers, late a private in Company C, Fifty-second Pennsylvania Militia Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5383) granting a pension to George W. Flowers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The beneficiary named in the bill served as private of Company E, Fifty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, from July 5, 1863, to September 2, 1863. He alleges that while in said service he contracted rheumatism, affecting his hands, feet, and general system. His claim for pension has been rejected on the ground that the Commissioner of Pensions, after a personal examination of the evidence, does not deem the same sufficient to connect the disability with the service.

The merits of the claim have been very thoroughly looked into by a special examiner, who, in submitting the case, says:

"The witnesses whom I have examined all testify, without apparent bias, in favor of claimant, and the general sentiment of such as I talked with, concerning the case, is strongly in its favor. From the evidence before me I am of the opinion that the claim is meritorious, and from the fact that it is improbable that any further evidence as to origin can be obtained by any further examination, unless the name and present whereabouts of the regimental surgeon can be ascertained, I would recommend that the claimant be given the benefit of adjudication on the evidence submitted, and that the claim be admitted without reference for further examination."

This conclusion was reached after an examination of fifteen witnesses, all of whom are shown to be persons of high character, including neighbors testifying as to claimant's prior soundness; comrades, as to origin of the alleged disability in the service; and neighbors and physicians, who testify to the existence of the same at discharge and treatment therefor ever since.

The physician who attended the soldier, immediately upon his return from service, for rheumatic fever is dead. So are others who treated him thereafter. But from 1869 to the present time the testimony of treatment is conclusive and corroborated by receipts for medical attendance covering that period.

The evidence is very voluminous; therefore reference to its general character only can be made in this report. The short service of the claimant and the absence of regimental hospital records or medical evidence of treatment in the service undoubtedly afforded justifiable grounds for the Commissioner's action. But in view of the undisputed testimony furnished by the claimant as well as the special examiner, your committee are of opinion that the service is chargeable with the soldier's present unfortunate condition, as shown by the reports of examining surgeon, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN F. BALLIER.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. RANDALL) was the bill (S. 1613) granting an increase of pension to John F. Ballier.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John F. Ballier, late colonel of Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, at the rate fixed by law for cases of total disability.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1613) granting an increase of pension to John F. Ballier, have considered the same, and adopt and submit the Senate report, as follows:

"John F. Ballier, the petitioner, was a German immigrant, a lieutenant of the American Army in the Mexican war, colonel of the Twenty-first Pennsylvania Infantry and Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry during the late war, and was brevetted brigadier-general for meritorious service. His regiment participated in nearly all the engagements of the Army of the Potomac and his personal career was distinguished for gallantry.

"At Salem Heights, in May, 1863, he received a gunshot wound in the ankle, and was shot through the right thigh, in 1864, at Fort Stevens, on the occasion of Early's attempt upon the defenses of this city.

"In 1866 he was allowed a pension of $22.50 per month on account of his wounds. In 1871 his pension was increased to $30 per month.

"In 1884 he petitioned Congress for a further increase, but the Committee on Pensions reported adversely for want of evidence, and because it was believed the increase, if proper, could be secured through the Pension Office.

"General Ballier thereupon made formal application to the Commissioner of Pensions for an increase on account of hernia arising from the gunshot wound in his thigh and defective vision.

"A board of examiners reported his disability from these causes as total, though the constant attendance of another was not necessary, and fixed the rate of pension at $50 per month, stating in their report that he suffered from three disabilities, any one of which entitled him to $30 per month.

"His claim was rejected January 10, 1887, because there was no evidence to show that the hernia and impaired vision were chargeable to his military service, the Commissioner of Pensions, however, declaring that on account of his age and good military record the case of General Ballier was a proper one for the interposition of Congress.

"He is now seventy-three years of age, is, according to his petition, helpless, and his present pension is insufficient for his support. In view of these circumstances, of his good military record, and in accordance with the suggestion of the Commissioner of Pensions, your committee recommend the passage of a bill placing him upon the pension-roll at the rate fixed for cases of total disability."

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM M. WHALEY.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin) was the bill (H. R. 621) granting an increase of pension to William M. Whaley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William M. Whaley, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, and of Company C, Forty-eighth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, on the pension-roll, and cause to be paid to him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 621) granting an increase of pension to William Whaley, submit the following report:

William Whaley, the soldier referred to in this bill, enlisted and was mustered into the service of the United States as a private in Company C of the Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers on the 16th day of July, 1861, and acted as first principal musician of said regiment. That while so in the service, at Arlington Heights, Virginia, he was taken very sick with intermittent fever, caused by exposure while in the line of duty, and was confined in hospital with such fever for a long time.

He was, before said sickness, a very active, energetic, and vigorous man, in perfectly sound physical health and condition. By reason of said sickness he became very feeble and debilitated, and the disease settled in his back to such a degree that he could not bear a belt round his body, and when the regiment was on the march he was permitted, when it was possible, to ride in an ambulance.

His sickness finally terminated in a disease of the spinal column and disease of the nervous system, and he was, by reason of disability arising therefrom, honorably discharged from the service at camp near Lovettsville, Va., on the 31st day of October, 1862. He has been, since his discharge, gradually growing worse, and is now suffering from paralysis of the optic nerve, which has resulted in complete amaurosis and total blindness as a result of these difficulties.

The said Whaley has been for some years drawing a pension of $4 per month for the disease of back and nervous condition of system, as the same existed before it had resulted in total blindness. Claimant made application for an increase of his pension on account of his blindness, as a direct result of the disease of the spinal column and the nervous condition of the system induced thereby, and the examining surgeons reported that claimant was constantly afflicted with lameness and weakness of back in lumbar region, by reason of which he has sleepless nights; that he is prematurely old, and is almost totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and is totally blind. The Pension Office, however, rejected the application for an increase on account of blindness for the reason, as your committee understand, that they were not able to determine, as is claimed, that his blindness was occasioned by the disease which he contracted in the service.

The examining surgeon, however, Dr. John Conant, certifies under oath that he had been acquainted with the said Whaley since 1865, and that he has treated him since that time up to the present time for his disabilities, and is thoroughly well acquainted with his physical condition; that said Whaley has been suffering ever since his discharge from the Army from a disease of spinal column and disease of the nervous system, and is now suffering from paralysis of the optic nerve, which has resulted in complete amaurosis and total blindness and is a result of these difficulties.

The doctor testifies that the amaurosis is a direct result of the disease of the spinal column and the disease of the nervous system. He further says the disease has been increasing until at the present time he is totally blind; that he is in a very enfeebled condition, and is able to perform but little, if any, manual labor.

The evidence upon which the claimant draws a pension establishes that the disease of the spinal column and disease of the nervous system as it existed before it had resulted in total blindness were caused by his sickness contracted in the service in line of duty, and Dr. Conant, who has been an examining surgeon for the Pension Bureau for a number of years, testifies, and positively states, that the present condition of disability and total blindness are the direct results of the said disease of spinal column and nervous system. There is nothing in the reports of any of the examining boards or in the testimony to contradict this opinion of Dr. Conant's, but, on the contrary, confirms the same. Your committee have no doubt that the present total blindness and enfeebled condition of the claimant is a direct result of the disease which he contracted in the service, and by which he is now in a condition amounting to almost total disability, requiring nearly the constant aid and assistance of another person, and entitles him to the amount of increase of pension to $40 asked for in the bill.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

FRANK OREDSNIK.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. HUDD) was the bill (S. 898) for the relief of Frank Oredsnik.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frank Oredsnik, late of Company F, Third Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 898) for the relief of Frank Oredsnick, submit the following report:

The soldier was drafted into the United Stated service December 29, 1864, and became a private in Company F, Third Wisconsin Volunteers, where he remained until his discharge, July 18, 1865. He filed his claim for a pension May 27, 1881, on the ground of hernia, and the same was rejected on the ground "of no record of alleged hernia, and no satisfactory evidence of incurrence in service and line of duty."

The question of soundness at time of enlistment or draft seems to be conceded.

The claimant and many of his witnesses are Bohemians, talking our language with difficulty. Besides, he went into his company as a conscript or drafted man, and the feeling of the enlisted soldier towards a drafted man is very well shown by one witness, a member of the same company, who testifies:

"He (the claimant) came to us as a conscript addition. I was never associated with that element any more than I could help."

The character of the claimant and of every person whose testimony is referred to herein is certified to by the special examiner as being fair or good.

The claimant states the incurrence of the disability while in the line of his duty and the circumstances under which it was incurred. The manner, as detailed by him, was not unusual. The disability might easily have been incurred as stated by him.

One comrade states that he was informed by claimant, who was his tent-mate, the day the rupture was incurred, of the fact of the same, and that he could see the same, although the soldier then had on his drawers.

Soldier's wife testifies that her husband was free from a rupture when drafted, but that when he returned from the Army he was ruptured. It appears that other comrades heard soldier complain of rupture while in the service.

Witnesses testify as to soldier's complaining of rupture continuously after his discharge, and a medical examination by the examining board of the Pension Office shows the undisputed existence of the hernia.

The committee think that the evidence of persons who are shown to be of good character should be received, even though they may be related to the soldier unless their testimony appears to be inconsistent or unreasonable or contradicted by other testimony.

The committee think that the case is a meritorious one, and therefore report favorably thereon and recommend that the bill do pass.

The report of the Senate committee is hereunto attached and made a part thereof.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 898) for the relief of Frank Oredsnick, have examined the same, and report:

This bill is for the relief of a man claiming disability in consequence of hernia, incurred by a fall in jumping a ditch while on a march near Richmond. He was a member of Company F, Third Wisconsin, and was a drafted soldier. It is apparent that he was sound prior to his conscription, and it is proven by comrades that he was injured as he alleges, and it is evident that he has hernia now.

His case is not strongly sustained for positive reasons. First, he is a Bohemian, and does not speak or understand English well. His witnesses are Bohemians, who labor under the same disadvantage, and the apparent inconsistencies of their statements from this cause have been turned against him in the Pension Office adjudication. He was a conscript, and for this reason intercourse with him was avoided, and persons sought by the special examiners disavow any knowledge of him. One of the special examiners undertook the task of hunting up the captain of the company and succeeded in finding him, but he disavowed any knowledge of the man, because, as he said, conscripts were not in favor.

The man was drafted; he was not long in service; long enough, however, to get hurt and be disabled. The surgeon appointed to examine him says:

"I find this man has a direct inguinal hernia of the right side. The hernial sack passes through the external abdominal ring and projects forwards. The hernial tumor is about the size of a small hen's egg, and is easily reduced. He is obliged to wear a truss constantly. I rate disability resulting from hernia at one-half."

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

RACHEL BARNES.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. FULLER) was the bill (H. R. 149) granting a pension to Rachel Barnes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Rachel Barnes, widow of William Barnes, who served in Company I, Second United States Infantry, from February 24, 1836, to and until February 24, 1841, and pay her a pension as such widow from and after the passage of this act, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. STRUBLE) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 149) granting a pension to Rachel Barnes, widow of William Barnes, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

William Barnes, husband of petitioner, enlisted in Company I, Second United States Infantry, February 24, 1838, and was honorably discharged February 24, 1841. During the winter of 1840-'41, while engaged in an extended scouting expedition in South Florida, and sleeping upon the ground, with no tents to cover himself and companions, he contracted a disability of the eyes which resulted in partial blindness. This disability has followed him ever since, incapacitating him for earning a livelihood, and refusing to yield to medical treatment. For this disability the soldier was treated at the time of its incurrence by the hospital steward, there being no physician with the party. Not having been treated upon his return to camp, and the steward who treated him being dead, the soldier is unable to produce any testimony of his treatment during service.

The soundness of his eyes before and at date of enlistment, and their unsoundness upon his return home after discharge, is abundantly shown by the evidence. Medical examinations had since the service aforesaid, and while the soldier's application for pension was pending, reveal the existence of the alleged disability in a pensionable dgree; but the medical examiner states that he was unable, from the symptoms, to decide whether or not said disability originated in the service. Your committee do not regard it strange that said examiner should not, nearly forty years after the incurrence, be able to say that the disease was incurred in service and line of duty, and, upon the evidence, it was not necessary that he should so find, for that fact is satisfactorily established by other evidence.

The soldier filed an application for a pension July 3, 1880, alleging disease of eyes contracted in Florida in 1840-'41. The claim was rejected January 14, 1881, on the ground that there was no record of the alleged disability, and claimant could not furnish satisfactory evidence of its origin in the service and line of duty.

At date of the rejection there was no record evidence of incurrence, nor of officers or comrades, although there were—besides the evidence of the soldier, his wife, and two sisters—two affidavits of civilians who saw him during the service and know his eyes were affected while he was in the service in Florida.

After rejection of the claim the soldier, as a result of correspondence with the Pension Department, learned that Lieutenant Patrick, who, at one time during the Florida campaign, commanded the company in which the soldier served, was then living, and, as General M. R. Patrick, was governor of the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio. Correspondence between the soldier and General Patrick followed, and in the early part of the year 1882 the soldier went to Dayton and had a personal interview with the general, at which time, by aid of his journal and the statements of the soldier, General Patrick was enabled to recall incidents of the service, and, by means thereof, his memory was so much aided that he not only was able to identify the soldier, but remember facts which enabled him some weeks after to write the Commissioner of Pensions very fully respecting the claim then pending, and to state facts satisfactorily establishing, with other evidence on file, that the soldier incurred disease of eyes in the service, as alleged by him.

The Hon. W. E. FULLER, now member of the House from Iowa, was for years personally acquainted with William Barnes, and gives valuable oral evidence to your committee of his excellent character as a man and citizen.

Mr. FULLER, who was his attorney, represents that he was aware of the visit of Mr. Barnes to Dayton, Ohio, to see his old commander; that he remembers his return, and the evident satisfaction entertained by him because of the assurances of General Patrick that he would in a few days write the Commissioner of Pensions, giving the facts relating to the soldier's impairment of sight when in the service; that as a few weeks passed and no word was received from General Patrick, the soldier, who had become dependent and despondent, came to the conclusion, as he expressed it, "that the old general had gone back on him," and soon after met Mr. FULLER and told him he need do no more for him in regard to the pension case, and the next morning after the conversation, March 24, 1882, the old man was found in the adjacent woods hanging lifeless to a tree.

He had undoubtedly become burdened by a weight of anxiety and despondency, and in despair, if not insanity, took his own life. How gravely he was in error in supposing his old commander had, to use his own language, "gone back on him," the following statements will disclose:

On January 7, 1882, in answer to a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions relating to the claim of Mr. Barnes, among other things General Patrick said:

"I have been unable to complete the search in my journals and memoranda of those days. After a diligent search I can only find two allusions to him—one of the 18th of March, 1840, in which he behaved remarkably well in a skirmish with the Seminoles; and again on the 29th of July following I find him employed as a kind of rough carpenter in hewing timber for building purposes."

This letter was written prior to the visit of Mr. Barnes to General Patrick. On February 16, 1882, General Patrick wrote Commissioner Dudley as follows:

"On or about the 7th of January, 1882, in reply to inquiries made in relation to one William Barnes, formerly of I Company, Second Regiment of Infantry, I wrote you, giving some facts which I found in my journal. I had written him at about the same time very nearly a duplicate of what I wrote you. At his own expense he has come here to see me, bringing with him letters of the very best character. His presence here and a re-examination of my journal enable me to speak of him more in detail than before; and, at the risk of being somewhat prolix, I will state that in the summer of 1839 he, with his company, under command of Captain Russell, went into Florida and down the coast in the neighborhood of Key Biscayne and the mouth of the Miami River, where the captain was soon after killed, and the company left in command of a young lieutenant recently appointed from civil life.

"When I reached there, in December following, I found that the company was for quite a time without shelter, sleeping in the open air, suffering much from mosquitoes and the climate generally. A number of cases of moon blindness existed when I took the company, some of the men being unable to perform night duty on that account.

"I do not recollect anything in particular of this man Barnes, save that on several occasions I took him with me as a very trusty man. He had been a corporal almost from his enlistment, but, being without any education, felt himself incapable of discharging the duties and so resigned.

"On the 1st day of March following I find him one of the picked men who were sent out and were attacked by Indians, in which he behaved remarkably well, as he was reported to have done once before I took the company. Between that time and the 1st of July following I occasionally took him with me on hunting expeditions, I carrying a rifle and he a fowling-piece, because, as he stated, he could not see to shoot at any distance, as he could when he first came into Florida.

"On examining my journal in his presence he has recalled to my recollection certain incidents, such as my signaling him to join me when he has been at some distance from me, and his being unable to see me until being told by those with him that I was signaling.

"On one occasion in particular he was for a time very much troubled at a reprimand I gave him for not shooting at an object which I pointed out, until he again reminded me that he could see but a short distance. I find from a reference to my journal that on the 24th of July I placed him in charge of certain rough carpenter work in building a post, and in connection with the fall of a bent in a large building the question of his defective eyesight again came up.

"From my knowledge of the man up to the time of his discharge in February, 1841, I feel very confident, amounting to almost certainty, that his disability commenced in the summer of 1839, while serving in the neighborhood of Key Biscayne, involving a large amount of boat service among the keys, bays, Miami River, open-water everglades, and water service generally (the sun shining upon the water with great brilliancy), sleeping in open air at night during that summer, and that it became intensified by continuous service through the summer of 1840 in the sands of the Touhlacooche and Ochlawaha districts, when troops, in that country, were usually at rest. On this subject I speak from an experience of five years' continuous service in Florida.

"In 1837, and again in 1842, I was myself laid up with brain fever from these same causes.

"I have asked Colonel Thomas (treasurer of the Home), recognized as among the ablest of our medical men, to be present during my examination of the man, and himself to examine him professionally with a view to giving his opinion in the case. Through other sources than the letter I have received, I hear the very best character possible given him as to perfect truthfulness and honesty, and these accord with the record in my journal of the trusts with which he was honored when with me. I do not know whether this statement can be of any use in forwarding his claim, but so far as it goes I can swear to it.

"Very respectfully,

"M. R. PATRICK, Governor."

Mr. Barnes's decease occurred prior to action by the Pension Department upon the letters of General Patrick, and, in fact, no ruling was made upon the case thereafter.

On March 20, 1883, the widow of Mr. Barnes filed an application for pension, alleging as ground therefor the death of her husband from insanity, resulting from disease of head and eyes. Her application was rejected April 27, 1883, for the reason that the soldier's death from insanity, forty-one years after service, had no connection with the service. She is now seventy-two years of age and in dependent circumstances, and in the judgment of your committee the bill should pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA MATHEWS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. REED) was the bill (H. R. 8953) granting a pension to Eliza Mathews.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza Mathews, dependent mother of John Mathews, late a private in Company F, Thirty-second Maine Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6519) for the relief of Eliza Matthews, having considered the same, report as follows:

John Matthews was a private in Company F, Thirty-second Maine Volunteers. He was a good soldier and died in Andersonville prison. The claimant under this bill was largely dependent upon soldier for support; but when she applied for pension as dependent mother it was properly denied on the ground that the soldier left a widow and minor children, who were pensioned. Since that time the widow has remarried, and the children have passed the pensionable age, so that no pension is being paid in consequence of soldier's death.

Claimant is eighty-seven years of age, entirely unable to do manual labor, and is supported by charity. The case is an exceptionally strong one of its class, and as there are numerous precedents your committee report back a substitute bill with the recommendation that it do pass, and also recommend that the original bill lie on the table.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. CAROLINE G. SCYFFORTH.

Mr. CASWELL. I call up the bill (H. 9126) granting a pension to Mrs. Caroline G. Scyfforth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of Caroline G. Scyfforth, widow of the late Edmund Scyfforth, a contract surgeon in the United States Army.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

Claimant is the widow of Edmund Seyfforth, who was a contract surgeon at Lawrence, Mass., from April 12, 1862, to August 17, 1865, at which time his services were no longer needed. The claimant alleged in her declaration for pension that her husband while engaged in said hospital service at Portsmouth Grove Hospital, in Rhode Island, in the month of January, 1863, while dressing the wounds of a certain patient in said hospital was poisoned by certain poisonous matter from said patient, whereby he was seriously injured by blood poisoning, which caused his death July 21, 1874. The claim was rejected on the ground that the death resulted from congestion of liver, not due to cut of finger. It is admitted that the deceased was free from blood poisoning prior to his engagement as surgeon. It is also admitted that claimant has never married since the date of her husband's death.

Dr. Joseph W. Cushing, acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, testifies—

"That the said Dr. Edmund Seyfforth, while in the discharge of his duty as surgeon as above stated, became disabled; that he was daily and intimately associated with him from October, 1862, to March, 1865, and that he was knowing to Dr. Seyfforth receiving a wound while operating on a patient (a soldier), which wound was followed by severe illness and blood poisoning, and compelled the amputation of his finger, and that in consequence of the injury his nervous system and general health was greatly injured, and that he never recovered his full vigor."

"That he has been acquainted with said surgeon twenty years, and that he practiced medicine with him in the same city and saw him frequently; that he was stationed at the Portsmouth Grove Hospital, and while operating on some of the soldiers he injured his hand by poison from the wounds, and was suffering from blood poison, so that he was obliged to lose several fingers and part of his hand, deforming him for life, and, in his opinion, it was one of the causes of his death. He was with him a day or two before his death, and he seemed to be a complete wreck."

Andrew C. Stone, a member of Company A, Thirty-third Massachusetts Volunteers, was taken to the hospital at Portsmouth for treatment in 1863, and there met Dr. Seyfforth. He had just had his forefinger amputated. He had punctured it during an operation, and it had been inoculated with gangrenous matter, which caused the loss of the joint and necessitated amputation. Stone remained in the hospital until 1865; saw Dr. Seyfforth almost every day. He was very much emaciated after the loss of the finger, and he continued in substantially that condition up to the time of death.

Dr. J. Q. Adams testifies in substance that he was a physical wreck after his return from the Army, and adds:

"It is my undoubted opinion that he died of blood poison; knows these facts from being well acquainted with him and boarding in his family and being in his office more than three years."

There is no medical hospital evidence for the reason that the deceased treated himself while in the service and up to the time of his death. The evidence seems to be abundant that the deceased surgeon incurred blood poison as stated, and that said blood poison was the cause of his death. We therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: In the name "Scyfforth" wherever it occurs in the bill insert "Seyfforth."

The amendments recommended in the last paragraph of the report were read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELNATHAN MEADE.

Mr. PEEL. I call up the bill (H. R. 4069) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elnathan Meade, late of Company C, Forty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, at the rate of $45 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) is as follows:

The beneficiary named in the bill enlisted in Company C, Forty-fourth New York Volunteers, August 20, 1862. He was wounded in left hand at the battle of Fredericksburgh, December 13, 1862, and in head, severe, at the battle of the Wilderness, and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability.

In addition to these wounds he contracted disease of heart and lungs. The combined disabilities are rated at the Pension Office at $24 per month. Several efforts to have his pension increased have failed, because he can perform some manual labor. It appears from the medical evidence that the wound of the head, the greater of the disabilities, alone is of such a character as to entitle Mr. Meade to a higher pension than that now allowed for the combined disabilities.

Dr. William V. Marmion, of Washington, D. C., and an oculist of national reputation, in 1882 described the disability resulting from the gunshot wound of head as follows:

"Left eye: vision, perception of light of left side of visual field, central as well general vision in all other respects lost. Ophthalmoscopic examination reveals atrophy of optic nerve, with a well-marked and almost vertical fissure of the retina, caused by the concussion of the bullet as it traversed the posterior and inferior portion of the orbit; the tension of both eyes about normal; globe of left somewhat sunken, owing to the partial destruction of fatty cushion in posterior portion of orbit. Right eye: vision nine-tenths emmetropic. There are some traces of slight neuro-retenitis remaining, most likely resulting from sympathetic irritation. Patient suffers from asthenopia, which no glass relieves; close application of eye might produce serious symptoms and threaten the health of the eye. Left eye deviates outward. Projection of right eye good."

The general effect of the wound of the head upon the system is described in the certificate of T. B. Hood, late brevet colonel United States volunteers and medical examiner of the Pension Office, under date of January 6, 1886, as follows:

"I certify that I have intimately known Mr. Elnathan Meade, and that at intervals for several years past he has been in my professional care for the results of a gunshot wound of his head and face. The missile, a large musket-ball, struck him a little above the external canthus of the left eye and, passing somewhat downward, emerged just in front of the ear upon the right side of the face. In its track the ball fractured the malar or cheek-bone (its zygomatic process), passed through the floor of the orbit of the left eye, fracturing the orbital plate of the upper jaw-bone (superior maxillary), injuring the globe of the eye, passed the nasal fosse, fracturing the bones there, and passing through the right upper jaw-bone emerged through the ramus of the lower jaw-bone (inferior maxillary), fracturing it.

"Thus the ball passed through the face from left to right. The statement that Mr. Meade was thought to have been killed outright at first, and that when it was apparent that that was not true it was believed scarcely worth while to waste time and attention upon so hopeless a case, is wholly credible, and most certainly but few persons would recover from so severe a wound.

"The sight of the left eye is wholly destroyed, and there is growing involvement of the right eye from sympathy. But even that is not the worst of the case. The involvement of the nervous system as a result of the wound, the constant pain which is paroxysmally increased beyond the point of endurance, and the reflected irritation upon the whole nervous system as a matter of fact increases his trouble so as to unfit him for any kind of labor, mental or physical.

He should, if possible, have no enforced occupation; should not be compelled to any business cares of any character, but should be so situated as to consult his inclinations as to either mental or physical work. With freedom from care of any kind, so far as practicable, he might live in comparative comfort, but as long as he must labor with mind or body so long will that labor precipitate paroxysms of pain which will cause general excitement and shock of the nervous system and utter unfitness for any business pursuits, and I express this opinion not upon the theoretic grounds alone, but base it upon close observation of the case for several years."

The wound has also destroyed the power to masticate solid food.

Your committee fully appreciate the severity of the wound of head and its effects upon the eyes as well as upon the general system, and the consequent necessity of quiet and abstention from any business. This alone would seem to justify an increase of the pension now received by Mr. Meade. But as heretofore stated, there are other disabilities recognized by the Pension Bureau but not included in the present rating, which should not be ignored in the consideration of his request for increase.

After a careful examination of all the evidence, part of which only has been referred to in this report, your committee are convincingly impressed with the merits of the case, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES JEWETT.

Mr. GROUT. I call up the bill (H. R. 9318) granting an increase of pension to Charles Jewett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Charles Jewett, late a private in Company I, Third New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

Claimant was a private in Company I, Third New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, enlisting August 21, 1861, and being discharged August 25, 1864, making a full three years' service. He was pensioned at the rate of $6 per month for rheumatism, and applied for an increase on the ground of rheumatic disease of the eyes, causing blindness, which application was rejected by the Pension Office. Had that application been allowed claimant would have received $72 per month, and this bill proposes to give him $40 per month, which is in the line of numerous precedents established by Congress.

The merits of this case must necessarily be determined by medical testimony, on which point the following is submitted:

Dr. John H. Cutler, of Peterborough, N. H., a distinguished physician and late a surgeon in the Union Army, under date February 11, 1886, says:

"I was called to attend Charles Jewett professionally during the year 1867, said Jewett being personally known to me as the same man who served as a private in Company I, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers; that the disease for which I first treated him was a rheumatic weakness of the back, and I have treated him for the same trouble, from time to time, down to date. The disease has gradually increased upon him, and in April, 1884, it became so severe that he was compelled to give up the job at which he was employed, and has since been unable to perform manual labor to any considerable extent; in fact, has been able to do little of anything. He has had a severe trouble in the back, which has been abated since last August to some extent, and the disease seems to have gone to his eyes. He has a rheumatic inflammation of the eyes, which has destroyed the sight of the right eye, and the left eye is badly diseased from the same cause."

One medical board gave the opinion that the blindness was not due to the service, while another admitted that it was impossible to determine whether or not such was the fact.

On the 9th day of December, 1887, soldier was sent for examination to Dr. H. D. W. Carvelle, of Manchester, N. H., a specialist in diseases of the eye. Dr. Carvelle found almost total blindness, and gave an elaborate statement of the case, concluding in these words:

"Do not know whether rheumatism could cause these changes. Can scarcely accept rheumatism as a cause of the blindness, but it might be possible."

Since that time, on April 16, 1888, Dr. Cutler the attending physician, has filed with your committee the following additional affidavit:

"I, John H. Cutler, of Peterborough, in the county of Hillsborough and State of New Hampshire, on oath depose that I am and have been since November, 1865, a practicing physician and surgeon at said Peterborough; that I have known Charles Jewett, late a private in Company I, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and have lived but a short distance from him during all of that time; that I was called to prescribe for him very early in my practice in Peterborough for rheumatism when he had been but a short time out of the Army, and have treated him occasionally ever since for that disease and related ailments, which were apparently the result and effects of his military service in a southern climate; that this disability has increased in severity from year to year ever since. I first found it in the lumbar regions, when it gradually encroached upon the dorsal and cervical regions, and later upon the base of the brain, the result of which is blindness and total disability to perform manual labor, the result of which is permanent.

"I further depose that I have no interest in the prosecution or result of any claim for pension on behalf of said Jewett.

JOHN H. CUTLER, M. D.

"PETERBOROUGH, N. H., April 16, 1888.

"STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Hillsborough, ss:

"Personally appearing the above-named John H. Cutler on the 16th day of April, 1888, subscribed and made oath to the foregoing affidavit before me, and I certify that he is personally known to me as the person he represents himself to be, and is reputable and entitled to credit, and that I have no interest in any claim for pension by or in behalf of Charles Jewett named in the above affidavit.

"[SEAL.] R. B. HATCH, Notary Public."

A summary of the medical testimony is as follows: One board thinks the blindness is not due to rheumatism, and another admits that it is impossible to determine that point; an oculist finds blindness, but can not say positively as to whether rheumatism did or did not cause it; while the attending surgeon, who has treated soldier continuously for more than twenty years, swears positively that the blindness is the direct result of rheumatic trouble.

As it is well known to every medical man of experience that rheumatic diseases of eye are not uncommon, it is safe to assume that the attending surgeon in this case understands the matter better than other medical men who have seen the soldier but once, and accordingly your committee report the bill back favorably and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FREDERIC RONICKE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call up the bill (H. R. 3923) to place the name of Frederic Ronicke on the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Frederic Ronicke, late of Company A, Fifty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

Frederick Ronicke enlisted October 1, 1861, in Company A, Fifty-eighth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged January 14, 1865. The evidence filed in his pension claim establishes that he was a sound, robust, healthy man when he enlisted; also his officers testify to his being a brave and willing soldier. He claims that while on duty on the gunboat Mound City, in the winter of 1863, he contracted rheumatism from exposure and was sent to hospital-boat Red Rover.

There is no record evidence of his being treated for rheumatism, but the evidence of Lieut. Charles Kelte, then commanding Company A, Fifty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, says "that claimant was under his command from February 8, 1863, to June, 1863; that he was often taken with pains in his limbs, and that he became reduced in flesh and unfit for duty." Joseph Dister, of Dayton, Ohio, captain of Company F, Fifty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, testifies "that while on an expedition from Chickasaw Bayou, Mississippi, to Arkansas Post, Arkansas, about January, 1863, claimant complained of severe pains in his legs and body and had to be put into an ambulance." The evidence is that since his discharge the rheumatism grew more severe until he was disabled from manual labor. The board of examining surgeons under order from Pension Department examined Mr. Ronicke, June 7, 1882, and report:

"This man is very much deformed from the effects of deposits in the various joints of the body; the knees are rigid in a semi-flexed position; the fingers useless on account of the deformity at each joint; he is unable to walk erect, and helps himself as best he can upon crutches; he has no acute pains or actual inflammation in any of his joints now, and that he is totally incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor."

The evidence shows this man to be very poor. He states that he is unable to procure the evidence necessary to complete his claim, and in the absence of hospital record for treatment of rheumatism the Pension Department rejected his claim. But from his present condition and his condition since his discharge, in connection with claimant's statement, supported by the evidence of Captain Dister and Lieut. Charles Kelte, officers in his company and regiment, your committee believes the claimant is entitled to pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN A. ROLF.

Mr. ADAMS. I call up the bill (H. R. 7093) granting an increase of pension to John A. Rolf.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John A. Rolf to $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him under certificate 6304.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

John A. Rolf served in Company D, Seventy-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, from December 22, 1863, to July 29, 1865, when discharged for disability on account of gunshot wound of left elbow received in battle at Franklin, Tenn., November 30, 1864.

For this wound he is pensioned at $24 per month, the disability being equivalent to the loss of a hand.

On April 30, 1871, pensioner then being employed as a letter-carrier at the Chicago, Ill., post-office, and while on his route gathering up letters, in the attempt to get off a street-car he lost his hold by reason of the disabled condition of the left arm, was thrown under the wheels of the car, and had his right arm so badly crushed that amputation at the shoulder-joint became necessary.

A captain of police and others who witnessed the accident attribute this injury to the weakened condition of the wounded arm, rather than to carelessness or negligence on the part of the pensioner. He is shown to have always been a sober and industrious man, and is spoken of in the highest terms by those under whom he was employed at the time of the accident.

By reason of the wound of service and the subsequent loss of the other arm he is incapable of performing skilled or manual labor, and is in a great measure dependent upon the efforts of his small children, who keep a small fruit-stand in the city of Chicago. In addition to the disabilities described Rolf is nearly blind in left eye, and suffers much from rheumatism of both shoulder-joints, left hip, both knees, and ankle-joints.

It is true that the greater disability is not directly chargeable to the military service, but that it is indirectly due to the severe injury of service, is, in the opinion of your committee, clearly shown. Pensioner's condition is pitiable in the extreme, and while no relief can be afforded him under the general pension laws, it is the desire of this committee that his pension should be increased, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the work "fifty," in line 5, and insert therein instead the word "forty-five."

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MANHATTON PICKETT.

Mr. OSBORNE. I call up the bill (S. 2301) to increase the pension of Manhatton Pickett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Manhatton Pickett, late a sergeant of Company B, One hundred and twelfth Regiment New York Volunteers, to $45 per month, in lieu of the pension now authorized by law.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The claimant in this case is now drawing a pension of $36 per month, under a special act of Congress approved July 14, 1886. After a full examination of the facts of this case, and the report of Senator BLAIR, No. 915, made to the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, which clearly and briefly states the facts, the committee is of the opinion that the claimant's pension should be increased to the amount allowed under the law approved August 4, 1886, for the loss of a leg at the hip-joint, or so near the joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb.

The evidence is conclusive that the claimant is more disabled by reason of the wound from which he is now suffering, and is less able to provide for the maintenance of himself and family, than if he was on crutches and had his limb amputated "so near the hip-joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb." His condition can not be remedied by the amputation of the leg at or above the knee-joint, from the fact that his physical condition is such that the operation could not be performed without endangering life.

Your committee would, therefore, recommend that Senate bill 2301 be amended by striking out in line 6 the words "one hundred," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty-five," and as so amended the bill is reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The following is the report made to the Forty-ninth Congress, referred to above:

"The soldier is now in receipt of a pension for gunshot wound, described as follows by J. L. Stewart, president board of examining surgeons:

"'Gunshot wound of posterior surface of left leg, leaving an ulcerated discharging wound 3½ inches long over the lower part of the gastrocnemius muscle, the lower third of which muscle has been removed by inflammatory action and discharges, producing pain and weakness of the leg and ankle, and impairing his ability for manual labor, causing a disability equal to the loss of a hand or foot.'

"Dr. Pickett has appeared personally before your committee, and, having examined him carefully, they find the leg atrophied, with a large ulceration, which is evidently incurable.

"The leg requires bandaging to be constantly renewed, and is offensive to the smell. This has impaired his general health and reduced it to so low an ebb that an amputation of the leg, though very much to be desired, would now be exceedingly dangerous and probably fatal.

"Taking all things into consideration, your committee think that this pensioner would be better off had his leg been amputated.

"In addition to the above the following affidavit has been filed in support of the claim for increase, as follows:

"CITY OF WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, ss:

"Alexander M. Lowry, after being duly sworn, deposes and says that he was late adjutant of the One hundred and twelfth Regiment New York State Volunteers; that he was attached to said regiment from August, 1862, until about Septe ber, 1864; that he was well acquainted with Manhattan Pickett, late a sergeant of Company B of said regiment, who is now an applicant for a pension by special act of Congress by bill H. R. 7165; that he has known him since August, 1862.

"Affiant further states that said Pickett was wounded at Cold Harbor in the line of duty; that he was immediately afterward taken to the hospital, where he remained until discharged and sent home. Said Pickett has never recovered from the effects of said wound, but is now entirely disabled and rendered utterly helpless and unable to do anything to support himself or family in consequence thereof. The wound has never healed, but, on the contrary, has continually grown worse, until at the present time it is in such an offensive condition that it is necessary to dress the same at least twice every day.

"The soldier is himself an eminent physician and surgeon, one of the best in Western Pennsylvania, and has, therefore, thus far been able to prescribe for his own case; were he required to employ medical assistance it would take a much larger amount of money to pay for the same than his present pension. He now requires constant care, attendance, and treatment on account of the offensive and dangerous character of this wound and its discharges. Under its influence his health is rapidly declining, owing to the constant and severe drain upon his physical system; this is greatly enhanced by the continuous pain which he suffers on account of this wound, which has shattered his nervous system, and requires large quantities of opiates to be persistently administered in order to relieve the same, the effect of which has necessarily been very injurious.

"The said wound is several inches in length from the knee down and the flesh is gradually sloughing off, the result of which is of the most disagreeable character. He long ago would have submitted to amputation of the leg above the knee were it not for the fact that he has been assured by the best medical authorities in that section that such amputation would probably result in death. The claimant has therefore continued to drag out a miserable existence, which it is the belief of your affiant can not probably be continued but a short time, and which it is very probable may even be numbered by months.

"Affiant further states that the claimant has a wife and one young child depending upon him for support; that he is entirely without property or means; that he is an eminent physician, and would be capable, if physically able to attend to his profession, of securing a large and lucrative practice; that he has been surgeon of the Philadelphia and Erie Railway Company, but, not being able to attend to the duties of that position, must resign the same.

"Affiant further states that the wife of said claimant has been his constant attendant, and has given and is now giving a large portion of her time, strength, and energy to his care, and that but for her assistance he would be compelled to procure the constant aid and attendance of another person, which he is now unable to do by reason of poverty.

"Affiant further states that he has no interest in the prosecution of the above claim.

"ALEX. M. LOWRY.

"Sworn and subscribed before me this 4th day of May, 1886.

"[SEAL.] "R. B. NIXON, Notary Public."

"Your committee think that the evidence shows a condition of this soldier which will fully warrant the pension of $50 per month, as it would seem that he requires the aid and attendance of another, besides constant medical attendance. The bill is therefore reported back with a recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendment: Strike out the word 'thirty-six,' in the sixth line, and insert the word 'fifty.'"

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

TOBIAS BANEY.

Mr. HIESTAND. I call up the bill (S. 121) granting a pension to Tobias Baney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Tobias Baney, late of the One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 121) granting a pension to Tobias Baney, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report that they submit and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

"Tobias Baney, the claimant, enlisted as a private in Company H, One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, February 28, 1865, and was honorably discharged January 31, 1866.

"About November, 1865, while at Washington, D. C., claimant was attacked by pains in the region of the heart, which have continued until the present time, with a steady increase in violence and the disability consequent thereupon.

"The hospital records contain no mention of any disability, but claimant alleges that as military duty at that time was merely nominal, and his regiment was in daily expectation of muster out, he made no complaint of his disability to his superior officers, or to the regimental surgeon.

"After his discharge he was treated by Dr. J. W. Bowman, of Bainbridge, Pa., until 1868; since then he has been treated by Dr. G. W. Beane, of the same place.

"Dr. Beane testifies, inter alia, that claimant suffers much from attacks of pain and broken-down condition of his health; that in his opinion claimant contracted from exposure pericarditis, or inflammation of the heart's coverings, which extends to and along the great arteries; that he is and always has been a temperate, industrious man, whose health was certainly undermined while in the service.

"From the evidence submitted it appears that claimant, owing to his disability from the above-mentioned cause, was, for the first ten years, incapacitated for manual labor one-fourth of the time; from then to 1882, one-half of the time, and from the latter date to the present time has been totally incapacitated for manual labor.

"That the disability originated in the military service of the United States is proven by the testimony of a number of claimant's comrades, who, together with other persons, show him to have been a robust, healthy man prior to his enlistment.

"In view of these facts, your committee recommend that the accompanying bill do pass."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LYDIA A. HEINY.

Mr. CHEADLE. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 9034) granting a pension to Lydia A. Heiny.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the rules and regulations of the Pension Department, the name of Lydia A. Heiny, widow of George Heiny, late a member of Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and Company E, Eighth Indiana Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) is as follows:

Lydia A. Heiny is the widow of George Heiny, who enlisted as a private in Company E, Eighth Indiana Cavalry (Thirty-ninth Volunteers), and was enrolled on the 28th day of August, 1861, and was mustered out at Lexington, N. C., July 20, 1865, and died December 13, 1880. The widow filed application for pension May 11, 1885, alleging that the soldier, George Heiny, her husband, soon after the battle of Chattanooga, Tenn., while in the line of his duty, contracted indigestion, dyspepsia, bronchitis, disease of throat, and nervous debility, and that his death was caused by reason of said disabilities. The claim was rejected by the Pension Department on the ground that the cause of the soldier's death, the result of a fall, was not due to his military service.

In relation to the death of the soldier, W. D. Winburn testifies that his occupation is that of a barber, and that he knew the soldier two years prior to his death. He was a patron of the affiant's. He suffered from throat trouble, and he often noticed when in his (affiant's) barber-shop that he seemed to suffer greatly of smothering; seemed as if his throat filled up and he could not breathe, and choked, and this grew worse seemingly, and greatly annoyed him on the evening he was severely injured, December 12, 188'. He came to affiant's barber-shop, located upstairs, to get shaved, Saturday evening, December 12, 1880. He sat down to wait his turn, being crowded with customers. Affiant noticed that he (soldier) seemed quite uneasy, and seemed to be choking, and started to go out of the shop, and said that he would come in again when he felt better. He opened the door and started down the stairs and fell. Affiant heard him fall and went to the door at once, and he was lying on the brick sidewalk. The soldier died the following day.

P. R. Whitesell, captain of the soldier's company, and also a physician, testifies that he was personally acquainted with the said Heiny, and that he was a sound, able-bodied man, free from disease prior to enlistment; that he prescribed for him frequently for disease of the throat while in the Army. After returning from the Army he commenced treating soldier for disease of the throat in October, 1865, and was his physician up to 1866. The disease continued to take on a more aggravated form. It affected his voice organs and deglutition. Dr. W. B. Graham, he says, treated the soldier the greater part of the time after the above date, and he (Dr. Whitesell) examined him frequently while Dr. Graham was treating him, and advised with the doctor in the treatment.

Dr. Graham testifies that he treated the soldier for disease of throat, and that it gradually grew worse, and that while under his treatment from about September, 1866, to 1870, was so as to disable him from manual labor fully half the time.

Dr. Tucker testifies that he treated the said Heiny for disease of throat and vocal organs during the summer and winter of 1871–'72 until he removed to Noblesville. He says he suffered a great deal during deglutition from severe pain in throat and he gradually grew worse; the treatment merely allayed the pain, but he did not make any improvement in his condition. He says he does not know the origin only from hearsay, but it was understood that it originated in the Army. He saw him frequently after he ceased to treat him until about the date of his death, and his condition was growing gradually worse to the extent that he was unable to perform manual labor more than half the time, and that his habits were good.

Austin Lenner testifies that he was a member of the same company with Heiny, and has been acquainted with him all his life; that they enlisted together, and he knows that Heiny was a stout, active young man and not afflicted with any kind of disease; that after the war they returned to their homes, near Noblesville, Ind., where they lived and saw each other more or less every month from the date of his discharge to the date of his death, and he knows of his own personal knowledge that he was greatly afflicted with some kind of throat trouble and unable to perform manual labor in consequence thereof; that he was treated by physicians; that his disability continued to grow worse all the time up to the date of his death, and knowing what he does of the soldier's condition before enlistment and his duties while in the service he has every reason to believe that he contracted his disability in the service and in line of his duty, and that his death was the result of said disabilities.

Your committee are of the opinion that it is proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the soldier was a sound, healthy man at the time he enlisted. There is no hospital record of treatment in his case, but it is shown that said records are incomplete; but the testimony of Captain Whitesell, who was also his family physician, is sufficient to show that his disability was incurred while in the service and in line of duty. The fall from the top of the stair-way to the brick sidewalk below was technically the cause of his death, but the committee are forced to the conclusion that the debilitated condition of the soldier at the time, resulting from the diseases which were incurred in the Army, is sufficient, in the opinion of the committee, to justify the belief that death resulted from said disabilities.

In view, therefore, of the facts above stated, and the further facts that the soldier was a poor man when he came out of the Army, and was an invalid and unable to perform manual labor only to a limited extent from the date of his discharge to the date of his death, we believe that the relief asked ought to be granted.

Your committee therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM KNIGHT AND OTHERS.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I call up the bill (S. 341) granting pensions to William Knight, Jacob Parrott, and John Whollam.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved July 7, 1884, entitled "An act granting pensions to Wilson W. Brown and others," the name of William Knight, late of Company E, Twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Jacob Parrott and John Whollam, late of the Thirty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. As the report in this case is long, I think I can make a statement of the case which will be entirely satisfactory, after which I trust the report may be printed in the RECORD without reading. These men are all who now remain of what are known in history as the "Mitchel Raiders," and who have not been pensioned under the act of July 7, 1884. At the time of the passage of that act the whereabouts of these men and even their existence had not been ascertained. They have since been found. One of them is a resident of my own county. The bill proposes to place these men on an equality with the other surviving members of that expedition, at the rate of $24 a month. They suffered extreme hardships, as is known, under circumstances which it is not necessary to repeat.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 341) granting pensions to William Knight, Jacob Parrott, and John Whollam, submit the followlng report:

This bill, as originally introduced into the Senate at this session of Congress was a duplicate of House bill No. 961, for which it is now reported as a substit ute It provides for granting pensions, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of Congress approved July 7, 1884, entitled "An act granting pensions to Wilson W. Brown, and others," William Knight, Jacob Parrott, and John Whollam, the now remaining unpensioned survivors of that brave band of Union soldiers known in history as the "Mitchel Raiders."

The facts upon which the relief sought is based are set forth in the Senate report accompanying the bill, which is herein incorporated and made a part of this report, namely:

"[Senate Report No. 475, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 341) granting pensions to William Knight, Jacob Parrott, William Reddick, and John Whollam, have examined the same, and report:

"The beneficiaries of this bill were members of the forlorn hope, known in 1862 as 'Mitchel's Raiders.'

"By special act of July 7, 1884, Congress bestowed a pension of $24 a month, in response to their petition, upon Wilson W. Brown and others, comprising a majority of the survivors of those who were engaged in a hazardous enterprise, under orders of General O. M. Mitchel, having for its object the destruction of the bridges between Chattanooga and Atlanta, as part of a movement for the capture of the former place. The enterprise involved a raid of 200 miles south within the Confederate lines, and the duty was of so desperate a character that volunteers were called as for a forlorn hope. Twenty-one responded to the call. The enterprise was not successful, the party having been captured, and seven, with their leader, were tried, convicted, and hung as spies.

"Before this trial and execution the twenty-one prisoners were confined in a room 13 feet square for nearly three weeks, and of those remaining unhung one (the Jacob Parrott of this bill) was whipped on the bare back with a hundred lashes, and the balance were confined from six to eleven months in expectation of the fate which had overtaken their dead comrades, and were forced to submit to and endure special indignities and sufferings.

"The details of the affair are narrated more at length in the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions on House bill 4444, during the Forty-seventh Congress, and also in a report of this committee (Senate Report 712, Forty-seventh Congress, first session), in accordance with whose recommendations the act of July 7, 1884, was passed. That act provided for all the participants then petitioning for aid in that behalf.

"The bill now under consideration grants to William Knight, late of Company E, Twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Jacob Parrott, William Reddick, and John Whollam, late of the Thirty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, members of the same expedition, unprovided for in the act of July 7, 1884, the same pension as that given their comrades by the terms of that act, thus placing them all on the same footing. William Reddick, however, one of the men named, received the aid proposed by this bill under the name of William H. Reddick in a special act of Congress approved February 27, 1887, and his name should be stricken from the bill. With an amendment to that effect the bill is reported favorably and its passage recommended.

"Amend by striking out the name of 'William Reddick' wherever it occurs in bill and title."

Your committee very cheerfully indorse and approve the statements of the Senate report, and hereby report the Senate bill favorably and ask its passage; and also ask that the House bill, No. 961, be laid upon the table.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAROLINE RUPPERT.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call up the bill (S. 996) granting a pension to Caroline Ruppert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline Ruppert, widow of Christian Ruppert, late a private in Company F, Second Regiment of Michigan Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Senate Committee on Pensions have presented a report fully setting forth the facts in the case, which your committee adopt as their own and likewise recommend the passage of the bill.

The report is as follows:

"Caroline Ruppert, the claimant, is the widow of Christian Ruppert, who enlisted as a private in Company E, Second Michigan Cavalry, November 9, 1863, and was discharged August 17, 1865. Her claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the disease of which the soldier died April 25, 1876—disease of the lungs—did not originate in the service.

"It is alleged that the fatal disease of the lungs was the result of the soldier's falling from his horse and being kicked and trampled upon. The morning reports of the company have this entry for February 22, 1865: 'Kicked by a horse, jawbone broken.' On account of this injury he was sent to hospital February 25, 1865.

"There is abundant testimony to show that at enlistment Ruppert was an exceptionally strong and healthy man, and free from any disability. Frederick Danes, who saw Ruppert on the day of his return from the Army, and who worked in the same shop with him afterward at the cooper's trade, testifies that soldier was never in good health after his discharge, and that he often complained of his breast. This evidence is corroborated by several other fellow-workmen and acquaintances, who testify that he was not able to do heavy work, and that he had to 'lay off' frequently on account of the pains in his breast. Dr. Adolph Henning testifies that he treated Ruppert for lung disease in February or March, 1866; that he undoubtedly got the disease in the service, as it was of six or seven months' standing, and as he was in very bad health; and that he treated him subsequently for the same affection. The evidence as to the lung disease is corroborated by other physicians who treated him at different times.

"The evidence as to soldier's soundness at enlistment is undoubted, and that as to his ill-health at discharge is as satisfactory.

"Your committee deem it but a reasonable conclusion that the fatal disease arose from the service, and are willing to give the widow the benefit of this conclusion.

"They therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH A. CORSON.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I wish to call up the bill (H. R. 6307) granting a pension to Sarah A. Corson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Sarah A. Corson, widow of the late Joshua Corson, late a corporal in Company B, of the Twenty-fourth Regiment of New Jersey Infantry, at the rate of $12 a month, from the date of his death, to wit, December 12, 1885.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the widow of Joshua Corson, who served in Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, from August 30, 1862, to June 29, 1863. He received a total pension for gunshot wound of left hip and right thigh, and died of strangulated femoral hernia, December 12, 1885. The widow's claim has been rejected by the Pension Bureau because, in the opinion of the medical referee, the death cause had no connection with the wounds for which pensioned.

The board of examining surgeons at Camden, N. J., under date of January 28, 1885, make the following report:

"Find a ball-size entrance scar 4 inches below and behind the left trochanter major, and the exit scar (ball cut out) about 4 inches below and behind the right trochanter major, the course of the ball evidently being through the gluti folds or buttocks, and possibly passing between bowel and sacrum low down, for we find no midway evidence of ball injury."

It appears from the evidence in the case that the hernia made its appearance first about four years prior to the soldier's death, although he complained for years prior thereto of a weakness and pain in that part of the body.

Dr. Joseph Butcher, who attended the soldier during the last two years of his life, testifies that when first called in the case found him suffering from femoral hernia, which affiant diagnosed as omentum. It was irreducible. In three or four months it became very painful, and soon showed signs of malignant infiltration, from effects of which he died. Held no post mortem, therefore can show no direct connection between the wound and hernia, but believes the wound to have caused hernia by deteriorating and weakening his whole system, and parts contiguous to wound, and there also being no other accountable cause of hernia, no blows or heavy lifting. The history of the case, previous to time affiant saw soldier, would undoubtedly indicate a connection, namely, that there was a discharge from wound until appearance of hernia, when it ceased entirely; also, pain which had existed a long time in the hip, thigh, and back, seemed to change to anterior portion of the body after appearance of hernia, affecting it and contiguous parts.

Dr. Butcher is a physician in good standing and evidently has given the case close attention. While doubts must necessarily surround a case of this character, yet in the opinion of your committee the same should be solved in favor of the claimant, in particular when the testimony of the attending physician warrants such a solution.

The bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "Infantry," in line 8.

The amendment recommended in the concluding paragraph was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMIL SCHATTLE.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1435) granting a pension to Emil Schattle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emil Schattle, late of Company F, Ninth Iowa Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

That they adopt the accompanying Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 539, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The claimant was a private in Company F, Ninth Iowa Cavalry. He enlisted July 22, 1863, was discharged August 11, 1865, filed his declaration for invalid pension July 11, 1879, claiming disability on account of varicose veins and ulcers, resulting from exposure in the service.

The decision of the Pension Office is adverse, and is approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and it takes the very common form of asserting that the disability existed before enlistment. There is no denial or question of the existence of the infirmity, even to the degree of disqualification for manual exertion. Decisions of this kind by the Pension Office are so numerous as to suggest one of three things: That they are inaccurate; that the surgeons making the examinations and the officers accepting recruits were careless or incompetent; or that the Union forces were largely composed of physically disqualified soldiers.

This is another of the many similar cases in which the committee are compelled to conclude that there is no justification for the rejection.

The discharge is signed by the acting assistant surgeon, who thus states the cause:

"Varicose veins of legs of such size as to render him unfit for military duty in any capacity. Existed prior to enlistment, but aggravated in the service in the line of duty."

It is asserted in the discharge also that the soldier admitted the previous existence of varicose veins, to which he makes answer in an affidavit that if the discharge contains this statement it is erroneous and was a misapprehension of the surgeons, who could have had no knowledge of affiant before he was sent to the hospital. He says further:

"As to the statement of affiant referred to, he stated that the veins of the leg were always enlarged from childhood, but that no disability from that cause existed until by exposure and hard service the ulcerations appeared, and this after a long time and hard service. And he claims that if the surgeons who discharged him made such an assertion it should not be recognized, as he was examined by Dr. Jesse Warren at enlistment and mustered into service."

The man was accepted as sound; there is reason to conclude that he was able to perform the duties of a soldier, otherwise the recruiting surgeon and officer would not have certified "on honor" that he was capable of bearing arms. In any case he did serve, and it is admitted that he was disabled in consequence. Moreover, there is no evidence of the prior existence of disability except that contained in the discharge, which is answered by the soldier himself, and whose statement is quite as consistent as the other. The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES E. GOTT.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1539) to increase the pension of James E. Gott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James E. Gott, late a private in Company A, Fourteenth Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the present pension which he now receives.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The facts in this case are fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which report your committee adopt as their own, and recommend the passage of the bill. The Senate report is as follows:

"The claimant was pensioned at the rate of $24 a month for abscess in left maxillary bone. He applied for increase, which was rejected October 21, 1887, as the Commissioner states in his letter of transmission, 'because the disability resulting from the pensioned cause did not incapacitate him for the performance of any manual labor whatever.'

"The examining surgeon says that his disability is the result of gangrene from the effects of scurvy. Another surgeon, designated by the Pension Office, says: 'He is sustained by the removal of two incisors, and draws fluid food through the aperture. It takes him a long time to eat; is poorly nourished. His condition is not the result of bad habits.'

"The board of examining surgeons who examined him in 1885 report that 'his jaws are firmly bound together by a cicatrix; he is unable to perform any manual labor.'

"The claimant was a private in Company A, Fourteenth Maine Volunteers. A petition to Congress praying for the increase, signed by 120 citizens of the town of Deer Isle, the home of the soldier, states on their personal knowledge that, in consequence of the flesh on the inside of his mouth adhering or growing to the jaw, he is unable to open his mouth or to take any solid food; that he is a great sufferer, unable to labor, and requires the attendance of another person.

"It is apparent to the committee, after a careful investigation of the case, that he is not only utterly incapacitated to perform any kind of labor, but that his emaciated condition, and the peculiarities of his case not only require the attendance of a person to take care of him, but make the occupation of his nurse a very unpleasant duty.

"The committee do not undertake to reconcile the conclusions of the Pension Office with the very positive existence of the facts as shown by the surgeons appointed to examine him, as well as by his neighbors, who have daily opportunities to know whereof they testify.

"With the evidence before us we have no doubt that this soldier is entirely disabled, and that his condition is such as to justify and demand a special act for his relief.

"The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. PITNER.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 940) granting a pension to George W. Pitner.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

George W. Pitner was a member of the Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served about three years, and in his affidavits he states that while in the service and on a march from Mobile to Nana Hubba Bluff, on the Tombigbee River, on or about the 28th of May, 1865, he had a sun-stroke, from which he has never recovered; that he was mustered out of the service on the 8th day of March, 1866; that on the 2d day of June, 1881, while under the influence of vertigo, caused by sun-stroke, he fell into a well and was so injured that his right leg had to be amputated below the knee and the left leg was so injured that it is substantially useless, the ankle joint being destroyed, and that he is now utterly helpless.

The testimony of George W. Williams, who was with him on this march at the time of the sun-stroke, is that Pitner went away at the time of this sun-stroke in an ambulance; that he was too weak to march; that he was so light-headed that he was apt to stagger around and fall; that he did no more duty there, but was under the care of the surgeon, and did only light duty from this injury until he quit the service; was subject to fainting spells and complained of his head.

Dr. Cook, a prominent physician in Bridgeport, Ohio, the present postmaster of that place, states that he has known Pitner and treated him more or less ever since he came out of the service; treated him at times for sun-stroke or vertigo; that when he was treating him in July, 1867, for sun-stroke, he told him of the attack of sun-stroke he had in the Army and gave him the full particulars of the same. Dr. Cook says that he believed then and still believes that the attack he had in July, 1867, was superinduced by the former attack in the Army, and that these attacks of vertigo are so severe as to incapacitate the claimant for any kind of daily labor. Dr. Cook also testifies that it was during one of these attacks that he fell in the well and was dreadfully injured.

The testimony shows conclusively that Pitner is a man of good character, worthy of credit and belief, and free from all bad habits, but very poor, entirely without any means of support.

Your committee therefore recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this bill, to strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of $30 a month;" and I wish briefly to explain the object of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. This is not a committee amendment?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No, sir; this amendment I offer myself.

The reason I desire to offer the amendment is this: Under the provisions of this bill—and it is a matter that did not occur to me until quite recently—he would be pensioned merely for the sunstroke, from which, as is shown by the testimony in the report, he has been suffering, and which occurred during his service in the Army, which pension would probably be quite a small one in comparison to the disability from which he is suffering.

But while under the influence of this vertigo, the result of the sunstroke, and after coming from the Army, while standing near a well, he fell into it during an attack of vertigo, and was so seriously injured, as shown by the report, that his right leg had to be amputated below the knee, and the left leg is comparatively useless, the ankle-joint being destroyed, and he is now rendered utterly helpless.

This man was a good soldier, who served for three years in the Army, made a very creditable record for himself, and is a most respectable man. In view of the condition in which he is placed by the disability incurred during the service, and this accident, the direct result of that disability, I think the pension should be increased as I have suggested. Because, Mr. Chairman, we should take into account somewhat the misfortune of falling into the well, and that though it is not a direct injury received in the service it is the indirect result of that injury for the reason stated. He has lost, as I have said, one leg and the other is broken at the ankle-joint so that its use is destroyed.

Mr. RYAN. What is the amount of the pension proposed?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. That he be pensioned at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. MATSON. This bill is in the precise form of all other bills of this class, and we have not yet entered upon the proposition of pensioning men for disabilities incurred out of the service. It seems to be very unfair to all the rest of the pensioners to pension this man for some disability which occurred since he left the service. Besides, if he had sun-stroke so severe that he is in the disabled condition the gentleman suggests he will get a pretty good pension anyway, and I see no reason whatever for selecting him out and establishing a rate different from that fixed by Congress in all other classes of a similar character which are submitted for a rating by a board of examining surgeons. My own opinion is, I repeat, that if the disability is such as to make him so helpless as described by the gentleman from Ohio he will get a fair pension anyway. Then it seems to me that this matter ought to have been investigated, and the proposition should have been made in the first place and submitted to the committee. There does not seem to have been any attempt of that kind made, and I think it ought not to pass, and I shall resist it as far as I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Let me state, Mr. Chairman, that this is an exceptional case. At the time that I introduced the bill it did not occur to me that it should be introduced in the form I propose to amend it. Other bills have been introduced here for exceptional cases and have been passed. The amount of $24 was granted in the last bill but one passed this evening. This is a most worthy man and it would be a very rigorous treatment indeed to allow this case to be rejected because of the harsh rules that prevail in the Pension Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was this brought before the Pension Committee?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Was what brought before the Pension Committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. This vertigo.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The report shows that he had it in the Army, and that he never did any service after he had received the sunstroke. He came home suffering from the vertigo, and after his return he had the attack from which he fell into the well and received the injuries I have stated.

I have recommendations here signed by the business men of the city where he lived, by the man who was president of the medical association of the county, by the present postmaster at Bridgeport, and they all agree in saying that something of this kind ought to be done for this man. My attention has been recently called to the particulars of the case. I introduced the bill without much consideration, but from recent information I am satisfied that it would be great injustice and wrong to this claimant to give him a pension of less than $30 a month, and I am assured that if the case goes to the Department in this way he will be pensioned only for the sunstroke, because his misfortune in falling into the well will not and can not be taken into consideration by the Pension Bureau.

It seems to me, sir, that the very object of passing these special bills is to reach out and give relief beyond the point which the general law covers. I have waited a good many weeks to have this case considered; I have not called it up now until we have reached about its regular place on the Calendar, and I am satisfied the House ought to grant the pension I have proposed. This man has a family, and he is utterly helpless. He has been receiving support from the trustees of the township for a long time, and from the citizens of the county, and I do not know of a case pensioned at this rate that is more meritorious than this one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CHEADLE. If this claimant is totally disabled by reason of the injury received from sunstroke, what would he be rated at under the law?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. He would be rated for sunstroke. They can not take into account the fact that he fell into the well and broke his leg.

Mr. CHEADLE. But my question is this: Total disability is total disability, whether resulting from blindness or any other cause, and if he is totally disabled what would he be rated at under the law?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The rating would be much higher I think than $30 a month.

Mr. HUNTER. Seventy-two dollars a month.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I believe it would be $72, but I am not asking that. I am asking a compromise amount; I am asking only $30.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think he would fare better without the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. No; he will fare better with the amendment.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The bill would be of no value without the amendment. I would not care about passing it.

Mr. MATSON. If the gentleman prefers to have the bill recommitted I have no objection to that. Let it be recommitted and let the case be investigated. The bill certainly ought not to pass in this way. But aside from the merits of this particular case, it is not the policy of Congress to pension men for disabilities incurred since the war. It seems that this claimant could not get a pension through the Pension Office. I suppose he has applied there. If not he ought not to come here.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. He applied, but he could not get a pension.

Mr. MATSON. Then he has to come here and ask grace, even for the original disability, and if we give him a pension for that I think we treat him pretty liberally. If he was so disabled by this accident as is represented he will certainly get a pretty fair rating, and he has to come here to get it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. But the Pension Bureau can not take into consideration the injury from falling into the well.

Mr. MATSON. I do not say that they can, but I do insist that if he is suffering from the effects of the sunstroke to the degree that is claimed he will be pensioned at a fair rate, and we have never adopted the policy of granting pensions for injuries received by men after leaving the Army and returning to civil life.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Oh, we have pensioned people who never were soldiers at all.

Mr. MATSON. Nobody doubts that; but although they may not have been soldiers they were acting as soldiers.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Well, this man served three years in the Army and was a good soldier.

Mr. RYAN. I think we understand this case now and are ready to vote.

Mr. MATSON. I have served notice on the gentleman from Ohio that if he wishes to have the bill recommitted——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. MACDONALD. I want to ask the gentleman if he knows why this man's claim was not allowed for sunstroke?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Because the proof did not satisfy the Commissioner of Pensions. The physicians, some of them, were dead. It was like thousands of other cases where the proof is not complete.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing and debate is not in order. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR; and there were—ayes 10, noes 10.

A MEMBER. The Chair must decide.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair is called upon to decide, the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent that the case be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar. Will it lose its place if it be recommitted?

Mr. MATSON. There will be no objection to its being recommitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the request of the gentleman to be that the bill should be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. That was the request.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 1742.

The CHAIRMAN. There are four gentlemen on the list who have not been recognized to call up bills, and of course every member present desires that they shall have recognition.

Mr. SPOONER. There will be time enough if we go right on.

W. A. HICKS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. RYAN) was the bill (S. 1742) granting a pension to W. A. Hicks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of W. A. Hicks, late of Company M, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1742) granting a pension to W. A. Hicks, report as follows:

The report of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate is adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 422, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

William A. Hicks enlisted as a private in Company M, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, August 6, 1863, and was discharged at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., with company, October 19, 1865.

In his application for pension, filed April 2, 1886, he alleges, as a basis of his claim, that on or about the 15th day of June, 1864, he incurred rupture, while in chase of bush-whackers, by being thrown on the horn of his saddle, which has grown worse; that he never was treated by regimental surgeon for rupture, and was not treated for rupture until after his discharge.

On October 29, 1886, the Adjutant-General United States Army reports enlistment of claimant August 6, 1863, at Kansas City, Mo., for three years, and is reported on rolls to February 29, 1864, present; April 30, 1864, absent, detailed to guard a train to Fort Gibson, Special Order No. 7 from Major Plumb; June 30, 1864, absent on scout since June 27, 1864; August 31, 1864, present; October 31, 1864, absent on detached service in quartermaster's department at Mound City, Kans.; December 31, 1864, present; February 28, 1865, present; April 30, 1865, absent on detached service at Humboldt, Kans., Special Order No. 45; March 13, 1865, present; mustered out with company October 19, 1865, at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

The board of examining surgeons at Eureka, Kans., May 19, 1886, find as follows: Right oblique inguinal hernia, reducible; wears a truss constantly; when truss is just taken off tumor is 2 inches in diameter; no other complications.

In his petition to Congress, asking for a pension, the claimant states—

"That in June, 1864, he was detailed for duty to escort a supply train, under command of Major Plumb, from Fort Scott, Kans., to Fort Gibson; that while on the trip, south of Baxter Springs in Kansas, the extreme advance guard was attacked by bushwhackers; that it was early in the morning; that we succeeded in capturing some of the enemy. At that time my horse, in attempting to jump a ravine, fell, and threw me on the horn of my saddle and caused a break in my right groin, which finally resulted in rupture * * * When first hurt I did not know what ailed me, nor did not for some time after."

This soldier was a mere boy at his enlistment, and, in fact, during his entire service. The Adjutant-General's report verifies his statement as to detail to guard train to Fort Gibson. His military record shows him to have been a good soldier.

When he should be in his prime, as a stout, able-bodied man, he is broken in health, poor, and disabled, and suffers from a painful disability, which he doubtless incurred, as he states, in the service of the United States. We recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SUSAN F. SCOTT.

Mr. BRUMM. I call up the bill (H. R. 8523) granting a pension to Susan F. Scott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan F. Scott, mother of John B. Scott, late of Company G, Eighteenth Connecticut Infantry.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

Susan F. Scott is the mother of John B. Scott, who enlisted in Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, August, 1862, and was killed in action at Piedmont, Va., June 5, 1864. Her claim for pension has been rejected by the Pension Bureau because the soldier left surviving him a widow. The papers in the case show that the widow was pensioned, but remarried on January 13, 1870. No minor child survived.

A number of letters on file, written during his service, show that he contributed to the support of his mother, who has been a widow since 1844. From the sworn statement of selectmen and other credible citizens of the town in which she resides it appears that she is without means, has had no income except that derived from her own manual labor, but that by reason of old age and infirmities she is no longer able to provide for herself, and is now supported by charity. Her good character is established beyond question. In fact, every essential of a case of dependence under the general law is fully established, with the single exception of the celibacy of the soldier.

Congress in similar cases having granted relief to old and dependent parents, your committee unhesitatingly report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the letter "B," in line 7, and inserting therein instead the letter "G."

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM P. RIDDLE.

Mr. YARDLEY. I call up the bill (H.R. 9183) granting a pension to William P. Riddle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William P. Riddle, late private of Company E, Fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, at the rate of $8 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

It appears from the proof on file in the Pension Bureau in this case, that claimant was enrolled at Burkesville, Cumberland County, Kentucky, on the 4th day of October, 1861, as a corporal in Company E, Fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and mustered into the United States service at Gallatin, Tenn., on the 31st day of March, 1862, for three years, and was discharged on account of disability at Chattanooga, Tenn., on the 17th day of May, 1863.

It is shown that claimant contracted pneumonia from exposure in camp at Columbia, Ky., on or about the 1st day of February, 1862, and was sent to regimental hospital near that place, where he remained under treatment for that trouble until the 1st day of March, 1862, when he was sent home by the surgeon in charge, and where he remained some time under the medical care of Dr. T. S. Ellison, of Burkesville, Ky.

The proof is conclusive that claimant has never recovered from the effects of this attack of pneumonia, and that he is in destitute circumstances, rendered so by his total inability to perform manual labor consequent on his lung trouble.

He filed an application for pension on the 20th day of March, 1879, but it was rejected because of the charge of desertion standing against his military record, which seems to have been erroneously entered while he was absent sick, and which the Adjutant-General of the Army declines to remove.

In view of the above your committee believe this to be a meritorious claim, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Amend by striking out all after the word "Cavalry," in the sixth line, and add the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH PEVE.

Mr. POST. I call up the bill (H. R. 737) granting a pension to Joseph Peve.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Peve, late a private in Company H, Fifty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

Joseph Peve was a private, and belonged to Company H, Fifty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers. He enlisted January 29, 1862, and was discharged April 7, 1862. While in line of duty at New Madrid, Mo., March, 1862, he contracted rheumatic disease of the spine and kidneys and derangement of the liver. The reason said pension was not granted by the Department is "that his disability was contracted prior to the date of his enlistment."

It appears in evidence that Peter Lane and Ezekiel A. Trimmer, both of Wyoming, Stark County, Illinois, after being duly sworn, testify—

"That they were intimately acquainted with said Joseph Peve for over twenty years prior to his enlistment; that they knew him to be a strong, healthy man, and never knew him to be sick or complain of any inability."

Perry H. Smith and James P. Emery, also of Wyoming, Stark County, Illinois, after being duly sworn, testify—

"That they were acquainted with said Joseph Peve for twenty-five years before the war; that they associated with him and knew him to be a healthy, able-bodied man, always able to perform manual labor."

Dr. Robert W. King, a physician in good standing, residing in Wyoming, Stark County, Illinois, after being duly sworn, testifies—

"That prior to and at the time of his enlistment said Joseph Peve was a sound, healthy man, especially free from rheumatic disease of the spine and kidneys and derangement of the liver; he also testifies that when said Joseph Peve came home from the Army he was suffering with derangement of the liver and rheumatic disease of the spine and kidneys; that he treated him for said disabilities, and that he has been so afflicted continuously ever since."

Your committee think that the facts in this case warrant us in coming to the conclusion that said disabilities were contracted while in the service, and that the applicant is justly entitled to a pension, and therefore respectfully recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to be recognized to call up a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks consent for recognition. Is there objection?

Mr. MATSON. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Why does the gentleman object?

Mr. MATSON. Because each member present has now had one recognition; and we have not time to go around twice.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will delay my privilege until the next pension evening, when I shall be "No. 1." [Laughter.] I trust the Chair will bear that in mind.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MATSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration pension bills, had directed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment were severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 1307) to increase the pension of Washington T. Otey;
A bill (S. 470) granting a pension to Amanda F. Deck;
A bill (S. 1935) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds;
A bill (S. 1613) granting an increase of pension to John F. Ballier;
A bill (S. 898) for the relief of Frank Oredsnik;

A bill (S. 2301) to increase the pension of Manhatton Pickett;
A bill (S. 121) granting a pension to Tobias Baney;
A bill (S. 341) granting pensions to William Knight, Jacob Parrott, and John Whollam;
A bill (S. 996) granting a pension to Caroline Ruppert;
A bill (S. 1435) granting a pension to Emil Schattle;
A bill (S. 1539) to increase the pension of James E. Gott; and
A bill (S. 1742) granting a pension to W. A. Hicks.

Mr. WILLIAMS moved to reconsider the various votes by which pension bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. PITNER.

On motion of Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 490) granting a pension to George W. Pitner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Pitner, late of Company E, Seventy-seventh Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 490, submit the following report:

George W. Pitner was a member of the Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served about three years, and in his affidavits he states that while in the service and on a march from Mobile to Nana Hubba Bluff on the Tombigbee River, on or about the 28th of May, 1865, he had a sun-stroke, from which he has never recovered; that he was mustered out of the service on the 8th day of March, 1866; that on the 2d day of June, 1881, while under the influence of vertigo, caused by sun-stroke, he fell into a well and was so injured that his right leg had to be amputated below the knee and the left leg was so injured that it is substantially useless, the ankle-joint being destroyed, and that he is now utterly helpless.

The testimony of George W. Williams, who was with him on this march at the time of the sun-stroke, is that Pitner went away at the time of this sunstroke in an ambulance; that he was too weak to march; that he was so lightheaded that he was apt to stagger around and fall; that he did no more duty there, but was under the care of the surgeon, and did only light duty from this injury until he quit the service; was subject to fainting spells and complained of his head.

Dr. Cook, a prominent physician in Bridgeport, Ohio, the present postmaster of that place, states that he has known Pitner and treated him more or less ever since he came out of the service; treated him at times for sunstroke or vertigo; that when he was treating him in July, 1867, for sunstroke he told him of the attack of sunstroke he had in the Army and gave him the full particulars of the same. Dr. Cook says that he believed then and still believes that the attack he had in July, 1867, was superinduced by the former attack in the Army, and that these attacks of vertigo are so severe as to incapacitate the claimant for any kind of daily labor. Dr. Cook also testifies that it was during one of these attacks that he fell in the well and was dreadfully injured.

The testimony shows conclusively that Pitner is a man of good character, worthy of credit and belief, and free from all bad habits, but very poor, entirely without any means of support.

Your committee therefore recommends the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MALINDA HARDIN.

On motion of Mr. BUNNELL, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9729) granting a pension to Malinda Hardin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Malinda Hardin, mother of J. G. Hardin, late a second lieutenant in Company K, Fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The report of the committee (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9729) granting a pension to Malinda Hardin, mother of Joseph G. Hardin, late a lieutenant in Company K, Fifth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry, ask leave to submit the following report:

The claimant filed an application for pension on the 24th September, 1887, and alleged in her declaration that her son died of disease in hospital at Nashville, Tenn., September 29, 1863.

Notwithstanding the strong proof hereinafter cited in support of the case, the claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions "on the ground of non-dependence."

In support of this allegation is the affidavit of Wilson W. Wright, who resides in Monroe County, Kentucky, who says that he has been for several years well acquainted with Madison H. Hardin and his wife, Malinda Hardin, the father and mother of Joseph G. Hardin, who was a member of Company K, Fifth Kentucky Cavalry. He was also acquainted with said Joseph G. Hardin for several years before he joined said regiment, and he knew that said Joseph G. Hardin did for some time previous to his joining said regiment work upon a small farm, and the proceeds of his labor upon said farm were used in the support of his father and mother.

Madison H. Hardin is now, and has been for fifteen years, afflicted with a disease of the eyes and kidneys, and in consequence of said diseases he is three-fourths disabled from making his living by manual labor.

B. W. Wright, of same county, as to the disabilities of Madison H. Hardin, corroborates the above statement.

Also M. H. Hardin, E. L. Palmore, and W. W. Wright, of same county, as to the disability of M. H. Hardin, corroborate the above statement, and further state that Joseph G. Hardin, while in the service, sent his mother, Malinda Hardin, as much as $30 at a time.

L. E. Williams, of the same county, corroborates Wilson W. Wright's statement as to Madison H. Hardin's health rendering him incapable of earning a living, and further states that he knew of Joseph G. Hardin, son of Malinda Hardin, while in the service, sending his mother money.

John H. Chapman, of Monroe County, Kentucky, says he was well acquainted with Joseph G. Hardin, and also his father and mother, and knew of Joseph G. Hardin assisting in the support of his mother.

The committee, having carefully considered all the evidence in the case, find that deceased was enrolled October 3, 1861, as second lieutenant Company K, Fifth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry, and died of disease in hospital in Nashville, Tenn., September 29, 1863. The committee further find that the applicant is the mother of deceased, that deceased was an unmarried man, as stated in her application, and that the soldier did contribute to his mother's support; and therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. HIESTAND (at 10 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1258) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Waters;
A bill (S. 2385) granting a pension to Caroline R. Haseltine;
A bill (S. 1307) to increase the pension of Washington T. Otey;
A bill (S. 470) granting a pension to Amanda F. Deck;
A bill (S. 1935) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds;
A bill (S. 1613) granting an increase of pension to John F. Ballier;
A bill (S. 898) for the relief of Frank Oredsnik;
A bill (S. 2301) to increase the pension of Manhatton Pickett;
A bill (S. 121) granting a penson to Tobias Baney;
A bill (S. 341) granting pensions to William Knight, Jacob Parrott, and John Whollam;
A bill (S. 996) granting a pension to Caroline Ruppert;
A bill (S. 1435) granting a pension to Emil Schattle;
A bill (S. 1539) to increase the pension of James E. Gott; and
A bill (S. 1742) granting a pension to W. A. Hicks.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 187) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of H. H. Spencer and 70 other citizens of Macomb County, Michigan, and the petition of Duncan Buchanan and 111 other citizens of Huron County, Michigan, praying that certain amendments be made to the interstate-commerce law, to prevent existing evils vitally affecting public interests; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Joseph Fraser, of Algonac, Mich., praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Orville Ball and 104 other ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Mecosta County, Michigan, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PASCO. I present a copy of a memorial of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the proposition to consolidate the internal-revenue districts of Florida and Georgia. I have lately received a memorial of the same body, setting out their views at length on the question, and stating their ground of opposition to be that the proposed consolidation would be injurious to the cigar-manufacturing interests of Florida. I move that the memorial and the copy be referred—one to the Committee on Appropriations and the other to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. MITCHELL to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2233) granting a pension to Bernard Carlin;
A bill (H. R. 7253) granting a pension to the widow of Samuel Clary;
A bill (H. R. 4785) granting a pension to Rosanna K. Griffin;
A bill (H. R. 7162) for the relief of Mary Nevels; and
A bill (H. R. 9808) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Manlove.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3245) for the relief of James W. Knaggs; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. MANDERSON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no resolutions, concurrent or other, the morning business is closed, and the Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, after line 1381, to insert:

Improving the Mississippi River above St. Anthony's Falls, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1392, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" and after "hundred" to strike out "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

Improving the Mississippi River from the landing on the west bank below the Washington avenue bridge, Minneapolis, to the Des Moines Rapids, including work for the protection of the bank of the Mississippi River, at Winona, Minn., on account of the erosion caused by dams erected above the city to improve the navigation of the river, and the examination and survey at the Rock Island Rapids in said river hereinafter mentioned: Continuing improvement, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from lines 1393 to 1419, inclusive, as follows:

And inasmuch as the present channel of the Mississippi River at the Rock Island Rapids is said to be of insufficient width and depth, and dangerous to the navigation of said river, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made at said rapids, with a view of determining the best and most economical mode of securing a safer channel of greater width and depth, sufficient to meet the necessities of the commerce and navigation of the river, either by the construction of a canal around said rapids on the Illinois side of said river, from the head of the rapids near Rapids City, Ill., on the most direct and feasible route to the main river, at the foot of said rapids, or by widening and deepening the present channel of the river at said rapids. And the Secretary of War shall cause a report of said examination and survey to be made to Congress at its next session, together with plans and estimates of the probable cost for the construction of such canal, or for the widening and deepening of the present navigable channel of the river, and with such plans and estimates shall submit his opinion as to the best and most economical plan of improving the river at said rapids in the interest of the commerce and navigation of the river; and for the purpose of such examination and survey; so much of the above appropriation of $650,000 as may be necessary is hereby authorized to be expended, not to exceed $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1436, before the word "hundred," to strike out "and" and insert "one;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Mississippi River from Des Moines Rapids to the mouth of Illinois River, $150,000, including the removal of bars at the mouth of Cedar Creek, in Quincy Bay, dredging in said bay; opening Willow Slough, and removing the bars at the mouth of Whipple Creek and Hamburg Bay, if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the same is deemed advisable in the interest of commerce and navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1442, to insert:

Improving and strengthening Sny Island levee where it crosses Snicarte Slough and other sloughs, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1452, after the words "Missouri River," to insert "and the improvement of St. Louis Harbor;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois River to the mouth of the Ohio River, including the completion of the work at Alton, and, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, the protection of the Illinois shore opposite the mouth of the Missouri River, and the improvement of St. Louis Harbor: Continuing improvement, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1457, after the words "two million," to insert "five hundred thousand;" so as to read:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $2,500,000; which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission

Mr. GIBSON. I shall have to object to this amendment and all the amendments incorporated in the bill from line 1455 to line 1502 by the Senate Committee on Commerce. I wish the bill to stand as it was adopted by the House of Representatives, and I suppose if we reject the amendments that will be the effect.

Mr. FRYE. Then the Senator's objection would extend all the way through to line 1552 on page 64?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. If serious objection is to be made to the amendments, I ask that page 60, from line 1455, and pages 61, 62, and 63, down to line 1553, on page 64, be passed over for the present. We shall have more Senators present when the matter comes up for action.

Mr. GIBSON. Of course the reservation includes also the amendment in line 1457, where an increase is proposed from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000.

Mr. FRYE. My request covers the whole of the amendments relating to the Mississippi River. I ask unanimous consent to pass over the amendments from line 1455, on page 60, to the end of line 1552 inclusive, on page 64, for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning at line 1553, on page 64.

The Committee on Commerce proposed an amendment, in section 1, before the word "thousand," in line 1560, to strike out "three" and insert "five;" and after "thousand" to strike out "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving St. Francis River, Missouri, from Greenville to the Arkansas State line, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1561, to insert:

Improving Black River, Missouri, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1563, to insert:

Improving Missouri River from mouth to Fort Benton: Continuing improvement, $1,100,000, including removal of obstructions, surveys, and examinations, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1568, to insert:

Out of the above sum the following amounts shall be applied to the purposes hereinafter specified, namely: $150,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on that portion of the Missouri River lying between the cities of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., and a point 5 miles above the bridge of the Omaha and Council Bluffs Bridge Company, by the course of said river; that the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on said river at Sioux City, Iowa, and in Nebraska, opposite said city; that the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on said river at or near Plattsmouth, Nebr.; that the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on said river at or near Rulo, Nebr.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on said river at or near Nebraska City, Nebr.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Kansas City, Mo.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near St. Joseph, Mo.; that the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Arrow Rock, Mo.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Leavenworth, Kans.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Atchison, Kans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1600 of section 1, to insert:

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884, creating the Missouri River Commission, and defining its powers and duties, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am constrained to ask that the lines inserted between 1601 and 1607, inclusive, be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska desires that the amendment be disagreed to?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, that is the proper action to accomplish what I desire.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator from Nebraska desires to make a serious contest as to the amendment I shall ask that it be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over informally, if there be no objection. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, to strike out the clauses from 1608 to line 1634, inclusive, as follows:

Improving Missouri River from the mouth to Sioux City, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans and estimates of the Missouri River Commission: Continuing improvements, $550,000; and, at the discretion of the commission, so much of said sum as may be deemed necessary in the interest of the navigation of the river may be expended at Atchison and Fort Leavenworth; and the sum of $5,000 may be used between the southern limit of St. Joseph and the head of Lake Contrary, if in the judgment of the commission it be advisable.

Improving Missouri River from Sioux City to Fort Benton, including, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, such work as may be deemed necessary by him in the improvement of the river at Sioux City: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

For removing obstructions in the Missouri River, $44,000.

For examination and survey of Missouri River: Continuing survey, examinations, and observations required in a thorough study of the river, $25,000; and the balance of $15,000 remaining on hand from a previous appropriation for a survey of the Missouri River above the Missouri River Falls at Fort Benton, is hereby made available for the general survey of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1643, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving San Joaquin River, California: Continuing improvement, $20,000; a portion of which may be used, in the discretion of the engineer, in closing Laird's Slough and in making the partial closure of what is called "Paradise Cut."

The amendment was agreed to,

The next amendment was to strike out lines 1647 and 1648 of section 1, as follows:

Improving Petaluma Creek, California: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1650, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "three;" and in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving canal at the Cascades, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1656, before the word

"hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" and after the word "hundred," to strike out "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving the mouth of the Columbia River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1659, before the word "below," to insert "in front of and;" in line 1660, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty" and insert "one hundred;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in dredging the bar at Skamokawa, on the Columbia River;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Lower Willamette and Columbia Rivers in front of and below Portland, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $100,000, of which sum $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in dredging the bar at Skamokawa, on the Columbia River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1665, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-nine;" and in line 1666, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum $14,000, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of War, may be expended in revetting the Willamette River above Corvallis, to prevent the threatened change in the channel of the river at said point;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Willamette River above Portland, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $29,000, of which sum $14,000, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of War, may be expended in revetting the Willamette River above Corvallis, to prevent the threatened change in the channel of the river at said point.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1672, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "twenty-five;" and in line 1673, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Coquille River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $25,000, of which $5,000 is authorized to be be expended for snagging between Coquille City and Myrtle Point.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1684, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and after "thousand" to strike out "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cowlitz River, Washington Territory: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 1690 to line 1698, inclusive, as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to establish and maintain public moorings for the protection of shipping in the open and exposed ports on the northern coast of California, one each at Fort Ross, Fish's Mill, Fish Rock, Shelter Cove, Trinidad, and other appropriate places, as may be deemed advisable by him; the cost thereof to be paid out of the unexpended balance appropriated March 3, 1879, for the establishment of a harbor of refuge on the Pacific coast.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 5, after the word "contract," to strike out "or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government" and insert "whenever reasonable bids can be obtained therefor;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply the money herein and hereafter appropriated for improvements of rivers and harbors, other than surveys, estimates, and gaugings, in carrying on the various works by contract whenever reasonable bids can be obtained therefor. Where said works are done by contract, such contract shall be made after sufficient public advertisement for proposals, in such manner and form as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and such contracts shall be made to the lowest responsible bidders, accompanied by such securities as the Secretary of War shall require, conditioned for the faithful prosecution and completion of the work according to such contract.

Mr. DOLPH. That amendment is to be disagreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; the committee after careful consideration found it absolutely necessary to ask the Senate to non-concur in the amendment striking out the words in lines 5 and 6 and inserting "whenever reasonable bids can be obtained therefor."

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to say that the amendment was inserted at my suggestion. I think there ought to be some improvement in the manner of doing this work, and I supposed this amendment would accomplish it; but on further information I am satisfied that it would hamper the expenditure of the money appropriated for these improvements and do great harm. As I am not now prepared to formulate a substitute for it that would answer the purpose, I agree that the amendment may be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COKE. I desire to be informed how the section will read without the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Just as it did in the bill last year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be read as it stands with the amendment disagreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3 That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply the money herein and hereafter appropriated for improvements of rivers and harbors, other than surveys, estimates, and gaugings, in carrying on the various works, by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government. Where said works are done by contract, such contract shall be made after sufficient public advertisement for proposals, in such manner and form as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and such contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidders, accompanied by such securities as the Secretary of War shall require, conditioned for the faithful prosecution and completion of the work according to such contract.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That for the purpose of securing the uninterrupted gauging of the waters of the Lower Mississippi River and its tributaries, as provided for in joint resolution of the 21st of February, 1871, upon the application of the Chief of Engineers, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury for such sums as may be necessary to do such work, not to exceed in the aggregate for each year the amount appropriated in this act for such purpose: Provided, however, That an itemized statement of said expenses shall accompany the annual report of the Chief of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That for the purpose of securing the uninterrupted work of operating snag-boats on the Upper Mississippi River, and of removing snags, wrecks, and other obstructions in the Mississippi River, the Secretary of War, upon the application of the Chief of Engineers, is hereby authorized to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury for such sums as may be necessary to do such work, not to exceed in the aggregate for each year the amounts appropriated in this act for such purposes: Provided, however, That an itemized statement of said expenses shall accompany the annual report of the Chief of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as a new section, the following:

SEC. 9. Whenever the improvements provided for by this bill, or those which have heretofore been prosecuted by the United States, or may hereafter be undertaken, shall be found to operate (whether by lock and dam or otherwise) as obstructions to the passage of fish, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, direct and cause to be constructed practical and sufficient fish-ways, to be paid for out of the general appropriations for the streams on which such fish-ways may be constructed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 10. Where it is made manifest to the Secretary of War that the establishment of harbor lines is essential to the preservation and protection of harbors, he may, and is hereby authorized to, cause such lines to be established beyond which no piers or wharves shall be extended or deposits made except under such regulations as may be prescribed from time to time by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 11, directing the Secretary of War "to cause examinations or surveys, or both, to be made, and the cost of improvement to be estimated" in different localities, in line 11, under the head of "Alabama," after the word "made," to insert "at the earliest practicable time;" so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made at the earliest practicable time for the location of a channel in and along the Coosa River, in Alabama, from the rapids at Wetumka to connect with the improvements already completed on said river above the Ten Islands, and to direct the engineer making the survey to report as to the most feasible, economical, and suitable plan for making such improvement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, under the head of "Arizona," after line 36, to insert:

Mr. PASCO. The spelling of Wewahitchka should be corrected. It should be "Wewahitchka."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 62 of section 11.

Mr. BROWN. I beg to call the attention of the Senate to a verbal amendment which is desired by the Representative of the Albany district in Georgia. In line 62 the word "reef" occurs; he desires that it shall be "reefs," in the plural.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 62 strike out "reef" and insert "reefs," so as to read—

Flint River, rock reefs at Albany and above.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 11, under the head of "Georgia," after line 62, to insert:

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 11, after line 353, to insert:

Savannah River, as to whether the damage to the Vernezobie Freshet Bank in 1887 was caused by the work at cross-tides, and whether the maintenance of said bank is essential to the success of the work at cross-tides, and what will be the cost of so constructing said bank as to confine the water of said river to its bed.

Owendaw and Wando Rivers and other waters and water routes connecting Bull's Bay and the harbor of Charleston.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 373 of section 11.

Mr. FRYE. After line 373 I move to insert:

For survey at Narrangansett Bay, at the mouth of Narrow River, with the view of establishing a breakwater.

Mr. CHACE. Instead of the word "establishing" I would use the word "constructing."

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 11, after line 385, to insert:

VERMONT.

Swanton Harbor, as to what changes are necessary in present improvements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, under the head of "Virginia," after line 403, to insert:

Hunting Creek, at its mouth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. After line 404 I move to insert the following surveys in the State of Virginia:

Harbor of Cape Charles City and approaches by Chenton Inlet.
Chincoteague Inlet, for the purposes of a breakwater.
Machadoc River.
Nassawadox River.
The channel crossing the Potomac from Alexandria, Va., to the Maryland side.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 11, under the head of "West Virginia," after line 411, to insert:

South Branch of the Potomac River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, under the head of "Washington Territory," after line 415, to insert:

North Palouse River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, to strike out lines 417 and 418, as follows:

Wisconsin.
Centreville Creek, Manitowoc County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, under the head of "Wisconsin," after line 419, to insert:

Centreville Creek, Manitowoc County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, under the head of "Wisconsin," after line 422, to insert:

Harbor at mouth of Fond du Lac River, in Lake Winnebago.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, after line 427, to insert:

For a survey of Minnesota Point, at Superior, at the west end of Lake Superior, and an examination and report by the Secretary of War upon the expediency and probable cost of acquiring the same by purchase or condemnation, to be held by the United States as a reserve for the purpose of harbor protection, and for other purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, after line 433, to insert:

Menomonee Harbor, from the waters of Green Bay to N. Ludington & Co.'s mill, Wisconsin, for a channel 16 feet deep and 200 feet wide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, line 3, after the word "harbors," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

For examinations, surveys, and contingencies, and for incidental repairs, for which there is no special appropriation, for rivers and harbors, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine desire to have the reserved amendments acted on at this time?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir. The first is on page 30, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved amendments will be reported in their order.

The Chief Clerk read the first reserved amendment, which was, in section 1, on page 30, line 714, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving, by dredging and otherwise, the inland water way, from Chincoteague Bay, Virginia, to Delaware Bay, at or near Lewes, Del., to be used from Chincoteague Bay to Indian River Bay: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Mr. FRYE. The Committee on Commerce instruct me to ask the Senate to non-concur in the proposed amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRYE. And they instruct me further to move to add to the clause these words:

No part of which shall be expended until the right of way is secured free of cost to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next reserved amendment of the Committee on Commerce was stated to be, in section 1, line 1201, after the word "Zanesville," to insert "and other necessary repairs to locks and dams on said river;" so as to read:

Improving Muskingum River, Ohio: For the construction of a lock at Taylorsville and the reconstruction of the lock at Zanesville, and other necessary repairs to locks and dams on said river, pursuant to the report of the engineers, $102,000; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to grant leases or licenses for the use of the water-powers on the Muskingum River at such rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him just, equitable, and expedient.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be disagreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. FRYE. It was disagreed to.

The next reserved amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, at the end of the clause appropriating $[illegible]000,000 "for improving Illinois River, Illinois," in line 1322, to insert:

And for the purpose of securing a continuous navigable water way between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi River, having capacity and facilities adequate for the passage of the largest Mississippi River steam-boats, and of naval vessels suitable for defense in time of war, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause to be made the proper surveys, plans, and estimates for a channel improvement and locks and dams in the beds of the Illinois and Desplaines Rivers from La Salle to Lockport, so as to provide a navigable water way, not less than 160 feet wide, and not less than 14 feet deep, and to have surveyed and located a channel from Lockport to Lake Michigan, at or near the city of Chicago, such channel to be suitable for the purposes aforesaid, and capable of carrying not less than 600,000 cubic feet of water per minute, flowing at the rate of 2 miles per hour; the necessary expenses of such surveys, estimates, plans, and location to be paid out of the sum herein appropriated for the improvement of the Illinois River.

The Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to cause to be located, on such line as he may approve, a canal from the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin to the Mississippi River at or above the mouth of Rock River, together with a necessary feeder for the same, said canal to be known as the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, and to be 80 feet wide at the water-line, and to have a depth of not less than 7 feet of water, with locks 170 feet long and 30 feet wide. The Secretary of War shall cause to be made and submitted to Congress detailed plans and estimates for the construction of said canal and feeder; the necessary expense of making such location, plans, and estimates shall be paid out of the unexpended balance on hand heretofore appropriated for the survey of said canal.

Mr. FRYE. These items were read together before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. The first clause relates to an entirely new matter, in which the city of Chicago feels a very profound interest. Her people sent on a large delegation here, who were heard before the committee. While I object myself to the Hennepin Canal clause, I do not object to the first clause.

Mr. SHERMAN. This amendment not only involves a new principle in river and harbor bills, but is a subject of infinitely greater importance, and, I may say, of more demerit, than the Hennepin-Canal project. This scheme, as I understand it, is to secure to the great city of Chicago, from its present outlet into Lake Michigan, a water way across the United States to the Gulf of Mexico through the Illinois, the Desplaines, and the Mississippi Rivers. The magnitude of it can scarcely be conceived. It provides for a water way with a channel sufficient to discharge 600,000 cubic feet of water every minute flowing at the rate of 2 miles an hour. That is 36,000,000 cubic feet an hour flowing at the rate of 2 miles an hour.

This may be an entire revolution of the whole basin of the lakes. It is an immense system, to be continual and perpetual, a system so great that it may change the level of the lakes. It would provide a stream to the Mississippi River in order to carry off the sewerage of Chicago. It seems to me the proposition on its face is monstrous. What are we to do with the work? Is this a question of internal improvement? The object of it as drawn is to open a channel "not less than 160 feet wide, and not less than 14 feet deep;" and the Secretary is "to have surveyed and located a channel from Lockport to Lake Michigan, at or near the city of Chicago, such channel to be suitable for the purposes aforesaid." That is, of a ship-canal, "and capable of carrying not less than 600,000 cubic feet of water per minute, flowing at the rate of 2 miles per hour." In other words, this is a proposition at the public expense to provide sewerage for Chicago, and to provide what is called a ship-way running through the whole of the State of Illinois, and to carry a channel of water 14 feet deep and 150 feet wide at a flow of 600,000 cubic feet of water every minute. I do not think it would be wise for us to load down this bill with a proposition like this, so novel in its character.

I wish to say a word also in regard to the Hennepin Canal. I voted before for the Hennepin Canal on a river and harbor bill, and I am inclined to think that if any great work of internal improvement is to be made to connect the Mississippi River with the Lakes, probably this is the best and most feasible project; but the very agitation of the Hennepin-Canal project started two similar projects in the State of Ohio. The very moment it shall be determined to connect the waters of Lake Michigan with the waters of the Mississippi River we have a proposition fully as feasible to connect the waters of Lake Erie with the waters of the Ohio River, to turn Lake Erie into the Ohio River by way of the Miami River, and following somewhat the line of what is called the Miami Canal. A ship-channel, as large as is proposed for Chicago, can be made for a less distance across the State of Ohio connecting the waters of Lake Erie with the body of the Ohio River; and if this provision is entertained on an appropriation bill you will undoubtedly have a similar proposition from Ohio. It has been already organized and is ready to be presented to Congress whenever this plan is entered upon. In my judgment, no canal ought to be built by the United States of America, except to cut off some little imperfection or obstruction in the way as between Lake Michigan and Lake Superior, or some short canals like that on the Ohio River at Louisville, where the construction of a canal of about a mile and a half long removed the obstruction of the Falls of the Ohio River.

I am not willing to vote for either of these propositions. I am only sorry that the Senators from Illinois are not here, and therefore I asked the other day when these amendments came up that they be passed over. I think myself that it is pretty hard to deal with this matter in their absence, but as the bill must be pressed to a final vote, as a matter of course I must state my objections now.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to correct the Senator from Ohio in his statement that this is for the purpose of sewerage for the city of Chicago.

Mr. SHERMAN. And for a ship-canal.

Mr. TELLER. It is for a ship-canal. It is for the purpose of returning to what originally was the condition of affairs in that section of country when the Illinois River was the outlet of Lake Michigan. If the Senator had given any attention to it he would not have suggested that this flow of water would materially lower the water in the Lakes. The most careful examination has been made of this subject by the engineers, and their reports are accessible and could have been consulted by the Senator if he had taken pains to inform himself on the question as he usually does on questions coming before the Senate. It has been thoroughly examined, and it is clear that there will be no perceptible diminution of the waters of Lake Michigan by this water way being made. The Illinois River is a navigable river for a long distance. The proposition now is to practically make the Illinois River a navigable river to the city of Chicago.

The Senator may think that that is objectionable. I do not; and I do not think it is objectionable either if it should have the other purpose in addition to that, if it should sewer the greatest inland city on the continent, a city that undoubtedly in a generation will be the greatest city on the continent, the greatest inland city probably in the world in two generations, a city that every American ought to be proud of. If in addition to having a navigable highway from Chicago to the Mississippi River and thus to the sea we should give a little advantage to the people of that great city in its sewerage, nobody ought to object.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio says it has less merit than the Hennepin Canal. If there has been a proposition made to the Senate for a water way in a generation that has the merit of the Hennepin Canal, it is the proposition to make a water way between the Mississippi and its tributaries and the Great Lakes. It is to give the people of the Upper Mississippi water intercourse with the city of New York; and why any Senator can stand here and speak of it as having no merit is more than I can comprehend.

I know that this question has been presented to the Senate year in and year out, and I know more, that the great metropolitan journals of this country have been in the habit of speaking of it as "the Hennepin steal" and "the Hennepin fraud." Why should any man hesitate when it is proposed for the public interest to connect the lakes with the Mississippi River? We undertook to do it more than a generation ago through the Fox River, and we utterly failed. We found that we had mistaken the location and that it could not be done practically there. While we have expended almost money enough on the Fox River to have made a water way from Chicago through to the Mississippi in the neighborhood of Rock Island or thereabouts, what we have done on the Fox River is practically worthless to-day, as everybody knows. It can not be disputed that a water way can be made from the city of Chicago to the Mississippi River at Rock Island or above Rock Island at an expense that any other nation in the world having such an advantage would not hesitate an hour to do.

I know that the great railway corporations of this country have set their faces against these water ways in a determined manner. I know that every time such a proposition is made here the great metropolitan journals, influenced or owned in large part by the railroad companies, have been found the sturdy opponents of a water way across the continent. Here nature has provided a natural outlet for commere by water, a series of depressions and streams that can be used and advantage taken of them and at a comparatively small expense a water way secured to the Lower Mississippi by the way of the Illinois River, and a water way to the Upper Mississippi by the way of the proposed Hennepin Canal, crossing several streams and in one instance utilizing one stream in its course.

The whole expense of the Hennepin Canal as proposed here is not to exceed seven or eight million dollars; and what would it do? It would open a line of river above Rock Island for a long distance, giving access to it from the city of Chicago, from which those vessels are now excluded.

Mr. President, I did not propose myself to discuss this question. I had understood the two Senators from Illinois would be here, and I had hoped the case would be presented by them. If I supposed there would be opposition I should have come with the data prepared by the Engineer Department and those furnished by the Board of Trade of Chicago to show the advantages and necessity of this work. In this bill you provide for examinations of a proposed ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara. Nobody rises to find fault with that. That is all right, that I am in favor of; but it has no merit at all compared with the proposition to connect Lake Michigan with the Upper and Lower Mississippi. The commerce that will pass around the Falls will not equal the commerce that will pass through these two avenues to the Mississippi River.

It is not fair to state here that this is a scheme of the city of Chicago. It is in the interest of commerce, it is in the interest of trade, it is in the interest of cheap commerce, and it can be demonstrated that the railroads on the line of the Illinois River are carrying freight for 60 per cent. of what they are carrying it off the line of that same river. Why? Because on or near the river they are brought in competition with a water way. We shall never regulate the tariffs upon railroads as they ought to be regulated until we bring them in competition with the cheap freight rates of river and canal intercourse. Every time such a measure is proposed the railroads will be here against it, public clamor will be against it, but no man who has studied this question and has examined it ought to stand up and oppose it.

Why, sir, look at our position. We agreed with Great Britain many years ago that we would keep on the Lakes only so many guns, so many war vessels. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] the other day showed us how Great Britain could put into those Lakes her gun-boats without stint as to number while we were preparing to build our craft and get the timber together that was necessary to put in the keel. If you had a connection between the Lakes and the Mississippi River, as you ought to have, you could run your gun-boats from any Atlantic seaport into Lake Michigan and thus into all the other Lakes. That alone, as a war measure, ought to commend it to the people of this country. If there was no commercial advantage whatever to be derived from it, that alone ought to commend a work of this kind.

The Senator says that if this is done Ohio will be ready with another work. I have no doubt that Ohio will have another scheme to offer against this; but should that deter us from doing what is right? Does the Senator suppose that there is any comparison between the benefit that would accrue to the people by a canal from Chicago to the Mississippi River on either one of these proposed routes and a canal across the State of Ohio into the Ohio River? The Ohio River is a river of moderate capacity; the other is a great international highway running from the sea to the very center of the American continent. We spend upon the Ohio River for the local interests of Ohio, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania, year after year, immense sums of money that nobody complains of; but when it is proposed to make a canal that shall be of some national importance, and that all the people of the Northwest are interested in, that every farmer and every laborer in that country has an interest in, then we are told that it is without merit, and then it is attacked as a steal, as a fraud upon the Government.

Mr. President, I regret that I did not know that the Senators who had prepared themselves for this amendment would not be present, for if I had I could lay before the Senate information on this subject that I believe would render it impossible for the sneers of the Senator from Ohio on this subject to have any effect upon this body. If there is a meritorious thing in the bill, if there is one thing that would commend the bill to my support, it is the proposition to open a ship-canal from Lake Michigan through the Illinois River and thence across the country to accommodate the people of the Upper Mississippi River and of the extreme West. All Illinois, all Iowa, all Minnesota, all Colorado, all Nebraska, and Dakota are interested in this water way. It is not a local thing. It is not for the benefit of Illinois alone, but it is for the benefit of a large and growing portion of the United States—a portion that has had less money out of the Treasury than any other portion of the country in comparison to its interests and to its importance.

I insist, Mr. President, that this is a meritorious enterprise and one that we have a right to have put into this bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the merits of this proposed improvement to any extent. I am not prepared to say how I shall stand in regard to the improvement after the survey and report shall have been made. Of course if this improvement would lower the level of the Great Lakes and destroy the harbors upon those lakes and render useless the improvements which have already been made by Congress, no Senator would favor it. So far as I have had any information on this point, it is that it will not materially interfere with the water-level of the Lakes.

But this proposition is simply for a survey, for an examination and report as to what the expense will be, and I suppose what the effect will be, not only upon the navigation of the Illinois River and its commerce, but upon the navigation of the Great Lakes. We have not been in the habit of objecting seriously to proposed surveys when they have been asked for in a river and harbor improvement bill, especially one so important as this is. The project is important—important to the commerce of the great West, important also perhaps with a view of securing a better disposition for the sewerage of Chicago, and important in a national point of view, with reference to the national defense.

I alluded some time since in a speech on the subject of fortifications to the agreement between the United States and Great Britain under the treaty of 1814 by which both countries had agreed that the armament of the Great Lakes should consist of one vessel on Lake Champlain with one 14-pound gun, the same character of vessel upon Lake Ontario, and two vessels of the same character upon the Upper Lakes. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in a recent speech in the Senate upon the fisheries treaty claimed that there had been a violation by Great Britain either of the letter or the spirit of the treaty by providing fortified naval stations at Halifax and Bermuda and by the improvement of the Rapids of the St. Lawrence and the construction of the Welland Canal, by which a fleet of gunboats could at a few hours' notice be placed upon the Great Lakes. As I understand, if we had the gunboats we have no place where they could be rendezvoused within reach of the Great Lakes, so as to be placed upon the Lakes to meet any force which might be put there by Great Britain. This improvement, if it should be undertaken by the United States and completed, would furnish us a means by which naval vessels of 14 feet draught could be placed upon the Great Lakes. So, then, I say the improvement is important not only in a commercial point of view but with reference to the national defense.

I am not prepared now to say that I believe it to be practicable or wise; but I am willing that a portion of the money which is appropriated by this bill as it came from the House for improving the Illinois River shall be expended for the purpose of a thorough survey and report in regard to this improvement.

There was a representative body of the great interests of Chicago before the Committee on Commerce to press this measure. They certainly made a very good showing for this improvement. They desired ample provision for the survey and, I think, an appropriation for the commencement of the work. The committee thought it wise to let the survey be made. I do not understand that even if there is a favorable report from the engineers that will commit Congress to the improvement.

I see no reason why the survey should not be ordered. Of course the board will report upon the subject of how the improvement would affect the water in the Great Lakes, and if it should appear to the board likely to destroy the navigation of the lakes or destroy the harbors which have already been improved by the Government no appropriation for the work would be recommended.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon favors a survey by the engineers. He will find a report by the engineers on the subject in conformity with a provision of the river and harbor bill of 1886, and I want to call the attention of the Senate to this salient point in this whole thing, that this is not a provision for a survey. The survey has already been made, and I hold the report of the survey in my hand.

Mr. DOLPH. Which improvement does the Senator refer to?

Mr. VEST. The Hennepin Canal.

Mr. DOLPH. I was speaking about the improvement of the Illinois River.

Mr. VEST. I want to call attention to the salient point that this river and harbor bill if it becomes a law in this shape commits us to the construction of the Hennepin Canal at a cost, according to the engineers, on the route which they have selected, of $5,811,367.80, and that point was distinctly made in committee (if I violate no parliamentary rule in alluding to it), and the Senator from Illinois stated it himself. It is not a provision for a survey. If Senators will turn to the bill they will see that it is a location and the word "locate" is used, and it is put in for that purpose.

It is not my purpose to discuss this question. I have an insuperable objection to putting canal surveys in the river and harbor bill. It is not the place for them. There is a proposition for a canal which cuts an open passage for a number of miles and reduces the cost of transportation. Various canal projects are now pending before the Senate of the United States amounting to millions of dollars. If we put them in the river and harbor bill, what is the consequence? We increase it to an amount year by year that becomes simply insupportable, and that will bring the bill into such odium that the whole system of internal improvements will fall together.

If the Senators from Illinois, if the Senator from Colorado and the friends of this measure—and I am not its enemy—want this appropriation made, let them bring it here in a separate bill, let them have the matter fairly discussed, or let them bring in a bill providing for all these great canals throughout the country, many of which have great merit in them. But to commit the Government to the expenditure in subsequent river and harbor bills of nearly $6,000,000 for this work I say is beyond all question wrong.

Sir, I only want to emphasize this fact. There are a number of small canals in this bill. I opposed the appropriations for them in committee; I have opposed them at every session of Congress; but they were forced upon us, and now we are reaching a culmination of the canal legislation we had in former river and harbor bills. These great monstrous canal projects are thrust here upon the Congress of the United States, so that the river and harbor bill in future will become a great monstrous bill of appropriation and the public sentiment of the United States will not tolerate it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado discussed this measure as if it was a single proposition. There are two propositions here, entirely distinct, so distinct that the member who represents one of these canal projects came and called my attention to it, saying that they were not the same propositions, but were rivals. As a matter of course those who do not know the geography of the country as well as the Senator from Colorado might suppose that these works from their location were necessarily connected, but the first item here is altogether different from the Hennepin Canal. It is for a water way from Chicago to the Illinois River and thence across to the Mississippi River.

Mr. TELLER. They go together to a certain extent.

Mr. SHERMAN. From Chicago to the beginning of the Hennepin Canal there is the Illinois River. There is no necessity for a survey there if that is all that is desired, because that has been already had. The Illinois River has been surveyed time and again, and it has been improved. Large sums of money have been voted for it. I have myself, in connection with the Hennepin Canal project, voted for an estimate for a ship-canal from Chicago to the headwaters of the Illinois River and thence down.

This bill provides for locks and dams of a different character from those used now in the improvement of the Illinois River, and contemplates a great ship-canal of immense extent, with a large traffic, in comparison with which the Hennepin Canal is a mere minnow, a small affair. The construction of the ship-canal proposed in the first clause now pending would cost many times more than the Hennepin Canal in all probability; I can not say how many times. The one is a canal from the Illinois River across to the Mississippi River, near Rock Island. I do not know the length of it, but I have heard that discussed very fully. Here is a document that does give full information in regard to the Hennepin Canal, a document laid on the table, as the Senator from Missouri says, that points out the location of the canal; and the second amendment here does locate that canal and fixes it so that you will be held to the status here fixed beyond all peradventure.

I have here a report in regard to the Michigan and Illinois Canal that is full and ample, containing 200 or 300 pages, with maps, etc., giving full explanations. If Congress is prepared now to authorize the location of that canal, the second proposition ought to be adopted; but the first proposition is the one that my attention is principally attracted to. That is simply a magnificent proposition to build a canal from Chicago to the mouth of the Illinois River, which, if I remember aright, is about 300 miles, perhaps more. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] may be able to tell me what is the distance from Chicago to the mouth of the Illinois River.

Mr. VEST. One hundred and sixty-four miles.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is thinking of the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. FRYE. Two hundred and fifty miles.

Mr. SHERMAN. From Chicago to the mouth of the Illinois River is at any rate 250 miles.

There is to be a ship-canal with locks and dams and slack-water navigation to go through the divide between the waters of the Lakes and the waters of the river, not very deep it is true, but still a good sized canal across the whole divide, extending several hundred miles from Chicago until it reaches the navigable waters of the Illinois River. It is a magnificent project, like the Nicaragua Canal and some of the great international enterprises. The Nicaragua Canal is estimated to cost more than $5,000,000, and the whole distance from one ocean to the other is less than from Chicago to the mouth of the Illinois River.

Is it worth while to adopt propositions like these? I appeal to Senators to consider them. If we put these propositions on, one that contemplates surveys for works that will cost millions upon millions of dollars, and the other that will actually locate and establish a pledge of faith by the Government—because that is meant by location—the line of a canal that we are to construct, so that the engineers will negotiate for the land and get it. Here on the last day before the law ought to take effect the construction of all these improvements and the expenditure of all the money for the various improvements provided for in this bill is to be stopped until we shall consider these two provisions. It seems to me monstrous. If they are taken up in their order, I am generally in favor of internal improvements and favor pretty large expenditures for such purposes; but if we are to enter into the idea of this great, magnificent project from Chicago to the mouth of the Illinois River, and then another similar project from the Illinois River across to the Mississippi River, let us do it with our eyes open and after full information and upon a separate bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I treat these two propositions as one, because the two are so connected it is almost impossible to discuss them separately.

I wish to say a word further, because of the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio that the proposed Illinois River improvement had less merit, or, as he said, its demerit was greater than that of the original Hennepin Canal scheme. The Illinois River scheme now proposed is nothing more nor less than an enlarged part of the original Hennepin Canal. The plan was to build from Chicago to La Salle a canal with locks for 102 miles, as I recollect, a 60-foot canal with about 8 feet depth of water. That is not large enough for the purpose suggested by the Senator from Oregon that this might serve. It is not large enough for Government war-vessels to go through. Since that the proposition has been enlarged to take that part of the Hennepin Canal and to make it 14 feet deep (which is not as deep as it ought to be), and thus by the great flow of water make the Illinois River from La Salle to its junction with the Mississippi River, which is about 150 miles, as I recollect, a navigable stream at all seasons of the year.

So I discuss them together because the two go together; that is to say, all the money expended on the Illinois River between Chicago and La Salle can be utilized for the Hennepin scheme and thereby reduce the expense of the Hennepin scheme a considerable degree, at least.

Mr. VEST. The report of the engineer shows that it is 5 miles to Bridgeport and 97.24 miles from Bridgeport to the mouth of the Illinois River, making 102.24 miles for the whole length of the canal.

Mr. TELLER. Then I was not far out of the way. I thought it was in the neighborhood of 100 miles.

Mr. President, this first proposition does not commit the Government to anything at all. The Senator from Missouri says there has been a survey. There never has been a survey and an estimate made of the expense of this canal.

Mr. VEST. I spoke of the Hennepin Canal. I supposed that was under discussion.

Mr. TELLER. For so much of this canal as goes from Chicago to La Salle there has been an estimate made a number of times, but never of the size now proposed. There has been an estimate made at various times for a small canal. Now the proposition is to make a large canal, a ship-canal across, and for that the proposition is that there shall be taken from this bill a part of the money appropriated to the Illinois River and apply so much of it as may be necessary for the purpose of this new survey. To that I do not think even the Senator from Ohio can object.

He says he is in favor of canals in separate bills. He says he expects us to pass this bill to-day. Is it unusual to put into this bill a new survey? One hundred streams are in it named for survey. If you take the one hundred streams for which surveys are provided in the bill, and when they are completed, as they only can be completed, with great expenditure, they would not all carry the commerce this Illinois River would carry, becoming a practicable water communication between the two great inland cities of St. Louis and Chicago.

Does the Senator propose to pass a bill to find out how much this will cost? If there is any place where it ought to go, it ought to go in this bill; and that has been the custom. There are half a dozen canals provided for in the bill now, according to my recollection; and not one of them has the merit of this scheme, not one of them has the importance of it, and there is not one of them that will have the commerce flowing upon it that this canal will have if it shall be completed, and not one of them has the commerce that the other branch of this would have if the Hennepin Canal should be completed.

Does the Senator think it is of no importance to the people of the Upper Mississippi that they shall be enabled to put their grain into Chicago by barges and boats without unloading? Does he not know and does not everybody know that it will reduce the price of transportation from St. Paul and Minneapolis and the wheat-growing regions of the West to New York one-half? It may come in contact with railroads; it may reduce their rates; it may reduce their income; but it will give to the people of the East cheap bread, and it will enable us to compete with Russia and with the Mediterranean countries in the production of wheat that we are compelled to send abroad.

The Senator from Missouri says that it ought not to go into this bill because it will break it down; the people will not stand it. If you put anything in the bill that the people think has got merit, it will not break down the bill. But when you turn over here to the last part of this bill—and this is but a copy of all the bills that have passed since I have been a member of this body—when you turn to the State of Louisiana you will find purely local enterprises provided for in this bill. You need not stop with the State of Louisiana; you can take every other State in the Union, and you will find purely local enterprises, whether you refer to canals or to improving rivers for navigation. In one State, for 7 miles a river is to be cleaned out and made navigable, with no business practically on either side of it, and I can point out to you a hundred items of appropriation in the bill that have no national character whatever; and that is why the bill is in danger of breaking down; that is why the people sneer at the river and harbor bill.

It is not because of the amount of money. Who begrudges when you give $350,000 to the harbor of Charleston or $250,000 to the harbor of Savannah, or a million to the great seaport where the bulk of our commerce comes and goes? Nobody. You may make improvements on the Gulf at a great expense and the people of the West and the Northwest are in favor of them; but they are not in favor of these local measures. And if you can add to this some international measure, something like the Illinois River improvement to connect the Great Lakes with the Lower Mississippi, that shall give an opportunity for the produce of the Great Lakes to go by water to New Orleans, and thus to sea, and to connect the Lakes with the Upper Mississippi, so that produce can be shipped from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Chicago, and thus on down through the Lakes to New York, you will have added something that will make the bill reputable and respectable, and you can add as much money as may be necessary for that kind of enterprise, and there will be no hesitation on the part of the people in accepting and approving it.

The trouble with this bill is that you exclude from it, with rare exceptions, all the enterprises that the people of this country are interested in. I am willing that the Senator from Maryland should have in it the canal across the Maryland and Delaware peninsula; I am willing that the Senator from Florida shall put into it a provision for a canal across the peninsula of Florida, which is a national object worthy of the attention of the American people, and I do not believe the millions that may be necessary to complete those enterprises or any other enterprise of that character will meet with the disapprobation of the people of the United States. The people of the United States are in favor of putting out their dollars so that something will come back to them; I mean to the whole people, to some international interest that is of benefit to everybody and not a few. This is not an international law; it is not an interstate-commerce law; it does not provide for a commission to be appointed by the President, but it looks to the fact that the man who puts his goods upon water can get them carried at a rate which compels the railroads to reduce their freights in accordance with the price to him who carries by water.

If the Senate will give me a little attention in regard to that they will see that the money spent on the Illinois River has had a tendency to cheapen the freights all the way from Chicago to St. Louis. They will find that the money spent on the Ohio River has cheapened freights from Pittsburgh and the country thereabouts all the way down to the mouth of that river. I refer now to the freights that went on railroads on both sides of the river and to a considerable distance from the river. So it does not become a question for Chicago, but it is a question for all the people of this country who reside on the Great Lakes and who reside on the rivers below and above.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I had the impression that we were discussing the Hennepin Canal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce inserting the words between lines 1322 and 1342.

Mr. VEST. That includes the Illinois River improvement as well as the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. FRYE. I do not see any serious objection to the first clause.

Mr. VEST. The provision in regard to the Illinois and Michigan Canal simply provides for a survey, which we made for the Hennepin Canal under the river and harbor bill of 1886. I have not the slighest doubt that the river and harbor bill, if we make the survey, will put in the detailed proposition in regard to this canal that we have in the present bill for the Hennepin, and that is to locate it and commit the Government to its construction. This is simply the first step. The second step is now being taken with the Hennepin Canal, for which the Government has heretofore ordered a survey.

I have not spoken of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, because the proposition as to that is only for a preliminary survey and involves the expenditure of only a few thousand dollars. As to the Hennepin Canal project, I have most decided objections, because that is the committal of the Government to the whole project. If the Illinois and Michigan Canal shall be surveyed, of course the survey will be reported to us.

Congress years ago appropriated 1,800,000 acres of land to the State of Illinois for the construction of this canal. Afterwards the condition was taken off the grant, and Illinois was permitted to use the proceeds of those lands in the construction of railroads. The city of Chicago advanced a large sum of money to aid in the construction of the canal. After the great fire in Chicago the Legislature of Illinois passed an act repaying the money, with interest, which the city of Chicago had advanced. A portion of the canal is constructed. I have fought at every step the idea of putting it in the hands of the United States. The State of Illinois, with a credit as good as that of the United States Government, with an immense area, with an industrious, aggressive, hopeful people, says to the Government of the United States: "Take this work of internal improvement that we have commenced, though you gave us 1,800,000 acres of land to build it; take it off our hands and let the Government of the United States complete it." According to the engineers it will cost over $5,000,000. I want to consider that proposition. When it is discussed I want the Florida canal and the Maryland canal put in, so that there can be no sectional feeling in regard to the matter, and if we go into this wholesale business of the construction of canals throughout the country let us do it openly and manfully, without committing the river and harbor bill to the construction of these great works. It is not fair to us to do that. We should not commit the Government now to this project and to the Hennepin Canal project, the two involving probably $15,000,000 at the lowest estimate in the river and harbor bill.

I am not here as the enemy of this project, but I will not vote for it, though the construction of this Hennepin Canal and of this improvement would add to the commerce of the Mississippi River, in which my State is deeply interested; but I do not want to be committed indirectly to a system like this on a river and harbor bill.

Mr. CALL. I conceive it to be very clear that the appropriations of the Government for the construction of works of internal improvement should be made on well considered and established principles of public policy, and whatever sums are needed to construct such works ought to be voted to complete them in a reasonable time. Upon what bill it should be done is another question, whether by a separate bill in each case or by a general bill, as in this case, must be decided by the convenience of legislation and the opportunity the different methods may afford for deliberation and discussion.

I fail to see the difference in the benefits to be derived in the interests of commerce in improving a river and in making an avenue or highway for commerce by an excavation in the earth or a canal. Logically it seems to me that if you can carry a larger amount of production by an excavation, whether there was water before or not makes no difference, and therefore the question of whether it is a canal or river is immaterial. Admitting the fact that the distribution of the productions of the country is a national object and a necessary public policy, and that there should be means of transportation created or encouraged by the National Government, and that being settled, the next question is, what is the most feasible, most economical, and most beneficial method of accomplishing that object? Whatever that method may be is the proper object of national aid and appropriation, whether it be a canal or a river, an ocean or a lake, whether the amount required be large or small.

I take it that we have been led to the improvement of the water ways of the country by its natural condition and its development along the lines of the natural water ways, and that this accounts for the confinement of the appropriations by the General Government largely to the natural water ways of the country. But if it be possible to make a water way, if it be economical and a cheap method of transportation, as it is conceded to be in our present experience and our present knowledge, whatever it may be in the future, I gravely doubt whether or not in the future some method of controlling the great avenues of land transportation will not be found, so as to make them as cheap if not cheaper than the water ways; but we have not reached that point at the present time. We have adopted, and I think wisely, the policy of improving the harbors of the country, that we may exchange the productions of this country for those of foreign countries, and that we may thus give the interior of the country the benefit of exchange with other countries and other localities. This is the only object and the only effect sought to be obtained by this policy of improving harbors and protecting coasts with light-houses and life-saving appliances.

Now, when we have once done that and can obtain the same or a greater benefit by a canal than by the improvement of a water way that is strictly within the principles which we have recognized and established as a possible policy, yet we hesitate at the question of the creation of a water way. If there be by nature a water way we think it is sound public policy to improve it. If there be not, and it be necessary to make it by the connection of two streams, we consider and doubt whether we are not adopting a new and dangerous policy.

But the river and harbor bill, if justified by principle, demands that wherever it is practicable and necessary and within the reasonable means of the Government to establish a water way by which the productions of a locality, if it be of sufficient importance, may be brought into the common exchanges of the country, it shall be done, and it is simply a question of the amount of benefit to be derived from the improvement.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], with whom I agree in much that he has said, has stated that there are improvements in this river and harbor bill which are local. What is a local improvement? Suppose it to be but one man and one bag of cotton. It goes to New York and to Liverpool, and it enters into the common exchanges of the country. It ceases to be local and becomes national as soon as it becomes a subject of commerce just as much as if it was a million of bags of cotton produced by a million of men.

Of course no improvement can be made for one man or one bale of cotton or one hundred, but there is some proportion in the magnitude of the commerce and of the production to the extent of the benefit which it will confer. But all commerce is national, all exchange is national, and there is no difference between foreign commerce and domestic commerce in the character of the benefit which it confers upon the people. Foreign commerce is of no benefit, except as it gives to the producer wherever he may be, whether in the valleys of the Rocky Mountains, on the Pacific coast, in the interior of the Middle States, or on the South coast or the North, an opportunity to dispose of his product. It has no value except as it gives to the producer material and exchange and a value for his productions.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me that we can dig a canal anywhere if the magnitude of the interest of production and distribution connected with it be so great as to justify the expenditure. If it be practicable and within the reasonable means of the Government, it should be just as properly an object of improvement and of aid by the National Government as the rivers and the harbors; and in that point of view I am prepared at all times, when there is a fair distribution of the benefits of the national aid, to vote for any well-devised and necessary measure of that description. We have reached a period in the history of this country when the question of cheap transportation and a fair distribution of the products of labor is the most important of all public questions. When it is a question of abundance or starvation to the millions of our wage-workers—to the great mass of our people—this question, as well as that of reasonable compensation to labor, depends on the avenues of transportation, and not on the fact whether it is a natural or an artificial water way.

I think there is some force in the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that this question ought to be carefully considered, that it ought to be made a special object of consideration, and that the canal improvements which are demanded by the commerce of the country, the improvement in Maryland, the improvement in Illinois or in Ohio, the improvements in the State of Florida, which have been examined and are entirely practicable, and good and safe methods of transportation—that all these ought to receive consideration; and I am of the opinion that it ought to be given at an early day; that the interests of cheap transportation demand that the Congress of the United States should give immediate consideration to this great question, which so nearly concerns the prosperity of the producers and the consumers of the country.

The inland coast line of communication on the coast of Florida to Key West, where steam-vessels of great speed and great comfort can go without exposure to severe storms, a ship-canal across the peninsula of Florida, inland canals connecting the Mississippi and the Great Lakes, the inland coast communication from Maine to Florida, which is practicable with but few breaks in its continuity, these are the measures of public policy which will cheapen everything and at the same time pay the laborer and the producer a better profit for his labor.

But, Mr. President, if this provision in this bill can be so changed as not to commit the Government positively to any one plan, and there can be added to it a proposition for a survey of the other different projects of improvement of a like character, I should be entirely willing to give to it my vote.

I ask of the Senate to-day upon what ground can we justify voting the appropriations in this bill and refuse an appropriation for the survey and even for the construction of a canal along the coast of Florida, connecting the great line of coastwise transportation for every class of vessels, so that they may be protected from the outer ocean running from New York, and perhaps above New York, to Key West, Fla., with but little outside exposure? Upon what ground can we refuse to make an appropriation if it be practicable to construct the work at a reasonable cost across the peninsula of Florida, by which the entire commerce of the Mississippi River, the Mexican Gulf, and the Central American States may safely pass along our coast?

I say, if it be possible to construct such a canal or water way, on what ground can we refuse to do it, when this vast amount of commerce can be expedited and be rendered safe, the cost of insurance saved, and the wrecks and the lives that are annually lost on the West India and Gulf and Atlantic coasts of Florida and the United States be saved to the country and to the world?

These great works give employment to labor, and so long as they are beneficial in their results they are no burden and no actual cost to the tax-payer, for they pay back more than they cost, and they are largely built with labor which may otherwise be unemployed, but yet must be fed and clothed. It would make the earth a Garden of Eden if the unemployed labor of the country and the men in arms all over the world could be employed in making the earth more productive and in distributing at little cost its productions.

It seems to me that these are the considerations which should determine our action, and if we are to maintain this policy of internal improvements let us do it on a broad and wise and just basis, and provide that other works of great national importance, of importance to the commerce of the world, shall be included.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have not given that attention perhaps to the debate on this subject which the importance of the question demands because of my other engagements, but I have paid some attention to the subject-matter.

The first amendment, the one which I believe is immediately under discussion, is an amendment providing for a survey of the Illinois River and the region of country now covered by the Illinois and Michigan Canal, so called.

This is no new question either as respects appropriations or as respects surveys. I remember perfectly well in 1864 that this whole question of a ship-canal connecting the Northwestern lakes with the Mississippi River was presented by military men and by others in this country as of the utmost importance; and the project received a majority, if I do not mistake, of both Houses of Congress at that time as providing for a military way connecting the lakes with the Mississippi River.

Since that time we have gone on year by year and have appropriated money for the improvement of the Illinois River, and in this bill I find an appropriation of $200,000 for the Illinois River. What is that for? It is for the purpose of securing a low-water navigation to a depth of 7 feet in that river; and with this expenditure, and probably an expenditure of a like amount for a year or two longer, there will be a navigable water way on the Illinois River from the mouth of that river to La Salle of 7 feet. Between La Salle and the city of Chicago is a canal that was constructed by the State of Illinois many years ago, and was constructed at that time so, as was supposed, to be ample for the commerce of that period; and it is in operation to-day. It is a small canal.

This Illinois and Michigan Canal, so called, ought to be enlarged so as to make it compare with the navigation of the Illinois River, so that steam-boats navigating that river from its mouth to La Salle shall not be required to transship there, but may extend their course directly to the city of Chicago.

Is there any doubt but what the Illinois and Michigan Canal should be enlarged for these 102 miles so as to make it compare with the navigation of the river, thus enabling a craft drawing 7 feet of water to go not only to La Salle but to go also to the city of Chicago? Especially is that true when the entire expense of the enlargement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal will not exceed two or three million dollars. Then we have a water way extending between the Mississippi River and the Great Lakes and all of them, and also from Buffalo clear through to the mouth of the Illinois River and so on to St. Louis.

If this river and harbor bill is worth the paper on which it is printed, that is the most important water way project in it.

It runs through a densely populated region, teeming with industries and with commerce; and are we to stand here and appropriate $22,000,000 to rivers and harbors and higgle about a proposition which is intended to connect the great system of water ways on the Northern lakes with the Mississippi River?

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask whether the provision is confined to the Illinois and Michigan Canal, or whether it extends all the way from Lake Michigan to the Illinois River?

Mr. ALLISON. The reports show that it is perfectly feasible and practicable by this improvement to connect the waters of the Great Lakes with those of the Mississippi River.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the very point I wish to be informed about. Will there be a sufficient flow of water?

Mr. ALLISON. Perfectly competent engineers have made that investigation, and they have reported over and over again that it is a perfectly feasible thing to turn the waters of Lake Michigan into the waters of the Mississippi River through the Illinois River.

Mr. GEORGE. A steady and regular flow?

Mr. ALLISON. A steady and regular flow.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, I have the report here. The Senator from Iowa is entirely mistaken about the cost of this improvement.

Mr. ALLISON. I was speaking of the cost of the enlargement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal so as to take a vessel drawing 7 feet of water.

Mr. VEST. That is the next part of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will come to the next part. I am speaking of what is contemplated by this very bill. This very bill has an appropriation in it contemplating an improvemant of the Illinois River so as to secure 7 feet of water. I say in connection with that that it seems to me a perfectly demonstrable proposition that if you can secure a 7-foot water way for 102 miles additional it would be bordering on absurdity not to expend the money, if water ways are of any value at all, or if river and harbor bills are of any value; and to enlarge that canal to secure 7 feet of water will not cost more than two or three million dollars. I have not the data and the reports before me, because I did not expect to participate in this debate; but I make these general statements from my knowledge of the subject. That is the situation as respects the connection of the Great Lakes with the Mississippi River. The work is going on, and large amounts have been expended for that purpose.

That brings me to this amendment, which is what? That instead of having a 7-foot water way between the mouth of the Illinois River and Chicago, our engineers shall make an investigation and examination to see whether, with a reasonable expenditure, it is not wise and proper to enlarge this water way so as to draw 14 feet of water, in other words, double its capacity, and enable us, if need be, to build gunboats at St. Louis or Carondelet; and in time of war, if it should ever come, which I do not apprehend in the very near future, these gunboats could be transported into Chicago Harbor. That is all there is of that and the associate project to see whether or not that is a feasible thing, and if feasible, whether it is wise for us to enter on that expenditure.

I have no hesitation in saying for myself, although in that particular project the State in which I live perhaps has no immediate interest, that in my judgment there could not be a wiser expenditure of public money than such a one to connect the great Mississippi River with the great Northwestern Lakes by a water way 14 feet deep.

The Senator from Missouri says if we enter on this investigation at all, it will result next year in an appropriation of money. It may not so result unless the judgment of the Congress of the United States is that such an expenditure will be a wise and prudent one for our commerce and for our defense. Therefore it is that I shall vote for whatever expenditure is necessary to make this survey, and I do that for the reason that I take it for granted that either at this session or some near session in the future we shall appropriate money to enlarge the Illinois and Michigan Canal so as to secure 7 feet of water. I am sorry to see that some provision is not made in this bill for that purpose.

There is no greater commercial need now in the Northwest than this need of the enlargement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal and the beginning of the construction of the Hennepin improvement and extending that improvement to the Mississippi River, a distance of 64 miles, at a cost variously estimated at from four to six million dollars. That improvement could be made in five or six years, and when made it would relieve the people of the Northwestern States of five times its cost annually in the reduction of the freights on the bulky articles which would go over that canal. It is anticipated that the railways are in the pathway of this Hennepin Canal and the enlargement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal. I do not know whether they are or not, but I believe that it would benefit the commerce carried by rail. It would relieve the railroads perhaps of some of the cheaper and more bulky articles that they now carry, but it would so enlarge the commerce of that region and the commerce of our country that they would find increased receipts in the transportation of our more costly products.

I am amazed, I confess, that gentlemen will stand here in the Senate, with the situation and condition of this country as respects its internal commerce, and make objection to a survey of a work of the magnitude and importance of this project.

I regard these two propositions as important as any two propositions in the bill, and if they are to be whistled down the wind and all of the little streams from one end of the country to the other are to be dug out and enlarged, I shall feel very little interest as to what becomes of the bill, I say frankly. If we are to improve the Yadkin River, if we are going into the State of Ohio to spend $100,000 or $200,000 to repair the old locks and dams on the Muskingum River, an improvement entirely local in its nature as compared with this one, an improvement that has a beginning and an ending in the Ohio River—if that is the policy of this bill, and if the great water ways and great canals are not to be improved or we are not even to examine into the feasibility of their improvement through the examination of the Engineer Corps of the Army, then I say for one that this bill has lost much of its interest to me and to the region in which I dwell. I warn Senators that if they are running this bill as a mere local internal bill, and if they can get $5,000 for a little creek or $2,000 for a little harbor, think they have accomplished all that is desirable to be accomplished, then they have mistaken, in my judgment, the feeling and sense of the people of this country as respects our internal commerce.

It is perfectly well known that every civilized nation upon this globe except our own enters upon the largest possible expenditure of public money for the building of canals and the improvement of water ways. France is honeycombed with canals, and so is Great Britain, expending year by year large sums of money for this purpose. Are we to tie our hands, with the great area we have in this country, in the work of cementing its internal commerce by simply saying that we will not improve and enlarge what nature has provided us? It seems to me that it is madness for us to think so, especially when we have a bill here of $22,000,000.

I voted some years ago for a canal across the Maryland and Delaware peninsula, in our immediate neighborhood. I am ready to vote for it again. I believe it is an important national work. Although it is far remote from my State, I know that when that canal is constructed it will have beneficial influence upon all the products that are produced in my State and upon all the products that are consumed in it.

Mr. President, we have now reached an important point in this bill. It is a bill in which I have a deep interest and in which my constituents have a deep interest, and I do not propose for one that the amendment shall go out of the bill without a full and free discussion and without a yea-and-nay vote of the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. In the river and harbor bill of last year practically the same provision was inserted for the survey and location of this canal. I voted for it then, and did so because I believed that this is one of the great improvements that ought to be made. I do not think this provision commits the Government absolutely to the construction of this canal any more than was done by the final survey and location of the proposed canal between the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays. But there is one provision in the amendment to which I desire to call the especial attention of the Senator from Iowa. It will be found on page 55, beginning at the word "and" in line 1334, and going down to and including the word "hour" in line 1339, in these words:

And to have surveyed and located a channel from Lockport to Lake Michigan, at or near the city of Chicago, such channel to be suitable for the purposes aforesaid, and capable of carrying not less than 600,000 cubic feet of water per minute, flowing at the rate of 2 miles per hour.

If these words are stricken out of the amendment, it leaves a provision for the survey and location for the improvement of the Illinois River and the construction of the canal from Hennepin as a great water way between the lakes and the Mississippi River. Of that I am heartily in favor, but the clause I have read has been inserted for the first time, and it is inserted for the purpose of making a better sewerage for the city of Chicago. I suggest to my friend from Iowa that this is the first time that such a project has ever appeared in a river and harbor bill. If you confine the amendment to the great work of connecting the waters of the lakes with those of the Mississippi, I think there can be really no substantial objection to it, for I do not believe that the language is different from that by which the surveys of the other great improvements were directed to be made. It does not commit the Government to the absolute construction of the work. The question of appropriating money hereafter for the work is another matter, when all these great works will come up together.

I will say to the Senator from Iowa that while in the committee and on the floor we are anxious to have the work to which he referred, the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, and the whole country is interested in it, I do not believe that this is the time to make the appropriations. If the Senator will strike out the words beginning with the word "and" in line 1334, down to and including the word "hour" in line 1339, leaving this a clear-cut proposition for the survey and location of this great national work, I shall with pleasure vote with him. Therefore I move to strike out those words.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the phraseology of this amendment is not of my making.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. My attention had been called to this particular phraseology before, and I supposed it was in accord with some estimate or some statement of the engineers. If, as the Senator states, it is for a particular purpose, of course I have no objection to its being stricken out. Indeed, I do not think it is of very great value as it stands.

Mr. GORMAN. None whatever.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore, without committing anybody on this matter, in which I suppose, of course, the Illinois Senators are more deeply interested, if it can not go over until they come, I shall not object to striking out these words.

Mr. GORMAN. I make that motion.

Mr. SAWYER. I understand that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is quite sick, and it is not at all likely that he will be here soon. I have news from him this morning.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the words objected to were put in the amendment after an examination by certain engineers with reference to the quantity of water that would be necessary to keep up the navigation of the Illinois River below La Salle. There is a series of locks in the river which to some extent retard, of course, the flow of water from the lakes. It is a gradual descent, but too much of a descent from Chicago to La Salle to enable the stream to be navigated without some locks. I do not myself see what the objection can be to allowing the engineers to tell us what that project would cost; and that is all there is of it.

Mr. FRYE. That is on the first amendment?

Mr. TELLER. That is the first amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I do not believe there is any serious objection to the first amendment. It is something the Senator from Illinois was exceedingly anxious about. I think there was but little division on the first amendment in the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that if we adopt the report of the engineers and appropriate money eventually for building the canal we shall not be obliged to build it with reference to the amount of water that will flow through it. That is a part which might be abandoned or not be adopted. It seems to me it would be well to know how much water would be required in the Illinois River to keep its stage to a navigable condition. I can not see what harm it does to leave that provision in. I am not authorized to speak for anybody connected with this improvement, because I have never conferred with the Senators from Illinois on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The SECRETARY. After the word "deep," in the amendment of the committee, in line 1334, it is proposed to strike out the words:

And to have surveyed and located a channel from Lockport to Lake Michigan, at or near the city of Chicago, such channel to be suitable for the purposes aforesaid, and capable of carrying not less than 600,000 cubic feet of water per minute, flowing at the rate of 2 miles per hour.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to be to strike out all after the word "aforesaid" in line 1336. I hope he will modify his amendment in that way, because the other portion of the amendment is a part of the necessary survey, it seems to me.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to modifying the amendment in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland modifies his proposed amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. As modified I have no objection to it. I did have objection to the other clause being stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The part proposed to be stricken out of the amendment of the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "aforesaid," in the amendment of the committee, in line 1336, it is proposed to strike out:

And capable of carrying not less than 600,000 cubic feet of water per minute, flowing at the rate of 2 miles per hour.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to that change being made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, as amended on the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CALL. I ask if it would be in order to add to the amendment the following words:

To make an estimate for a ship-canal across the peninsula of Florida at the most convenient point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would not be in order, not being germane or related to this amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee which was passed over will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee report, after line 1342, to insert:

The Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to cause to be located, on such line as he may approve, a canal from the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin to the Mississippi River at or above the mouth of Rock River, together with a necessary feeder for the same; said canal to be known as the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, and to be 80 feet wide at the water-line, and to have a depth of not less than 7 feet of water, with locks 170 feet long and 30 feet wide. The Secretary of War shall cause to be made and submitted to Congress detailed plans and estimates for the construction of said canal and feeder; the necessary expense of making such location, plans, and estimates shall be paid out of the unexpended balance on hand heretofore appropriated for the survey of said canal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. VEST. I just want the Senate to understand distinctly what is the meaning of that amendment, what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] stated its meaning to be in the committee and would state if he were here. This is not a survey; this is the location of a canal; and the intention is to commit the Government in this river and harbor bill to the construction of the Hennepin Canal. I do not propose to argue it any further; I have said all I desire to say, and the Senate can vote with that understanding.

Mr. GORMAN. I simply want to say that I do not understand by this survey and location that the proposed canal will stand on any different footing from the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, which under a provision in a river and harbor bill heretofore passed was surveyed and located. The question of appropriating money for these works will come up at another time, when we shall have an opportunity to discuss them and group, if possible, all these works together. Notwithstanding it was the intention of the mover of this amendment, the Senator from Illinois, to commit the Government to the work, I do not believe that this amendment does that, and it will remain to be considered when the matter comes up at a future time.

Mr. TELLER. That is the fact.

Mr. DOLPH. There is no compulsion upon Congress to make an appropriation at any time or to continue a previous appropriation.

Mr. BECK. I rise only to say that some years ago when I was a member of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard (and I think I was chairman of it for two years), there was a very exhaustive examination made in connection with the water ways connecting the Mississippi and the Lakes, also the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays, the mouth of the Mississippi, and a very large number of other important points. I became thoroughly convinced that instead of expending, as proposed very often in bills for coast defenses and other bills, millions, perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars, the true policy of this country is to connect the Delaware and the Chesapeake, the Mississippi and the Lakes, and if it be possible in some form to get across Florida, and to continue our interior lines of water way from Norfolk through the great sound of North Carolina; and that as a matter of defense, as a matter of putting ourselves in a shape, whereby all the available resources of the country could be brought to one point without exposure and guard any other points, this was the most valuable system of improvement that could by any possibility be made. If this is a step in that direction and not altogether in regard to commercial relations, I shall do what little I can for it.

Mr. VEST. I wish to submit one additional remark and I shall say nothing further about it. It is very evident that the amendment will be adopted. My experience has been that any amendment can be adopted to a river and harbor bill. But I congratulate myself on one fact, and that is that the friends of this movement now seem to be unanimous in the opinion that the amendment does not commit Congress to this project, and it will be an open question hereafter upon the subject of appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish the remark of the Senator from Missouri to commit me in any way.

Mr. VEST. No; I do not suppose it will.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall express my own views on that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. VEST. Let us have a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators in favor of agreeing to the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask for the yeas and nays. I should like to go on record myself against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that on agreeing to the amendment of the committee the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal. ["No!" "No!"]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. VEST. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri withdraws the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. By unanimous consent he can do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection. Is the Senate ready for the question upon agreeing to the amendment?

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 60, the amendment relating to the improvement of the Mississippi River, in the paragraph beginning at line 1455 and the amendments following, extending to line 1552, on page 64.

Mr. GIBSON. I find that in this bill very liberal appropriations have been made for all the rivers in the Mississippi Valley, but that the Committee on Commerce of the Senate have reduced the appropriation for the Mississippi River itself about $600,000, so that there will remain to carry on the great work of improving the navigation of the Lower Mississippi only $1,455,000 out of the $2,500,000 appropriated for the river below the mouth of the Ohio. The proceeding which we have just had indicates the impossibility of getting a yea-and-nay vote on any amendment which may be resisted, and not desiring to delay the bill or to defeat it, and trusting that in the conference committee the appropriation for the Mississippi River may be increased, I withdraw all further opposition to the amendments indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated in their order.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 1457, after the word "million," the Committee on Commerce report to insert the words "five hundred thousand;" so as to read:

Improving Mississippi River from head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $2,500,000; which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1460, at the end of the clause appropriating $2,500,000 for "improving Mississippi River from head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River," to add:

Of the foregoing sum $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in protecting the bank along the Lake Bolivar front by revetment; $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in continuing improvement on said river at Columbus, Ky.; $70,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in continuing improvement on said river at Hickman, Ky.; $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in continuing improvement on said river at Greenville, Miss.; $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in continuing improvement on said river at Vicksburg, Miss.; $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in continuing improvement on said river at New Orleans, La.; $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in improving said river at Helena, Ark.; $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended at the head of the Atchafalaya and mouth of Red River, Louisiana, for rectification thereof, by preventing further enlargement of the Atchafalaya and restricting its outlet capacity, and for turning the waters of Red River into the north or upper channel around Turnbull's Island, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red or Old River into the Mississippi.

Of the above sum there shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for gauging the waters of the Lower Mississippi River and its tributaries, as provided for in joint resolution of 21st of February, 1871, $9,600: Provided, That $3,600 of the same is authorized to be expended in paying the expenses of gauging the waters during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; for examinations and surveys at South Pass, mouth of Mississippi River, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1875, $10,000; for survey of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to its headwaters, $75,000; for continuing the removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions in the Mississippi River, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, in the same clause, after the word "channel," in line 1509, to strike out:

Of the foregoing sum, $150,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be expended in protecting the bank along the Lake Bolivar front by revetment.

So as to read:

Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended to repair or build levees for the purpose of reclaiming lands or preventing injury to lands or private property by overflows: Provided, however, That the commission is authorized to repair and build levees if in their judgment it should be done as part of their plans to afford ease and safety to the navigation and commerce of the river and to deepen the channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out lines 1514 and 1515, as follows:

Improving the Mississippi River above St. Anthony's Falls, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 1516 to line 1518, inclusive, as follows:

For survey of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to its headwaters: Continuing survey, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 1519 to line 1521, inclusive, as follows:

For continuing the removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions in the Mississippi River, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clauses from line 1522 to line 1552, inclusive, as follows:

For work in accordance with the plans and specifications of the Mississippi River Commission:

At Columbus, Ky.: Continuing improvement, $25,000.
At Hickman, Ky.: Continuing improvement, $70,000.
At Greenville, Miss.: Continuing improvement, $75,000.
At Vicksburg, Miss.: Continuing improvement, $150,000.
At New Orleans, La.: Continuing improvement, $200,000.

At the head of the Atchafalaya and mouth of Red River, Louisiana, for rectification thereof, by preventing further enlargement of the Atchafalaya and restricting its outlet capacity, and for turning the waters of Red River into the north or upper channel around Turnbull's Island, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red or Old River into the Mississippi, $300,000.

For gauging the waters of the Lower Mississippi River and its tributaries, as provided for in joint resolution of 21st of February, 1871, $9,600: Provided, That $3,600 of same is authorized to be expended in paying the expenses of gauging the said waters during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

For examinations and surveys at South Pass, mouth of Mississippi River, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1875, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 66.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one further amendment of the committee that was passed over which the Chair asks the indulgence of the Senator from Colorado to submit.

Mr. TELLER. I will reserve my amendment. I supposed we were through with the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 66, after line 1600 of section 1, the Committee on Commerce report to insert:

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884, creating the Missouri River Commission, and defining its powers and duties, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PADDOCK. I asked to have this amendment passed over when it was reached in the consideration of the amendments of the Committee on Commerce. I do not desire to make any undue contention as to the matter, but I wish to state that the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, of which the Missouri is one, has been carrying on for some time an inquiry as to the plan, system, and method of improvement, and the practical working of the commission with respect to the improvement of the Mississippi River, with the view of continuing that inquiry as regards the Missouri River. While that inquiry is in process of consideration, I have thought that it would be better to leave this subject entirely alone, and not to make any radical change as to the plan of conducting the improvement upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries until the committee shall have concluded its inquiry and shall be ready to report as to the advisability of continuing the commission or of adopting some other system or plan in respect to conducting the improvements.

On behalf of the committee, which has given this subject a good deal of attention during the past month and is still in the midst of its investigation, I ask the Senate to let this matter rest for the present until we shall have had an opportunity to fully conclude our investigations and make a report in pursuance thereof.

Mr. VEST. I drew the amendment to the river and harbor bill of 1886, which created the Missouri River Commission. I drew this amendment to this bill which abolishes that commission. I did it deliberately and after full investigation and a knowledge of all the facts.

I believe that the Missouri River Commission honestly endeavored to do their duty, and I believe that the system which they endeavored to enforce was the correct system, and that is, to improve the river, if it is to be improved at all, by reaches of 10 miles at a time with a view to the navigation of the stream. That system has been deliberately ignored by Congress. I have defended it. I have done all I could in my capacity as a Senator to induce the Senate and House of Representatives to coincide with the commission. Instead of that, at each recurring session, both on the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, appropriations for local improvements have been carried until it is useless to disguise the fact that any other system is impossible with the present constitution of this and the other branch of Congress.

The Missouri River Commission, in their report which I have before me—and I shall not exhaust my strength nor the patience of the Senate by reading it—emphatically and distinctly protest against these local improvements, the improvement of harbors which have nothing whatever to do with the navigation of the river. They say that it is money thrown away; that they can do nothing with the Missouri River if the appropriations are diverted from the main object, the systematic improvement of the stream, to local improvements at towns and harbors. With that report before them the Committee on Commerce voted me down almost unanimously. I think I was the only, solitary Senator who voted against it. They ignored the report of the commission and agreed to appropriate several hundred thousand dollars to different localities. The same thing was done on the Mississippi River.

I say that the logical result is, when we create a commission and refuse to pay the slightest respect to its recommendations, abolish it. The commission come here, honest and reputable men (one of them is one of the best friends I have in the world, a gentleman from my State, a civilian engineer), and in their deliberate conviction, based upon personal observation, based upon their expert knowledge as hydraulic engineers, they say to us: "We recommend so much money for the general improvement and nothing for these local improvements." Congress says: "We know better; we have no confidence in your recommendation; we wipe out your report." I have come to the conclusion, and as an honest representative I can come to no other, that the money, $50,000 a year, spent for this commission is absolutely thrown away, because no matter what they may report we pay no attention to it. The Senator from Nebraska represents one of the States upon the upper portion of the river.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if that is not measurably true of the Mississippi River Commission and its recommendations?

Mr. VEST. So I say; but the items for the Mississippi River have been passed and I do not care to discuss them, although I am prepared to do it. I think that is the logical result of our action in regard to the Mississippi. We have taken $970,000, against the protest of the Mississippi River Commission, and put it on local improvements in this very bill. I was opposed to it, but I was overwhelmingly defeated.

When Captain Eads was living (who in my judgment knew more about hydraulic engineering than all the rest of the engineers in this country put together, and I can say that safely now, because he is beyond the reach of censure or praise) he told me over and over again that every dollar which was put on local improvements on the Mississippi River was thrown away. He said it had nothing whatever to do with the improvement of the stream. So it is upon the Missouri River.

I do not believe that it has come to be a matter of a great deal of importance to the part of the Missouri in which I am particularly interested. It is a lamentable fact, but it is a fact, that we have not one single steam-boat running from Kansas City, where I live, to St. Louis. The last boat was taken off the river whilst I was in attendance on the St. Louis convention.

Mr. TELLER. Why?

Mr. VEST. There was no trade. The railroads have abolished river navigation, just as much as civilization has abolished the Indians as an autonomy in this country. The poor straggling steam-boat men whom I see around this Capitol now remind me of the last remnants of an extinct race, the melancholy historical remains of a former era. It is inevitable and you can not help it.

All that we can do now, in my judgment, and I am as much interested in it as any man living, is to keep the rivers in such a condition of repair as to be a perpetually recurring check upon the railroads. That is the whole situation almost completely.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether, if the recommendations made by the Missouri River Commission as to appropriations had been adopted by Congress, and if their theory of the improvement of the river could have been carried out, having sufficient money to do it, the result would have been to make a navigable river between Kansas City and St. Louis.

Mr. VEST. That is a matter simply of conjecture. They use this guarded language in their report, and I have read every word of both reports and I believe most of the schedules: "We have seen nothing yet which causes us to doubt the feasibility"—they do not say it can be done—"of so improving that river by reaches as to make it an entirely navigable stream." Nobody is more interested in it than I am. I live upon its banks. I have lived there forty years. The fact remains that the railroads have exterminated the steam-boats. All we can do is to keep these rivers for barge transportation. There is one line on the Mississippi, the Anchor Line, and the principal owner of that line told me only a few weeks ago when I was in St. Louis that his stock in the company was not paying him a dollar. The railroads built along the banks of the river have absolutely annihilated the river commerce; I mean to say except as to the very heavy articles, and those only to a limited extent.

I do not want to go into a general discussion, but the fact is that time is the great element in commerce with the American people to-day. The man who wants merchandise to sell wants it at once. He does not want to wait for a steam-boat. If a man goes for pleasure and to travel he can take a steam-boat, but where one American travels upon a river with a view to pleasure, there are thousands who go upon business, and they want to be immediately at their destination. But I do not propose to go into any essay upon commerce.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator how it is above Kansas City? Is there business on the river there?

Mr. VEST. On the Upper Missouri, above Kansas City, there are several boats. I do not know exactly how many, but a considerable number.

Mr. PADDOCK. There has been continuous navigation from Sioux City to St. Louis on the river. The river is navigable 3,000 miles during a part of the year.

Mr. VEST. That is true.

Mr. PADDOCK. The trouble about it has been that all the money which has been appropriated has been limited in the application of the appropriations so that the Missouri River has never really had any attention. That is what is the matter with it, and that is why the railroads monopolize the business.

Mr. TELLER. That is not the case in this bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. This is the first time the Missouri has received attention.

Mr. VEST. Nobody can be more friendly to the steam-boats or rivers than myself. I live in a country that is full of them, and I have as much interest in them as anybody; but the fact remains, and you can not ignore it, and it is a fact that is immutable and unanswerable, that the commerce of this country is conducted on railroads and not on steam-boats, and so it is about canals. You have your Chesapeake and Ohio Canal here and the grass is growing along its tow-path. There is not a canal in the United States to-day that is paying one cent upon the investment or a quarter of a cent, and the whole of it comes from something that is beyond the control of Congress, great as its powers are; and that is that time is the essence of commerce in this era of civilization, and the railroads furnish quickness of transportation while other modes of communication do not. That is all of it.

Mr. FRYE. But the Senator must not neglect to say that the rivers and the canals are an immense factor in keeping down freights.

Mr. VEST. That is exactly what I undertook to say in a very few words, without elaborating the idea, that these water ways are factors. I do not by any means advocate abandoning them. I propose, so far as my vote and influence shall go, to keep them in as good state of repair as possible. They are immeasurably valuable in the way of a check upon the exorbitant rapacity of the railroads when they make pools and combinations.

I can give the Senate one instance which comes to my mind now. There was a pool made at Kansas City upon freights to St. Louis and to the East between the railroads, and they put them up to such an enormous extent that a few of the leading merchants of my city combined and subscribed to build a barge line, to build five barges to put on the Missouri River to carry heavy goods and groceries. The very minute that that company was organized the pool was broken and the freights went down. In that way these water ways are valuable, but as to the old-time glory of the steam-boat, it has gone like that of Tecumseh and the great Indian chiefs, never more to be seen in this country; and the present railroad system will give way to advanced railroad transportation, and we shall look back to the present condition of our railroads almost as we now look back to the old times when a trip on the Mississippi River from Louisville to St. Louis was the highest point of ambition to the young American on his travels.

Recurring to the subject of the Missouri River Commission, I have no feeling in the world but the kindest possible one toward the gentlemen who compose it. My action upon the Committee on Commerce was dictated solely with the view to save some $60,000, the expenses of this commission, which, in my judgment, amount to no use at all. The recommendations of the commission are absolutely ignored; the appropriations they ask are not given to them, and I do not think there is any further necessity for continuing the commission.

Mr. BECK. Are the amendments of the committee through?

Mr. FRYE. This amendment has not been acted upon yet.

Mr. BECK. I wish to offer an amendment when that has been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Nebraska desires a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. That completes the committee's amendments.

Mr. BECK. I desire to offer an amendment which I had referred to the Committee on Commerce on the 28th of last May. It is as follows: After line 1139, on page 47, I move to insert:

For the purchase of the improvements known as the Green and Barren River improvements, $150,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a full and absolute conveyance of said improvements, together with rights of way, easements, piers, docks, and appurtenances of every nature belonging to or connected with said improvements, by the owner or owners thereof, and the Attorney-General of the United States shall have certified to the Secretary of War that the title is perfect.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senator if that amendment was referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. BECK. It was referred on the 28th day of May, as is shown by the printed amendment which I have sent to the desk. It is a literal copy of a provision contained in the river and harbor bill passed last year, which failed to become a law. It passed both Houses of Congress just as I offer it to-day, with the exception that I propose to make the sum $135,000 instead of $150,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified if there be no objection.

Mr. BECK. I propose to reduce the amount because the time of the lease has shortened since the provision was inserted on the former bill. The committee agree to it. I desire to say that I hold in my hand a number of copies of the report of the Committee on Commerce of last year. I would be glad if Senators would read it. I ask to have a copy of the report inserted in the RECORD without taking time to read it. It contains a full history of this matter, and it was so satisfactory to both Houses of Congress that the provision was passed and made a part of the bill, which, as I said, did not become a law simply because it was not signed by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be printed in the RECORD if there be no objection.

The report is as follows:

GREEN AND BARREN RIVERS, KENTUCKY.—REPORT OF SENATE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SECOND SESSION, FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

The Senate committee, after having fully considered and investigated the proposed purchase of the franchise of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company by the General Government, reported favorably thereon, with an amendment to the river and harbor bill appropriating $150,000 for that purpose. Following is the report of the committee, embraced in Senate Report No. 1884, Forty-ninth Congress, second session:

The Green and Barren Rivers lie wholly within the State of Kentucky, and, with their tributaries, drain an area of about 10,000 square miles, nearly all of which is contained within the State. Their general direction is northwest, and the Green, after receiving the waters of the Barren River, empties into the Ohio about 8 miles above Evansville, Ind.

COMMERCIAL STATISTICS.

Shipments of merchandise from Evansville, Ind., to Green and Barren River country annually	$1,507,000
Shipments of tobacco from that country annually	1,000,000
Stock, staves, and hoop-poles from that country annually	200,000
	2,707,000
Floated out:
Five hundred thousand saw-logs, worth $5 each	2,500,000
Lumber, stone, and coal	50,000
Total	5,257,000

The Green and Barren Rivers form an important line of navigation through a country rich in mineral and agricultural products. In a state of nature, these streams were, at certain stages, obstructed by rapids which boats could not pass. About fifty years ago the State of Kentucky most wisely improved these rivers by constructing five locks and dams, giving continuous slackwater navigation throughout the year from the Ohio River to Bowling Green, a distance of 175 miles.

The locks and dams were built under difficulties which increased their cost, but the work was well done. These locks were made 150 feet long and 36 feet wide, giving a capacity which it was thought would be sufficient for all future needs of commerce and navigation; but it is now apparent that, to avoid delays and reduce cost of transportation to a minimum, larger locks will be desirable in the future.

For a number of years after completion, the locks were operated and tolls were collected by the State of Kentucky; but, in 1868, by an act of the Legislature, the Green and Barren River line of navigation was leased for a period of thirty years to the Green and Barren River Navigation Company, with power to collect tolls, operate mines, run steam-boats, and conduct general business. The practical effect of this lease has been to give the exclusive right of free transportation to the company and render competition impracticable. This condition of affairs will continue until March 9, 1898, unless the rights of the company are extinguished by purchase or other legal means.

In 1880 the Kentucky Legislature, in behalf of the commercial interests of the Green and Barren Rivers, attempted to repeal the act which gave to the navigation company its privileges; but such action was declared illegal by the supreme court of the State, which court at the same time called attention to the fact that the State could, when the same was demanded by public necessity, resume control of the Green and Barren Rivers upon the payment to the company of a just compensation.

In place of such action as was suggested by the decision of the court, the Kentucky Legislature in 1886 ceded to the United States the five locks and dams on the Green and Barren Rivers, upon the condition that the United States rather than the State should extinguish by "purchase or otherwise the claim of the navigation company to exact tolls and control the rivers."

COMMERCIAL IMPORTANCE.

The Green River and its tributary, the Big Barren, are streams most favorably adapted to purposes of navigation, and they with their branches are the natural outlet for a country rich in mineral and agricultural wealth, and by connecting this tributary country, through the Ohio, with the markets of the Mississippi Valley, are capable of being made important navigable waters of the United States.

These rivers are at the present time, by reason of the charter granted a private corporation by the State of Kentucky, virtually closed to general commerce, and the country tributary to the rivers is placed at a great disadvantage. The tolls, which prohibit competition in transportation, and the uncertain results of any enterprise which is dependent on the will of a monopoly, prevent the investment of capital which is necessary for a full development of the country.

Considering the relative advantages of this line of navigation and the natural resources of the country, as compared with other streams and territory, it appears most probable that the improvement of the Green River and its tributaries would have been undertaken by the United States long ago had not the conditions been such as to withdraw these rivers from the fostering care of the General Government.

The value of existing commerce is placed at $6,000,000 per annum. The possible commerce with the rivers in a free and fully improved condition is very great, greater in fact than that of many other streams which are now being improved by Congressional appropriations at great expense.

VALUE OF EXISTING WORKS OF IMPROVEMENT.

These works, which are the property of the State of Kentucky, consist of five locks and dams. The present intrinsic value of the works is placed by the board at $350,000, and the money value of benefits which would accrue to general commerce from a release from the control exercised by the Green and Barren River Navigation Company is considered to be not less than $30,000 per annum, which yearly saving would amount, during the remaining life of the company's lease, to an amount equal at least to the present intrinsic value of works.

VALUE OF PROPERTY (FRANCHISE) OF THE GREEN AND BARREN RIVER NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The company's property consists of chartered rights granted them by the State of Kentucky. In the works themselves they have no ownership. The company, while disclaiming any desire to dispose of their property, offer the same to the United States for a sum based upon its estimate of the earning capacity of the franchise. At the date of the proposition, November 26, 1886, with eleven years and four months for lease to run, the value is placed at $338,000. On the 30th of next June this value would be about $325,000.

The Green and Barren River Navigation Company is now the legal owner of this property, and, so long as a voluntary sale is under consideration, the company has an undoubted right to fix the selling price.

Considering the value of the franchise in the light of damages to the business of the company, which might follow an abrogation of the right to collect tolls, their price seems excessive.

In justice to the country, tributary to the Green and Barren Rivers, the present obstructive tax on its commerce should be removed, and it is also of the opinion that the commercial importance of these rivers is sufficiently great to justify the General Government in extending aid to their improvement.

There appears to be three methods by which the General Government can secure control of the Green and Barren Rivers, and their works of improvement:

1. By purchasing the chartered rights on the most reasonable terms the Green and Barren River Navigation Company will accept, as provided for by the act of the Kentucky Legislature.

2. By condemnation, with just compensation, as determined by the proper legal tribunal. This method is also contemplated by the act of the Kentucky Legislature, which concedes the works to the United States on condition that the claims of the company are extinguished by purchase or otherwise.

3. By accepting the works and assuming control of the improvements of the Green and Barren Rivers, on the condition that the State of Kentucky will first extinguish the franchise, as suggested by the State court of appeals. On such a basis the board is of the opinion that the interests involved are sufficient to justify the General Government in reimbursing the State in an amount not exceeding $350,000, the estimated present intrinsic value of the works.

Mr. BECK. The Green River flows into the Ohio River a few miles above Evansville, Ind., the Barren flowing into Green River. The two rivers drain an area of over 10,000 square miles, perhaps the richest in the West in iron ore, in coal, in lumber, and in valuable building stone, independent of all sorts of agricultural products that can be produced in the State of Kentucky. These rivers drain a larger area, perhaps, than the Kentucky River.

Green River has a great many peculiarities to make it very valuable to commerce. In the first place it is a very deep stream, and when the Ohio and all the other rivers in that region are frozen over so that they can not be navigated the Green River rarely, if ever, freezes. It is fed in great part by subterranean streams. In a region of country for 40 or 50 miles square there is hardly a running stream of water above ground; the water runs into sinks and forms subterranean rivers, of which the river that flows through the Mammoth Cave is one, and reach the Green River at such a temperature in the winter that the main river remains unfrozen and is navigable because it is so fed, while every other stream around it is frozen up.

It furnishes at its mouth the best harbor of refuge of any other river in the Ohio valley. The city of Evansville, as I said, is about 6 miles below its mouth, and is carrying on a trade now of two or three millions of dollars up and down that river. The trade from Evansville and the trade to Evansville is great now, and will hereafter increase vastly if we make the improvements proposed. It has the further great advantage that the coal and the iron which can be brought out of that river may be taken to, say, Memphis, to all the cities on the Lower Mississippi, and even up the Mississippi to St. Louis at seasons of the year when there can be no navigation of the Ohio River above the mouth of Green River.

Kentucky, appreciating the importance of it, in 1847, at an expense of about $800,000, built locks and dams on the river up to Bowling Green. It carried on the work until the war broke out in 1861. That portion of Kentucky, as is well known, was the scene of the operations of both armies. Kentucky, as Senators know, remained in the Union, and furnished at great expense, I believe, eighty-odd thousand troops. During the war the works on the river were greatly injured, first by one side and then by the other, until the river improvements became almost useless.

In 1868 the State, finding the works injured as they were, and having advanced large sums of money to the Federal Government, made a lease for thirty years of these improvements to the company now holding it, ten years of which are unexpired. The lease expires in 1898. That company have the right to those works for ten years to come, and the State can not deprive it of that right.

Senators may ask why Kentucky made such a lease as she did in 1868. For a great many reasons. The then existing works were so out of repair as to be useless. The war had just closed. The Government of the United States, as I said, owed the State over a million dollars at that time for war expenditures. We have been paid part of it since, but we did not then know that we would ever get any of it. In order to keep the work from being absolutely destroyed, although the State had spent $800,000 upon it, she made a lease for thirty years to this company.

As soon as the company got possession of these works, of course they controlled them in such a way as best to promote their own interest; therefore no business could be carried on by other people without paying immense tolls. Therefore the commerce of that river was seriously impaired, especially as it came into competition with like commerce from the Upper Ohio. On the canal at Louisville heavy tolls were exacted, until the United States bought it and controlled it. While the commerce coming from Pennsylvania and from the Upper Ohio in competition with the Green and Barren river commerce had to pay tolls something like what they had to pay there was some chance for competition on the Green and Barren Rivers. But five or six years ago Congress made that canal free comparatively, so that boats can bring their goods, such as coal, lumber, and everything else, down the Ohio River, passing the obstructions at Louisville through the Louisville and Portland Canal, which we have paid for and own, almost free, while the tolls on the Green and Barren Rivers are kept up by the company that owns the works to such an extent as to make it almost impossible to utilize that river at all in competition with the goods shipped from above because of the monopoly that is held by the company. People can not pay the tolls and compete with the small tolls that the United States now exacts by making the Portland Canal comparatively free.

I need not go into detail, as I hold in my hand a very full statement made by Hon. J. Proctor Knott, the former governor of Kentucky, now president of the executive committee of the industrial conference of the State, setting forth all the facts. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 23, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I trust you will pardon me for suggesting certain reasons why the Government of the United States should assume control of the navigation of the Green and Barren Rivers, upon the terms proposed by the State of Kentucky, and thus relieve the commerce of those important channels of traffic from the oppressive burden by which it is at present incumbered.

These rivers, with their tributaries, drain an area of over 10,000 square miles—the largest water-shed perhaps in the State—much the greater portion of which is extremely rich in every variety of agricultural product known to the latitude. It also abounds in valuable hard-wood timbers of various kinds, and in almost unlimited quantities. For 140 miles Green River, in its windings, cuts through one of the most remarkable coal basins west of the Appalachian chain, embracing numerous deposits of the finest quality of bituminous coal, over 700 miles nearer the markets of the Lower Ohio and Mississippi than the coal fields of Western Pennsylvania. Its banks furnish inexhaustible quantities of the most excellent building-stones, for which there is a constantly increasing demand throughout the South and West, while in convenient reach are to be found abundant supplies of iron ore of various grades, which with coal and limestone in immediate proximity present a most fascinating field for the manufacture of iron and steel.

Long before the extent or variety of these extraordinary resources had begun to be appreciated the State of Kentucky inaugurated a system of slackwater improvements extending from the mouth of Green River to Bowling Green, on the Big Barren, its principal tributary, embracing five locks and dams, which were completed in 1847 at a cost of nearly $800,000, furnishing steam-boat navigation the year round for 200 miles on the two streams, which are susceptible of being made for a far greater length among the cheapest and most commodious channels of commerce on the continent at a comparatively trifling cost to the Government.

Yet for more than twenty years there has been, and still is, almost a complete barrier to the development and general progress of the Green River valley, which has in a great measure deprived other portions of the country of the benefits of its manifold resources and will continue to do so until it shall be removed.

The obstruction to which I refer is the monopoly of the carrying trade on both rivers, held by "The Green and Barren River Navigation Company" under a charter granted by the State in 1868, conferring upon the company the privilege of exacting tolls upon the entire commerce of both streams—which soon proved so onerous as to drive off nearly all competition, and throw at least four-fifths of the transportation into its own hands—where it must remain for nearly ten years yet to come unless relief from some quarter can be had.

It is much easier to criticise the policy of such a concession on the part of the State at this time than it would have been in the light of the circumstances existing when it was made—shortly after the close of the war—when a large proportion of the resources of the State had been expended in the equipment and maintenance of soldiers in the field for which she had not then been reimbursed; when the locks and dams, partly from neglect and partly from the acts of the recent belligerents, were badly out of repair, and required the outlay of a large amount of money to restore them; when the values were unsettled and a general uneasiness and want of confidence in all varieties of active enterprise pervaded the popular mind.

Nor can it be justly complained that the company sought to make the most of its bargain. It had bought the franchise and paid for it, and had at least a legal right to employ it in any manner consistent with the terms of its contract that its cupidity or discretion might suggest. If it sought to destroy competition and monopolize the entire business of the two rivers it did precisely what business men always do under similar circumstances.

It is not surprising, therefore, that under such auspices the tax upon the commerce of these rivers soon became so oppressive as to stifle all attempts to develop upon anything like an adequate scale the resources of the region for which they were the natural and, in a great part, the only avenues of transportation. It could not be expected that capital would seek investment in a locality when its products, whether from the mine or the manufactory, the forge or the farm, would be for a long series of years completely at the mercy of a corporation which not only monopolized the means for getting them to market but had the right of competing in their production.

In order to form some idea of the enormity of the tax imposed upon the traffic of these two rivers, you have but to refer to the terms of the charter which allow the company to levy upon each ton of freight—custom-house tonnage—an average toll of 40 cents per lock, or $1.20 per ton per trip, a rate over twenty times higher than that charged on the Louisville and Portland Canal since it has been under the control of the General Government. At this rate the tollage on one of the steamers at present plying these rivers, with a registered tonnage of 183.57 tons, amounts to over $440 the round trip. The president of the company estimates its annual receipts from tolls on one-fifth of the carrying done at $10,000, and it is entirely reasonable to conclude that the increased rates of freight upon the remaining four-fifths monopolized by the company aggregate over $50,000 per annum in addition.

This tax, however, grievous as it is, constitutes the least part of the burden complained of. The greater injury by far, not only to that portion of Kentucky, but to the country at large, consists in the suppression of great productive enterprises which naturally results from the monopoly of the means of transportation in the hands of a corporation whose powers over them are practically limited alone by its own interests or discretion.

This is amply illustrated by the celebrated "Airdrie" property, comprising over 20,000 acres of the most valuable mineral and lumber lands on Green River, with buildings for the accommodation of at least five hundred operatives, and all the appliances for mining coal and manufacturing iron, besides a full equipment of tow-boats and barges for the transportation of such commodities, which from this very cause has remained absolutely idle and unproductive for nearly twenty years, a melancholy warning to all who would invest their capital in similar enterprises in this munificently endowed valley.

Handicapped and crippled as it is by this monopoly, however, the commerce of the Green and Barren Rivers is far greater than that of many streams in other States which have for years shared the beneficence and enjoyed the fostering care of the Federal Government. Notwithstanding the disadvantages under which it has struggled for nearly a quarter of a century, it was estimated more than two years ago by those who had the best means of knowing its real value at over $6,000,000 per annum exclusive of local traffic, while that of the portion of Kentucky River, for the improvement of which the Government had appropriated over a million dollars was set down for the same period at $5,524,000.

The rapid increase which had taken place in the trade upon the latter river up to that time was attributed, and no doubt correctly, to the improvements which the United States had made in its navigation, and if that hypothesis was correct, what might be predicted of the commerce of the Green and Barren Rivers if relieved of its present burdens? It is at least safe to say that the president of the company was not far wrong when he said, that with the navigation of those rivers free, they would furnish an avenue to market for fully half the 50,000,000 pounds of tobacco annually produced in the adjacent counties, which now go at enhanced rates through other channels, and that the present yearly output of 70,000 tons of coal would be increased sevenfold, with a corresponding movement in building stones, lumber, and other commodities requiring cheap water transportation.

Indeed, with anything like the same facilities for navigation furnished by the Government to other streams of far less importance, the increase in the commerce of these two rivers would be almost fabulous. The coal-fields through which they cut are not only 700 miles nearer their natural market than those of Western Pennsylvania, from which it is at present in a great measure supplied, but it is one of the peculiar characteristics of Green River that its waters, furnished as they are from vast subterranean sources, are rarely, if ever, frozen, but open to constant and convenient navigation, while those of the Upper Ohio are frequently gorged with ice, or too low for the passage of any but small boats of the lightest draught, thus causing the disastrous "coal famines" so often experienced by those dependent upon that region for fuel.

If the increased facilities for the navigation of these rivers were merely to benefit the section drained by them the question would be different. But other portions of the country are as much interested in the liberation of its commerce as the Green River Valley itself. They need its coal, its iron, its stone, and its timber, and they have a right to have them brought into competition with similar commodities from other localities, while on the other hand they have a right to demand a free, cheap, and convenient channel for the transportation of their own merchandise to that section.

To illustrate this it is only necessary to refer to the simple fact that the flourishing city of Evansville, Ind., is indebted for very much of its commercial prosperity to the Green River region, to which it ships annually by this line of navigation alone over $1,500,000 worth of goods of various kinds, while its mills are furnished with thousands of logs from that source every year, and which would be more than quadrupled if the river were free.

In view of these facts, every one of which has been fully verified by the official reports of competent engineers detailed by the War Department to investigate the very question to which your attention is respectfully invited in this communication, I would ask if the Government should not extend to this grand avenue of interstate commerce the same enlightened liberality it has shown in the improvement of others of far less importance, and remove this serious impediment to public traffic, which otherwise must continue to obstruct it for ten years to come?

If the terms upon which this is asked were inconsistent with the well settled policy of the Government, or were in anywise unjust or unreasonable, I would not ask you to consider them for a moment. But they are not. On the contrary, they seem to be not only fair but liberal.

The State of Kentucky has ceded to the United States full jurisdiction and control of the navigation of these two streams, as well as complete title to the five locks and dams, estimated by the Board of United States Engineers to be worth $350,000, on condition that the United States will extinguish the franchise of the navigation company by purchase or otherwise. Major Post, in his report to the Secretary of the date of January 27, 1885, estimated the actual value of the franchise, computed according to the formula for annuities, at $379,454.70 at 4 per cent., or $404,128.48 at 3 per cent., and it is now offered to the Government for $135,000, less than one-half its real worth calculated on the same basis.

The result of the transaction would therefore be, not merely to relieve the commerce of the Green and Barren Rivers of an annual tax of at least $20,000, amounting in the next ten years to nearly five times the appropriation asked, but the transfer to the United States of at least $350,000 worth of property, for less than one-half the actual value of the franchise surrendered by the company.

You may ask, however, why Kentucky should not remove this obstacle to commerce at her own expense? But I might retort by asking why Massachusetts should not be required to bear the burden of improving Boston Harbor, or why Louisiana was not left to open the mouth of the Mississippi, or why the General Government should be asked to remove an obstruction to the commerce of any other river? And the answer in each case would be obviously the same.

If Kentucky were alone to be benefited, it would certainly be but just and fair that she should alone bear the burden; but she is not. The people of other States who desire the multifarious products of the Green River region and wish to send their own commodities thither for gain, are as much interested in the free navigation of that stream as those living adjacent to its waters, and if the terms proposed shall be accepted the State and the company will have contributed more than their respective proportions to the general welfare by the surrender of property rights aggregating in actual intrinsic value more than three times the amount of the appropriation required.

But the facts present a complete estoppel to such a proposition on their face. The State of Kentucky, on the 20th February, 1886, proposed to surrender to the General Government complete control of the navigation of these two rivers, as well as its property in the works thereon, on condition that the Government should extinguish the company's franchise. Congress took the proposition under consideration, and on the 5th of August, of the same year, by a provision in the river and harbor act, directed the Secretary of War to cause an inquiry to be made as to the value and commercial importance of the works and the property of the company.

On the 26th of the following December the board of engineers appointed in pursuance of that provision not only reported the value of the works on Green and Barren Rivers and of the company's franchise, but that the latter ought to be extinguished and navigation of those rivers improved by the General Government, and furthermore that the Government might obtain control of the navigation of these streams either by purchasing the company's franchise or by agreeing to assume such control on condition that the State should extinguish the franchise, but that if the latter alternative should be adopted the General Government ought to pay the State $350,000, the value of her improvements.

The company having, however, agreed to take $150,000 for its franchise, a provision was incorporated in the river and harbor bill of the ensuing session of Congress appropriating that sum for that purpose, thus clearly accepting the proposition which had been made by the State, notwithstanding the bill failed to become a law for want of the Executive signature, and the Legislature of Kentucky, which recently adjourned, having every reason to believe that the proposition submitted by the State had been acceded in good faith, took no further action in the matter, supposing that a similar provision would be inserted in the bill now pending.

These facts are entitled to more serious consideration in view of the circumstance that it will be over eighteen months before another Legislature will convene in Kentucky, when it is not probable that any bill can be passed different from the one which became a law two years ago, as it is not to be expected that the people of other sections of the State, whose commercial facilities have already been provided for by contributions from the Government Treasury, will voluntarily burden themselves with a tax for the benefit of their less fortunate neighbors. The consequence will be, therefore, that unless this trifling appropriation for their relief shall be made the sufferers from this oppressive incubus upon their property must remain under their burden for ten years longer.

Begging pardon for what I fear has grown to be a trespass on your courtesy,

I am, very truly, yours,

J. PROCTOR KNOTT,
President Executive Committee Industrial Conference, Kentucky.

Hon. JAMES B. BECK,
United States Senate.

I need not repeat that when the people of Kentucky found that the commerce of that portion of the State was being destroyed by the heavy tolls exacted, the State of Kentucky endeavored to set aside the lease to the company. The supreme court of the State decided that the Legislature had no power to divest that company of the right it had acquired. That settled it, so far as the State is concerned.

We then applied to the United States to take possession of it and buy out the company. Report after report of the engineers was made, all favoring it as a part of the system of improvements of the Ohio River and its tributaries, as being as important as the Monongahela, as the Illinois, as the Kentucky, as the Great Kanawha, or as any of the other rivers that form part of the Ohio and Mississippi Valley system. They valued this improvement at three hundred and sixty-odd thousand dollars at 4 per cent., or $304,000, I believe, at 3 per cent., and recommended that the United States should pay that sum and take possession and control of the improvement.

We made better arrangements than was anticipated with the company last year when the river and harbor bill was passed containing the provision I have now offered. That is the reason why $150,000 was inserted. It was proposed that they should be paid $150,000 for the use of the works for ten years, and they agreed to it. I have their agreement before me, but need not incumber the record with it, nor need I read the modified agreement to take $135,000 now.

The Kentucky Legislature met and ceded to the General Government all its right to and authority over the river and the improvements. I have in my hand the act of the Legislature ceding to the United States all of it, as well as the agreement with the company, which need not be read in detail.

We modified the agreement because the time of the lease was shortened. Therefore I have inserted $135,000 instead of $150,000 in my amendment.

I may be asked why did not the State of Kentucky at the last session of its Legislature agree to pay that sum itself? First, because it has surrendered works that it has paid $800,000 for, and that are now valued at $350,000, because these works belonged to it, and it is proposed that the United States shall pay only $135,000 as the beginning of this work of improvement, receiving property worth three times that amount to start with.

In the next place, as the bill passed both Houses last year, containing the provision I now propose, the Kentucky Legislature properly assumed that it had been taken hold of by Congress as a national work. The Legislature of Kentucky adjourned some time ago and will not meet for two years. It assumed, I think fairly, that the proposition having met with the sanction of Congress to take control of these rivers and pay the company less than half what our own engineers had valued the improvements at, and as the State had surrendered all that the State had expended it would not be called upon or expected by Congress to extinguish the claim of the company. All that is clearly set forth in the argument or letter of Governor Knott, supplementing what he has said.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a very able argument prepared last year by Mr. LAFFOON, then and now representing the Second district of Kentucky in Congress. I do this so that members of the other House may see the reasons for this provision, if the Senate should pass the amendment, as I hope we shall. It sets forth very forcibly the reasons why this amendment should be adopted. It is as follows:

SHALL THE GOVERNMENT CONTROL GREEN AND BARREN RIVERS IN KENTUCKY?

[Argument by Hon. POLK LAFFOON.]

As the Representative of the Second district of the State of Kentucky, composed of eight counties, most all of which are directly interested in the free and unobstructed navigation of the Green and Barren Rivers within the State, I desire to submit the following views on this subject:

The river and harbor act, approved March 3, 1879, directed a survey of Green River and its tributaries, Muddy and Barren Rivers, Kentucky. The Secretary of War assigned this survey to a corps of engineers, who submitted a report under February 21, 1880, printed as Senate Executive Document 119, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.

The act of July 5, 1884, provided that the Secretary of War be directed to report to Congress the condition of the Green and Barren Rivers and the provisions and estimates of cost necessary to relieve the same from incumbrance, with a view to such legislation as would render the same free to commerce at the earliest practical period. This question was referred to a corps of engineers, who submitted a report under date of January 27, 1885, printed as House Executive Document No. 212, Forty-eighth Congress, second session.

House resolution of February 15, 1886, directing the Secretary of War "to ascertain and report at the earliest practical period upon what terms the franchises and property of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company in Kentucky, can be conveyed to the United States," which report was submitted under date of March 24, 1886, from the acting Chief of Engineers, printed as House Executive Document No. 152, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.

The river and harbor act of August 5, 1886, provided that the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to ascertain the value and commercial importance of the works and property of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company. The board of engineer officers constituted to carry this provision into effect submitted a report under date of January 24, 1887, printed as House Executive Document No. 111, Forty-ninth Congress, second session.

From the above and other official documents has been gleaned, in a condensed form, for ready and convenient reference, the information furnished as stated.

The Green and Barren Rivers lie wholly within the State of Kentucky, and, with their tributaries, drain an area of about 10,000 square miles, nearly all of which is contained within the State.

* * * * * * *

Green River is distinguished by some remarkable characteristics. It rises in the central portion of Kentucky, flows with a gradual descent in a general course a little south of west to within about 100 miles of its mouth, and thence in a northwesterly direction to the Ohio, 10 miles above Evansville. It drains a large extent of country, comparatively level or moderately hilly, and is therefore not subject to the sudden and torrent-like freshets which characterize rivers that have mountain sources.

A striking feature is its great depth in the last 150 miles of its course, with only occasional obstructions from rocky reefs. In the natural pools thus formed from 20 to 30 feet is a common depth. Another peculiarity is the subterranean character of its sources. Perhaps it is this peculiarity, combined with the great depth, that preserves a comparatively mild temperature in the water, so that the river in its lower portion is rarely obstructed by ice.

The mouth of Green River has always been a noted harbor for boats of every description in the season of ice on the Ohio. Still another peculiarity for a river of its size is the considerable number of tributaries adapted to navigation of from 15 to 30 miles or more, thus extending the area of its usefulness as an avenue for commerce. Pond River, Rough Creek, Mud River, Big Barren, Bear Creek, and Nolin, respectively about 60, 80, 140, and 180 miles from its mouth, are examples of this sort. The river varies in breadth from about 200 yards at the mouth to about 100 yards at the confluence of the Big Barren.

Rock foundations are found at all desirable points for locks and dams, and building materials, timber, and stone of every desirable kind are available everywhere. The banks have an average height of about 30 feet above low water, and the river is bordered by a rich bottom land varying from about 400 yards at the Big Barren to perhaps nearly a mile at the mouth. The bottoms are often overflowed, but less frequently and to a less depth, I think, within the last twelve years than formerly. The change may be ascribed to the clearing of the land for the sake of the timber.

Concerning the mineral resources of the country through which Green and Barren Rivers flow, Mr. John R. Proctor, State geologist of Kentucky, says:

* * * * * * *

"The resources along Green River, Kentucky, are of such a character as to warrant the assertion that if the river was opened to commerce untrammeled there would rapidly follow a large industrial development along its valley, and important contributions would be yearly added to the commerce of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers.

* * * * * * *

"This river, penetrating through the center of the western coal-field of Kentucky, has along its banks, above the water-level, a variety of coals of excellent quality. The principal coals are the main Nolin coal, of Edmonson County (the lowest coal in Western Kentucky), from 3 to 5 feet thick; the Mud River coal (probably the same as the main Nolin), located near the head of slackwater on that stream, a coal well known for its good quality. A barge-load of this coal was taken to St. Louis some years since and tried very successfully in one of the Kingsland (now Vulcan) Company's furnaces.

"Coal No. 9 is 5 feet thick in Muhlenburgh, Ohio, and some of the adjoining counties; coal No. 11 is 6 feet thick on Green River, and coal No. 12 varies in thickness from 2 to 6 feet. Some of these coals have, in years past, obtained high reputations in the markets of the Lower Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. That they are favorably situated along the river for cheap mining, and can be delivered in large barges on the Ohio at the mouth of Green River at seasons when the Upper Ohio is not navigable, should certainly lead to a large development of coal-mining along the river.

"I know of no region richer in coal-measure iron ores than the valley of Green River. These ores are thick, easily mined, convenient to coal, and are equal in quality to coal-measure ores found elsewhere where there is now large development in iron manufactures, with transportation facilities inferior to those of this valley. These ores occur principally in Muhlenburgh, Butler, Edmonson, and Grayson Counties. In this statement brief mention can only be made of a few of the principal iron ores. The ridge extending northward from Green River for 20 miles, between Bear Creek and Green River, contains several beds of ore of workable thickness and good quality. The principal bed is regularly stratified, and is from 3 feet to 5 feet thick over a large area.

"That furnaces along Green River can depend on a reliable supply of cheap and good iron ore there is no question. In addition to the large deposits of ores contiguous to the coals, the excellent limonite-iron ores from the Cumberland River can be delivered to furnaces on Green River at a reasonable cost. These ores have from 45 per cent. to 52 per cent. of metallic iron, and some of them run as low as .07 per cent. in phosphorus. The high-grade ores from Iron Mountain district of Missouri would cost less delivered to furnaces on this river than to furnaces in the Upper Ohio valley, where much of this ore is now used.

"Thus it will be seen that cheap and pure ores are accessible along Green River, and that with the combination of coals, ores, and very pure limestone there should be a large development of iron manufacturing in this valley. Connecting, as this river does, with the great system of water ways of the Mississippi Valley, the production of cheap iron ore will be of great benefit to the consumers of iron in the entire valley. The extensive forests of valuable timber along the river, the quarries of fine building-stone, the clays and other resources to be developed, together with the fertility of the soil, give assurance that the opening of this river to free navigation will bring about an industrial activity widespread in its quickening results on the commerce and trade of the entire country."

IMPROVEMENTS BY THE STATE OF KENTUCKY.

From the preceding extracts and other sources it appears—

That the Green and Barren Rivers form an important line of navigation through a country rich in mineral and agricultural products. In a state of nature these streams were at certain stages obstructed by rapids, which boats could not pass. About fifty years ago the State of Kentucky most wisely improved these rivers by constructing five locks and dams, giving continuous slackwater navigation throughout the year from the Ohio River to Bowling Green, a distance of 175 miles.

The locks and dams were built under difficulties which increased their cost, but the work was well done. These locks were made 150 feet long and 36 feet wide, giving a capacity which was sufficient for the needs of commerce and navigation.

For a number of years after completion the locks were operated and tolls were collected by the State of Kentucky; but in 1868, by an act of the Legislature, the Green and Barren River line of navigation was leased for a period of thirty years to the Green and Barren River Navigation Company, with power to collect tolls, operate mines, run steam-boats, and conduct a general business. The practical effect of this lease has been to give the exclusive right of free transportation to the company and render competition impracticable. This condition of affairs will continue till March 9, 1898, unless the rights of the company are extinguished by purchase or other legal means.

An act of the Kentucky Legislature, approved April 5, 1880, repealed the act of March 9, 1868, and directed the commissioners of the sinking fund "for and on behalf and in the name of the Commonwealth of Kentucky to take possession of the Green and Barren River Line of Navigation, together with all houses, grounds, water-power, works, tools, implements, and machinery belonging thereto, on the 1st day of June, 1880, or as soon thereafter as practicable."

The Green and Barren River Navigation Company declined to surrender the property, and suit was brought by the State in the Franklin circuit court and decided in favor of the company. An appeal was taken to the court of appeals, the supreme court of the State of Kentucky. The decision of the court was as follows:

Court of appeals, Kentucky. Equity. Commissioners of the Sinking Fund vs. Green and Barren River Navigation Company. Case 16. Appeal from Franklin circuit court.

OCTOBER 29, 1880.

1. The State has the same power to improve her navigable streams as to improve her highways; and, when it is necessary to develop the resources of the Commonwealth and facilitate commerce, contracts may be made with individuals or corporations, and, as a consideration for such improvements, the tolls arising from the use of the rivers may be transferred by the State.

2. An exclusive privilege to navigate any stream in the State can not be granted, but it is competent for the State to authorize the corporation improving it, under a contract with the State, to charge tolls prescribed by the General Assembly, reserving the right to all citizens to navigate the stream upon the payment of tolls.

3. The act entitled "An act to incorporate the Green and Barren River Navigation Company," approved March 9, 1868, coupled with the execution of the bond mentioned therein by the appellees, constituted a valid and subsisting contract between the State and appellees.

4. The act of the General Assembly entitled "An act to repeal in part an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Green and Barren River Navigation Company,'" approved April 5, 1880, is unconstitutional and void.

5. The contract between the State and appellees is not the subject of repeal by the General Assembly.

As also bearing on the legal status of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company may be mentioned a suit brought in 1870, in the Daviess circuit court, State of Kentucky, by Joseph McReynolds et al. against C. C. Smallhouse—at that time collector for the company—to restrain the collection of tolls and to compel the collector to allow the boats of said McReynolds to pass the locks without the payment of any tolls to him. This case was decided in favor of the company in the following words:

"After a careful examination of all the objections urged to the constitutionality of that part of the act in question allowing tolls to be collected from boats using these rivers, and all the authorities cited, as well as such others as I have been able to get access to, my conclusion is that none of said objections have been sustained. The petitions are dismissed and injunction dissolved."

This case was carried to the court of appeals, and the decision of the circuit court in favor of the company's right to collect tolls was confirmed.

The court, at the same time, called attention to the fact that the State could, when the same was demanded by public necessity, resume control of the Green and Barren Rivers upon the payment to the company of a just compensation.

In place of such action, as was suggested by the decision of the court, the Kentucky Legislature in 1886 ceded to the United States the five locks and dams on the Green and Barren Rivers, upon the condition that the United States rather than the State should extinguish by "purchase or otherwise the claim of the navigation company to exact tolls and control the rivers."

THE ACT CEDING RIVERS TO THE GENERAL GOVERNMENT.

Chapter 69.—An act to grant the consent of the State of Kentucky to the acquisition by the United States of certain lands within the Commonwealth bordering on Green and Barren Rivers for certain purposes.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same:

SECTION 1. That whenever the United States shall, by purchase or otherwise, extinguish the claim of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company to take tolls and to exercise control over said rivers the consent of the State of Kentucky is hereby given to the acquisition by the United States, by purchase or condemnation, of any lands, buildings, or other property necessary for the purpose of erecting dams, abutments, locks, lock-keepers' dwellings, chutes, and other necessary structures for the construction and maintenance of slackwater navigation on said rivers or for the purpose of constructing canals on the same, and the United States Government shall have title to the ground and sites thus acquired, and all power, authority, and jurisdiction over the same which the Government of the United States may, under the Constitution of the United States and laws made in pursuance thereof, acquire over lands in the State ceded to it for similar purposes, but the State of Kentucky reserves the right to execute processes lawfully issued under its authority within and upon said grounds, sites, rivers, and canals.

SEC. 2. That in case of failure of the United States to agree with the owner or owners of any such lands as the United States deem necessary for the purpose named in the first section of this act it shall be lawful for the United States to apply for condemnation of such land by petition to any judge of a court of record in or nearest to the county where the land may be situated, either in term time or in vacation, notice of the time and place of such application having been first duly given, by publication for thirty days prior to the day of such application, in some newspaper of general circulation published in the county where the land lies, or, if the owner or owners reside in the State of Kentucky, by personal service upon the owner or owners of such land at least twenty days prior to such application; and thereupon it shall be lawful for such judge to appoint three disinterested freeholders of the county where such land lies as commissioners, who, having been first duly sworn to well and duly appraise the damages due the owner or owners of said land proposed to be taken, shall report, in writing, to the said judge the amount of damages to be paid to the owner or owners of such land, which report, upon confirmation by said judge, shall be held as final and binding upon said owner or owners of said land, and upon the amount of such damages being paid to the owner or owners of said land the title of such land shall vest in the United States, and said land shall be exempt from all taxes and assessments so long as it shall remain the property of the United States.

SEC. 3. That if any person or persons shall willfully or maliciously injure any of the lands, buildings, or other property acquired or held under the provisions of this act, such person or persons shall be liable to a fine of not less than $20, and to imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both or either, at the discretion of the court; said offense to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 4. That for the purposes contemplated by this act the State of Kentucky hereby transfers and cedes to the United States the five locks and dams heretofore constructed by the State on said rivers, together with all the grounds and appurtenances belonging to the same; this grant to become effectual upon the extinguishment of the claim of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company, as provided in the first section of this act, and when the Government of the United States shall by law assume control of the improvement and navigation of said rivers.

SEC. 5. This act to take effect from its passage.

CHAS. OFFUTT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JAMES R. HINDMAN,
Speaker of the Senate.

Approved February 20, 1886.

J. PROCTOR KNOTT.

J. A. MCKENZIE,
Secretary of State.

COMMERCIAL IMPORTANCE.

The Green River and its tributary, the Big Barren, are streams most favorably adapted to purposes of navigation, and they, with their branches, are the natural outlet for a country rich in mineral and agricultural wealth, and by connecting this tributary country, through the Ohio, with the markets of the Mississippi Valley are capable of being made important navigable waters of the United States.

These rivers are at the present time, by reason of the charter granted a private corporation by the State of Kentucky, virtually closed to general commerce, and the country tributary to the rivers is placed at a great disadvantage.

The tolls, which prohibit competition in transportation, and the uncertain results of any enterprise which is dependent on the will of a monopoly, prevent the investment of capital which is necessary for a full development of the country.

Considering the relative advantages of this line of navigation and the natural resources of the country, as compared with other streams and territory, it appears most probable that the improvement of the Green River and its tributaries would have been undertaken by the United States long ago had not the conditions been such as to withdraw these rivers from the fostering care of the General Government.

The value of existing commerce is placed at $6,000,000 per annum. The possible commerce with the rivers in a free and fully improved condition is very great, greater in fact than that of many other streams which are now being improved by Congressional appropriations at great expense.

President Smallhouse, of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company, writing to United States engineers on the commercial importance of these rivers says:

"As to the value of commerce on these rivers I can only give an estimate based upon the business of this company. During the year 1883 there was received in tolls $11,955.21, and for the first nine months in 1884, $7,897.76 for vessels other than those belonging to this company. We estimate the business done by this company to be about four-fifths of the commerce of the rivers. Our boats carry in the neighborhood of 50,000 tons of freight annually. The coal output will aggregate 70,000 tons, and the lumber interest will approximate 200,000,000 feet, counting the sawed lumber and logs rafted out of the river.

"It is estimated that 6,000 hogsheads of tobacco are shipped to market from counties adjacent to the rivers, and depending upon them for transportation facilities. With a large trade in staves, hoop-poles, tan-bark, and stone added to the figures I have given, I would estimate the total value of the commerce of Green and Barren Rivers per annum at about $6,000,000; more probably above than below that amount. This does not represent the resources of the section of country to be benefited. The one item of coal, with a present output of 70,000 tons could be increased sevenfold, and the timber product is inexhaustible.

"In the counties adjacent to this line of navigation, it is safe to assert, 50,000,000 pounds of tobacco are annually grown, and fully one-half of that amount would go to market by way of these rivers were they made free and thus afford cheaper transportation. Estimating our receipts from tolls at $10,000 annually, and supposing that to represent one-fifth of the tonnage passing through the locks, our own vessels constituting four-fifths, it will be seen that lockage fees alone constitute a tax of $50,000 per annum upon the commerce of the rivers.

"Indeed, upon a careful estimate, the lockage upon our own boats and barges last year, if compelled to pay at schedule rates, would amount to $51,000. Of course there is a great deal of stuff passes our locks over the dams in high water upon which we collect no tolls, and is not included in the estimate I have given you. This estimate is based upon such data as I have at command, and while possibly not accurate, yet may serve to afford you an idea of the value of these rivers as navigable waters. If you should desire more specific information I do not know from what source it can be procured. I believe my figures will approximate the true values."

This estimate does not apparently include the local traffic on the rivers. The value of existing commerce was in 1885, estimated at $6,000,000.

AS COMPARED WITH OTHER RIVERS.

The commercial statistics of Kentucky River, as published in reports of the Chief of Engineers, show a volume of business amounting in 1883 to about $3,937,000, in 1884 to $5,013,000, and in 1885 to $5,358,000. The increase is attributed to the improvements made by the United States. The Government has already appropriated for the improvement of the Kentucky and the consequent development of its resources nearly $1,000,000. The great natural advantages of the Green and Barren Rivers as navigable streams and the relative importance of the tributary country would appear to entitle these streams to at least as much consideration as has been given to the Kentucky and other streams emptying into the Ohio.

In regard to the Great Kanawha, in the improvement of which the Government has already expended nearly $2,000,000, Colonel Craighill in his report for 1885 says:

"As the improvement of the river has progressed the commerce on it, notably the shipment of coal, has greatly increased. * * * The full advantage of the improvement can not be realized until it is complete."

For the improvement of the Cumberland, the reported river commerce of which is no greater than that of the Green and Barren, there has been appropriated by the General Government about $800,000.

The amount of the future increase of commerce of the Green and Barren, which would doubtless follow the removal of the existing obstructive tax and the extension of the system of improvement as far as justified by the interests involved, can not be definitely given, but the resources of the country are very great, and their full development would seem wise and desirable. The natural products, which can be obtained in almost unlimited quantities from the Green and Barren River district, such as coal, iron, hardwood, lumber, etc., are needed and would find ready markets in the Mississippi Valley; and, owing to location and surrounding circumstances, would, it is claimed, reach their markets at much less cost and with less interruption from ice, low water, etc., than those from other sections of the country upon which dependence is now placed. Such conditions must result in reduction of cost to the consumer and consequent benefit to the general public.

VALUE OF EXISTING WORKS OF IMPROVEMENT.

These works, which are the property of the State of Kentucky, consists of five locks and dams. The present intrinsic value of the works is placed by the board at $350,000, and the money value of benefits which would accrue to general commerce from a release from the control exercised by the Green and Barren River Navigation Company is considered to be not less than $30,000 per annum, which yearly saving would amount, during the remaining life of the company's lease, to an amount equal, at least, to the present intrinsic value of works.

CONDITION NECESSARY FOR FREE COMMERCE.

As these rivers are controlled by the Green and Barren River Navigation Company, whose charter extends to March 9, 1898, a little more than ten years from the present time, it was necessary to ascertain if the company would release its control of these rivers and upon what terms it could be effected. Accordingly, a letter to that effect for this purpose was addressed to the president of the company.

In reply he stated that for the sum of $135,000 the company will transfer to the Government its rights and privileges to collect tolls, and will convey whatever claims it may have in the property acquired by its charter from the State of Kentucky, giving the United States free and unrestricted control of all the locks and dams upon the Green and Barren Rivers. The company claims to have expended at least $300,000 in making the necessary repairs to the locks and dams to put them in working order and to preserve them in their present condition.

It is also stated that the company's boats, which are the only ones plying these rivers regularly, carry yearly about 50,000 tons of freight, which is estimated to be four-fifths of the commerce upon the rivers. According to the statement made, the company receives about $10,000 annually for tolls upon the remaining one-fifth. Assuming that the other four-fifths pay tolls in the same proportion, it results in a total tax of $50,000 upon the present commerce of these rivers.

This statement is sufficient to clearly show the restrictions which are imposed upon commerce in this locality and to fully account for its slow development. The resources of the valley drained by the Green and Barren Rivers are very great. It abounds in timber, coal, and iron, besides being in great part a rich agricultural country. Should the United States purchase the rights of the navigation company, these interests, with free locks, would undoubtedly receive a great impetus and would rapidly develop into large proportions.

WHY THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD ASSUME CONTROL.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 26, 1886.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. The great bulk of coal used by the consumers of the West and the South comes from the State of Pennsylvania and in part from the State of Kentucky. Tributary to these rivers, the Monongahela and the Green and Barren Rivers, are the exhaustless coal-fields which supply this coal.

Years ago private enterprise improved these rivers, which were then and are now navigable water ways of the United States. What is proposed now, sir, is simply an inquiry on the part of Congress as to what steps may and should be taken for ridding these rivers of the monopolists, in whose grasp they have been held, for the benefit of the whole country.

If Congress has the right to open the Muscle Shoals of the Tennessee River or the Cascades on the Columbia River, in Oregon, and make them free to the commerce of the country, why is it that we can not buy out improvements which have been already put there by private parties on other rivers which come within the designation of "navigable water ways" of the United States? To ascertain whether it is advisable to do that is the pending proposition, pure and simple.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Why, sir, if it were not for the lakes and rivers of the country the freights on the railroads would be infinitely higher than they now are. You could multiply them by three or four times their present rate and then would not satisfy the railroad corporations if they were not kept within bounds by water way competition. Tolls upon commerce that floats upon our water ways is just what the railways most desire. Only make your tolls high enough, and the managers of railroads will laugh in their sleeves while we appropriate money to improve rivers and harbors.

Tolls are odious, especially if levied upon commerce that floats upon the highways that God has given us. There is nothing that so embarrasses the commerce between the States as tolls levied upon it, no matter whether levied by railroads or navigation companies. The theory of protection in this country is against tolls upon interstate commerce. The theory of protection would levy tolls upon international commerce and give us the most absolute freedom of commerce between the States.

There is no danger whatever of monopoly in manufactories of any kind in this country if you will have free commerce between the States. There will always be competition enough to make iron cheap, for instance, if you will allow the coal and iron to go from the State of Alabama into the State of Pennsylvania, if it will go there, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES] told us the other day it would if you will only take off your tolls. Just make the rivers free, and the question of cheap transportation is solved at once.

Mr. HALSELL. Those rich ores of iron and coal have remained undeveloped in the bosom of the earth from the beginning of time, and they will remain there forever undeveloped if we are to depend upon the navigation company which now holds a monopoly of this slack water navigation. That navigation company has established such enormous tolls as practically to prevent the development of that whole country, and unless something is done by the Government of the United States for better communication and safer and cheaper transportation the resources of those rich valleys will remain forever undisturbed. Therefore I trust the day is not distant when the Government of the United States will take charge of these works and relieve the people from the unjust exactions under which they now suffer.

The Legislature of the State of Kentucky, at its present session, recognizing the propriety and importance to the commerce of the country that the Government of the United States should have control of the navigable waters of the country, passed an act ceding to the General Government the property, rights, and franchises which she has, upon condition that the lease which the Green and Barren River Navigation Company has shall be extinguished.

From the foregoing extracts, and recognizing the importance for prompt and favorable action on the part of this Congress at its present session, the conclusion is deduced that the forthcoming appropriation for rivers and harbors should authorize the expenditure of $135,000 to extinguish the franchise of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company and open those rivers to commerce between the States.

And I hope that the House will give due consideration to this subject and relieve my people and the commerce of the country from this onerous burden which has so long oppressed them.

We have appealed to the Legislature of the State of Kentucky; we have appealed to the courts of first and last resort, and have failed, and now appeal to you, the only forum from which we can ever expect relief.

I have only to add that I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment I have offered, and carry out the policy that Congress was generous enough to adopt last year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The amendment was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to state that I expect to leave, perhaps for the remainder of the session, the early part of the next week. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has kindly consented that I shall precede him in making some remarks on Monday morning in relation to the steam-railroads in this District. In order not to trespass upon the time of the Senator from Massachusetts, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HAWLEY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3246) to increase the pension of Michael A. Dillon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 97) for the printing of the report of the Newburgh (N. Y.) centennial celebration; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BERRY. On page 45, line 1091, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "eight" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

Improving White River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement. $50,000.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, this amendment was prepared and intended to be offered by my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas], but he is unavoidably absent from the Senate to-day, and requested me to offer it for him.

In the printed report of the engineer in regard to this river there is a statement that he will file a subsequent report at some future period. That new report did not get in in time to be printed with the general report of the engineers, and from some cause or other it was not presented to the committee of the House of Representatives, and was not known to the House at the time it passed the river and harbor bill. I now have the written report of the engineer in regard to White River before me. From that report in regard to White River, without reading at length, Senators will find that he states that from the town of Forsyth, in the State of Missouri, to the mouth of White River, at the Mississippi, is a distance of 502 miles. This is divided into three sections, being from Forsyth to Buffalo Shoals, 112 miles; from Buffalo Shoals to Newport, 135 miles, and from Newport to the Mississippi River, 253 miles. The engineer states as to the first section, from Forsyth, in Missouri, to Buffalo Shoals, in Arkansas, that the expense of improving that would be so very great that he does not recommend that Congress enter upon the work. In regard to the two other sections the following language will be found in his report:

The other two sections should have immediate attention, as they are pre-eminently worthy of improvement, and when properly improved will remain so for many years, as this is a stream not subject to those rapid changes in regimen common to so many of the streams of the Lower Mississippi Valley. Its waters are very clear at all times compared with other rivers in the State, its banks cave but little, and from the mouth of Black River, a few miles above Newport, it will require a comparatively small outlay to make it a great highway of commerce.

Again, in a subsequent part of the report, the engineer says:

The benefits to be conferred are so great that the outlay seems insignificant.

I will state furthermore for the middle section, that is, from Buffalo Shoals down to Newport, in Arkansas, the engineer recommends the sum of about $6,000, the object and purpose of that being to remove certain obstructions, particularly at Buffalo Shoals and at other points upon the river, he stating that by means of this small expenditure a depth at lowest water mark of from 2½ to 3 feet can be obtained in the middle section.

For the lower section from Newport, Ark., to the mouth of the river where it enters the Mississippi, which is 253 miles, he recommends the sum of $100,000. In the report he states that a uniform depth, with a small expenditure on that river, can be obtained of 5 feet water at the lowest water mark during the year.

Mr. FRYE. How much?

Mr. BERRY. Five feet at low-water mark on the lower section of the river from Newport to the mouth at the Mississippi.

White River is one of the most important streams in the southern section of country. It is not so broad as the Arkansas River, but it is a much deeper stream in the lower part of White River, and can be made navigable at all times of the year as far as Newport.

The engineer states further that at those points where less than 5 feet can be obtained at low-water mark it is in consequence of the spread of the river, and with a very little work, by means of dikes confining the water, a uniform channel can be made of 5 feet depth from Newport down to the mouth of the river.

I will state that there is no part of my State that is more thickly settled than along White River. Some of the finest farming lands in the South lie upon the lower banks of White River. In the upper portion, the middle section that the engineer recommends be improved, they have no other means of transportation whatever. They have no railroads in that section of the country. The river furnishes the only mode of getting the cotton raised there to the Mississippi River and getting it to market, unless they haul it by wagons a distance of some 85 or 90 miles, or in some cases more than 100 miles, to Springfield in the State of Missouri.

These are the facts in regard to the river. The engineer recommends that $105,000, or something more than that, be appropriated for the lower and middle sections of the stream. He says about $50,000 can be utilized in the coming year, and that not less than $50,000 should be appropriated.

As I have said before, if this report had been before the House committee or before the House of Representatives while the bill was being considered there, I am confident that they would have granted this appropriation. The report was made in January, 1888, and from some cause was not known to that committee, and is now before the Senate for the first time.

I trust, in view of the facts, that the chairman of the committee will consent that the sum of $50,000 may be inserted where $100,000 was recommended, and that the matter will be allowed to go into conference; and I assert now that if there is any objection by the conferees on the part of the House, and if there is any difficulty about it, I shall not complain if it is stricken out. But in view of the fact that the report was not before the House, and is now here, and in view of the importance of the work, and the large number of people living along the river to be benefited by its improvement, and the great disappointment it will be to them if the appropriation should not be made, I hope that the committee will consent that this increased amount may be inserted in the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I have but a word or two to say in relation to this and other amendments offered from the floor of the Senate. There never, within my memory, has been a river and harbor bill which has received the attention this one has. Fortunately it came over to the Senate at a very early day. It was considered item by item by the Committee on Commerce with great care. Every Senator was notified to be present to present his wishes touching the rivers and harbors of his section of the country. Many Senators, all who desired, appeared. The bill was then reported to the Senate, ordered to be printed, and recommitted. Having been printed it then came to the attention of all Senators again, and again Senators appeared before the committee, and, in many cases, we made additional amendments.

I repeat, no bill has ever been presented to Congress within my memory, which extends over eighteen years, that has received the consideration this bill has. I do not believe there is an appropriation in it which can not be justified fully and completely by the reports of the engineers, unless it be the appropriation for the Lower Mississippi, in which I have no faith whatever myself, not believing that a dollar of the money appropriated tends to help navigation. As to all the rest of it, in my judgment it is a thorough bill, and it can be justified on the floor of the Senate or anywhere else.

Now, take the White River. The committee had the reports before them, and it was estimated that a yearly sum of $8,000 would be required for snagging and repairs of dams, etc., until a plan for permanent improvement could be adopted. The committee adopted that recommendation, appropriating $8,000 to take care of the river. White River can be taken care of for a year for the $8,000.

Since then, as the Senator says, a report of the local engineers has been made touching a plan for the permanent improvement of the river. That report has not been submitted to the chief engineer, has not been approved by him, has not been submitted to the committee of the House, has not been approved by them, has not been submitted to the committee of the Senate, has not been approved by them. Under those circumstances it seems to me it would be much more sensible for the Senate to accept the action of the committees of the two Houses and let this go for one year longer.

The Senator from Arkansas says that the local engineer recommends the expenditure of $108,000, and hence he asks for $50,000. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred if that had been submitted to the Chief Engineer, and he had approved of it, he would have said that $50,000 could be profitably used during the coming year, and the two committees would have cut that down one-half, which would be $25,000.

Mr. BERRY. I will take $25,000 if I can not do any better. I will state to the Senator that this is a peculiar case from the fact that we did not know that this report was here. It was not in the printed reports; it is a written report. If my colleague and myself had known that there was such a report here on file we should have presented it to the committee and urged it, but it did not come to our knowledge until after the bill was reported back to the Senate.

In view of that fact I do insist and hope that the chairman of the committee will allow the amount which he says would probably have been recommended by the committee at $25,000 to be inserted. I will modify the amendment so as to make the amount $25,000, with the consent of the Senate, and ask that it be reduced to $25,000, inasmuch as the chairman of the committee objects to $50,000.

I think in view of the fact that we had no knowledge that there was such a report it ought not to have been expected that we should go before the committee, because we could not have done anything without the report. It came to our knowledge after the bill was reported, and I repeat to the chairman of the committee that after the bill goes to a conference committee, if there is any objection on the part of the House, or if the Senate conferees can find any well-founded objection to it, no complaint will be made if the increase is stricken out. I hope the Senator will allow the amendment at $25,000 to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas as modified. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1091 of section 1, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "eight" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Improving White River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to move an amendment on page 66. On page 64 there is an appropriation of $1,100,000 for the Missouri River. The committee have distributed that in part, but not the whole of it. I move, after the word "Kansas," in line 1600, to add:

That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Mandan, Dak.

This does not increase the appropriation and it carries out what the committee attempted to do—distribute the appropriation. I am informed by the Delegate, and Dakota is not represented here, that a condition of things exists at Mandan in reference to the landing which makes it absolutely necessary that some money should be appropriated at that particular place. Mandan is a small town on the Missouri River and the crossing of the Northern Pacific Railroad. It is quite an important commercial point on the west side of the river, and it is only proposed that so much as may be necessary shall be appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. VEST. After taking out the local improvements from the $1,100,000 it will only leave some $325,000 to be expended by the engineers in the general improvement of the river.

The committee were governed by the recommendations of the Missouri River Commission. The engineers were here with their estimates for Omaha, Plattsmouth, Nebraska City, Brownsville, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Arrow Rock. Mandan is not included in the list, and the $25,000 now asked simply decreases the amount to be expended on the whole river from the mouth of the Missouri to Fort Benton—not to Sioux City, but the whole length of the river.

I was opposed, as I can not repeat too often, to these local appropriations, but when the committee overwhelmingly defeated me on that proposition, then I considered myself bound to follow the report of the Missouri River Commission, the engineer's report, and Mandan was not included. It seems to me very clear that we ought not to advance the amount of the general appropriation for the river. If it is necessary to assist the navigation of the river to make this improvement at Mandan, of course the Engineer Bureau will make it. They are not restricted at all. They have $325,000 within their discretion to make an improvement at any place where they may please, provided it is for the general navigation of the stream. As to specific appropriations I simply followed in drawing the clause the recommendations of the Engineers.

Mr. TELLER. I have no personal knowledge of this matter, but the Delegate for whom I moved the amendment states that it is absolutely necessary that some money should be expended at Mandan, and he suggested $25,000. If the Senator thinks that is too much, make it $10,000 or $15,000; I shall have no objection. The Delegate states that the condition is such that the boats find it difficult to land. What is being done with this money in the various places is to provide so that the boats can get to land, as I understand. I will modify the amendment in the way I have suggested if it is agreeable to the members of the committee.

Mr. VEST. In the absence of any recommendation of the engineers on the subject, I should think it would be bad legislation. We can not take the personal statement of the Delegate in regard to it. I have before me the report of the engineers. They say nothing about this proposed improvement. As a matter of course, if we were to take the declaration of Representatives or Delegates there would be no end to the appropriations. It seems to me to be bad legislation. We had better leave this matter to the engineers. They have $325,000 for the river, and they can take any amount of that they please for this purpose.

Mr. TELLER. They can if they want to do so.

Mr. VEST. Yes; if they desire to do it. In the absence of their recommendation it seems to me we ought to adhere to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. There is not any doubt that the engineers can expend money there. They have expended money at these other points for the same purpose. They would expend it for the very same purpose that they will expend it at Leavenworth, that they will expend it at St. Joseph, Mo., at Arrow Rock, and other places, as I understand, where the points are designated at which they are to expend the money. It is for the purpose of enabling the boats to reach the shore, as I understand. I have no doubt the same state of facts exists at Mandan that exists at other places on the river.

Mr. VEST. I will say to my friend from Colorado that the only thing we can go by in the committee or in the Senate or in the House of Representatives is the report of the engineers who have charge of the river. The engineer in charge of the Upper Missouri River has not recommended this. There has been no estimate or survey for it. The Senator will appreciate at once the fact that if we are to go upon an outside statement and take anybody else's say-so about the matter instead of the board of engineers, we are at sea at once. The difference between Mandan, and Leavenworth, Atchison, St. Joseph, and these other places is that the engineers have surveyed and estimated for these points.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that.

Mr. VEST. Here we have simply a request from a Delegate. I do not know anything about the facts, but it seems to me dangerous to do what is asked.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the engineers have not got as high as Mandan. That is the trouble, I presume.

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes.

Mr. TELLER. There are no appropriations as high as Mandan; they are all below.

Mr. VEST. I do not know about the appropriations, but the engineer who has charge of that part of the river is in the city of Washington now, for I received a note from him this morning. The Missouri River Commission have made a survey through all that portion of the river and it was given in their report. The same engineer is in charge there, Captain Sears, who has charge of the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. TELLER. I have no knowledge on the subject except what I have stated to the Senate. I do not desire to press the amendment when the Senate is so thin that we can not have an intelligent vote. I have called attention to it, and I believe I will withdraw the amendment as the committee seem to be against it.

Mr. PALMER. I rise to offer an amendment to come in after line 1257, on page 52.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, on page 52, after line 1257, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of the two improved water ways known as the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company Canal, and the Lake Superior Ship-Canal, Railway, and Iron Company Canal, being the improved harbors of refuge and the water communication across Keweenaw Point from Keweenaw Bay to Lake Superior, by way of Portage River and Lake, in the State of Michigan, and to make the same a free passage-way and harbors of refuge to commerce and navigation, $350,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a full and absolute conveyance of said two harbors of refuge, canals, easements, rights of way, piers, docks, and appurtenances of every nature belonging to or connected with said works, or either of them, has been made to the United States by the owner or owners thereof, and the Attorney-General of the United States shall have certified to the Secretary of War that the title is perfect. And when such title shall have been acquired, the said canals and harbors of refuge shall thereafter be subject to the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I do not suppose that it is necessary for the information of the Senate that I should dilate on the propriety of the purchase of the Portage Lake Canal. It has been voted for by the Senate three times; it has been passed by both Houses once, and was in the last bill, which was vetoed by the President. It belongs to that system of improvements which saves to the people of the United States, as has been demonstrated, over $200,000,000 a year in freights.

It has another advantage. It furnishes two harbors of refuge on an inhospitable coast, where within the last twenty years two hundred lives have been lost; one-half of whom, at least, or probably three-quarters, might have been saved if the Government had this canal and its facilities for creating harbors of refuge.

Again, it is at the base of Keweenaw Point, a long promontory which projects into Lake Superior and compels a detour by all vessels going between Sault Ste. Marie and Duluth, making a loss of 125 miles on the single trip or 250 miles on the round trip.

The commerce of Lake Superior, which has increased from 700,000 tons to over 6,000,000 tons within eight years, is increasing now in the same ratio, and the bulk of that commerce will come from beyond the canal which is now proposed to be obtained. The Vermillion iron mines, the Gogebic iron mountains, the wheat and flour of Minnesota and Dakota are all beyond the proposed purchase, and will be accommodated by the canal and through freights proportionately reduced.

To correct any misapprehension in regard to this canal, I will say that it is composed of two canals which connect a lake called Portage Lake. One canal was built by an appropriation of the Government, the other was private property, and over $400,000 has been spent of private money on that single canal. So that the Government is not in a position of buying something that it has once paid for. It is buying something that it has never put any money into in addition to a canal that it has made appropriations for.

That has been recommended by the Engineer-in-Chief and by the subordinate engineers, and if it was not for taking up the time of the Senate, I should ask that the report be read, which is exhaustive and is an argument in favor of the purchase of these canals.

I shall be glad to answer any questions if any one desires any light on the subject. I do not think it requires any more explanation unless there shall be some inquiries.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senator whether or not he is willing to withdraw this amendment at this time and offer it when the bill is in the Senate? It is entirely evident that there is no quorum here now, and if a division is demanded it will stop the further progress of the bill. There will be the same opportunity to offer it in the Senate as there is now.

Mr. PALMER. I would say that if that objection had been made before three or four other appropriations had been voted in I should consider myself on the same basis. I do not feel willing now to defer it until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator in charge of this bill will demand a separate vote on those which have been inserted.

Mr. SAWYER. Let me suggest that this be inserted now, and a separate vote can be had on it afterward in the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. All I ask is the same treatment that has been conceded to others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. PALMER. I ask for a division.

Mr. FRYE. That will end the case. I hope the Senator will not ask a division. The Senator will have an opportunity to offer the amendment in the Senate. A division simply stops all progress with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator insist on his demand for a division?

Mr. PALMER. I withdraw the call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for a division is withdrawn. The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer an amendment.

Mr. VEST. I desire to give notice that I shall ask a separate vote in the Senate on the Hennepin Canal amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call for reservations when the bill is reported to the Senate. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is, in section 1, page 28, at the end of line 675, to add:

To be expended above the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad bridge.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Susquehanna River, Maryland and Pennsylvania: Continuing improvement, $10,000, to be expended above the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad bridge.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not suppose there will be any objection to the amendment. The same provision was in the bill of last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALTHALL. On line 971, section 1, page 40, I move to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Improving Yazoo River, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $32,000; of which $10,000 shall be used in repairing snag-boat Meigs and $8,000 for constructing a pumping dredge-boat.

I suppose there will be no objection to the amendment as it does not increase the appropriation, but merely affects the apportionment.

Mr. FRYE. What reason is there for the change?

Mr. WALTHALL. The reason is that since this bill was printed the engineer in charge of this work has stated that at the present prices of material the dredge boat can not be constructed for $7,000.

Mr. FRYE. That is a good reason. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. On page 80, in section 11, after line 106, I desire to add an amendment for a survey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 80, section 11, after line 106 it is proposed to insert:

Big Sandy River, from Catlettsburgh to Pikeville, on Louisa Fork, and the mouth of Pond Creek on Tug Fork.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I move, on page 38, section 1, line 916, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Improving St. John's River, Florida, from Jacksonville to the ocean, $250,000.

I have a letter from the engineer in charge saying that this amount is necessary for the St. John's River. I presume that we are to rely on the reports of the engineers. This amount will be necessary to make the great river accessible. He writes as follows:

Since sending my report concerning the present condition of the work at the mouth of the St. John's River, as called for by your resolution, the annual survey of the work has been completed. This shows a most gratifying increase of depth in the bar, but also shows an increased shoaling in the "middle ground" near the mouth of the river, predicted in my annual report for 1887. (Report of Chief of Engineers, part 2, page 1213.) This will make more necessary than ever the expenditure of the largest sum possible at the mouth of the river in order to hold what we have and to prevent the formation of a bad bar here before the north channel has broken through. The $300,000 I asked for was limited to the barest necessities for good work at this point. Only one-half of it was given, and it is proposed to expend a portion of this elsewhere.

Since the annual report some of the work has been destroyed by the cutting down of the appropriation and the consequent inability to protect it. The engineer reports in this letter that the bars of the river before the artificial channel made by the jetties had been cut through will imperil the existence of the jetties, destroy the work which has already been done, and the millions of dollars expended there will have to be reappropriated unless this amount of money is given to enable him to remove the obstructions and straighten the jetties at that point.

I submit, therefore, that a clear case is made for this increase of appropriation, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. FRYE. There is $150,000 appropriated here to the St. John's River, and in order that the engineers might have the opportunity if, as they say, it may become necessary to use it on the channel at the mouth of the river, we made the appropriation to cover down to and including the mouth of the river.

The State of Florida has been treated with very remarkable generosity by the Senate Committee on Commerce and by the House committee, too, and I think the Senator is asking altogether too much when he asks the Senate to almost double this large appropriation of $150,000. I hope he will not ask it, and if he does, I hope the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. CALL. I ask for this increase on the strength of this letter.

Mr. FRYE. I read the letter.

Mr. CALL. The letter states an absolute necessity for the increase of this amount, for the expenditure of $250,000. I am not making an appeal to the generosity of the Senate. There is every reason to suppose that not only $250,000 will be needed next year, but more for the continuation of this work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. PASCO. I trust this amendment will be agreed to. The necessity of it is absolutely shown by the letter of the engineer. The improvement is of great importance, and the work is very necessary to the commerce of the country. I have seen the improvement myself, and from my knowledge of it I am satisfied this increase is necessary. The engineer has made an estimate for the improvement of the river, and he tells you that this sum is needed to continue and preserve the work already done. I trust the amendment offered by my colleague will be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I know the importance of this river in Florida, but it is not so important to Florida as it is to the people of the United States generally.

The question is whether we shall adhere to an iron rule, which I understand the Committee on Commerce has adopted, of allowing a certain proportion of the estimates made by the engineers. They will so far adhere to it as to imperil works which have already been undertaken, whereby, if we are to make the improvements, as I hope we are, there will be required a larger appropriation at some future time. We might postpone appropriations in some cases to a future time if there was a financial pressure, but the Treasury is overflowing, there is more money in the Treasury than is necessary for the uses of the Government, and where an improvement can be made which is of real benefit to the country and where the money can be profitably expended, it occurs to me that we ought not to be guided as to the amount by any idea that we will at some future time make an additional appropriation to complete the improvement. It seems to me that this is the appropriate time to make the necessary and proper appropriation.

Mr. STEWART. I am in favor of the appropriation. I believe it is needed and that it will be highly beneficial. I have been quite recently over the place where the money is to be expended.

In regard to all these appropriations I would say that the work can be done this year 28 per cent. cheaper than in ordinary times. We are giving to bondholders that much premium because we want to get the money out of the Treasury, and now is the time to do the work when we can do it cheap. We can do it cheaper than at any other time. I would rather the 27 or 28 per cent. should be spent in Florida in improving that beautiful harbor and in making it advantageous to commerce than in having it thrown away on the bondholders.

Mr. BECK. I have been in Florida, and have gone to the mouth of the St. John's River and consulted with the engineer in charge, who knew all about it, and I examined that bar with as much care as I was able to do, not being an engineer, and it is apparent to my mind that there is danger of destroying the work already done at the mouth of the St. John's River, so that we shall have hereafter to repeat what we have already done. We had better appropriate a sufficient sum to make the work good and secure.

At that time the commerce of the St. John's River was being carried on in boats of not over 300 tons. That was about all that could then pass the bar. We were assured that if the improvement was made which is now going on, vessels of 3,000 tons could pass over the bar, and, as has been very well said to us, the difference between carrying our freights, lumber, cotton, and other things on vessels of 300 tons and 3,000 tons is equal to a profit of 10 per cent.

I never saw anything so important to the commerce of the whole country, not only to the St. John's River, not only to Florida, but to the people as far north as Boston. Baltimore, Philadelphia, Savannah, and all the great lines are competing for the commerce of that country. The commerce of the United States and the commerce of the world would be benefited by this improvement. The improvement of the St. John's River, one of the most magnificent streams in the country, would build up and establish commerce for miles up that river that its present magnitude can furnish no idea of.

I know the Committee on Commerce is loaded down with applications for increased appropriations. I know how the failure to sign the bill last year has doubled their embarrassment, and I know how thankless it is to resist appeals from all parts of the country; but from a personal examination made on the ground, and with a knowledge of the changes going on in that locality, I am satisfied that we can do better by not straining a point. I think the better policy would be to increase the appropriation. I spent a day especially for the purpose of examining the river. I had no idea of the nature of it or the magnitude of it until I made that examination.

Mr. VEST. There is an appropriation of $150,000 already in the bill for the St. John's. If it is to be increased, others will ask for increases on the same ground. I will not go into the argumentation as to the form of these bills, but the allowance already in the bill for this river is sufficient in proportion to the amounts allowed others. By adding to all these items we are in danger of swamping the river and harbor bill and having a repetition of what occurred in the last Congress. The reports show an amount of money still on hand absolutely unused.

I say to my friend from Florida that if he were on the committee he would hear the same sort of argument in regard to almost every case. There is nothing to equal the amount of eloquence that is expended to secure increased appropriations; but it is simply a question as to what we are to do as legislators. If the ideas of the Senator from Nevada should obtain, you may throw aside all limitations and appropriate the whole revenue in the Treasury. The estimates of the Bureau of Engineers, though, are two and a half times what this bill appropriates.

Mr. STEWART. I distinctly said that I would rather spend the surplus money that is in the Treasury for making necessary improvements when the work can be done cheaply. Three-fourths or one-half, I suppose, of all the money expended on rivers and harbors is lost by commencing work and letting it go to decay. Nature will recover itself, and much that you have expended is lost by dribbling expenditures for purely national work, when we can do it 27 per cent. cheaper now than at any other time. I say I would be willing to let commerce have the benefit of the surplus rather than the bondholders.

Mr. GEORGE. Would it not be better to spend the money now in this way?

Mr. VEST. I see no connection between bond purchases and the river and harbor bill. I decline to accept any challenge to go into a discussion of that sort. We in the Committee on Commerce have done the best we could. All my effort has been to get this bill to a point where it can become a law. We can not spend $100,000,000 on this bill. There is a limit; and yet we are appealed to now to add $100,000 to another item, and so on, because we have plenty of money in the Treasury.

We must have some sort of rule in regard to these appropriations and we must adhere to it. The appropriation for Baltimore Harbor was cut down, and surely that is very important to commerce. My friend from Oregon wanted a large sum for the improvement of the Columbia River, and so it goes. Every one wants something for his own State. I am informed that the rule laid down has been observed on the whole. I do not object to Florida, but I appeal to the Senate to stand by the work of its committee.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, in reply to what has been said by the Senator from Missouri, I wish to give a special reason for making this increase at the present time.

I do not find that any such rule as he has stated has been carried out. This estimate is designed to preserve the work already accomplished. The rule is very well, but there are exceptions always. There are a great many works where the rule may be applied, but here is a large, important, and expensive work that is in danger if it is not supported and continued. On the St. John's River jetties have been constructed and they are in danger of being swept away by any storm unless they are completed and perfected. When the work was suspended the engineer was afraid the jetties would be swept away, which would require the expenditure of additional money. It is false economy not to preserve work already accomplished. So I urge that this is an exception to the rule laid down by the committee, which may do very well in other cases, but there must be some exceptions to it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that this bill—and I do not complain of it—increases quite largely the plan of improvement for the harbor at Savannah. To show the superior merit of this case, the engineer alludes to that and points out the fact that the plan of improvement at the expense of $680,000 has deepened this bar until vessels drawing 12 feet of water pass over it, and the whole of this work is now liable to be destroyed by the storms and the accumulation of water likely to arise, and he points out to Congress that this fact has been developed since his annual report, and hence the necessity of this appropriation, 600 feet of the jetties having been swept away a year or two since by a similar failure to make the appropriation estimated for. He calls attention to the fact that this great work, which has accomplished so much, is today about to be destroyed for the want of an adequate appropriation to strengthen it, which he says will take $250,000.

The argument of the Senator from Missouri does not apply to this case at all. This is a case of the improvement of the harbor. It is a case in which an important work is about to be destroyed, and that fact is specially called to the attention of Congress by a report of the engineer made in view of late developments and the necessity of strengthening this specific work. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EVARTS. I offer an amendment on page 9, line 189, of section 1, by striking out "ten" before "thousand" and inserting "twenty;" so that the clause will read:

Improving harbor at Glen Cove, N. Y., $20,000.

In the provisions for the minor relations of commerce to the city of New York I have given notice of amendments, but this is the only one I shall ask attention to, as I believe it perhaps has not been so fully considered as it should be.

Glen Cove is a good bay, and is a place of large manufacturing interests, which are capable of further enlargement if there was a proper improvement of the approach by water to it. It is the most important harbor in Long Island Sound between New York and Bridgeport, which is 60 miles from New York. This is about 20 miles. The commerce already in exercise there is $4,000,000 a year. A good deal of improvement of the channel-way has been produced at the private expense of the owners of interests there, something like an amount of $50,000, and no appropriation has been sought from or given by the United States before.

The difference between ten and twenty thousand dollars is not very great unless that difference makes a wide difference in the results of the improvement, and I think it will be agreed that, if a considerate and faithful community like this present $20,000 as a sum that can be usefully employed and that ten thousand is unimportant and much less useful, this allowance should be made.

The nature of the improvement is to make this cove accessible at all times and it does not require much depth to secure that advantage for commerce to ply. Hempstead Bay is a place of good shelter and resort. It might be improved no doubt, and perhaps some day it may be, but the benefit of this Hempstead Bay for resort is very much impaired by the small commerce that seeks Glen Cove harbor if it must be detained there under adverse winds which expose the bay to disturbance for several days at a time.

The total number of arrivals and departures in the year 1885–'86 was 1,140 sailing vessels and 110 canal-boats; the registered tonnage, 81,500 of the one and 17,000 of the other. The imports were $1,688,000, and the exports $2,619,000.

The Senate will observe that if this were a separate and remote harbor it would be immediately recognized as one worth improving and developing. I should regret that it should be passed over merely because it is of so relatively little importance compared with the greater interests connected with the port of New York, and I hope that the committee may not find it necessary to insist upon an objection to this very small addition in money, which I am assured will make a very great difference in the result. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment on page 88.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 88, in section 11, after line 309 under the head of "Oregon," it is proposed to insert:

Clackamas River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will Senators indicate the amendments they desire to have reserved?

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to have reserved the amendment in relation to the Missouri River Commission, on page 66, section 1, lines 1601 to 1607, inclusive.

Mr. FRYE. I desire a separate vote on the amendment in relation to White River, Arkansas, and also on the Green and Barren River improvement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments are so numerous that the Secretary will make a memorandum of each one proposed to be reserved. Senators will indicate the page and line.

Mr. FRYE. I can not give the page and line, but I except the amendments in relation to the White River, Arkansas, and the Green and Barren River improvement, Kentucky. These are all I desire to reserve.

Mr. EVARTS. The amendment on page 6, lines 128 to 130, "improving Buttermilk Channel, New York," I wish to have separately considered.

Mr. FRYE. I thought the Senator from New York had but one amendment.

Mr. EVARTS. This is not my amendment. It is a question on agreeing to a committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Maine to state that the committee would reserve a separate vote on each of the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole not reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. No; not on each one. I only reserve amendments in reference to the White River and the Green and Barren Rivers, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] gave notice that he reserved the one in regard to the Missouri River Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been noted. Are there further reservations of amendments? The Secretary will indicate the amendments reserved, so that there may be no mistake as to the amendments on which a separate vote is required.

The SECRETARY. The amendment on page 66, from line 1601 to 1607, inclusive, in relation to the Missouri River Commission.

The amendment relating to the White River improvement.

The amendment relating to the Green and Barren Rivers improvement.

The amendment on page 6, lines 128, 129, and 130, in relation to Buttermilk Channel, New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is not now in his seat, gave notice that he would demand a separate vote on the Hennepin Canal amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask a separate vote on that amendment for the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be noted by the Secretary. If there are no further reservations——

Mr. KENNA. Is a motion to amend by inserting propositions that were rejected in Committee of the Whole in order at the present time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be open to amendment in the Senate the same as if it were in an original state. There is no limitation.

Mr. HARRIS. And the fact that an amendment has been offered in the Committee of the Whole, and not agreed to, does not exclude it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not exclude it.

Mr. BECK. On page 49 there was an amendment offered by the committee for repairing the dam at the head of Cumberland Island, etc., that was disagreed to, and I desire to call the yeas and nays on it; so I ask for a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. FRYE. It was disagreed to at my request.

Mr. BECK. I want a separate vote on that amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that as this was an amendment reported by the committee but disagreed to by the Senate, he will have to offer it as a new amendment in the Senate. It is not a thing for a separate vote, because it is not in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was stricken from the bill; it is not incorporated in the bill. The vote of the Committee of the Whole rejected it. The Senator from Kentucky can offer it as an amendment in the Senate.

If there be no further reservations of amendments will the Senate concur——

Mr. FRYE. I will withdraw my demand for a separate vote as to the White River amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will note that. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole with the exception of those reserved specially?

The amendments not reserved were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the first reserved amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator will allow these amendments to be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that that motion be withdrawn for a moment as I desire to make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will receive the conference report.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. It so happens that two of the conferees appointed by the Chair yesterday are necessarily absent, and, therefore, I ask that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] be put in place of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] as chairman of the committee of conference on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will be substituted as one of the managers on the part of the Senate for the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not necessary to make the report just now. It has not been signed yet.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, a copy of Order No. 339 of the Commissioner of Patents, and also communicating information relative to the report made to the Commissioner of Patents in June, 1887, in regard to the clerical force of the Patent Office; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 490) granting a pension to George W. Pitner;
A bill (H. R. 9729) granting a pension to Malinda Hardin;
A bill (H. R. 9344) granting a pension to James C. White;

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Tennessee to allow a vote on the first reserved amendment. There will be no time consumed with it.

Mr. HARRIS. If it involves no division of the Senate, I certainly shall not object to letting the question be determined.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think there is no disposition on the part of the committee to press it.

Mr. HARRIS. But if it involves, as I suppose it must involve, as the amendment was reserved, a division of the Senate, the Senator had better wait until another day.

Mr. PADDOCK. If it requires a division I will not press it.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion for an executive session for the purpose suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think there will be no opposition on the part of the committee to what I desire.

The SECRETARY. After line 1600 of section 1 the Committee of the Whole inserted:

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884, creating the Missouri River Commission, and defining its powers and duties, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in making any further statement about it. I simply ask that the amendment be rejected.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no quorum here, I fear, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9420) authorizing the Houston, Central Arkansas and Northern Railway Company to construct and maintain bridges across Bayou Bartholomew and across the Ouachita, Red, Little, and Sabine Rivers in Louisiana, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments:

A bill (H. R. 9086) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Oostenaula River at or near Rome, Ga.;

A bill (H. R. 6699) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Forest City, Dak., by the Forest City and Watertown Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 2170) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, in the State of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 8355) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the St. John's River, between De Land Landing and Lake Monroe, in the State of Florida;

A bill (H. R. 9079) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Knoxville, Tenn.;

A bill (H. R. 8353) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Hillsborough River at a point in the town of New Smyrna, in the county of Volusia and State of Florida; and

A bill (H. R. 7749) to authorize the building of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Wabash, Minn.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3229) to establish a light at or near Cedar River Point, at the mouth of Cedar River, Green Bay, Michigan, reported it without amendment.

MRS. SARAH H. WOOD.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1520, Senate bill 1257.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 1257) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah H. Wood was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Sarah H. Wood, widow, of the city of Baltimore, Md., $1,344.44, that sum being the proceeds of $2,240.74 in legal money taken from the Bank of Louisiana, at New Orleans, by Capt. J. W. McClure, assistant quartermaster, under military order No. 202, Department of the Gulf, dated August 17, 1863, and by him turned over to Col. S. B. Holabird, chief quartermaster of that department, and by him disbursed and accounted for to the Treasury; such payment to be in full repayment of all claims from any source upon the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to hear the report on that bill read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HOAR June 6, 1888:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1257) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah H. Wood, have considered the same and respectfully report:

Mrs. Sarah H. Wood, the claimant, is a widow now living in Baltimore, Md. In the year 1862 she resided in her country home in Louisiana, about 100 miles from New Orleans, where she had gone on the advice of a physician on account of the feeble health of her children. August 12, 1863, she moved into the city of New Orleans, and at once took the oath of allegiance required under General Order No. 41, Department of the Gulf. She had at that time on deposit in the Bank of Louisiana $2,240.74.

This fund consisted of notes of the said bank. September 11, 1863, this money, with money of other depositors in the said bank, was seized under General Order No. 202, Department of the Gulf, "requiring the several banks and banking associations of New Orleans to pay over to the chief quartermaster of the Army, or to such officers of his department as he might designate, all money in their possession belonging to or standing upon their books to the credit of any person registered as an enemy of the United States or engaged in the military, naval, or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, or who should have been or might thereafter be convicted of rendering any aid or comfort to the enemies of the United States."

A receipt for the funds thus taken was given to the bank by Capt. John W. McClure, assistant quartermaster. They were placed in the hands of Col. S. B. Holabird, chief quartermaster, and by him were sold, realizing to the Government 60 per cent. of their face value. The proceeds of this sale were accounted for to the Treasury, in quartermaster's sequestration account, as money on hand and received during the month of February, 1864.

It is proposed in the bill for the relief of Mrs. Wood to pay her 60 per cent. of her original deposit, which is the amount received by the Government as proceeds from the sale of the funds representing her claim against the bank. The facts on which she rests her claim are clearly established by receipts of United States officers contained in House Executive Document No. 101, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, and by the sworn petition of Mrs. Wood.

The order of General Banks, by which the funds in the Bank of Louisiana were sequestrated, has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States to be illegal (Planters' Bank vs. Union Bank, 16 Wall, 483, 497). The acts of Congress of August 6, 1861, and July 17, 1862—

"Designated Government agents for seizing enemy's property and they directed the mode of procedure for its condemnation in the courts. The system devised was necessarily exclusive. No authority was given to a military commandant, as such, to effect any confiscation. And under neither of the acts was the property of a banking institution made confiscable. Both of them had in view the property of natural persons who were public enemies, of persons who gave aid and comfort to the rebellion, or who held office under the Confederate government, or under one of the States comprising it. * * * It follows, then, that the order of General Banks was one which he had no authority to make, and that his direction to the Union Bank to pay to the quartermaster of the Army the debt due the Planters' Bank was wholly invalid." (Opinions of Court, by Strong, J.)

The order, however, although illegal, was enforced. The funds were taken and appropriated to the use of the United States Government. Under these circumstances the bank has no remedy against the military officer, if the statute entitled "An act regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases for the protection of officers and agents of the Government, and for the better defense of the Treasury against unlawful claims," approved July 27, 1868, be valid.

It is settled by the Planters' Bank vs. Union Bank, already quoted, that if the claimant had brought suit against the Bank of Louisiana she would have recovered, in spite of the payment under the order of General Banks, and the bank then would have been entitled in justice to a remedy which should be provided by Congress. But there is no occasion for this circuity of action. It is quite as convenient and as well for the public interest that the remedy should be afforded directly to the claimant.

Similar relief has already been given to three of the depositors in the Bank of Louisiana whose claims were precisely the same as Mrs. Wood's. E. E. Simpson and the legal representatives of J. A. Simpson recovered 60 per cent. of their deposit under a judgment of the Court of Claims (found 7 Court of Claims, 632).

The grounds of the decision of the Court of Claims in these cases are not reported. It does not appear that the attention of the court was called to the consideration that the jurisdiction conferred upon the Court of Claims by section 1059, fourth clause, Revised Statutes, extended only to captured and abandoned property and did not include claims of this kind. Senator Jackson, in a report made on a claim precisely similar to the claim under consideration, states in reference to this point:

"If the military authorities had seized the funds under the act of Congress of March 12, 1863, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States,' the claimant could have resorted to the Court of Claims within the time prescribed by law for relief. The claim does not, however, fall within the provisions of, or originate under, that act. But, as stated by the Supreme Court in the case cited, Planters' Bank vs. Union Bank, the order under which the funds were taken possession of was an unauthorized attempt by the military commander to enforce summarily the confiscation acts of 1861 and 1862." (Report No. 103, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.)

The other case in which relief was granted is that of John W. Franklin, executor of the will of John Armfield, in which a special bill was enacted, which was approved January 14, 1885.

The only other question to be considered is that of laches. We are of opinion that as the claimant petitioned Hon. S. P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury, and before such time of praying for relief from the Treasury Department had pressed her claim before the Quartermaster and the Secretary of War, who held that they could do nothing, as the funds had passed into the Treasury, she has done all that reasonably could be expected of her, and that the delay in the matter of remedy is not attributable to her.

We therefore report the accompanying bill and recommend that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANTS TO CHIEFS OF NAVY BUREAUS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 444, Senate bill 1438.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 1438) to provide for the appointment of assistants to the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, which was to add to the bill:

Provided, That the assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair shall be selected from the Corps of Naval Constructors not below the relative rank of commander, and shall receive an extra compensation of $800 per annum in excess of his regular pay.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing that the amendment reported from the committee shall be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment numbered 16 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6803) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

"For salary and expenses of a commercial agent at Boma, in the Lower Congo Basin, with authority to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper and Lower Congo Basins, their products, their minerals, their vegetable wealth, the openings for American trade, and to collect such information on the subject of that country as shall be thought of interest to the United States, $4,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. P. ALLISON,
JNO. SHERMAN,
JNO. T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

PERRY BELMONT,
JAMES B. McCREARY,
WM. W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CHANDLER. I see by the report there is a provision for salary and expenses of a commercial agent at Boma, in the Lower Congo Basin, at $4,000. This consul is authorized to visit the Upper and Lower Congo. I ask what provision is made, if any, for the expenses of the investigation?

Mr. SHERMAN. The sum of $4,000 is paid for the salary of this agent, and it is to cover all expenses. The ordinary pay of a consul would be $2,500 or $3,000. I admit that it is a very inadequate provision, but the House were not willing to go any further. The original provision of the Senate provided for a commission of scientific men to make an elaborate investigation of the matters stated, and provided an appropriation of $25,000 for that purpose. The House resolutely refused to agree to it, and we thought it was better to take this much for a consul there to examine and report. It is not a very satisfactory provision, I admit.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it is very inadequate. Congress has once before provided for sending a commercial agent there and paid $10,000 for that mission. Now we have made a great demonstration about the Congo and we propose to put a consul there at $4,000. I think it will amount to very little. If we are not able to provide a commission at an expense of $25,000, we surely ought to be able to give the country more than a consul at $4,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1680, being the bill (H. R. 9816) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 9816) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 6, line 4, after the words "whenever the," to strike out the word "Congress" and insert "Secretary of War;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in said structure, or its entire removal at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 5, after the word "bridge," to insert the words "under the provisions of this act;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof. And if any litigation shall rise in regard to said bridge under the provisions of this act, the same shall be had in the circuit court of the United States in whose jurisdiction the bridge or any part thereof is located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FLINT RIVER BRIDGE, GEORGIA.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1678, being House bill 5096.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5096) authorizing the construction of a bridge across Flint River, in the State of Georgia.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 4, line 12, after the word "War," to insert "the construction of;" and in the same line, after the words "not be," to strike out "built" and insert "commenced;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That said bridge shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said rivers as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War a design and drawings of said bridge, for his examination and approval, and a map of its location, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and in all things shall be subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and until said plan and location of said bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge, during the progress of the work of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 4, after the word "whenever," to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require any changes in said structure, or its removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF ARMY ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

Mr. STEWART. I move to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 358, Senate bill 35.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 35) to authorize the promotion of certain assistant surgeons of the Army after twenty years' service.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the assistant surgeons of the Army, appointed under the act approved July 28, 1866, who are assistant surgeons at the passage of this act, and have, or shall hereafter have, served twenty years continuously as assistant surgeons from the time of their appointment under the said act, shall be nominated and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be appointed to the office of surgeon, with the rank of major, in the order of their present arrangement upon the Army Register. Said service shall count from the date of original appointment and commission as assistant surgeon under the act of July 28, 1866, but no commission shall bear date prior to the passage of this act: Provided, That no assistant surgeon shall be promoted under this act who has not been examined and approved by a medical examining board, as required by section 1172 of the Revised Statutes: And provided further, That the whole number of officers of the Medical Department shall not be increased by this act, and after the appointments authorized thereby shall have been made, no promotion to the grade of surgeon with the rank of major shall be made until the number of such surgeons shall have been reduced below fifty.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SITE FOR LIGHT-HOUSE AT ASTORIA, OREGON.

Mr. DOLPH. It will be recollected by the Senate that some days ago I reported, by direction of the Committee on Commerce, bills for a light-house and wharf at Astoria, Oregon, and under the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], who wanted the Senate to adjourn, they went over. I ask the Senate now to take them up in order that these bills may be put on a par with others before the Committee on Appropriations. I move that Order of Business 1653, Senate bill 707, be first considered.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 707) providing for the purchase of a site and the construction of a wharf in Astoria, Oregon, for the use of the Light-House Department.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $15,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase of a site and the construction of a suitable wharf at Astoria, Oregon, for the use of the Light-House Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. That is the only committee amendment. I move to strike out the word "department," in line 8, the last word in the bill, and insert "establishment;" so as to read: "for the use of the Light-House Establishment;" because I think that would be better language.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill providing for the purchase of a site and the construction of a wharf in Astoria, Oregon, for the use of the Light-House Establishment.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT MOUTH OF UMPQUA RIVER, OREGON.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the next Order of Business, Senate bill 2778, which accompanied this, and is under the same recommendation, be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2778) making an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the construction of a light-house on the headlands near the mouth of the Umpqua River, in the State of Oregon. It appropriates $80,000 for the purchase of a site and the construction of a first-order coast light-house on the headlands near the mouth of the Umpqua River, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE E. W. SHARRETTS.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask the Senate to take up the private pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported.

Mr. HOAR. Before that is done I should like to ask for the consideration of Senate bill 59, for the relief of George E. W. Sharretts.

Mr. SAWYER. I will yield for that, but after that I must insist on my motion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 59) for the relief of George E. W. Sharretts.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment, in line 6, after the words "the sum," to strike out "fifteen thousand" and insert "twelve hundred;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George E. W. Sharretts the sum $1,200, in full compensation for his time and services in the preparation of his salary tables, used by the Government, and in lieu of all royalty or values of such tables, of which he is the inventor and author, as appears by the finding of facts of the Court of Claims, filed February 2, 1885.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The word "of" has been omitted in the next line. It will be inserted, if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SAWYER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills favorably reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills favorably reported.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first private pension bill on the Calendar will be stated.

MARGARET LAHEY.

The bill (H. R. 9523) for the relief of Margaret Lahey was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Lahey, widow of James Lahey, late private of Company A, Forty-third Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIRAM BATEMAN.

The bill (H. R. 3836) granting a pension to Hiram Bateman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Hiram Bateman, late a private in Company I, Third Michigan Infantry Volunteers, at $36 a month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM WINANS.

The bill (H. R. 4788) granting an increase of pension to William Winans was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of William Winans, late corporal of Company B, First Regiment New York Cavalry, at $30 per month, in lieu of the $16 per month heretofore allowed him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOODFORD M. HOUCHIN.

The bill (H. R. 9174) granting a pension to Woodford M. Houchin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Woodford M. Houchin, late captain of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENNIE D. RICE.

The bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of Jennie D. Rice was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Jennie D. Rice, sole surviving daughter of Richard T. Lurvey, late a private in Company K, Thirteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteer Infantry, the amount of pension which had accrued to Lurvey at the time of his death, December 30, 1882, subject to deduction for any amount that may have been paid for reimbursement of the expenses of the last sickness and burial of the deceased, Jennie D. Rice having had the care and contributed to the support of her father, Richard T. Lurvey, who was totally blind from July 1, 1877, to the time of his death, December 30, 1882.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH TERRALLS.

The bill (H. R. 8455) for the relief of Elizabeth Terralls was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Terralls, widow of Thomas Terralls, late sergeant Company H, First Regiment United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES TURNER.

The bill (H. R. 964) granting a pension to James Turner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of James Turner, late a private in Company A, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, on the pension-roll, at such rate as his present disabilities may show him to be entitled to receive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDITH A. KINSEY.

The bill (H. R. 2640) for the relief of Judith A. Kinsey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Judith A. Kinsey, widow of George Kinsey, late a private in Company D, Thirteenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMILY W. OGDEN.

The bill (H. R. 2641) granting a pension to Emily W. Ogden was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emily W. Ogden, widow of Cornelius A. Ogden, late a major in the United States Army, who died while in the service, in 1856, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month.

EMILY F. WARREN.

The bill (S. 2949) granting a pension to the widow of G. K. Warren was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported amendments, in line 7, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$2,000 per annum" and insert "$100 per month;" and after the word "laws," in line 10, to insert "the same to be in lieu of any pension she now receives;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of Emily F. Warren, widow of G. K. Warren, late a major-general in the United States Army, and to pay her at the rate of $100 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act, and subject to all the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the same to be in lieu of any pension she now receives.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the report in that case be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the request of the Senator from New Hampshire will be granted.

The report is as follows:

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following report (to accompany bill S. 2949):

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 2949, granting a pension to Emily F. Warren, widow of the late Maj. Gen. G. K. Warren, have examined the same, and report, recommending its passage with amendments as follows:

Strike out, in seventh line, words "two thousand dollars per annum" and insert "one hundred dollars per month;" also add to the bill the words "the same to be in lieu of any pension she now receives." Her present pension being $50 per month.

Mrs. Warren is now becoming old, in weakened health, with a very limited and uncertain income, so that her present pension does not afford the comforts of life. Beyond this she has little that she can depend upon, and besides herself has necessary expenditures for two of her children. Her personal labor has become unavoidable in obtaining a livelihood.

In several familiar cases pensions to the amount provided in this bill have been granted to the widows of officers whose record of service, however distinguished, could not and did not surpass that of General Warren.

It is an act of justice merely to the memory of this gallant and devoted officer, whose remarkable record is hereto appended, to provide for the comfort of her who is the widow of one of the purest patriots who ever served in the American Army.

[General Orders No. 5.]

HEADQUARTERS CORPS OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., August 9, 1882.

It has become the painful duty of the brigadier-general commanding to announce to the Corps of Engineers the death of a brother officer, Lieut. Col. Gouverneur K. Warren, brevet major-general, United States Army, who died at Newport, R. I., yesterday.

General Warren was graduated from the Military Academy and promoted to the rank of brevet second lieutenant in the Corps of Topographical Engineers, July 1, 1850. He served as assistant engineer on the topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, 1850-'52, and to the board for the improvement of canal around the falls of the Ohio, 1852-'53; in charge of surveys for the improvement of Rock Island and Des Moines Rapids, Mississippi River, 1853-'54; in compiling the general map and reports (conjointly with captain, now general, A. A. Humphreys) of Pacific Railroad explorations, 1854; as chief topographical engineer on Sioux expedition, 1855, being engaged in the action of Blue Water, September 3, 1855; in charge of reconnaissances in Dakota Territory, and making map and report of same, 1855-'56; and in Nebraska Territory, 1856-'57, and preparing maps and reports thereof, 1857-'59.

He was assistant professor of mathematics at the Military Academy, 1859, and principal assistant professor, 1859-'61.

He entered upon his distinguished service in the late civil war (1861-'66) in the Department of Virginia, as lieutenant-colonel of the Fifth New York Volunteers, being engaged in the action at Big Bethel Church, June 10, 1861. He was engaged on the defenses of Baltimore, and constructing fort on Federal Hill, 1861-'62, being temporarily detached on expedition to Northampton and Accomac Counties, Virginia, 1861; in the Virginia Peninsula campaign (Army of the Potomac), 1862, being engaged in the siege of Yorktown, April 11-May 4, 1862, and in command of brigade, May 24, 1862; skirmish on Pamunkey River, May 26, 1862; capture of Hanover Court-House, May 27, 1862; battle of Gaines's Mill, June 27, 1862, where he was wounded; repulse of Wise's division at Malvern Hill (command), June 29, 1862; battle of Malvern Hill, July 1, 1862, and skirmish at Harrison's Landing, July 2, 1862.

In the Northern Virginia campaign, 1862, he was engaged in the battle of Manassas, August 30, 1862, and skirmish near Centreville, September 1, 1862. He was in command of brigade (Army of the Potomac) in the Maryland campaign, 1862, being engaged in skirmishes and battle of Antietam, September 15-17, 1862; skirmish with the enemy's rear-guard on the Potomac, September 19, 1862; and march to Falmouth, Va., 1862. In the Rappahannock campaign, 1862-'63, he was in command of brigade till February 4, 1863. He then became chief topographical engineer of the Army of the Potomac, and he was engaged in the battle of Fredericksburgh, December 13-16, 1863; making reconnaissances, 1862-'63; action on Orange Pike, May 1, 1863; storming of Marye Heights, May 3, 1863, and battle of Salem, May 3-4, 1863, and as chief engineer of the Army of the Potomac, June 8-August 12, 1863.

In the Pennsylvania campaign he was engaged in charge of the re-embarkation of stores at Acquia Creek, 1863; reconnaissance and battle of Gettysburgh, July 1-3, 1863, where he was wounded; and construction of bridges, and making reconnaissances while pursuing the enemy, July-August, 1863.

He was in command of Second Corps (Army of the Potomac) from August 12, 1863, to March 24, 1864.

In the operations in Central Virginia he was engaged in movement to Culpeper and the Rapidan, September 13-16, 1863; combat at Auburn and Bristoe Station (in command), October 14, 1863; skirmish at Bull Run, October 15, 1863, and at Kelly's Ford, November 8, 1863; movement to Mine Run, with heavy skirmishing, November 26-30, 1863, and demonstration upon the enemy across Morton's Ford, February 6, 1864.

He was in campaign of Fifth Corps (Army of the Potomac) from March 24, 1864, to April 1, 1865.

In the Richmond campaign he was engaged in the battle of the Wilderness, May 5-6, 1864; battles about Spottsylvania, May 8-20, 1864; battles of North Anna, May 23-25, 1864; skirmish on Tolopotomy Creek, May 29, 1864; battle of Bethesda Church, May 30, 1864; battle of Cold Harbor, June 1-4, 1864; skirmish on White Oak Swamp, June 13, 1864; assaults on Petersburgh, June 17-18, 1864; siege of Petersburgh, June 18, 1864-April 2, 1865; Petersburgh Mine assault, July 30, 1864; actions for the occupation of the Weldon Railroad, August 18-25, 1864; combat of Peeble's Farm, September 30, 1864; action at Chapel House, October 1, 1864; skirmishes near Hatcher's Run, October 27-28, 1864; destruction of Weldon Railroad to Meherrin River, December 7-10, 1864; combat near Dabney's Mill (in command), February 6-7, 1865; actions and movement to White Oak Ridge, March 29-31, 1865; battle of Five Forks, April 1, 1865.

He was in command of the defenses of Petersburgh and Southside Railroad, April 3 to May 1, 1865; in command of the Department of Mississippi, May 14-30, 1865; and was at New York city preparing maps and reports of his campaigns, June 20, 1865, to July 31, 1866.

General Warren was promoted successively from the grade of lieutenant to that of lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers, and major-general, United States volunteers. He received the brevets of lieutenant-colonel, United States Army, "for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Gaines's Mill," Va., 1862; colonel, United States Army, "for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Gettysburgh," Pa., 1863; brigadier-general, United States Army, "for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Bristoe Station," 1865, and major-general, United States Army, "for gallant and meritorious services in the field during the rebellion," 1865.

Since the close of the war he has been superintending engineer of surveys and improvements of the Upper Mississippi and its tributaries, 1866-'70; of survey of the battle-field of Gettysburgh, Pa., 1868-'69; and survey of the battle-field of Manassas, 1878; of Rock Island bridge across the Mississippi, 1870; of the fortification of New London and New Haven, Conn., 1870-'74; of the improvement of certain rivers and harbors on Long Island, 1870-'74; of construction of Block Island Breakwater, R. I., 1870-'82.

He was a member of commission to examine Union Pacific railroad and telegraphic lines, 1868-'69, and member of many important boards of officers of the Corps of Engineers organized for the consideration of the plans and the execution of the works of the corps, among which were the board on improvement of the Des Moines Rapids, 1867; board on bridge across Niagara River, at Buffalo, N. Y., 1870-'71; on bridging the Ohio River, 1870-'71, and 1878-'82; on plan for docks constructed for breakwater at Chicago Harbor, Illinois, 1871; on the completion of Cincinnati and Newport bridge over the Ohio, 1871; on the harbors of St. Louis, Mo., and Alton, Ill., and banks of the Mississippi, 1872; on bridging the channel between Lake Huron and Lake Erie, 1873; on ship-canal from the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico, 1873-'74; to examine the St. Louis bridge across the Mississippi, 1873; on the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi, 1874-'75; on Mississippi bridges between St. Paul, Minn., and St. Louis, Mo., 1876; and on the improvement of the Mississippi River, from the Falls of St. Anthony to Rock Island Rapids, 1878. He was engaged in the survey of the battle-field of Groveton, Va., and in the preparation of campaign maps of certain operations in 1862-'63 of the Army of the Potomac in Virginia.

He was appointed a member of the advisory council of the harbor commissioners of the State of Rhode Island, 1878.

In 1870 General Warren was assigned to the charge of the surveys and improvements of various rivers and harbors in Southeastern Massachusetts, and in Rhode Island and Connecticut, on which duty and in the supervision of the construction and repair of the fortifications of New Bedford, Mass., of Narragansett Bay and of Newport, R. I., he remained until the time of his death.

In scientific investigations General Warren had few superiors, and his elaborate reports on some of the most important works which have been confided to the Corps of Engineers are among the most valuable contributions to its literature.

In the field, in the late civil war, he was a brave and energetic officer, and in the high command to which he attained by his patriotic valor and skill he merited the admiration of the Army and the applause of his country.

He was kind and considerate in all the relations of life, and his family in its affliction will have the hearty sympathy of the Corps of Engineers.

As a testimonial of respect for the deceased the officers of the corps will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

By command of Brigadier-General Wright.

GEORGE H. ELLIOT,
Major of Engineers.

NEW MADRID LOCATION.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the 2d day of February, 1888, I introduced a bill (S. 1849) to confirm New Madrid location, survey No. 2889, and to provide for issue of patent therefor, which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims. Since that time the House of Representatives has passed a bill very similar to it, and that bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, reported back favorably, and passed, and is now a law. I therefore desire to have the Committee on Private Land Claims discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill, and then I shall ask to have it postponed indefinitely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Missouri will be complied with, without objection. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be postponed indefinitely.

TOMBIGBEE RIVER BRIDGE IN ALABAMA.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9610) to authorize the Birmingham, Selma and New Orleans Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Tombigbee River in Alabama.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 188) authorizing the loan of tents and camp equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

M. C. MORDECAI.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 1521, Order of Business 1561. It is a report made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] from the Committee on Claims. He is not present, but asked me to call it up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1521) for the relief of M. C. Mordecai.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$37,991.95" and insert "$6,400;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to M. C. Mordecai, or his legal representatives, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,400, in full compensation for all services rendered in carrying mails in the steamer Isabel, or any other steamer, from Charleston, S. C., to Havana, Cuba, via Savannah, Ga., and Key West, Fla., from the 1st day of October, 1859, to the 20th day of July, 1860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 2, 1888, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Thomas Parker, to be postmaster at Albion, Orleans County, New York, vice Augustus W. Barnett, commission expired.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Nominations confirmed by the Senate June 30, 1888.

POSTMASTERS.

Christopher G. Allard, to be postmaster at Winooski, Chittenden County, Vermont.

Berry Mitchell, to be postmaster at Auburn, Placer County, California.

P. H. Carney, to be postmaster at Mankato, Blue Earth County, Minnesota.

Gardner C. White, to be postmaster at Carson City, Ormsby County, Nevada.

C. A. McCabe, to be postmaster at Pomeroy, Garfield County, Territory of Washington.

Abram B. Hawkins, to be postmaster at Watsonville, Santa Cruz County, California.

C. F. Farmer, to be postmaster at Santa Rosa, Sonoma County, California.

Henry Baldwin, to be postmaster at Park River, Walsh County, Dakota.

James T. Houtz, to be postmaster at Blunt, Hughes County, Dakota.

Charles W. Morgan, to be postmaster at Hillsborough, Traill County, Dakota.

David E. Baxter, jr., to be postmaster at Delphos, Allen County, Ohio.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 30, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JUDGMENTS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional list of judgments of the Court of Claims for which appropriations should be made; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BLOUNT, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. MCCORMICK, until July 7, on account of important business.

To Mr. YARDLEY, until July 7, on account of important business.

To Mr. SAWYER, until July 9, on account of important business.

To Mr. PERRY, for one week from this day.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 188) authorizing the loan of tents and camp equipage to veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1524) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River between Bridgeport and Sheffield, Ala.; and

A bill (S. 1566) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Caney Fork River between Rock Island and Carthage, in Tennessee.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 187) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

FOURTH OF JULY CLAIMS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I demand the regular order.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The regular order is the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6514) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, which was fixed as a special order for this morning.

I now call that bill up.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House thirty minutes debate, if desired, fifteen minutes on each side, was to be permitted on this bill.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir; that was the agreement. Unless some gentleman desires to discuss the bill within the time allowed I shall ask the previous question upon the bill and a pending amendment reported from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BURROWS. I understood the gentleman to state on yesterday that there was no general legislation appended to this bill.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. None whatever.

Mr. BURROWS. It simply provides an appropriation for the amounts allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir; that is all.

The SPEAKER. There is an additional section appended to the bill. Perhaps the Clerk had better read it.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir; the committee recommend the adoption of an amendment to the bill.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 17, 1886, appropriating the sum of $280 to Alexander Sayers, of Nelson County, Kentucky, be and is hereby repealed.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I move the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the committees for reports.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with, and in connection therewith I ask unanimous consent that committees having reports to make be permitted to present them at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The question then is on the motion to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent to present a report——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will it be in order to make a motion that committees be privileged to hand in their reports at the Clerk's desk?

The SPEAKER. It would not. That would be a change of the rule.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then I renew my request that committees be permitted to file their reports at the Clerk's desk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPORTS FILED.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

RELINQUISHMENT OF TITLE TO KANSAS LAND.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6217) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10628) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Clay County and Jackson County, Missouri, at a point to be selected consistent with the interests of river navigation between Kansas City, Mo., and a point within 5 miles below said city; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF RICHARD W. MEADE.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6336) for the relief of the estate of Richard W. Meade, deceased, which bill was reported from the said committee on the 19th instant and referred to the Committee of the Whole House by unanimous consent, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 189) to amend and enlarge the provisions of a joint resolution to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade to the Court of Claims, with the recommendation that the same be passed in lieu and stead of said bill H. R. 6336; which resolution was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas when the committee is willing to allow the resumption of the morning hour for the consideration of bills from committees? This call belongs to the Committee on Claims, and the next is the Committee on Military Affairs. We have one or two very important matters which ought to be considered. I hold in my hand now a bill—a Senate bill—which can be passed in five minutes if we could get the hour, or by unanimous consent, which will save the Government a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. SPINOLA. What is the bill?

Mr. STEELE. For the sale of the Omaha reservation. We have assurances that it will sell for $300,000. It provides that the ground shall be platted, appraised, and sold. We can purchase other ground adapted to the purpose, more suitable, and erect the necessary buildings for the Government for $200,000, a clear saving to the Government of the difference I have named, or $100,000.

The Secretary of War, the General of the Army, and the commander of the department have recommended it. There is no rifle range where they are now. They expect to have rifle practice at Omaha next fall and want to get on their own grounds to do it. Mr. MCSHANE, on your side of the House, is very anxious——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not think it is necessary for the gentleman, if he will pardon me, to elaborate the question. I will answer him, so far as I am able to answer, not being of course permanently in charge of this bill. I will say I do not think that class of cases will be revived until we have passed a bill to reduce taxation and sent it to the Senate.

Mr. STEELE. In reference to this bill, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means said to Mr. MCSHANE three weeks ago——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman of course will have to confer with the chairman about it. He is not present at this time, and I can not answer the question for him.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman object to our taking up this bill and disposing of it at this time?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, yes; I ask for the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. The regular order is the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Subject to the right to make the motion which the gentleman has made. If the House declines to sustain that motion the hour will be for the consideration of reports from committees.

The Speaker put the question and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I call for a division.

Mr. STEELE. I hope that request will not be insisted on. I do not think we will gain anything by undertaking to insist on the morning hour.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Then I withdraw my request.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union, Mr. ROGERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill. The Clerk will read the next line.

The Clerk read as follows:

Acid, acetic, acetous, or pyroligneous acid, exceeding the specific gravity of 1.047, 5 cents per pound.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding the words "not imported from Canada."

The Clerk reported the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I find that of this substance there were imported in the last year 19,144 pounds, while there were manufactured in the United States 12,400,000 pounds. The existing duty is 10 cents per pound. The proposed duty is 5 cents per pound. This is a proposed reduction of 50 per cent. The effect will be largely to increase the importation, and in all probability to considerably increase the surplus in the Treasury of the United States.

I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Caster beans or seeds, 25 cents per bushel of 50 pounds.
Castor-oil, 40 cents per gallon.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it requires the action of the House, but sometimes mere typographical errors have a very material effect in regard to the meaning of the law. I wish to suggest a correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk advises the Chair that he has made the correction.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If there be no objection then, the typographical error in the spelling of the word "caster" will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flaxseed or linseed oil, 10 cents per gallon.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to strike out the word "ten," in line 12, and insert "fifteen."

The Clerk reported the amendment.

Mr. KERR. I move to amend by inserting the present rate of duty, 25 cents per gallon I think it is. I have received a number of petitions from manufacturers of linseed oil in my district. They all seem to be of opinion that the reduction of the duty will be very injurious to that interest. I think that is the unanimous opinion of the men who are engaged in that business in that district. It has grown to be a very important industry. The growth of flaxseed has been encouraged and the result has been a very great reduction in the price of linseed oil in the United States. That being the case, the consumer having been benefited by it, the producers of flaxseed having been largely benefited by the market the local manufacturers give them, the manufacture of flaxseed into oil having become a very important industry and having afforded a large amount of employment for laborers engaged in that industry in the Northwest, I do not think it ought to be discouraged at this time. For that reason I think the present rate of duty ought to be maintained.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the present rate?

Mr. KERR. Twenty-five cents per gallon is the present rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa can accomplish that object by moving to strike out the line.

Mr. KERR. I move to strike out the line. I hope gentlemen who have conceded that the position taken in regard to flaxseed is correct by striking that line out and restoring the duty, will concede to the manufacturers and the flax raisers of the Northwest the continuance of the present rate, at least for a year or two longer.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The question is on the amendment striking out "ten" and inserting "fifteen."

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I think the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] some days ago in regard to the rates of duty that the seed and the oil should bear was fair and equitable. The duty upon the seed is 20 cents per bushel. One bushel of seed produces about 2½ gallons of oil; a duty of 15 cents per gallon on oil gives a protection of about 37½ cents on the product of a bushel of seed. The oil manufacturers therefore will have an advantage of 17½ cents on the product of a bushel of seed. This certainly is sufficient protection for the manufacturer. It will not be denied that there is a combination or trust among the producers of oil, and that the price since its formation has been considerably increased. If the duty had not been so high on oil the manufacturers could not have increased the price out of all proportion to price of the seed.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment of my colleague [Mr. KERR] will prevail. Gentlemen on the other side say there is a trust in oil. I do not believe it. I have seen no evidence of the existence of any trust in the linseed-oil trade. There is none in my State, and no trust can live in Iowa under the statutes of that State. Now, a word in regard to the price. It is but a short time, comparatively speaking, since nearly every gallon of this oil used in the United States was imported from England. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], I think, stated here some days ago that flax was grown in Scotland and England for textile purposes only; that it therefore was not fit for the production of oil, and it therefore follows that all the seed crushed in that country was produced by cheap ryot labor in the East Indies. Under the protection which our flax-growers have had, oil-mills have sprung up all over the West; and let me assure gentlemen on both sides of the House that there is no crop that is really so much the poor man's crop as flax, because it is the first crop that he puts in to subdue his ground, and out of it he not only pays for his ground, but pays his living expenses at the same time. The price of linseed-oil for the last twenty years has been lower than it ever was before in the history of this country. Only within a year I had occasion to buy twenty gallons of oil to paint my own house, and I bought it in my own town, a thousand miles from the seaboard, at a less price than I paid by the cask in New York thirty years ago.

Mr. ADAMS. What did you pay for it?

Mr. GEAR. I paid 40 cents a gallon for boiled oil. The price in New York thirty years ago by the cask was 52 and 54 cents a gallon; but under the protection that we have had on this article the home production of oil has constantly increased, and the price has gone down.

Another thing in relation to this reduction of the duty on oil is that it is a blow at the cooperage interest in this country.

Mr. BYNUM. Has there not been within the last two or three years an increase in the price of linseed-oil following the formation of the trust?

Mr. GEAR. No, sir; no material increase. What is the price to-day?

Mr. BYNUM. I can not state exactly, but I know I have noticed the fact that there has been an increase in the price.

Mr. GEAR. I will tell the gentleman why there has been an increase. He is a Western man, and he knows that in the West for the last two or three years there has been a comparative failure of the crop, and, owing to the scarcity, there has been naturally an increase in the price.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then it was not the tariff that increased it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEAR. Of course it was not, in that case. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, there are a great many men employed in the manufacture of barrels to hold the oil. It takes 80,000 barrels for the oil produced in Iowa last year, and therefore I say that this reduction is incidentally a blow at the cooperage interest.

Then, in addition to that, the large profit, perhaps the main profit, in making this oil in the West is from the exportation of the cake, which we send to England. In England they crush the seed mainly for feeding purposes, not so much for the oil.

I have presented petition after petition, not from oil-men, but from men who grow the seed, asking this House to withhold its hand from making a reduction of the tariff on this article, and I earnestly hope that the amendment of my colleague [Mr. KERR] will prevail.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to discuss this question at any length. Discussion of these several amendments has gone so far that it has interfered with the dispatch of business and bids fair to keep us here all summer; but, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], who has just taken his seat, and who said that there is no trust in linseed-oil, I wish to say that, while he is undoubtedly honest in his statement, the existence of the trust is a matter that is not denied by the linseed-oil manufacturers themselves.

I have in my hand a letter from the president of one of the linseed-oil mills—one of the leading manufacturers of linseed-oil in the West—who admits that this "trust" exists, but he insists that it does not raise the price of the oil.

Mr. REED. Precisely; and the sole object of your fight against "trusts" is on account of their raising prices.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But who ever heard any man in a "trust" admit that it did raise the price of anything?

Mr. REED. I will tell you——

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am merely answering the gentleman from Iowa, who says there is no "trust." I do not expect that men engaged in these "trusts" will admit that they are raising the price of products. Nobody expects that, nor is that the question now before the committee.

A MEMBER. What is the object of a "trust?"

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. One object of a "trust" is to raise prices, as I suppose everybody knows.

Permit me one further remark. The gentleman from Iowa says that this article, oil, will not bear any cut. This letter which I hold in my hand admits that the oil will bear a cut of 5 cents a gallon. And the writer is a man of perhaps as much intelligence as any man engaged in the business—a man, too, who has not grown poor in the business.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend by adding the words "not imported rom Canada."

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order at this time. An amendment and an amendment to the amendment are now pending.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order. The question is first upon the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. ADAMS. Does that question come up first?

The CHAIRMAN. This being an amendment to perfect the text, it takes precedence of the motion to strike out.

Mr. GEAR. Is not the motion to strike out the line first in order?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the question first in order is on the amendment to perfect the text. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend by adding the words "not imported from Canada." Mr. Chairman, of linseed oil there were imported last year 5,277 gallons; there were manufactured in this country 25,000,000 gallons. The existing duty is 25 cents; it is proposed to reduce it to 15 cents. This is a considerable reduction. It will lead to a considerable increase in the importation. If it increases the importation by the amount of 1 per cent. or one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the total amount used in this country, then instead of diminishing the surplus in the Treasury it will increase it.

With reference to the existence of the "trust" about which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] was so eloquent, I wish to state my information as to the existing price of linseed oil in this country. I am informed and believe that the average price in this country during the last year has been from 50 to 52 cents per gallon, while the average cost in foreign countries has been 45.6 cents, a difference, as gentlemen will see, of 5 to 7 cents a gallon. It is evident that if a "trust" exists, it has not been very effectual in raising the price of the American commodity beyond the difference beyond the cost of production here and the cost of production abroad, since it is also a fact that the foreign wages paid in the production of this article are from $3.84 to $5.28 per week (except in the East Indies), while in this country they are from $8 to $12 per week.

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend so as to make the duty 20 cents. I understood the committee had voted to make the duty 15 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen" has been agreed to; it is not now in order to move to strike out "fifteen" and insert any other sum.

Mr. KERR. In order to enable the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] to submit his remarks, I ask leave to withdraw my amendment to strike out the line.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe the renewal of that amendment will accomplish what I desire. The present duty, I believe, is 20 cents.

Mr. BUCHANAN and others. Twenty-five cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the line so as to read "twenty" instead of "fifteen."

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair has already remarked, that motion is not in order, because the Committee of the Whole has already voted to insert "fifteen," and it is not in order to move to strike out what has been already agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move, then, to strike out the line. Mr. Chairman, this article illustrates to as great degree as any article of American production the benefit of protection. Prior to the establishment of mills in this country for producing oil, and while our supply was imported, the price of linseed-oil was from $1 to $1.25 a gallon; but under the present protection oil has been reduced in price to 40 or 50 cents a gallon.

If we take off the present duty or reduce the duty, that accomplishes nothing in the way of reducing the revenue, which is the object of this bill, because the present revenue derived from imported linseed-oil is only $1,319.20. The result of the competition which has arisen from the manufacture of oil by our home mills has reduced the price of oil. I have been informed at the present time it is reduced to such an extent there is but little profit in the manufacture.

If we reduce the duty on oil the manufacturers will reduce the price of flaxseed to the farmers, and we strike a blow at the farmers of the country. I believe it would be best for the whole people to maintain the present duty of 25 cents a gallon.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted by the House. It will be supported by this side of the House, and I believe that the other side of the House will see that it is wisdom to agree to it.

Go to page 8 and you will find the other side of the House moved to strike out linseed and flaxseed. What did they do that for? They did it for the reason that flaxseed is produced largely in this country, and especially in the Northwest. The object was to please the farmer by keeping up the tax on flaxseed. That reason was a good and proper one, and I am glad that side of the House took that view of it. But why do they take a different view when we come to linseed-oil, which is the product of the flaxseed? It is surprising to me that they would attempt to deceive the farmer by taxing flaxseed coming into the country, and then permit linseed-oil, the product of flaxseed, to come in at a reduced rate of duty. They can not deceive the farmers of the country by any such proceeding as that. Gentlemen of the committee I do not believe expect to deceive them, but it looks that way.

If this tariff was reduced to 15 cents a gallon on linseed-oil it will not only have the effect to shut up the linseed-oil mills in this country, but it will also have the effect to curtail the market for flaxseed.

Gentlemen on the other side of the House are constantly telling us they are trying to secure for the farmer a fair price for his agricultural products. We are told the farmer is not paid well enough for his wheat, oats, and corn, and yet by this process they are driven into raising more of them for a less price. It will have that effect as sure as you are living men by attempting to bring in flaxseed free of duty and reducing the duty on linseed-oil. As soon as the farmer finds that the tax is taken off flaxseed there will be no inducement for him to raise it, and the raising of flaxseed will be relegated to where it was a few years ago, when none was raised in this country, and we had to import the whole of it from abroad.

Take the East Indies, for instance, where flaxseed is grown principally. We know the price of labor there is only 10 or 15 cents a day. Do you think you can get the farmers of this country to work at that price? I hope the time will never come in this country when such will be the case. Yet if you reduce the tariff you will be helping to produce such a result. You can not deceive the farmers by taking the tax off of flaxseed and reducing the duty on linseed-oil. You can not deceive them.

The reason some gentlemen give because of this action on their part is that there is a trust in linseed-oil. I am sure most of those gentlemen who talk about a trust have not exactly considered what a trust is. A trust is simply a partnership. It is no monopoly. There is no reason why you or I or any other men in this country can not go into the linseed-oil trust if we please. The trust is not to protect the price of oil, but it is more to protect the wages of the workingmen. And that is the case in reference to most of the trusts formed in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I move as a substitute the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Flaxseed or linseed oil, 20 cents a gallon after January 1, 1889.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was of the opinion that was an evasion of the rule. The rule is, after the committee has once fixed the rate by a vote of the committee, that can not be changed again, as there is no motion in the committee to reconsider. The object of the rule is to reach a finality.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the substitute for the whole line. While it changes the rate it fixes the time when it shall go into effect, and in that view I thought it was in order as a substitute for the entire line.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman's object is to fix the time at which this provision shall take effect, he can move that as an addition to the line; but if the amendment is merely a pretext for changing the other part which has been already adopted by the committee, it is out of order, and the Chair could not entertain it.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to state frankly, Mr. Chairman, what is desired to be accomplished by this amendment. I desire, in the first place, to extend the time when this item of the bill shall go into effect, and I also wish to increase the duty on that particular article. Both these objects are sought by the amendment, and if in the judgment of the Chair the entire substitute can not be offered, then I ask unanimous consent that we may return to it with the privilege of offering the amendment so as to take the judgment of the committee upon the question submitted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What is the purpose of the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas desires to ask unanimous consent to offer a substitute for the line, which the Chair holds is not strictly in order.

Mr. PERKINS. I only ask the privilege of offering it, so as to take the sense of the committee upon it. I do not ask unanimous consent that it be accepted, but simply to offer it for the judgment of the committee as a substitute for the line.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to offer the amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. In support of the substitute, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in addition to what has been already said that this is to the agriculturist of the West an exceedingly important matter. Under the protection afforded by the duty the growth and cultivation of flaxseed has increased as an agricultural product in the West from about 700,000 bushels to 12,000,000 bushels annually, and as has been argued, if the duty imposed on flaxseed-oil is removed or reduced as contemplated here, then this product must to a great extent cease to be profitable to the farmers of the West.

It is now, Mr. Chairman, scarcely profitable, and yet at Kansas City, at St. Louis, and other cities throughout the West, oil-mills have been established, which are successfully operating, engaged in producing oil from the seed, and thereby affording a market to the farmers for the product, giving them a fair and reasonable return for their toil. This business will be considerably hampered, if not entirely destroyed, by the change proposed here. It does not seem that there is any demand anywhere for a reduction of the duty on flaxseed or flaxseed-oil.

The other portion of the amendment refers to the time. I ask that the time when this bill shall go into effect as to this article shall be extended to January 1, 1889, for the reason that the farmers have sown their crop and are now harvesting and gathering it in some sections of the country, and it is only proper and fair that as to this crop at least the duty shall remain as heretofore. When the farmers put the seed in the ground they had a right to believe that they would be given the privilege of reaping the advantage of their labor without embarrassment from the Government, and hence it seems wrong for Congress to now step in and do them such a serious wrong as this bill proposes—to greatly destroy the value of their crop and to add to the burdens already imposed upon the farmers of the West.

If, therefore, the duty is to be reduced, then I ask that the date shall be so fixed that the present crop may be gathered and marketed and not unnecessarily affected by the provision.

This seems, and I think will be admitted by all, to be only just and proper.

I also ask that instead of reducing the duty from 25 cents a bushel to 10 or 15 cents a bushel, it shall be reduced to but 20 cents. I ask this, Mr. Chairman, in the name of the farmers that I represent and of the West generally. It is an important industry to them. They are diversifying their crops, and, as has been suggested, in Kansas, in Iowa, in Minnesota, and other agricultural States, farming at best has not been profitable during the past few years, and our farmers who expect to succeed are compelled to resort to the method of diversifying their crops, and the growing of flaxseed has become an important item to our people and does much to enable the farmers to meet the expenses and carry on the operations of the farm.

Mr. BYNUM. But there is no change in the rate of duty on the seed.

Mr. PERKINS. I am speaking generally of the subject and referring specially to the duty on oil. If the oil-mills are destroyed and the market for the seed is taken from the farmer then the crop becomes worthless, as it is only valuable as they can sell the seed to be manufactured into oil. If the price of oil is so low that the manufacturers can not pay a fair price for the seed the growing of flax must cease and our farmers become the sufferers. The bill proposes to reduce the duty on oil over 50 per cent. I ask that it shall only be reduced to 20 cents a gallon, and that it shall not go into effect until January 1, 1889, so that the farmers, I repeat, may have the privilege of garnering their present crop with the law as it was when the seed was sown, and as they had a right to expect the law would remain. It is a reasonable request and I hope there will be no objection.

The amendment I offer reduces the duty 25 per cent., and in the name of the farmers of the great West I protest against a further reduction. We ask that our farmers shall be protected against the pauper labor of India. The flaxseed of India is of a better quality than that raised by our people and yields 4 per cent. more oil, and with the insignificant sum paid for labor in India our mills must close and our farmers must cease to grow flax unless they can be protected substantially as now.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I think the position taken by the gentleman from Kansas can be very well explained in connection with the figures given by the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. ADAMS] who addressed the House a few minutes ago. I think the gentleman's figures were entirely correct. The price of foreign oil is 45 cents a gallon, the price of domestic 50, showing——

Mr. ADAMS. From 50 to 52 cents for the last year.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Very well, that is a very good indication of the price. Say 52 cents, showing that while the protection was 25 cents a gallon, less something that would take from it by way of duty on seed, yet they were only appropriating 7 cents a gallon. Now, we propose to leave them 15 cents a gallon. In other words, we leave them twice as much as they are appropriating. We do not leave them as much, of course, as under a trust that could be sufficiently strongly formed to give them a larger appropriation, but we leave twice as much as they now appropriate.

Mr. ADAMS. Allow me to call the attention of the gentleman to these figures again. Foreign flaxseed oil is 45 cents a gallon; the tariff duty is 25 cents. The President of the United States says that these figures represent the cost here. I ask, therefore, if that would not make the cost 70 cents a gallon in this country?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If it were all collected, of course it would; but that is one instance where the domestic product is only enhanced a part of the tax on the foreign product.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the President say so?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am not disputing the President.

Mr. BYNUM. The President does not say so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is not, however, if my friend will permit me, exactly what we are dealing with at this moment. I do not care to revive what the President has said. The question with us is whether we are properly adjusting the relation between the tax on the seed and the tax on the oil. I submit, as shown by the figures of the gentleman himself, we are leaving a tax on the oil that affords a protection of 7 cents a gallon more than the manufacturers at this time show they need. If that be the case, the proposed rates of course can not work them any harm. I think, therefore, the rates that have been proposed are very safe and prudent rates.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to state, to avoid misapprehension, that I do not say positively whether 15 cents is too high or too low. I do not profess a familiarity with the subject. What I said was that the talk of the gentleman from Minnesota, that a trust existed, could not mean a trust in the odious sense of inordinately increasing the price; because it was proved by the figures that even if a trust did exist it had not succeeded in raising the price more than 7 cents beyond the foreign price. But on the point whether 15 cents is a proper duty or not I do not profess any familiarity. I do not profess to say what should be the duty. That matter I leave to others who are more familiar with the subject.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I agree that while the gentlemen who are in this trust make no concealment of it, it has not resulted in an excessively oppressive price.

Mr. ADAMS. If it has not, then is not the main argument which is used here when they say the tariff duty causes trusts a fallacious argument, so far as illustrated by this particular subject?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. So far as temporarily illustrated by this particular case, that practical effect would be of course borne out. But as a matter of course, as long as we give them the power, they have the power under the law to go further than at present they have gone. But I do not care to enter into that phase of the discussion at this time.

Mr. ADAMS. For information I will ask one other question, in view of the fact that the gentleman used the word "temporarily." I ask for information whether the price of 52 cents a gallon is a fair average price, or is it an exceptional price?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am not able to inform the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman from Arkansas permit me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I renew it.

Mr. JACKSON. I have a motion to make.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. No other amendment is in order until the present amendment is disposed of. The Chair will put the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], to strike out and insert the words which have been read by the Clerk.

The Chair put the question and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. PERKINS. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 62.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the line.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. JACKSON. Is a further amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Licorice, paste or rolls, 4 cents per pound.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that line.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to amend the line so that the rate shall be 5 cents instead of 4 cents.

Mr. JACKSON. Am I entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas takes precedence. That is first in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let us vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Arkansas does not desire to speak, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I have made this formal amendment for the purpose of submitting a few remarks immediately in connection with the debate that has just been closed. I want to call attention to another reason in favor of the proposition to give adequate protection to flaxseed and flaxseed-oil. The reason I give is that it tends to encourage the production of flax for its fiber. I would like to call the attention of the people of the United States to an industry that has been too long neglected in our country. It is truthfully called an infant industry so far as its extent is concerned, although it was sufficiently tested at an early date in our history to show that our country is well adapted to it. I refer to the manufacture and use of the fiber of flax and hemp in the United States. It is one of the industries that has been too long neglected. I agree that there is sufficient reason for protection in behalf of those who raise flax for its seed to be made into oil. But I want to call the attention of the committee and the country to the fact that there was last year destroyed in this country, largely in the Northwest, 150,000 tons or more of the fiber of flax, a large part of which at least should have been utilized in this country in the manufacture of twine, yarn, and cloth.

That fiber ought to have been worth to the farmers of this country twenty or thirty millions of dollars. Our friends on the other side are accustomed frequently to call our attention to the prosperity of free-trade England. I would like in this connection to remind them that for many years England protected the cultivation and growth of flax by bounties and by duties. These bounties and duties gave a protection higher than any asked by the strongest protectionist in this country. They did this by successive and repeated acts of Parliament, the preambles to which show that they did it for the very same purpose that protectionists in the United States to-day ask to have their industries protected. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if we were to place flax, flaxseed, and flaxseed-oils upon the free-list there would be hereafter none of this product in the United States for use as fiber, and only a very small quantity raised for its seed. It could not be profitably raised, and of course it would not be raised. Flax and hemp fiber and substitutes that are used for them if placed on the free-list can be imported from Russia and the far-off countries of India and other places at prices which would render it impossible to raise and manufacture them in this country. The cheap labor of those countries enables this to be done. The preparation of the fiber by the farmer is an industry that requires special care and skill and a special training of the people who engage in it.

It can not be commenced one year and dropped the next and resumed again the year following. It is an industry that has to be encouraged and carefully built up by long years of protection and attention. In the district which I have the honor to represent we have for many years had a small establishment for the manufacture of flax and hemp of American growth. It is in the hands of gentlemen competent to judge from experience, and they pronounce the American flax as fully equal in fiber for all purposes to Irish flax. This establishment has grown for successive years until to-day it gives employment to perhaps two hundred men. The people who are employed are a good class of citizens who receive fair and most of them good wages. It is an industry which lives and thrives only by the protection which the present law gives it. If you place flax on the free-list and also flaxseed and flaxseed-oil, the farmers will cease to raise flaxseed and there will be no American fiber to manufacture, and this establishment must go out of business. We have been so fortunately situated in this country heretofore that we have been prodigal of our resources. We have done but little to encourage entirely new industries. Our people seemed to think that it was not necessary to look after anything so small as the flax and linen business; but this is a great mistake. It ought to be and can be made a great industry in our country.

We have been recklessly consuming the bounties that Providence and nature have given us. But, Mr. Chairman, the time is coming, and, in fact, it is now at hand, when we must look to many of these matters heretofore consided small and unimportant for the prosperity and welfare of the country. The United States ought to manufacture all its linen thread. We ought to manufacture out of the fiber raised within our own country all the twine we use. We ought to do more. We ought to enter now upon the manufacture of the finest linens. Our soil and climate are well adapted to raising the fiber and we have labor that would soon become skilled in its manufacture. With protection equal to that England gave her people in this industry the business would soon become one of great importance with us.

There is no reason why we should not manufacture all that we need and all that we use of these goods right at home; and it would bring money not only to the men engaged in the manufacture but also to those engaged in raising flax and hemp.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to strike out "four" and insert "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cement, Roman, Portland, and all other, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 16 and 17, the words "10 per cent. ad valorem," and to insert instead "10 cents per 100 pounds."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this item be passed over informally. I think the chairman of the committee has some understanding as to a change in the paragraph, but I am not prepared to speak positively, and therefore I ask the gentleman to let it be passed over for the present.

Mr. SOWDEN. I shall have to object, Mr. Chairman, because I want to leave the House, and may not be present when it is reached later. Mr. Chairman, speaking for this industry in the Lehigh districts, which represents an annual output of 400,000 barrels, and an investment of $500,000, giving employment to about six hundred hands. I desire simply to submit a few facts against any reduction of the tariff on cement, and in favor of my amendment making the duty specific instead of ad valorem. The importations of foreign cement in 1886 aggregated 645,197 barrels, valued at $722,579, or an average of $1.11 per barrel, against a valuation of $1.25 in 1882. In 1887 the total amount of imports was 1,070,400 barrels, valued at $1,102,532.40, the average valuation being about $1.03 cents per barrel.

This has been occasioned by the decision of the Treasury Department excluding the cost of the barrel in arriving at the value, and by the further fact that in order to get the lowest duty the foreign manufacturer invoices his barrel at a high figure and his cement at a low one, adding his profit to the non-dutiable barrel instead of to the dutiable cement.

The reduction in the price of foreign cement in the American market, which fell from $4 in 1876, when American Portland began to be manufactured, to $1.85 and $2 in 1887, when American competition became stronger, is evidence of the fact that foreign makers with cheap labor are selling their goods here lower than at home to hold the market, and are driven even to undervaluation to maintain their hold in face of the American competition which, though but a small industry, is slowly becoming established. No reduction of the duty can safely be made in this case without doing a great injury to a native industry, representing, in all its branches, many millions of dollars and some ten or twelve thousand laborers.

Mr. Chairman, the duty collected on the importations of this article in 1887 amounted to $220,506.48. The duty under the act of 1883 is 20 per cent. ad valorem; the proposition is now to reduce it to 10 per cent. ad valorem; and the Committee on Ways and Means contemplate, by this operation, to reduce the surplus to the extent of $110,253,24. Will this be the result of the reduction? It seems to me that exactly the opposite effect from that contemplated by the committee will be accomplished, because the reduction will necessarily tend to stimulate importation, and thereby not only injure our domestic industry, but add to the surplus.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read as a part of my remarks, a letter written by Mr. Ackerman on this subject, and published in one of the New York papers of April 17, 1888.

The Clerk read as follows:

POPULAR OBSERVATIONS—CEMENT AND THE TARIFF—GROWTH AND CONDITION OF AN INDUSTRY WHICH THE MILLS BILL WOULD RUIN.

To the Editor of the Tribune:

SIR: I observe that the Ways and Means Committee has decided to strike out cements from the free-list and restore them to the dutiable list at one-half the present rate of duty. I would like to lay before your readers some facts which I think will show that the duty on cements should not be reduced at all, but instead restored to 20 per cent. ad valorem, to be computed on the value of the cement, package, and freight at the port of entry in the United States.

Last year upon the importations of foreign Portland cement, which name is used as a general term to include all importations of foreign cement, there was collected a revenue of about $220,000, which alongside of a surplus of $100,000,000 is apparently an insignificant thing, but very seriously will an important American industry be affected if the duty is in the least reduced. Since 1856 there have been manufactured in Rosendale, Ulster County, New York, alone, over 36,500,000 barrels of building cement, which at the very low average of $1 per barrel would be $36,500,000. In manufacturing cement there is but one item other than labor that enters into its cost, namely, the wooden barrel.

Estimating the value of the cooperage at an average of 25 cents per barrel, making a total of about $9,000,000, we can safely say that a balance amounting to over $23,000,000 has been paid out for labor in that locality alone, being an average of nearly $800,000 per year for the thirty years; but this business, which in 1856 amounted to but 500,000 barrels, in 1887 amounted to over 2,300,000 barrels, employing over 3,500 hands, and paying out for wages nearly $1,500,000. Nearly all this cooperage that is used by the Rosendale cement industry comes from Maine, and its value is annually over $300,000. Thus it can be readily seen that the cement business is in every particular a native industry.

It is hardly possible to conceive of a business that is conducted on a closer margin than this is at present. The manufacturers actually give away their stone, reckoning it as nothing in estimating the cost of production; and even then, taking this into consideration, they do not now make legal interest upon their investment. The instances are numerous where a manufacturer has failed in this business by not being able to cope with the strong competition, and it is safe to say, therefore, that no one having capital to invest would now think of going into the business if he for one moment realized the excessive competition and difficulties he would have to encounter.

The duty on Portland cement, which formerly was 45 or 50 cents per barrel, now amounts to but 18 or 20 cents, as under various Treasury rulings the duty on the package and freight has been removed, and now the duty is only computed on the bulk value of the cement at the place of manufacture. Freights from London to New York are now about 8 shillings ($2) per ton, or 10 cents per barrel; and very good Portland cement can be laid down in New York City now for $2.10 to $2.15 for 400 pounds, and this figure is not a very low one. Deducting one-fifth of this amount to make the quantity equal to a Rosendale barrel, which weighs 320 pounds, as against 400 pounds for the Portland, would give $1.68 to $1.72 per barrel. Now take the duty off of this, and we have $1.50 to $1.54 as the price per barrel. But several years ago cement could be transported from London to New York for 1 shilling (25 cents) per ton or 5 cents per barrel, which is less than the rate Rosendale manufacturers have to pay from Rondout to New York, and if this state of affairs should exist again, it would make the equivalent price of Portland cement $1.15 to $1.19 per barrel, or equal to that of Rosendale.

Then another thing, the price of Portland cement has been steadily decreasing ever since it was introduced into this country. Only four or five years ago it was worth $3.50 to $4 per barrel in New York, now it is 40 per cent. cheaper, and the probabilities are that it will still go lower; yet in spite of all these facts, when an industry in this country, even under the most careful management, is scarcely able to live, the free-traders propose to ruin it entirely by reducing the duty which is absolutely necessary to the continuance of a manufacture in which in Ulster County, New York, alone over $3,000,000 of capital is invested, and 3,500 men are employed, whose daily wages amount to nearly $6,000, producing annually over $2,000,000 of manufactures.

The wages that are paid here are good living wages, but the Knights of Labor do not seem to be satisfied, and are now issuing their circulars asking for an increase. How preposterous! Instead of an increase, there will certainly have to be a very large decrease if the duty on cement is at all reduced; indeed, it is not at all improbable that the business in this country will have to be suspended altogether if the proposed Mills tariff bill become a law. Otherwise wages will have to be reduced to the standard of European pauper labor. I do not suppose many workingmen would want to see that state of affairs existing.

I have spoken above only of the cement that is manufactured in the Rosendale district, omitting all mention of the cement industries in this State near Syracuse, Buffalo and Akron, near Allentown and Pittsburgh, Pa.; in Hancock and Cumberland, Md., on the James River and other points in Virginia, near South Bend, Ind., and in the Louisville district in Kentucky, which latter locality alone produces nearly 2,000,000 barrels per year. These industries would all alike feel the disastrous effect consequent on a reduction of the tariff on cement; and the 7,000 workmen that are therein employed would either be thrown out of employment or have their wages largely reduced.

Too many blows have already been aimed at the cement interest by the various reductions in the duty from time to time. It is now not only time to call a peremptory halt in any further reductions, but in order that the business may live, and pay even the present wages, it is necessary that the duty be restored to at least its original figure, i. e., 20 per cent. on the cost value at the port of entry in the United States. If any industry deserves reasonable protection it is surely one which has made a desolate valley teem with life and energy, causing the barrenness of the silent hills to yield the plentiful means of subsistence to 12,000 inhabitants.

Yours, very respectfully,

ERNEST R. ACKERMAN,
General Sales Agent Lawrence Cement Company.

NEW YORK, March 26, 1888.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out lines 16 and 17. In the town of Rosendale, in my district, three thousand five hundred men are employed in this industry. The cooperage, which alone amounts to $300,000 per year, comes entirely from Maine. The amount of wages paid in that town is $6,000 per day. The effect of this bill, as now proposed to be passed, will be to close all the manufactories of Rosendale cement and to throw out of employment from four thousand to six thousand men in the State of New York alone.

I ask the Clerk to read the newspaper article which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE CEMENT INDUSTRY.

The manufacture of cement is not a local industry. It is national. Works exist in Maine, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland, Virginia, Washington, Oregon, Alabama, Colorado, Texas, California, Illinois, Wisconsin, West Virginia, Kentucky, Indiana, and Michigan. It stands seventh on the list of non-metallic products of the United States. It ranks just below lime and salt. It employs a capital of $8,000,000, has an output of over 5,000,000 barrels per annum, and gives work to about 12,000 laborers. The largest works are in New York State, where nearly 3,000,000 barrels are made and 8,000 men employed; in Kentucky, where nearly 1,000,000 barrels are made and 1,500 men employed; and in Pennsylvania, where nearly 400,000 barrels are made and 600 men are employed.

MANUFACTURE AND CLASSIFICATION.

"Roman" cement is a natural rock, quarried, burnt in kilns, and ground. "Portland" cement is an artificial cement made by mixing chalk and clay, or limestone and clay, in varying proportion, grinding this to powder, making a brick or ball out of this moistened powder; and after calcining, at high heat, this artificially-made new stone, by grinding the resultant clinkers to powder. The "Roman" corresponds substantially to the Rosendale, Louisville, and the majority of American cements. The "Portland" corresponds to the American "Portland." It has been claimed that this grade of cement could not be made in this country for want of material.

After fifteen years of experimenting, and after a loss running into millions, this statement has been controverted, and for five years past American "Portland" cements, "of a quality equal to any imported," and made in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, in New York, in Indiana, and in Texas, have been used on Government work (vide Reports Engineer-Commissioner District of Columbia for 1883, 1884, 1885) and other public work with entire success and in competition with foreign cements. The Eads jetties are built with American Portland cement (vide Captain Eads' Report on Mississippi Jetties); and the London and Southwestern Railroad of England actually, after a test, bought American-Portland for one of its bridges (Engineering News, volume 1887). This cement must sell at a lower price than the imported because of the established reputation of the older foreign brands; but with the abundance of limestone and clay in this country American manufacture will develop, and its product become established also.

STATISTICS OF MANUFACTURE.

From the "Mineral Resources of the United States," United States Geological Survey, 1885, the following figures are given of the production of cement made from natural rock in the United States from 1882 to 1885:

Years.	Barrels of 300 pounds.	Averge price per barrel.	Total value.
1882	3,165,000	$1.10	$3,481,500
1883	4,100,000	1.00	4,100,000
1884	3,900,000	.90	3,510,000
1885	4,000,000	.80	3,200,000

In reference to American-Portland the following estimates are made in the same work from 1882 to 1885:

Years.	Barrels of 400 pounds.	Average price per barrel.	Total value.
1882	85,000	$2.25	$191,250
1883	90,000	2.15	193,500
1884	100,000	2.10	210,000
1885	150,000	1.95	292,500

The total production of all kinds of cement, according to the same authority, from 1882 to 1885:

Years.	Barrels.	Value.
1882	3,250,000	$3,672,750
1883	4,190,000	4,293,500
1884	4,000,000	3,720,000
1885	4,150,000	3,492,500

From leading trade authorities it has been ascertained that the output of natural cement has increased to 5,000,000 barrels in 1887, with an average price of 75 cents, and the Portland cement industry has not appreciably increased, though prices have gone down as low as $1.85.

IMPORTATIONS OF CEMENT.

From reports of Bureau of Statistics, the following are the imports of cement of all kinds into the United States for the past ten years:

Imports of cement.

Years ending June 30—	Barrels of 400 pounds.	Value.
1878	*92,000	$204,422
1879	*106,000	205,074
1880	*187,000	373,601
1881	*221,000	440,025
1882	337,793	675,587
1883	472,865	817,346
1884	582,623	829,098
1885	578,141	908,581
1886	645,197	722,579
1887	1,079,944	1,198,819

* Estimate of Geological Survey.

CONCLUSIONS FROM THE FIGURES.

The American manufacture has remained practically stationary since 1883, actually decreasing in 1885, and increasing slightly to 1887. The price fell, however, each year, so that the 4,150,000 barrels of 1885 netted less to the makers than the 3,250,000 barrels of 1882, and the 5,000,000 of 1887 barely as much as the smaller output of 1882. On the other hand, the imports of foreign cement have increased tenfold since 1878, and in the period since 1882 have actually trebled. In the last-named period the invoice price has fallen from $1.77 in 1884, to $1.01 in 1887, owing to taking duty off of barrel.

THE CAUSE OF HEAVY IMPORTS AND CHECKED PRODUCTION.

Three causes have led to the increase of imports and checked home production: First, low ocean freights; second, a practical reduction of the duty, nearly one-half, in 1885, by the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury relieving the foreign article from duty on the barrel and on foreign inland transportation to tide water; third, the higher wages paid American labor. On the first point it may be stated as a fact that the freight from Europe to nearly all tide-water points in the United States and to many lake points is less than the rates from American cement works to similar points. The reason for this is that cement comes from Europe as ballast. On the second point, the figures of imports above given show a reduction of 75 cents in invoice value of cement imported from the year 1884 to 1887. This is due to the taking off the duty on the barrel, and has actually, by an Executive act, without action of Congress, reduced the duty from 35 to 20 cents per barrel. On the third point, in order to compete with the foreign maker there remains no other possibility of reducing cost except by reducing the wages of labor, as the constant reduction necessary to keep a foothold since 1882 has exhausted all other margins and means. A number of failures have proven this fact. The labor is at least 50 per cent. less abroad.

COMPARATIVE LABOR FIGURES.

Cement is nearly all labor.

In the United States—	Per cent.
Quarrying represents	40
Burning represents	6
Grinding represents	6
Moving, etc., represents	5
Packing represents	3
Coal and coke, staves and heading, all the product of labor, represents	27
Making of labor	87

This labor represents on an average for—	Per day.
Quarrymen	$1.50 to $2.00
Laborers	1.30 to 1.50
Millers	2.00 to 2.50
Millwrights	2.50 to 3.00
Engineers	2.00 to 2.50
Coopers	1.50 to 2.00

And all the labor is that of men.

In Europe both men and women are employed in cement works. The wages paid, as gathered from investigation made in European cement works and from consular reports of 1884, are as follows:

Laborers.	France.	Germany.	Belgium.	England.
	Per day.	Per day.	Per day.	Per day.
Miner	$0.87	$0.52	$0.60	$0.52

AMERICAN MALE VS. GERMAN FEMALE LABOR.

From United States Consular Reports, Ex. Doc., Forty-eighth Congress, page 464, one German Portland cement manufactory in Silesia employed in 1884, according to its pay-roll, in its whole works:

	Per day.
Three workmen	$0.36
Sixty-six workmen	.24
Seventy men and women	.24

A total daily pay-roll of $33.72.

An American works of same number of hands employs according to its books:

	Per day.
Two engineers, at	$2.00
Four millers, at	2.50
Two millwrights, at	3.00
Thirty coopers, at	1.75
Fifty-one laborers, at	1.30
Fifty quarrymen, at	1.75

A total daily pay-roll of $226.30.

A daily difference in favor of German manufacturer and against American manufacturer of $192.50 in labor alone.

DUTY SHOULD BE RETAINED.

Clearly, under these facts, the duty on cement should be retained under that clause of the Democratic platform of 1884, which says: "Necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to successfully compete with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country."

During the reading of the foregoing extract, when the time of Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, had expired,

Mr. MILLIKEN said: I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended sufficiently to complete the reading of this article.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not understand that the gentleman from New York desires anything more than that the remainder of the article be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand he desires to have it read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If so, I make no objection.

The reading of the article was resumed and concluded.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. With the understanding that, at the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], this paragraph is to be informally passed over, to be considered at a future time, I do not wish to press this matter further now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HOPKINS] renews the request of the gentleman from Arkansas that this paragraph, with the pending amendments, be informally passed over, to be called up hereafter. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whiting and Paris white, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
Chromate of potash, 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to offer an amendment which should have come in a few lines earlier.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the pending paragraph the following: "Licorice juice, 35 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the amendment just adopted will be inserted after line 13, which relates to licorice.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whiting and Paris white, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Line 18, I am informed, the chairman of the committee has some amendment in relation thereto, and I ask it be passed over informally.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chromate of potash, 2½ cents per pound.
Bichromate of potash, 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to strike out "2½ cents" and insert "1 cent."

Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Baltimore [Mr. RAYNER] is not present to-day, because of his special opposition to trusts and monopolies, as I desired to call his attention to this paragraph, which fosters the most absolute monopoly in the country, and that, too, located in his district. If I am informed correctly, the only establishment in the United States in which bichromate of potash and bichromate of soda are manufactured is situated in Baltimore, and that establishment has the control of every bed of chrome ore in this country, therefore making it a complete monopoly.

I understand further that this establishment has made an arrangement with the foreign manufacturers of bichromate of potash and of soda not to export beyond a given quantity of their products to the United States, and to maintain certain prices.

I would like to inquire of the gentlemen of the committee if they have received any information in this direction.

I regret the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], who is in special charge of this subject of trusts and monopolies, is not here to-day, as it appears from this information that we have, in the city of Baltimore, and in this particular manufacture, almost the only instance of an absolute monopoly of a manufacture secured by the control of every bed of ore which exists in this country, and aided to the extent of the duty. If it is true, as alleged, that there can be no competition in this country in the manufacture of bichromate of potash and of soda, that it is an article especially needed as a mordaunt in the dyeing of cottons and woolens, and that the principle of protection can in no way apply to it because there can be no competition in the manufacture, it seems to me the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means and the House should take this opportunity to break down monopolies—an absolute monopoly which prevents all competition and which by means of a duty of 2½ cents per pound is able to maintain the price higher than would be obtained if there was competition in its manufacture in this country. I send to the Clerk's desk to have read an extract from the New York Herald, containing an interview with James Dempsey, esq., agent of the Lewiston (Me.) Bleachery and Dye Works, a gentleman personally known to me as thoroughly acquainted with this subject, and of the highest character:

Now we come to bichromate of potash and bichromate of soda, both of which are essentials in dyeing and printing fabrics. The Herald has already exposed the iniquity of the Tyson monopoly and combination on it. The Baltimore Chrome Works has laid its heavy hand upon the bodies of ore recently discovered on the Pacific coast, and every load of ore mined goes straight to Maryland. In fact, this man, under the compact which you have already exposed, controls the bichromate of potash market as he pleases.

The Scotch are about Tyson's only competitors in the world, and he permits the syndicate to import just so much and no more. If they break their agreement he can afford to spend $2,000,000 and drive them out of the country. The other day when he put the screws on the Philadelphia concern which had started the manufacture, and then bought them out, a little printed notice made its appearance at once announcing that the price had been advanced 1 cent per pound. He has lately raised the price three-quarters of a cent a pound without even giving us notice that he intended to do so. He charges that much more and we have to pay it. That's all there is about it. The present price of bichromate of potash is 9½ cents a pound and bichromate of soda 8½ cents, the specific duty on each being 3 cents a pound.

Here's the copy of an invoice, which has been paid, which will enforce my meaning stronger:

BALTIMORE, November 11, 1887.

Lewiston Bleachery and Dye Works, Lewiston, Me., bought of Baltimore Chrome Works—

Thirty-three casks bichromate soda, 23,113 pounds net, at 8½ cents.....	$1,796.42
Less freight, at 40 cents per 100 pounds.....	92.45

Specific duty on 20,828 pounds of this at 3 cents paid $624.84. This I contend should be reduced to 1 cent a pound to start with.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to oppose the amendment for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman from Maine whether the price of bichromate of potash at 9½ cents a pound was the foreign price or the price in this country?

Mr. DINGLEY. Two and a half cents per pound is 30 per cent. ad-valorem.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand the importations largely increased during the last year. I understand, also, that the price sank from 30 to 6 cents in 1867, yet for some occult cause it has risen to 10 or 12 cents at the present day.

Mr. KELLEY. That is under the control of Tyson's monopoly.

Mr. ADAMS. All I wish is information. I want to understand the operation of the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to give you the information. Beds of chrome ore in California were purchased and a factory established in Philadelphia, which is referred to in the article from the New York Herald. The price was put by the Scotch-American Company combination, of which Tyson is the American element, so low that they could not use the California beds to make bichromate in Philadelphia as proposed, and Mr. Tyson bought them out at his own terms, as the concern was a losing one.

Then it went up from the 6 cents, to which he reduced it in order to freeze his only American competitor out, and he has recouped himself by steadily raising the price. If on God's footstool there is an absolute monopoly between two houses, one foreign and one American, with an arrangement that they shall determine the price, that they shall determine the amount of Scotch product put into this country, or receive a certain sum in compensation for not putting any in, it is this bichromate of potash monopoly. I heard on one occasion the American owner, Mr. Tyson, I think it is Mr. Jesse Tyson, say that it should be remembered that they had to keep a great deal of dead capital with which to prevent opposition, and that they did not use these mines. They had had to purchase all the new mines in California. I had that information direct from the lips of Mr. Tyson, one of the two copartners in this trust.

Reduce this duty to 1 cent per pound and you will probably free the market, so that the next man who buys a bed of chrome ore and builds a factory can be frozen out about as soon as the poor Philadelphians were.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend by making it 2 cents a pound, for the purpose of making some observations with regard to the manner in which this bill is draughted. I want to call attention specifically to the progress we are making in the development of a tendency towards ad valorem instead of specific duties.

I notice, upon a comparison of the existing law with the terms of the Mills bill now pending, that in a great number of cases specific duties are being changed into ad valorem. It is notorious that under the ad valorem system of duties undervaluations and frauds have been committed upon the Government for a great many years past; and they were so conspicuous and manifest during the present Administration that the first Secretary of the Treasury thought fit to commend to Congress a change in that respect of the existing tariff system, and to recommend that specific duties be substituted for ad valorem duties as far as it was practicable to do so in fixing the tariff rates.

The present Secretary of the Treasury has also made, I believe, the same recommendations; but Secretary Manning was very emphatic upon that point; and I desire to have the Clerk read the recommendations of the late Daniel Manning, Secretary of the Treasury, as appears in Executive Document No. 72 of the Forty-ninth Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36. Whatever successful contrivances are in operation to-day to evade the revenue by false invoices, or by undervaluations, or by any other means, under an ad valorem system, will not cease even if the ad valorem rates shall have been largely reduced. They are incontestably, they are even notoriously inherent in that system.

Page 40. One advantage, and perhaps the chief advantage, of a specific over an ad valorem system is in the fact that under the former duties are levied by a positive test, which can be applied by our officers while the merchandise is in possession of the Government, and according to a standard which is altogether national and domestic. That would be partially true of an ad valorem system levied upon "home value;" but there are constitutional impediments in the way of such a system which appear to be insuperable. But under an ad valorem system the facts to which the ad valorem rate is to be applied must be gathered in places many thousand miles away and under circumstances most unfavorable to the administration of justice. One hears it often said that if our ad valorem rates did not exceed 25 or 30 per cent. undervaluation and temptation to undervaluation would disappear; but the records of this Department for the years 1817, 1840, and 1857 do not uphold that conclusion.

Page xli. Consigned merchandise: "The sending to New York of merchandise by foreign manufacturers and presenting it there for sale, or the taking in this country of orders on samples of merchandise to be delivered in New York at duty-paid prices arranged in our currency, is a growing fact which this Government must face in selecting and prescribing rates of duty. Just as manufacturers in other States of our Union send their merchandise on consignment to their own agents to sell in New York, so do, and so will, European manufacturers. The ledgers of commerce and trade will more and more be written and kept in that city, and laws of taxation, State or national, immediately probable, are not likely greatly to impede or change the current. As buyers in New York do not go to New England to buy her staple manufactures, but find all the elements of buying in New York, so it will naturally be with European productions. If that is to be the case, I do not think our existing ad valorem rates can in the future be honestly or satisfactorily worked under the existing conditions of our invoice law, our appraising law, and the force of consular and appraising officers we now have."

Respectfully, yours,

DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary.

The Hon. the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to oppose the amendment.

I have noticed, Mr. Chairman, with a great deal of regret, the number of instances in which the Committee on Ways and Means have adopted the ad valorem instead of the specific rate of duties on imports. I notice with equal regret that the committee in its report seems to defend the use of ad valorem duties. Now, I think the question should be plainly presented, and that is my desire, and I suppose the desire of all.

I am free to admit that in two respects specific duties are open to objection. They are open to objection when applied to a class of goods of which there are several grades, the lower being used by the poorer classes and the higher grades by the rich. If a specific duty by weight were applied to woolen underclothing, for instance, the heavy flannel shirt of the poor man would pay a heavier tax than the light gauze or woolen undershirt of the rich man. That this would be wrong we all admit. But how can the Committee on Ways and Means apply this principle to a substance like whiting? Can it be said that there is one kind of whiting or one kind of cement or any other of these materials used in construction which are employed exclusively by the poor, or which come within their reach, and another and higher grade which are used by the rich?

Now, I think the committee may be commended when they apply ad valorem duties to avoid the evil to which I have referred; but I think it is a mistake, and will lead to numerous frauds on the Treasury and to greater expense in the collection of the revenue, when ad valorem duties are applied to a subject to which, in the nature of things, they are not applicable. Both Secretary Manning and Secretary Fairchild have recommended the abolition of the ad valorem system; and Secretary Fairchild, in a letter addressed to Mr. Morrison, the former chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, discussed at some considerable length the whole question of undervaluation in its connection with specific and ad valorem duties. The Senate have also discussed the same subject; but the Senate, not having jurisdiction to change the system of duties, sought the remedy in new machinery of the law in the various ports of entry and in new modes of fixing the valuation of imported goods. It is almost futile, however, and the only adequate remedy is to apply specific rates of duty. I repeat, therefore, what I said in the beginning. I regret the committee saw fit to adopt the ad valorem system to the extent they have in this bill when there is no necessity for it and no demand at the ports of entry of any of these goods.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to strike out the last word.

I want to say in regard to this amendment that the committee proposes a reduction of 20 per cent. of the existing tax on this article, and that seems to the committee as far as it would be prudent to go at this time. There may be a trust in this article. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] states that there is a trust which exists abroad and in this country, and that it is one and the same trust. For my part, I have no conclusive evidence of the fact. If that were true, of course it would be wholly immaterial whether or not the article were put on the free-list, for it would belong to one international firm or concern. But I do not think this House has the full information in regard to the state of trade on this subject that is necessary as a basis for the proposed action.

Now, sir, whatever may be our hostility to trusts, we must always remember that when we wish to take away from a trust the power to oppress the people, we must not do that which may so injure the industry as to destroy its existence. The committee followed that course with the sugar trust. They have lowered the margin of profit. But if they put refined sugar on the free-list and leave a tax on raw sugar every gentleman knows perfectly well it would not only destroy the trust but it would utterly obliterate the sugar-refining industry, because it would tax the raw material and leave no equivalent tax upon the finished product. That is only analogous as a line of action; not strictly analogous to this case in other features. We reduce the tax here until we bring the price of the domestic article and the price of the foreign article within 1½ cents of each other. The difference at other times has been very great. It has been as great as 2 and 3 cents a pound.

At one time the price in the United States was 15½, and abroad it was 13. At one time it was 9½ here, while abroad it was only 6½. We find now it is 9½ abroad and 10½ here. If we take off half a cent, we bring it from 9½ to 10, which is a difference of one cent and a half.

Now, sir, I think it is more prudent (this being a substantial reduction) to go only this far until we find exactly the abuses that may exist, instead of going further than industrial prudence would dictate. Therefore I think the amendment ought to be rejected. We must not be precipitate or impulsive.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas. I wish simply to congratulate the gentleman from Arkansas on having announced that it is illogical and inadmissible to place a tax on the raw material when you put the finished product on the free-list. I only regret that when the subject of crude glycerine and caustic soda was under discussion this bill was not in his charge, but in the charge of another member of the Ways and Means Committee.

I also congratulate the gentleman on having discovered that where a trust exists it is not always a remedy to put the articles subject to that trust on the free-list. That is what many of us have said, because we judged the tariff has no logical connection with trusts. The truth seems, if I judge rightly and understand the gentleman rightly, to be already dawning on his mind.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman's construction of my position is in the main entirely incorrect, but I do not think it is necessary to make any reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be withdrawn, and the question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DINGLEY. I renew the motion to strike out the last word for the purpose of reading portions of a communication from a prominent manufacturer of Providence, R. I.:

Bichromate of potash is manufactured for commerce from a mineral deposit which has until recently been found only in Maryland in quantity and condition to make it practical to work economically. This Maryland deposit has been controlled by the Tysons for more than thirty years to my knowledge, how much longer I do not know. During that time they have been practically the only manufacturers in this country and have been protected by a large duty. Under this protection the Tysons have become very rich. The business now is carried on by the Baltimore Chrome Works, owned by the Tyson family. It would seem that this concern was now in condition to bear a much reduced duty, from the fact that a considerable portion of their product has been exported and placed on the foreign markets in direct competition with the Scotch manufacturers, their only competitors. Of course in selling their goods abroad they lose the benefit of the duty, which gives them additional margin of profits here, amounting to nearly 70 per cent. on the cost value of the manufactured product. There has been within the past five years another small manufacturer called the Kallion Company of Philadelphia, but the production of this company is so small as to be hardly worth considering, and is not much of a competitor of the Baltimore Chrome Works.

A very large proportion of the consumption of bichromate of potash is of the Scotch manufacture, and even when the duty was 4 cents per pound the Scotch manufacturers were such strong competitors of the American that prices were forced down to 8½ cents per pound two or three years ago, and to bring the Scotch manufacturers to terms the Baltimore Chrome Works shipped large quantities abroad, and by becoming competitors abroad brought about some kind of an understanding or agreement, whereby it is generally understood that the Scotch manufacturers only send a certain quantity into this market and the Baltimore people either send none or a limited quantity to the foreign markets. As a result of this arrangement prices at once advanced about 1½ cents per pound, and now the uniform price of both the Scotch and American products is 10½ cents per pound, with no discount on quantity up to twenty-five casks, and a discount of 1 per cent. on larger quantities. Among the New England dealers or middlemen there is an agreement making price to consumers for one or two casks 10¾ cents, three or four casks 10½ cents, and five casks 10¼ cents. So you see the manufacturers give the dealers no margin whatever on five-cask lots, and we get a profit of only one-fourth of a cent per pound on single casks. The Scotch bichrome is shipped to only one agent in New York. There probably is no other one article which enters so largely into the cost of textile and other manufactures as bichromate of potash. It is used very largely by all calico printers, in all dye-houses, both cotton and wool, and also very largely in the manufacture of dry colors and pigments for paper manufacturers, and also for colors dry and ground in oil for paints, such as chrome green, chrome yellow, etc.

I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that this article is used in making the poor man's cloth; it is used for the poor man's paper with which he covers the walls of the rooms which make him a home.

It would certainly seem that consistency in tariff reform would call for a reduction in the duty on bichromate of potash and bichromate of soda, both made from the same ore.

Mr. DOCKERY. The question is on the motion to strike out "two and a half" and insert "one cent" per pound.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 43, noes 40.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. DINGLEY, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Acetate of lead, brown, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out "two" and insert "four."

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, if the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means will agree, I think we had better take the whole of the lead products at once and have the discussion on all of them together, beginning with line 21 down to and including line 28.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Of course there has to be a proportion between these several items, and whatever action is taken at the initial step will probably guide and determine the action upon each subsequent item.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If the committee will consent to deal with these lines in that way I will offer amendments to the several items.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the Clerk read down to and including line 28.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Acetate of lead, brown, 2 cents per pound.
Acetate of lead, white, 3 cents per pound.
White lead, when dry or in pulp, or when ground or mixed in oil, 2 cents per pound.
Orange, mineral, and red lead, 1½ cents per pound.
Litharge, 1½ cents per pound.
Nitrate of lead, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to strike out in line 21 the word "two" and insert "three;" in line 22, to strike out "three" and insert "five;" in line 24, to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 25, to strike out "one and a half" and insert "three;" in line 27, to strike out "one and a half" and insert "three;" in line 28, to strike out "two" and insert "three."

Now, I yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] and will also ask time for myself on these amendments.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I confess to a want of familiarity with this subject, but I desire to express the wish of my constituents who are engaged in this business, and to say a word in behalf of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR]. In the city of Allegheny, which is a part of my Congressional district, and in the city of Pittsburgh, which is represented by my colleague [Mr. DALZELL], there are several establishments engaged in this business, and they protest that the reduction of duty proposed by the Mills bill would seriously injure and cripple their business. This business is a very large one throughout the country; it is one wherein good wages are paid; it is one that subjects the employés to considerable hazard by reason of the chemical properties of the materials with which they deal; it is one representing a vast amount of capital; and, in view of these facts, it is but fair and just that those who are engaged in it, and those who are willing to pursue it, should have a protection equal to what they fairly require in order that they may successfully continue their business. I therefore express the hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] may be adopted and become a part of this bill.

It has been pointed out to me that there are inconsistencies in the duties on the different articles upon this list, some of them being at a higher rate of duty than they should be if the lower rates proposed for other articles shall obtain. I find that to be in keeping with the general tenor and course of the Mills bill, and although, according to Governor Hill, of New York, the bill is intended to correct the absurdities and incongruities in the existing law, I venture to say that we have never had a tariff law from the foundation of the Government up to this time which contained so many absurdities and incongruities as are to be found in this bill.

If this bill should ever become a law and the executive department of the Government should seek to enforce it, these incongruities and absurdities will come out so conspicuously that the framers of the bill will be heartily ashamed of it.

Mr. HERMANN. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, as a further result of the reduction here proposed, the silver mines of the Pacific coast will virtually be compelled to close, for the simple reason that a large portion of the silver product has with it a very considerable percentage of lead, which pays largely for the refining.

Mr. BAYNE. I suggest that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] ought to be here and to vote for an increase of these duties; for if we close up the silver mines his occupation will be gone.

Mr. BLAND. I suppose that the closing of those mines would not grieve the gentleman from Pennsylvania very much; for he has always voted against silver in every shape and form on all occasions and at all times, and no doubt he will continue to do so, notwithstanding the platform of his party.

Mr. HERMANN. That is begging the question.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated by my colleague [Mr. BAYNE], the paragraph under consideration has relation to certain industries which prevail in my district. Therefore, without intending to occupy much time, I beg to call attention to some facts in connection with the tariff as it now exists with respect to these articles and the tariff as proposed in the present bill.

All the subjects covered by lines 21 to 28, inclusive, are chemical products from lead; and they bear, therefore, a certain relation to each other. This relation is recognized in the existing rates of duties; and I therefore beg to call attention to the nature of the changes proposed in the Mills bill.

Pig-lead, which is the foundation of these products, bears at present a duty of 2 cents per pound, whereas by the present bill, in lines 291-2, the duty is reduced to 1½ cents per pound. White lead, under existing law, bears a duty of 5 cents; under the Mills bill the proposed duty is 2 cents. The existing duty upon litharge is 3 cents a pound; the proposed duty under the Mills bill 1½ cents a pound. Red lead now pays a duty of 3 cents a pound; the Mills bill proposes it shall pay only 1½ cents a pound. Orange mineral, under the present law, bears a duty of 3 cents a pound; the Mills bill proposes a reduction to 1½ cents. White sugar of lead pays 6 cents a pound duty under the present law; the duty proposed in the Mills bill is 3 cents a pound. Brown sugar of lead pays a duty of 4 cents a pound under the present law; the Mills bill proposes to make the duty 2 cents a pound. On nitrate of lead the present duty is 3 cents a pound; under the Mills bill it is to be 2 cents a pound.

The first observation I have to make with respect to this bill is that it strikes down the natural relation existing between these various products and the substance from which they are produced. Upon this subject I have the testimony of a number of lead manufacturers in my district. Without stopping to detain the committee I shall read an extract from one of these letters as a sample of the whole:

President Davis, of the "Davis-Chambers Lead Company," of Pittsburgh, a very large manufacturing establishment, says:

One-quarter of a cent per pound on red lead, litharge, and orange mineral over the duty on pig-lead is not adequate protection to enable American manufacturers to compete with Europe unless at a very great reduction in wages as compared with those now paid, and which it is hardly to be expected the men would submit to.

In addition to the testimony of these manufacturers, we have the experience to be drawn from the state of the manufacture itself under the existing law. Although it is claimed by these manufacturers that the protection under existing law is not high enough, still, even with that protection, the lead industry has flourished and is a growing industry. To cut down the duty would, necessarily, as has already been pointed out with reference to other things, increase the importations, depriving our capital of its returns and our laborers of their opportunity to earn wages in this industry.

I do not stop to repeat with respect to this particular industry the arguments which are familiar in regard to all others as to the employment of capital and labor, but I call attention to the fact that as the proposed reductions can not be expected to decrease the revenue, the blow aimed at our industries by the provisions of the bill is needless and uncalled for, and can only prove disastrous.

And I only stop further to point out the inconsistency which places a less duty on orange mineral, the final product, than is placed on the white lead from which it is made. This is another instance, of which there are many in the bill, where raw material is not placed on the free-list, or made subject to lower duties, while the product representing skill and labor is either made free or brought in at a lesser duty.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FARQUHAR. First of all, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the amendment I have proposed to these various paragraphs is in line with the present duty, and also in harmony with the policy of lessening the duty in respect to that part of the lead manufacture which has developed itself until it is strong enough to reduce prices. I know that we shall probably be met by the committee on the threshold with the remark that in the matter of white lead, sugar of lead, brown and white, and orange mineral they are proposing to reduce the prices to the consumer. Sir, my own knowledge of large white-lead works in my own district and elsewhere leads me to say fairly before this Committee of the Whole that the days of making fortunes out of the white-lead manufacture are past; the competition is too close and severe for that. The matter is in just this position, that when you make these reductions you simply bring into operation the competition of the wages of some other land against the American workingman.

At the same time I desire to call attention to some signal incongruities in reference to this matter; and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who is leading this morning the majority of the committee. I would like him to state a business reason why orange mineral and red lead are placed in this bill at 1½ cents a pound, while white lead is placed at 2 cents. I ask this question because, according to my practical knowledge of this business, it takes 116 pounds of white lead to make 100 pounds of orange mineral. The latter, being the highest product, is placed at 1½ cents a pound, while the lowest product is placed at 2 cents a pound. I would like to hear from the committee on this subject. Some statement on the other side may possibly explain some other incongruities to which I wish to call attention, but above all I desire information on this point.

I would like the gentleman from Arkansas to explain how it is possible in fairness that he can put mineral orange at 1½ cents per pound duty and white lead at 2 cents a pound duty, when it takes 116 pounds of white lead to make 100 pounds of orange mineral.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Under the existing law white lead has a duty equivalent to 40 per cent., and the duty on orange mineral is equivalent to 70 per cent., which is quite an inequality in the tariff. It seems to me unjust.

Mr. FARQUHAR. But that does not reach the point I make. I understand that of orange mineral 2,000,000 pounds were imported in 1877. I grant that. Is it to increase this importation or cut it down you put this orange mineral at this low price?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman can not do that. He makes it 1½ cents on orange mineral and 2 cents on white lead. I state it takes over 109 pounds, at 2 cents, of white lead to make 100 pounds, at 1½ cents, of orange mineral. I can not see through it; I can not understand it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman will find this applies to specific duty on about the same basis. It leaves nearly the same specific margin which existed before. So far as the gentleman's argument is concerned as to the relation between the specific rates, what was right before may well be said to be right now.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Ah, let us see whether it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. FARQUHAR. This is a material matter, and if it can be corrected it ought to be corrected. The gentleman tells us they are brought down to specific duties, but that is just what I can not see—why the higher price, the one which needs the most labor and carries the most cost, should go at the less figure, when we have the other one at a half cent per pound more. That I can not understand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I believe it is conceded to be true of a very cheap product, that that which is the lower product may be at a specific which gives it a high ad valorem, and the finished product may be at a somewhat larger specific rate, which will give it a much lower ad valorem. And yet the difference, while the lower product may have a higher ad valorem, will give a sufficient margin under a specific tax to cover the cost of conversion.

I have not found it observable, as a rule, that you could justly have a higher ad valorem arising from a specific tax on the finished product than you have on the lower product.

To return, then, it not unfrequently happens, as you find most conspicuously in the metal schedule when tracing the tariff, that you have higher ad valorem rates on some of the lower products than you have on the more finished products, and yet have an abundant margin to cover the cost of conversion. Here, however, the higher equivalent rate is on the finished product and not on the base.

Mr. BYNUM. If the gentleman will permit me one question——

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am not speaking for myself. I have the authority of five of the largest firms in America who are engaged in this business who tell me that it is a blunder. I do not mean merely to air my rhetoric. I think it can be remedied now before we go further. One of the largest white-lead manufacturers and all the others have made the same expression in regard to this mistake.

Mr. BYNUM rose.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let me call attention to another fact. The duty we received on orange mineral last year was $148,000, while on white lead we received only $22,000.

Mr. BYNUM. The gentleman will notice that 2 cents on white lead amounts to 26 per cent. ad valorem, and the 1½ cents on the orange mineral is equal to 38 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly. I understand that, if your figures are correct, but——

Mr. BYNUM. And so the highest specific rate is really the lowest ad valorem by nearly 50 per cent.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes; but you have the difference of 27 per cent. on white lead taken from the 35 per cent., and where do you find your one-half cent? The gentleman's arithmetic, I think, will not stand the test.

Mr. BYNUM. But I am speaking of the reduction of these specific rates to the ad valorem rates.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Very well.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to say to the gentleman from New York that the question of the relation between the parts of a list like this is of course wholly independent of any opinion that may exist in the minds of gentlemen as to the rate that ought to be established. If we in any manner agree upon what is a sufficient tax for the base of the industry or what ought to be the rate, then the same law of relation as between these various parts will obtain, whether the tax on the base be high or low, because it becomes merely a business question of relation of one to the other, and not a question of taxation in a political sense. The first thing, then, to settle is the main question, and then the relationship of the parts follow as a mere matter of business detail.

Now, I think it probable if the gentleman from New York and myself could sit down together with some person thoroughly familiar with the whole paint business, after having agreed that a certain base rate is to obtain, whether it be a high or a low rate, we would not have a particle of difficulty in establishing the relationship of these different branches on that understood original basis. The gentleman knows as well as I that there are a good many intricate questions in connection with this part of the list.

I have received since these rates were agreed upon some very intelligent suggestions from gentlemen in the paint business. I have looked over them, and they are well worthy of serious consideration. They appear reasonable, but they are in conflict with the views of other experts.

I am not now prepared, however, to pass judgment upon them or to change my present views, having come to this relationship between the parts after consideration and conference and consultation of the papers of experts. I would not be disposed to alter the relationship without a very thorough investigation outside of the House, more thorough, in fact, than we can possibly give to the question in the House.

I do not suppose that there is a gentleman here who is fully prepared to say, or who is entirely competent to advise any one of us about all of the features of the case here presented. It is a very technical matter, and is so understood; and the information upon the subject is necessarily technical in character, so technical indeed that if I had it read now in the hearing of the House I doubt if there are more than a very few gentlemen present who would be able to comprehend it. But I repeat I am not certain that some changes ought not to be made; but if so I am not certain just what they ought to be, and we could not be certain, if there are any necessary, until we make a more careful inquiry than we are able to make here.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then your argument leads to the conclusion that when you are not certain you take refuge behind the Democratic vote and leave the duty as it is in the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I can not consider what we are now talking about as being in any sense a political question. The gentleman is not talking of the rate of taxation, as I understand it, but of the relationship of the parts to that rate after it is agreed upon. I say that that is a mere business question, and after the rate is determined there should be no politics in it. If the gentleman takes the rate fixed as the basis, then of course there is no ground of political difference. The other becomes a mere question of business as fixing the relationship between the conditions. But as I have said, Mr. Chairman, I would not be willing to change the present relationship except upon mature consideration of the whole question; and while the gentleman from New York might be able to convince me, for I am sure he talks very sensibly upon the subject, still until I had an opportunity to give more careful thought to it than we can now give here I see no reason to make the change; and if at the moment he convinced me that this part or the other is slightly out of line, still I would want to reflect upon it, to let it go for awhile if necessary and return to it again; but up to this time he has not convinced me, and I believe from the information we have that the present rate is about what it ought to be. Possibly the Senate may advise some modified adjustment; and there are always some details for final and careful consideration. They are getting down to very few in number.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, as I said at the beginning of the general debate in this House, that the way this bill has been framed, the character of the framers, the very explanation made now by the gentleman from Arkansas, all confirm me more and more in the opinion that no tariff bill ought to come into any Congress unless there are business men and business experience back of it. I say that no set of politicians——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This measure was drawn upon very careful business advice, and I do not want to depart from it on every unconsidered presentation of the case.

Mr. FARQUHAR. No set of politicians, Democrats or Republicans, can make a bill that will suit the American people. If I were to advise in such a matter I would take a committee of fifteen. On that committee I would put, possibly, two lawyers, then a first-class newspaper man, and twelve business men. As far as I am concerned, as an American citizen and a business man, I would be willing, even as a Republican, to put twelve Democrats, if they were good business men, on that committee, and I would have justice and fair play. As I say here to-day, it is a practical business fact that there is an incongruity in this bill no man can properly explain.

Mr. Chairman, these are the first general words I have uttered in this debate. I speak merely in the interest of the manufacturers of my district and cognate industries all over the land. When we have good authority we ought not to take the position of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and wait for further light from that great clearing house, the Senate; but as a matter of business, when we know we are wrong we ought to settle it here, even if it does touch the committee's pride a little bit.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would say in reply to the gentleman from New York that I do not think he exactly apprehends what I stated. There can be no such matter of pride here, and I am not prepared to admit that this adjustment is wrong even in any detail. I know no stronger representations were ever made to us than those of men engaged in this business that the present law is exceedingly unjust and unequal. I do not suppose you would ever get a schedule so arranged but that certain business men engaged, as they are, in the different competitive parts of the business, would say it was unequal and unjust.

After ample consideration this was the best arrangement at which we could arrive. I do not pretend to say no fault is found with it by business men; but I am not prepared to say that the fault which they find is a just fault, because other business men say it is unjust. I believe, whatever may be its faults, it is far more perfect than the present law. Some people will always call your work faulty. At all stages gentlemen, and able gentlemen, engaged in competitive features of a business like this will come to you with very plausible arguments to show that what is to their advantage is just and ought to be done. I say that such gentlemen have presented papers recently. I have received several. They have not convinced me. I think whatever there is in their pleas that they do not affect the question of the amount of the general reduction, but only a few details that likely other business men would equally complain of. I am not prepared to say that any suggestion they have made ought to be accepted. But I am prepared, of course, always to say that if they can prove it of course it ought to be accepted, after it has been carefully considered.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Secretary Manning and Secretary Fairchild have both recommended that specific instead of ad valorem duties should be adopted in a tariff where practicable. Now in this bill specific duties are largely overborne and ad valorem duties restored, the very thing of which they complain.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Does my friend mean to say that in the list of subjects under consideration, which we are considering now as a unit, there is a single ad valorem duty?

Mr. BAYNE. Not these particular articles.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I see no reason for going off on something that does not apply.

Mr. BAYNE. The general question is applicable. My friend was arguing the general question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Not at all.

Mr. BAYNE. As to what recommendations should be made, if any should be made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman certainly does not want to put this article upon an ad valorem basis.

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; I do not. I want a specific duty wherever it will apply.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We are proposing to do so here.

Mr. BAYNE. I want specific duties wherever they will apply. I want to follow the advice of the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Manning, and the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fairchild——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I trust my friend will follow their advice in more ways than one.

Mr. BAYNE. With reference to specific instead of ad valorem duties.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The advice of Mr. Fairchild and of Mr. Manning is for specific taxes as an administrative business method wherever it can be fairly done, and also for a reduction of rates. Now, here you have them both combined, so let us join hands and vote it through. [Laughter.]

Now, here are specific rates, and also a reduction of rates, and I hope my friend will follow the advice of those distinguished Democrats of whom he has spoken, and vote for both. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. I am opposed to the reduction of rates, but I am not opposed to the specific rates.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as to this matter there are one or two statements that probably had better go into the RECORD, so as to make the facts known. There is no considerable quantity of orange mineral manufactured in America. I hold in my hand a paper prepared by the Chemical Committee of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia—the high protective tariff manufacturers' club—a paper prepared with great skill and labor, in which the statement is made that the amount of this product manufactured in the United States is inconsiderable; so that as to orange mineral there can be no industry in this country injured by this change in the tariff.

I make that statement upon the authority of this manufacturers' club, in response to the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR]. In response to the gentleman's statement that the duty put upon white lead is higher than the duty upon orange mineral, I have to say that there is a specific duty on each, but when reduced to its equivalent ad valorem rate, the duty on orange mineral is larger by nearly 50 per cent. than the duty on white lead; so that if the duty were an ad valorem instead of a specific duty, it would stand in the proposed bill: "on white led 26 per cent.; on orange mineral 42 per cent.," showing a duty higher by 16 per cent. on orange mineral.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let me correct the gentleman. The figures are 27 per cent. on white led, and 35 on orange mineral. That is the equivalent ad valorem duty as figured out in this official book which I hold in my hand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am using the working figures of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] has the figures for 1886 instead of 1887.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am using the figures in the small pamphlet, which make the rates 26 per cent. on white lead and 42 per cent. on orange mineral.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The figures are 27 and 35.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. According to the estimate of the expert of the Treasury, which is the estimate that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] holds in his hand, the figures are 26.80 on one, and 35 on the other. So that according to the estimate made by one expert the rates are as 26 to 42; and according to the estimate of the other expert they are 26.80 to 35. In either case, therefore, whichever estimate is correct, the duty on the orange mineral is higher ad valorem than the duty on white lead.

Now the facts as they appear from these statements are that orange mineral is not made in the United States except in inconsiderable quantity——

Mr. BAYNE. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FARQUHAR. On what does the gentleman make that statement?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I make it upon the authority of a statement prepared by the chemical committee of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, which I hold in my hand and which, under the head of "orange mineral," says: "Quantity manufactured in the United States inconsiderable." And they give their judgment as to the reason why the orange is inconsiderable; they say it is "due to duty being the same as on raw material."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know the gentleman does not mean to misstate anything.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have the same schedule here, and I notice that in the bill this paragraph comprises not only orange mineral but red lead; and I find by this schedule which the gentleman refers to that the quantity of imported or red lead was 435,336 pounds, whereas the quantity manufactured in the United States was 4,300 to 5,000 tons, or 10,000,000 pounds.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I spoke of orange mineral.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know that; but the paragraph includes both, and I simply call the gentleman's attention to the whole of the facts.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I was speaking of orange mineral, and my time expired before I got to red lead. The gentleman's statement that the duty on the base is higher than on the manufactured product is still more inaccurate with reference to red lead. The duty on red lead, according to this statement which I hold in my hand, is 38.46 per cent., whereas the duty on the base is 26.8 per cent., a difference of nearly 50 per cent. These are the facts. I do not mean to say that upon the philosophy of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] we ought not to put the duty on the base higher than on the product. His philosophy is that when you put a duty upon an article it diminishes the cost, that the effect of a duty is to lower the cost; and, therefore, what you want to do for the person who has to buy the product is to increase the duty which he pays so that he may buy the article cheaper and manufacture it cheaper. [Laughter.] That is the practical application of the gentleman's philosophy, and I am sorry to see him depart from it when he has an opportunity to put it in practice. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The committee, not believing in the theory that the greater the cost of production the lower the cost to the purchaser, did not follow out that theory in practice; therefore they have fixed the duty 50 per cent. lower in the case of red lead and about 30 per cent. lower in the case of orange mineral.

Mr. FARQUHAR. However entertaining the general remarks of the gentleman may be, the rudimentary features of his philosophy do not appeal very strongly to my reason. For the last twenty-five years I have heard that kind of talk, and it is not calculated to affect a good tariff man like myself.

I wish to say to the committee in general terms that this is a home industry all through. Every State which produces lead is interested in this question. We are simply dealing now with the question of the labor and the capital and the machinery employed in producing these oxides. That is the question. I am not discussing foreign tariffs, but the American wages and the American product, and the question of fair play to the men who are engaged in this business.

I want to know whether the Committee on Ways and Means has a single letter which will show there are extortions in any of these five or seven lines now under discussion. I want to know why the products of German manufacturers should be brought in here as against the American products. That is where I stand. I wish to vindicate business men in saying that they can not stand these cuts. I wish to urge the claim of the wage-workers that their wages must go down if the changes here proposed are made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will do me the honor to read a brief analysis which I made of the chemical schedule, and which will be found in my speech delivered during the general debate, he will see exactly how much of the tariff is appropriated and enjoyed by the manufacturers of chemical products. He will find that according to recent figures, even with a tax upon many articles which are to these manufacturers a raw material, and allowing all the wages they now pay, together with a fair interest on their capital and the cost of keeping up the integrity of their plant—if they had been upon a free-trade basis they would have fallen short only something like $250,000, while as it is they made nearly the entire amount of the tax paid, which amounted to some millions of dollars, and only $250,000 of which could be said to be appropriated by the laboring people. And if the gentleman will go back to the census of 1880 he will find still more striking figures, showing that by the admirable manner in which they managed their business they virtually appropriated every cent of the protection over and above what they paid to their wage-workers. I think there is no industry more strikingly illustrative of the effects of excessive rates of tariff taxation than our chemical industries. They are managed by a body of admirable business men. I believe, if the statements in the public prints are to be relied upon, all the articles produced in this line are kept in close communication and sold by card rates; that the consumption of these articles is handicapped a good many millions of dollars a year over and above what is necessary to pay the wages received, to maintain the integrity of the plant, to pay interest on capital and a fair 10 per cent. profit on the business. I think the gentleman will find these things very clearly shown from the official figures.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Arkansas misapprehends one feature in regard to the business of manufacturing chemicals, and that is, first of all, it is not a business you can take up and drop in twelve months if it does not pay. That is the difficulty to begin with. No man in this country pretends to go into the manufacture of chemicals to-day, whether dyes or leads or anything of that kind, without putting in something like $500,000. More than that, in this business you must pay the highest wages. Very few men of the grade of common laborers are employed; they are used only for the manual labor of transporting articles from one part of the works to another. The other employés are high-priced men, receiving $7 to $10 a day. It is a risky business at best for any one to go into, but American capitalists have tried it. The gentleman from Arkansas knows (for he and I have consulted together with gentlemen who are in the chemical business) that the least change in the chemical schedule might work harm to such an extent that the business could not be restored to a prosperous basis; while on the other hand many of these manufacturers who have come to this House have said that if the business is let alone they can build up their industry in America to compete against anything that Europe can produce. It is not a question of making money on their capital, because I know that three or four great establishments in this country have been obliged to call for installments on their stock in order to keep their business alive. There are too many million dollars invested in this branch of business to be swept away by the stroke of a pen or a mere whim.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to occupy the floor for the remaining two minutes of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I admire the candor of the gentleman from New York in stating his position. He says he represents the manufacturersand their employés and the capital invested. There are some of us, Mr. Chairman, that represent the consumers, the great masses of American society, and I simply rise to repudiate any definition of American labor which draws the line between any of the industrial classes of the country. I know no reason which can be assigned why these people engaged in manufactures shall be raised up to a privileged class. I know no reason why they should be exalted above every other class of honest labor which is to be found in this country, including agriculturists.

We are told about seventeen millions of people are engaged in the various industries of this country. Seven millions of these are in agriculture, and of course they are the consumers of these manufactured goods; and I hope the gentleman, whose candor excels that of his party, when he tells us he represents the manufacturers and them only here, will expand and broaden the scope of his political horizon so as to have some little consideration for those persons who consume your manufactured goods, but who do not manufacture.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will only take half a minute to reply to the gentleman from Arkansas, and I wish to say to him in all candor that I recognize the producers first in this country, and I have nothing for the nonproducers. I take care first of all of the man who makes and earns and pays, and who pays the fees of lawyers and doctors and ministers. [Laughter.] When you come to the income class, like professors of colleges, who talk free trade, let them take care of themselves, and when these colleges do not want them let them go to work and earn something by the sweat of their brow. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. What do you say about agriculturists?

Mr. FARQUHAR. They are the best in the world. I was born on a farm myself.

Mr. ROGERS. Then you ought to take care of them in your philosophy.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do as much as the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the formal amendments will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, it is to be regretted a bill should be brought in here striking at the great chemical interests of the United States on so confessedly slight information. No industry in this country has grown with such marvelous rapidity as the chemical industry under our protective system. Yet gentlemen representing the majority of the committee in lowering these duties, who strike at these industries, are unable to answer the simplest question in reference to this schedule.

In 1860 there were but 4 establishments in the United States, but under the wise system of protection established, in 1880 they numbered 1,349. The number of people employed in these chemical industries in the United States in 1860 were only 3,936, but by the census of 1880 they gave employment to more than 29,500.

The capital invested in the chemical industries in the United States in 1860 was a little over $7,000,000. In 1880 there was invested capital in chemical industries in this country of more than $85,000,000. We paid in wages in 1850 a trifle over a million of dollars, but in 1880 the chemical industries of the United States paid nearly $12,000,000 to American labor engaged in them.

The material used in the chemical industries of the United States in 1850 was a trifle over eight millions, and in 1880 we used seventy-seven millions of material in our chemical industries. We produced in 1850 a trifle over fourteen millions of chemical products, and in 1880 we produced more than one hundred and seventy millions of products.

And this industry embraced in this schedule the majority of this committee propose to strike down, and the gentleman from Arkansas and others have said that they do this because it is a tax on the consumers of these articles. I challenge them to name one single article in this schedule which can not be purchased cheaper to-day by the consumer than before the tariff was imposed. I challenge them to name one single article in this schedule that is not now produced cheaper than before the tariff upon it was imposed. I claim there is not one.

Why, take this very question of soda ash to which I have alluded. In 1881 we did not produce a pound of it in the United States. You say that a duty adds to the cost. We imposed a duty of $5 a ton on soda ash, and what was the result? We commenced the manufacture of that chemical product in the United States and the price went down from $48 to $28 in less than three years. What, then, do you mean by saying that a duty adds to the cost? Before we had that product in the United States we were at the mercy of the foreign producers, who could levy tribute upon us at their will; but the moment we protected the industry we built it up in the United States and reduced the price one-half, and are holding it there to-day for the benefit of the consumer. This is only a single instance; but the principle prevails all through the catalogue.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ADAMS. Has debate been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can move to strike out the last word.

Mr. ADAMS. I make that motion.

I only desire to say that the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan is not only true in regard to States which have heretofore been regarded as the manufacturing States of this country, but that this particular form of manufacture has gone so far to the westward that in the very State I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor it has become not only one of the important industries, but that the city of Chicago is one of the important centers of the chemical industry of the United States. In that city alone there were employed during the last year about one thousand workingmen in this class of manufactures alone, and the capital invested amounted to between eight and nine millions of dollars. So that this is not a question of an exclusive class in some of the older Eastern States of the country; and it is not a question of raising a certain class of laboring men into what the gentleman from Arkansas calls a reserve, exclusive, or preferred class; but the effect of a radical change in the duty on this chemical in this country will be felt not only in the Eastern States, but also in the Northwest, where I am somewhat familiar with the condition of things.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to renew the pro forma amendment for the purpose of performing a duty that I feel called upon to perform, that is in having read a letter addressed to me, signed by two or three of the most responsible gentlemen in New York, in connection with this bill, showing that it will destroy and ruin the industry in which they are engaged. The communication is as follows:

NEW YORK, February 3, 1888.

Hon. J. C. BURROWS:

We are manufacturers of white acetate or sugar of lead, and the only manufacturers in the United States. The apparatus for making this article is costly and unfitted for other purposes. The demand is very fluctuating, notwithstanding which an expensive plant must be kept in order for any sudden demand. The article is used in the manufacture of colors and as a mordant. It costs the manufacturer between 10½ and 10¼ cents per pound to make. The selling price is 12½ cents per pound, net.

With cheap raw material and cheap labor it is made in Germany for 5¼ cents per pound, while the price of the materials alone to the American manufacturer is 8½ cents per pound, not counting labor.

The materials used in the manufacture of white acetate of lead are as follows: Pig lead and acetic acid and the present duties on the same are:

Pig-lead, 2 cents per pound., equivalent to over 75 per cent. on the average European price of pig-lead for the past three years. Acetic acid, 2 cents per pound, which is prohibitory on its importation.

The foreign manufacturers substitute alcohol for acetic acid, which, at the cost to them, is an important saving over the use of acetic acid.

The balance of the enhanced cost to the American manufacturer is the difference in the cost of labor. We pay from $7.50 to $9.50 per week for laboring men, and have men in our employ at $9.50 per week who have worked for years in the same capacity in sugar or acetate of lead factories in Germany for $2.40 per week.

The present rate of duty (6 cents per pound) should be retained, and any reduction to less than 6 cents per pound will put a stop to this industry. The industries mainly affected by the stoppage of this manufacture will be the producers of pig-lead, coal, sulphuric and muriatic acids, and of acetate of lime.

The amount of capital endangered by this contemplated reduction of duty certainly exceeds one-quarter of a million dollars, and a reduction of the present duty of acetate of lead will allow the foreign manufacturers to absorb the trade here, and in consequence will make an increase of revenue instead of a decrease to the United States Government.

Mr. BURROWS (before the Clerk had concluded the reading of the above). I was having that read, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of gentlemen on the other side. As they are giving no attention to it, I shall ask the Clerk to discontinue the reading and print it in the RECORD.

Speaking of the industry of soda-ash, I desire to state how imposing a duty upon it does benefit the consumer by reducing the price one-half after the imposition of the duty, but that one industry in Syracuse is employing a capital of $1,500,000. It has paid in wages annually $800,000. It has paid in freights $140,000 a year to the railroads and $12,000 a year to the canal companies. It consumes annually 70,000 tons of coal, 100,000 tons of limestone, 10,000 tons of coke, 100,000 tons of salt, and employs 1,500 people. This is one industry built up by the imposition of the duty of $5 a ton, by which duty soda-ash manufacture has been established in this country at the point named, the only one existing this side of the Atlantic; and while it has given employment to labor and distributed this amount of money, and provided for the use of our materials—coal, coke, salt—to these numerous amounts, it has at the same time reduced the price of the product to the American consumer one-half in three years.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FARQUHAR, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Magnesia, calcined, 7 cents per pound.
Magnesia, sulphate of, or Epsom salts, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound.
Prussiate of potash, red, 7 cents per pound.
Prussiate of potash, yellow, 3 cents per pound.
Nitrate of potash, refined, or refined saltpeter, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 37 insert the following:
"Alumina—alum, patent alum, alum substitute, sulphate of alumina, and aluminous cake and alum in crystals or ground, six-tenths cent per pound."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that amendment. That section has already been passed.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to know what point of order can be raised upon putting those articles on the dutiable-list.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As far as I could catch the amendment, the articles have been put on the free-list by action of the committee. There may be some additional names that I did not catch; but the amendment seems to be in regard to articles already on the free-list.

Mr. BAYNE. That makes no difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment again, so that it may be fully understood.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The point I make is that this is precisely a copy of lines 69, 70, and 71 on page 4 of the free-list; and this committee has already decided upon the free-list. We have passed from that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. BAYNE. Undoubtedly. That is not the proposition on page 4. The gentleman will find the proposition quite distinct. The proposition on page 4, line 69, places alumina, alum, etc., on the free-list. My proposition places them on the dutiable list with a duty attached.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does the gentleman say this proposition places them on the free-list with a duty attached?

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; on the dutiable list with a duty attached.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. The proposition on page 4 places alumina, alum, etc., upon the free-list. The proposition which I have sent to the Clerk's desk to be read places alumina, alum, etc., on the dutiable-list with a duty attached. They are not the same propositions. They are very different propositions. The proposition on page 4 admits these substances free of duty. The proposition which I send to the Clerk's desk places a duty upon these substances. There is all the difference in the world. Now, if the gentleman could stand upon the technology of his own bill there might be something in the point of order; but it has been admitted already that something will have to be done to rectify the want of meaning in that bill which will preserve the duty upon things not enumerated in this bill. That is admitted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, no.

Mr. BAYNE. The chairman of the committee proposed and had read——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen will confine themselves to the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I am confining myself to that proposition. I say this: That the Mills bill as it stands before the House to-day will put alum on the free-list.

I propose to make alum pay a duty. The contention of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is that there is some ambiguity in the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Not a bit.

Mr. BAYNE. He admitted it, as I understand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman is not speaking on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I think I can make myself understood. It will save time if you will let me go on, for I can say what I have to say in a moment. The chairman of the committee admitted that there is some ambiguity in the bill, which if it should become a law in its present form would not include anything in the existing law that is not enumerated, because on the last page of the bill, I think it is section 41, it is provided that all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with that law are hereby repealed. The bill itself proposes to fix a dutiable-list and a free-list. Therefore any other dutiable-list and any other free-list that might now exist, being in existing law, are hereby repealed. That seems to me to be plain enough. I do not see how any lawyer could construe it otherwise. That being the case I want a chance to vote upon this proposition to make alum pay a duty, and I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to point me to any rule of the House of Representatives applicable to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union that precludes my right to have a vote upon that proposition.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly on the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be brief. The rules of parliamentary procedure were not intended to be applied to tariff bills. They are general in their character. I think the Chairman, before he construes this amendment to be out of order, must point to some principle of parliamentary law which declares that the subsequent part of the bill shall not be inconsistent with the former part of the bill.

I respectfully submit that there is no such principle known to parliamentary law. It may be a reason for refusing to adopt this amendment that it is inconsistent with something which the House has already done, but it does not follow that it is subject to a point of order; because neither in any specific rule of this House nor in any principle of the general parliamentary law can the gentleman find any rule whatever which prohibits the House from saying or doing something in a subsequent part of a bill which in the opinion of the Chair or in the opinion of the gentleman is inconsistent with something that already exists in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question. The committee has already adopted a provision putting the articles named in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the free-list.

Mr. REED. That is something for the committee to determine.

Mr. DOCKERY. That action has been taken by the committee. It will be conceded that a motion to reconsider can not be entertained when the House is in Committee of the Whole. The effect of this amendment, therefore, is to reconsider the action heretofore taken by which these articles were placed on the free-list.

Mr. REED. The Chair is assuming that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is a fact, and the Chair will therefore be compelled to hold that the point of order is well taken; but if the gentleman desires, he can take the opinion of the committee.

Mr. REED. Oh, we shall not take any appeal. We are not going to appeal from Philip sober. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Sal soda or soda crystals, one-eighth of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out, in line 38, the words "one-eighth," and to insert "one-fourth."

Mr. Chairman, when the "alum" item was considered I unfortunately had left for Chicago, or I should have moved to strike from the free-list the proposition which placed "alum" upon it. These various articles which are collated here in the bill are the productions of the same mills, and they amount to a very large industry in this country. There are about twenty-five firms and establishments engaged in the production of alum and soda of various kinds. They consume a vast amount of material which is the product of labor. They consume salt to the extent of 500,000 tons, sulphuric acid 513,000 tons, lime and limestone 700,000 tons, coal 800,000 tons, nitrate soda 17,000 tons, alum clay 50,000 tons, sulphate of ammonia 25,000 tons, pyrites 500,000 tons, and packages 2,610,000 barrels.

There is no industry in the whole country producing a manufactured article in which labor is more immediately concerned than it is in these industries. The establishments are scattered over various sections of the country. The United States consume 37 per cent. of the world's production, and in the United States at present we produce about 18 per cent. of the total consumption. We import, therefore, about as much as we produce. In my district there is one of these establishments. It employs between three hundred and four hundred men. It has struggled for a great many years to build up the industry, and it has finally succeeded, and there are other establishments in different States of the Union which have undergone the same struggle and have also succeeded. The accomplishments brought about by American production have reduced the price of this commodity to the American consumer away below what it was before our home industry was established.

The effect which flows from protection has been felt in this respect, as it has been in many other respects. Now, this bill proposes to strike this industry, to discharge these men from their employment, and to invite into this country the products of the foreign manufacturer instead of consuming the products of our own people.

This is not good political economy. Tested on business principles it would not meet with the favor of anybody. It is worse than bad political economy; it is cruelty to the people of this country to discriminate thus against men engaged in these industries, and to foster, as this bill proposes, the industries of foreign countries.

Nobody in this country is complaining of the cost of these articles. I challenge a single member on the Ways and Means Committee, or any gentleman on the other side of the House, to produce anybody who complains of the price that is paid. No complaint has come to us. We have simply the arbitrary decision of the gentlemen upon the Ways and Means Committee, not one of whom representing the majority knew anything about this industry.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks five minutes additional. The Chairs hears no objection.

Mr. BYNUM. There is a general leave to print.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, there is leave to print. I do not suppose I can make any impression on these gentlemen upon the other side. I suppose they intend to put this bill through as it is with some slight changes—notably one obtained on behalf of my good-looking friend before me from Chicago [Mr. LAWLER], and some other changes that may be proposed. We witnessed but a few minutes ago a proposition to keep bichromate of potash up to 2½ cents a pound. In that case, where a Baltimore firm had a monopoly of the whole business, the duty was kept up stiff and high enough.

Mr. BLAND. How many firms are engaged in the business the gentleman is now speaking about?

Mr. BAYNE. In this soda and alum business there are twenty-five to thirty firms scattered all over this country. There is no "trust," no combination, no monopoly. But unfortunately the gentlemen engaged in these branches of business throughout the country are not situated in the right localities.

Mr. BLAND. I did not suppose the gentleman would concede there could be a "monopoly" under the tariff.

Mr. BAYNE. If these industries were in Baltimore, Md., or in the district of my friend from Chicago [Mr. LAWLER], who seems to have considerable influence with the committee——

Mr. LAWLER. We will make the same concession to you if you will vote for this bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Or in many other localities which might be pointed out, then these industries might not need any advocacy on our side.

Mr. DINGLEY. What did the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. LAWLER] say was the concession which he made in order to obtain the removal of glue from the free-list? The gentleman from Chicago, I understood, informed the gentleman from Pennsylvania a moment ago of a certain concession which he made in order to have glue taken from the free-list, and stated that a similar concession made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania might be to his advantage.

Mr. LAWLER. I was going to say this: The committee did make a concession; that is, it is so supposed; I did not understand they did. I was going to suggest to the gentleman now on the floor whether, if we make one concession to him, he will stop talking and let this bill come to a vote. We will make a concession, if he will agree to do that.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman said that the concession to be made was to vote for the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] is very kind. But this bill affects many industries in Pennsylvania. A greater variety of industries are represented in Pennsylvania than in any other section of the country. But I am glad to hear my friend from Chicago say that a concession was made to him.

Mr. LAWLER. I do not say that. It is so understood. I do not claim that it was.

Mr. BAYNE. For most concessions there is a quid pro quo. No doubt the concession here involved a quid pro quo, because when this bill was first discussed the gentleman was placed among the twenty-five or twenty-six protectionists on the Democratic side who would vote against the bill. Now, those twenty-five or twenty-six protectionists, as I understand, have dwindled down to two or three at the very outside. Glue brought over one——

Mr. LAWLER. I will answer the gentleman, if he will allow me, by stating——

Mr. BAYNE. I have no doubt bichromate of potash brought over another. So it goes. I say that my constituents are exceedingly unfortunate in the fact that some of these establishments are not located in districts represented by gentlemen on the other side who have influence with the Committee on Ways and Means. Mr. Chairman, the glue industry is a good one, a big one, one which I would like to protect. It deserves protection, and shall cordially receive it, so far as I am concerned. But the alum industry is a large industry, representing a great amount of labor and a large amount of capital, the percentage of labor in the actual product being as much, almost, as in any product embraced in the tariff bill. Why should not these men receive proteciton? Why should their industries be stricken down? I would appeal (if an appeal would amount to anything) to gentlemen on the other side to consider this question and to vote for such duties as will simply keep this industry at its present degree of prosperity. But I know such an appeal is in vain. I know that the edict has gone forth that this bill is to pass this House substantially as now framed, with such amendments as have been agreed upon by the Committee on Ways and Means; that it is to come out of the Committee of the Whole substantially as now framed, and be sent to the Senate. The hope of the country is in the Republican Senate, and the country so feels. I could wish that gentlemen on the other side would submit this whole question to the voters of the United States next November, and let the people pass upon it before a decision is reached in this House.

They are unwilling to do that. I venture to predict to you now, gentlemen on the other side, that the next House of Representatives will contain from twenty to thirty Republican majority, and the Republican nominees for President and Vice-President will carry every Northern State on this issue. [Applause.]

The question recurred on Mr. BAYNE'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bicarbonate of or super-carbonate of soda, and saleratus, calcined or pearl ash, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I move to amend by striking out "three-quarters of a cent per pound" and inserting "1½ cents per pound."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I undertook yesterday to make an amendment by way of addition to the free-list. My friend on the other side of the House, while admitting he knew nothing about the subject, advised his colleagues to vote against that amendment, and for that reason the amendment was rejected. Now I propose an amendment of a different character. It is to put back the duty as it is at present on the article of bicarbonate of soda and saleratus.

I wish to say to my Democratic friends on the other side of the House that I am advised by good Democratic authority the proposed reduction of duty would destroy the manufacture of soda in America. If that be true, it would be a great outrage to enact this reduction of duty on saleratus and bicarbonate of soda.

As to the history of this industry, I am told that about forty years ago English soda was the only kind used in America; its annual sales did not exceed 100 tons and the price ranged from 9 to 12 cents per pound. Even as late as 1872 the price of English soda ruled as high as 7 cents per pound in the American market. To-day American manufacturers make and sell in the United States about 50,000 tons annually, the demand for which has been created by their own time, labor, and expense. The price has been reduced from 7 cents to 3½ cents per pound solely by home competition. The quality has been improved, so that now the American manufacturer makes a better article than the English ever made. This result has only been accomplished by years of labor and invention and the expenditure of large amounts of money.

In 1842 American ingenuity discovered the present process of making bicarbonate of soda. At first the machinery was crude, and for many years American manufacturers struggled to overcome the defects which were everywhere manifest in the process and the results.

Upwards of from four millions to five millions of dollars are invested in the manufacture of soda and saleratus in the United States, almost entirely represented by the value of the plants.

My distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has given you some facts and figures which fell upon dull ears upon the other side of the House as to the production of soda ash, the value of the materials used therein, and the amount expended in labor. He showed that to destroy it would be an irreparable injury to an important industry.

Now, the bill does not change the duty on the raw material, but if the duty on the manufactured article is reduced it would be a serious blow to the labor employed in the manufacture of bicarbonate of soda and saleratus. I learn that two soda manufacturers of Brooklyn give employment, directly or indirectly, to about one thousand hands; the entire number dependent upon them is several times larger. One of the two Brooklyn firms pays more money annually to its employés than is derived by the Government in the same time from the tariff on the articles in question.

I have alluded to the manufacture of soda-ash, a material from which bicarbonate of soda is made. A reduction of the tariff on the manufactured article would kill a new-born industry.

I wish to call attention to another fact. I wish to impress on the minds of my friends on the other side that this information comes from high Democratic authority, from men who have stood high in the Democratic councils, and who are to-day among the largest producers of these articles.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I hope I will be permitted to occupy five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Now, if the manufacture of bicarbonate of soda is crippled this new industry—which bids fair to make us entirely independent of Europe for this almost indispensable article—will be strangled at its birth, while on the other hand the manufacture of our own soda-ash insures future and permanent cheapness of the articles into which it is manufactured.

The immense importance of the soda manufacture to the United States will be seen when we consider that it is an article of universal use. Not a family in the country but what uses it in some manner or shape; not a physician but what uses it in some of his prescriptions as an important ingredient, and in the arts and sciences it is indispensable.

If the American manufacture is crushed and wiped out and our supplies are henceforth to be taken from the foreigner under the delusion that we shall get them cheaper, then in the event of a war with any European power our supply would be cut off and the United States, so far as soda is concerned, would be in the same helpless condition as that in which the late civil war found the Southern States.

Let me read from the memorial of those engaged in this manufacture. Here is what they say:

Lastly. We respectfully submit that the duty on bicarbonate of soda and saleratus should remain as it is, for the following reasons:
1. A reduction of duty would stop the manufacture of these articles in this country.
2. It would immediately depreciate valuable machinery and property now used in this manufacture.
3. It would throttle a new American industry, the manufacture of the raw material (soda-ash), which bids fair to be of large proportions in a short time.
4. It would eventually give the entire trade in this article to foreign manufacturers, who would control the market and price, certainly not for the consumers' benefit.
5. It would ruin an industry which is distinctly American—a notion of America—the product of American genius, aided by American energy.

Very respectfully,

JOHN DWIGHT & CO., New York City.
CHURCH & CO., Brooklyn, N. Y.
J. MONROE TAYLOR, Brooklyn, N. Y.
DELAND & CO., Fairport, N. Y.

MARCH 22, 1886.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to be heard for a moment upon this question.

The manufacture of soda-ash was commenced in this country in 1861. Bicarbonate of soda is the common baking-powder, and is used in every household. The present duty is 1½ cents per pound, or $33.60 a ton. This bill proposes to reduce the duty by one-half, or $16.80 a ton.

The Solvay Process Company of Syracuse, N. Y., commenced the manufacture of bicarbonate of soda two years ago, or in 1886. The result of the beginning of this manufacture of bicarbonate of soda in 1886 was first to reduce the price. The price then in the American market was $76.16 per ton, and to-day it is $68.20 per ton, or a reduction of $7.96 on a ton by reason of the inauguration of this domestic manufacture.

We consume in the United States about 40,000 tons annually, so it will be observed that by starting this industry we have saved to the people of the United States $358,400. We import now annually about 1,100 tons. If the present rate of duty is continued we can evidently supply the home demand at the reduced price. If this duty is reduced as proposed by this bill the manufacturers say that it will probably stimulate importation so that we shall import at least one-half of the demand. If that be so, it will increase the revenue $310,000. The Solvay Process Company of Syracuse, N. Y., as I have said, have entered upon the manufacture of this product in connection with their establishment at a heavy outlay for machinery; and, as I have already stated, the result of that is to reduce the price. What motive could have actuated the majority of the committee of this House to strike down an industry that has by its operation reduced and is reducing the price of a necessary product to the consumers of this country I must confess myself utterly unable to conceive.

I call attention to these facts, furnished me by the Solvay Process Company, and a statement submitted by them to the effect that it will cripple them, if not absolutely ruin the industry now entered upon within the last few years.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will temporarily withdraw the amendment I have offered for the purpose——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY). The Chair desires to overrule himself for the purpose of correcting an error in reference to the decision made on the point of order by the gentleman from Kentucky a few moments since.

After consultation with the permanent chairman of this committee, who is of opinion that the ruling was not in order, the Chair will entertain the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], which the Clerk will read.

Mr. BAYNE. I move the adoption of this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 39:
"Alumina—alum, patent alum, alum substitute, sulphate of alumina, and aluminous cake, and alum in crystals or ground, six-tenths cent per pound."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I now renew the amendment to strike out, in line 41, "three-fourths of a cent" and insert 1½ cents.

The question being taken, there were on a division—ayes 28, noes 13.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Is it in order to make the point of no quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Then I will not make it. [Laughter.]

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk to come in after this line.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 41:
"Sulphate of soda, known as salt cake, crude or refined, or niter cake, crude or refined, and Glauber's-salt, 20 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. BAYNE. I have about the same remarks to make on this proposition as on the other, and I shall not repeat them, but ask to have the reasons, which are stated in much better form than I can give them, as will appear in a communication addressed to the House of Representatives from reputable manufacturers, printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to by Mr. BAYNE is as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives:

The following argument is respectfully submitted as to the duties on alum and sodas:

The present duties are as follows:

	Cents.
Alum ..... per pound ...	½
Sal soda ..... do ...	¼
Bicarbonate of soda ..... do	1½
Caustic soda ..... do	1
Soda ash ..... do	½

Twenty per cent. ad valorem on sulphate of soda.

The proposed duties, per bill introduced by the honorable chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, are as follows:

	Cent.
Sal soda ..... per pound ...	¼
Bicarbonate of soda ..... do	½
Caustic soda ..... do	½
Soda ash ..... do	¼

Alum is placed on the free-list.

Sulphate of soda is placed on the free-list.

Should this bill become a law, it would destroy one of the most important of our industries, as all of the articles are absolutely essential; and until the last few years we have been entirely dependent upon England for the supply of these manufactures.

In 1887 the importations were 198,419 tons.

In 1887 the quantity made here was 194,000 tons.

The excess of imports, we submit, is a good reason why the present rates should remain.

The prices of soda and alum under practical free trade, compared with prices under the existing tariff, are as follows:

Articles.	Year.	Average market price per pound.	Duty per pound.		Excess of market price under practical free trade.
		Cents.			Per cent.
Soda ash	1858	2.80	4 per cent. =	.11 cent.	150
	1888	1.12		.25 cent.
Sal soda	1858	2.02	4 per cent. =	.07 cent.	113
	1888	.95		.25 cent.
Bicarbonate soda	1858	4.45	8 per cent. =	.33 cent.	62
	1888	2.75		1.50 cents.
Caustic soda	1858	7.13	4 per cent. =	.27 cent.	191
	1888	2.45		1.00 cent.
Alum	1858	3.75	4 per cent. =	.13 cent.	114
	1888	1.75		.06 cent.

The average prices are taken from the New York commercial papers, and are lower than ever before. The total value of 392,419 tons is $16,600,000, about equally divided between our own country and Europe. The quantity of raw material required is about as follows:

Salt ..... tons ...		500,000
Sulphuric acid ..... do		513,000
Lime and limestone ..... do		700,000
Coal ..... do		800,000
Nitrate soda ..... do		17,000
Alum clay ..... do		50,000
Sulphate of ammonia ..... do		25,000
Pyrites ..... do		500,000
Packages ..... barrels ...		2,610,000

About half of the above articles are produced in this country from mines and factories in close proximity to the soda and alum works. In a few years the other half would also be produced here if your honorable body favorably consider the retention of the present duty.

Among the multitude of reasons why the duty should not be changed are the following:

Because—Many collateral industries and trades will be affected.

Because—We are on the eve of the extension and adoption of the ammonia process for making soda, and it is hoped that this important chemical reagent will not be annihilated at the outset.

Because—We are about erecting plants at the great coke works with a view of catching the sulphate of ammonia contained in the escaping gases, all of which is now wasted.

Because—We are now working the vast deposits of native sulphate and other forms of soda existing in the Western States and Territories, notably Wyoming, Nevada and Utah.

Because—We are working the pyrites mines of Virginia, Massachusetts, and Vermont, for sulphur ore, in place of Sicilian sulphur, formerly used in making Sulphuric acid.

Because—We do not want to resume the humiliating position of obtaining our consumption of alum and alkali from foreign sources.

Because—Labor is a most important item in the cost of all forms of soda and alum, as large masses of material have to be handled and dealt with. The average labor paid here amounts to 39 per cent. of value of product, against an average of 15.6 per cent. in similar establishments in Europe. The above labor includes only that paid at factories. The contingent industries, which amount to a very large sum, are omitted.

Because—The grinding down of wages (as we should be compelled to do) is an objectionable feature and can not commend itself to enlightened citizens of the United States. We aim not only to pay sufficient wages for mere existence in providing food and clothing, but also to allow of the education and bringing up of the children of the operatives in a proper manner, thus making them better and more enlightened citizens of the Republic.

Because—The amount of duties on soda and alum since their original imposition is considerably less than was paid at first, owing to the fact of the foreign manufacturers being quick to perceive that by concentration of those articles the duties might be considerably reduced.

Because—The glass, soap, and paper manufacturers, who are the largest consumers, are united on the propriety of the present duties, as lower rates would tend to prevent an increase in their manufacture in this country, and the saving in cost of production of glass, soap, and paper by the reduction in duty would come to so small a fraction as to be quite inappreciable, and would hardly find its way into the pocket of the consumer.

Because—The alum and sulphate of soda manufacture would cease entirely, as those articles are placed on the free-list. The revenue from the other forms of soda would be greatly increased in consequence of reducing the duty one-half, as England is forwarding half our supply under the present duty.

Because—Ten millions of dollars are invested in the alum and soda works and half as much additional in contingent and allied industries. Fifty thousand people are dependent upon them for support. The manufacturer, the laborer, the consumer, the mine-owner, and the carrier would see their money drained out of the country, and their requisites would be vastly diminished.

Because—The alum clay deposits of Indiana, Alabama, South Carolina, and Virginia are now being developed, and this would cease with alum on the free-list.

Because—The British manufacturers are deeply concerned over the threatening evils to their alum, alkali, and soda industries by reason of the rapid development of those industries in this country. Mr. Weldon, in a paper read in London in 1883, gave the soda production of the world at 710,000 tons, of which 432,000 tons were made in England. The United States by long odds is the heaviest consumer.

Because—In consequence of the permanent depression in market values owing to sharp and active competition, the profit on soda and alum in the old established factories amounts to less than 6 per cent. upon invested capital. Several of the new companies, although in operation two or three years, have paid no dividends at all.

Because—Heavy chemicals are brought to the United States as ballast, the freight costing only the expenses of handling. These vessels are sent over for grain and petroleum cargoes; hence sea freight affords no protection.

Because there are many towns that were brought into existence and the people and neighboring farmers supported solely by the chemical industries established in their midst. In view of the evil results that must follow the placing of alum and sulphate of soda on the free-list and the reduction in duty on sodas, we most earnestly request that no change or alteration be made in the existing duties, as it will, in reduced wages and reduced employment, seriously and vitally affect the interests of the respective communities, and without any commensurate gain to any American interest.

THE TARIFF COMMITTEE REPRESENTING THE INTERESTS AFFECTED.
HENRY BOWER, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, April 17, 1888.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 42: Hydrate or caustic soda, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. BURROWS. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out "one-half of 1 cent per pound" and insert "1 cent per pound," the present rate of duty.

This is an infant industry. It was born in 1887. It is about a year old. It was born at Syracuse, N. Y. Its birth cost $200,000; and I will ask the Clerk to read the account of its origin, which I hope will be listened to attentively by gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Let me say first that in 1887, last year, the Solvay Process Company of Syracuse, N. Y., attached to their plant machinery that cost them $200,000 for the manufacture of this substance, and they have just commenced its production. Until they began it there was never an ounce made in the United States; and as they say, this will prove destructive to that industry and destroy the outlay of $200,000 invested. The very fact that they have added to their works machinery to make the product has already reduced the price of the material. I ask the Clerk now to read the communication, and hope the majority will listen to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Caustic soda is a hydrate of soda. It is used in manufacture of soap, paper, woodpulp, and all scouring operations in many other manufactures.

	Tons.
Imports, 1887	46,000

Price January, 1887, 2¼ cents	$65.33
Price January, 1888, 2¼ cents	58.80
Price April, 1888, 2¼ cents	57.00
Total fall since January, 1887	8.33

This is probably the effect of the new enterprise of the Solvay Process Company, which was begun in March, 1887, and has only within a few days turned out the first caustic soda ever produced in the United States.

The Solvay Process Company has expended on caustic soda works more than $200,000.

Argument of the Solvay Process Company, Syracuse, N. Y., against the reduction of the present duty on caustic soda.

	Per ton.
Present duty 1 cent per pound	$22.40
Proposed duty, ¾ cent per pound	16.80
Proposed reduction	5.60

Up to the present time the entire consumption of caustic soda in the United States (with the exception of a very insignificant quantity) has been supplied by importations, and almost exclusively from England. For the past four years these imports have been as follows:

	Revenue.
1884, 34,990 tons, a duty of $22.40 per ton	$783,776
1885, 37,740 tons, a duty of $22.40 per ton	845,376
1886, 38,855 tons, a duty of $22.40 per ton	870,352
1887, 40,000 tons, a duty of $22.40 per ton	896,000

The official figures for 1887 are not yet obtainable, but it may be safely assumed that the imports will certainly reach the figures above given of 40,000 tons.

The selling price of 70 per cent. caustic in January, 1887, was about 2½ cents per pound for 60 per cent., which corresponds to $65.33 per ton of 70 per cent. caustic.

During the year 1887 the Solvay Process Company has expended, now $200,000, nearly $150,000 in building and equipping extensive caustic soda works, in which it is intended to produce from 6,000 to 10,000 tons per year, which quantity will be increased if found practicable. This enterprise will produce from 16 per cent. to 25 per cent. of the consumption of the United States.

Although not a single pound has yet been turned out by these works, owing to their present incomplete condition, still the mere prospect of this new source of supply has caused the selling price to fall to 2¼ cents per pound, which corresponds to $58.80 per ton of 70 per cent.

January, 1887. Selling price 2¼ cents	$65.33
January, 1888. Selling price 2¼ cents	58.80
Difference	6.53

From this it would appear that the saving effected to the consumers of caustic soda has been $6.53 per ton on 40,000 tons=$261,200, and that the new enterprise of the Solvay Process Company has already benefited the country.

If the duty on caustic soda is reduced, the immediate effect will be disastrous to this new enterprise. In passing it may be noticed that no such undertaking has ever before been attempted in the United States.

The foreign makers will be able to introduce their products cheaper than they are now doing, and will be able to destroy competition by the Solvay Process Company, after which there will be no inducement for them to lower their prices, and it would be entirely within the range of possibilities that the price should rise again to the same point as in January, 1887, where this home competition first began to threaten the foreign market.

If the duty is maintained as at present, the Solvay Process Company will probably produce 6,000 tons during 1888. This will be sold at home and must necessarily decrease imports by just that amount, less the natural increase in the consumption of the country. Calling this increase 4 per cent. on 40,000 tons, 1,600 tons, then the result of the operation of the Solvay Process Company will be a decrease in the imports of 6,000. Six thousand tons at duty of $22.40 per ton, $134,400—which sum will go toward decreasing the revenue and the surplus.

If, however, the duty is reduced, as is proposed, the Solvay Process Company will produce no caustic soda, because it can not afford to do so, and the natural increase in consumption must be entirely made up by increased imports. We shall then import at least 41,600 tons, and probably more. Under the reduced duty the revenue from this source will be—

41,600 tons at $16.80 per ton	$698,880
Showing a decrease in revenue of	197,120

This decrease is $62,720 more than the decrease which would be effected by the operations of the Solvay Process Company, and at first sight it would seem more desirable to accomplish it in this way; but it must be remembered that the consumption of the country is increasing at the rate of from 3 per cent. to 5 per cent. per year, and it will only take a few years to more than effect this temporary reduction. Again, the Solvay Process Company intends, if possible, to increase its production as speedily as possible to 18,000 tons per year, which would cut off, say, 40 per cent. to 45 per cent. of the present imports, and would correspondingly reduce the revenue from this article. This is no vague promise, but is made understandingly, and with the determined purpose of carrying it out if the conditions of duty will admit of doing so. This can only result in good to the country at large and in a still further reduction of the revenue surplus.

It may be further urged that the Solvay Process Company has put its capital into caustic soda works in good faith and on the supposition that the existing state of affairs would not be changed. If, however, a change is made, it will most disastrously affect this branch of its business, and may render its plant of no value whatever.

If there ever was a case of an "infant industry" this is one. It seems hardly just to change the conditions before the infant has fairly begun to breathe, or has produced the first pound of the article for which it was created. Against this weakling are pitted the strong and well-established industries of like nature in England and elsewhere industries which have flourished for years, and which have the notable advantage of having both managers and employés who have grown up with them. The skill and experience of years is all in their favor. They ought to produce their goods cheaper than we can on this account alone, leaving out of consideration the question of relative wages, which, however, is in itself a most important one, as labor in one form or another may safely be considered as forming at least 95 per cent. of the cost of caustic soda.

In conclusion the Solvay Process Company, asks a continuance of the present rate of duty (1 cent per pound) on caustic soda, for the following reasons:

1. It will eventually materially reduce the surplus revenue.
2. The cost of this article is already lessened to the consumer, and will probably be further decreased.
3. A healthy competition will be possible. This is always an advantage to the country at large.
4. This is a new and "infant industry," born under the protection of existing circumstances.

All of which is respectfully submitted by,

THE SOLVAY PROCESS COMPANY.
F. R. HAZARD, Treasurer.

NEW YORK, January 27, 1888.

The total number of men (from 750 to 1,000) in the actual employ of The Solvay Process Company does not, by any means, represent the workmen who are employed by those who furnish supplies necessary for the several manufactures carried on by it. Thus:

Miners, coal, salt; quarrymen, limestone; coke workers, coke; gas-house men, ammonia; wood-workers, barrels, etc.; iron-workers, drums for caustic; cotton-workers, bags for soda; and many others who are required to furnish the innumerable small supplies, from a tack to a locomotive, which are in daily use.

During the reading of the article the hammer fell.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to have the rest of the article read, but I will not detain the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. Sufficient has been read to show that the industry was started last year, that it has reduced the price materially, that the company have invested $200,000, and that to reduce the duty will destroy the industry.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Has it reduced the price more than the reduction of the duty?

Mr. BURROWS. I have not calculated that. It has reduced the price very largely. The company is just entering upon the production.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The Chair put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35.

Mr. BURROWS (while the noes were being counted). I do not care for any further count, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in after line 43.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 43 insert:
"Copper, sulphate of, or blue vitrol, 2 cents per pound."

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, there is a small importation of that material, but a very considerable manufacture. The amount imported is about 462 pounds, I believe. The amount manufactured in this country is about 7,000 tons. This article is used, as I understand, for colors, dyeing, electrical batteries, and printing. The price in the United States is 4, 5, and as high as 8 cents per pound. The present duty is 3 cents per pound. The cost of manufacturing it abroad is said to be 3 cents per pound. It must be perfectly obvious that if the duty is taken off it will result in large importations; and so far as it results in importations it will cripple the industry here at home. That is the plain logic of the situation. If gentlemen are willing to be persuaded by the logic of facts and experience they will vote for this amendment. If they have made up their minds to put this bill through headlong, without regard to reason, rhyme, or any other consideration, they will vote against it. I ask for a vote on the proposition.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I propose another amendment. I will send it to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 43 insert:
"Strike out lines 83 and 84. Sulphate of soda, known as salt cakes, crude or refined, or niter cakes, crude or refined, and Glauber's-salt, 20 cents per hundred pounds."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. That is a point of order raised a little while ago and overruled by the Chair. I have been offering these propositions since.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The proposition is expressly to strike out two lines we have already gone over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion this would be returning to a portion of the bill already passed. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYNE. It is an entire change. It is providing a duty different from existing law. There is no motion to strike out at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment again.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. There is a mistake in wording the amendment. The words "Strike out lines 83 and 84" should not be there.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I made the point of order against the amendment. On page 4, lines 83 and 84, will be found precisely what the gentleman has put in this amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no; I put a duty on it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Those lines are precisely what will be found in this amendment. The only difference is that one is on the free-list and the other has a duty provided.

Mr. BAYNE. That makes a different proposition entirely.

Mr. BLAND. If motions to put on the dutiable-list articles now on the free-list are in order we would have to go over the whole bill again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is exactly the same language. This is not an amendment which is inconsistent with a former amendment and comes under that rule. The proposition is to recur to a subject already settled concerning which the committee has voted and from which it has passed. This can not be done except by unanimous consent. That is my point.

Mr. DOCKERY. When temporarily occupying the chair a few moments since, a proposition involving the same point of order was presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] on another paragraph of the bill. I then decided in substance that the proposition was out of order, because it was in effect a consideration of a proposition that had already been passed upon by the committee, and a motion to reconsider not being in order in Committee of the Whole, the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was therefore not in order. In other words, that it was recurring to a matter that had already been passed upon by the committee. Upon subsequent consultation with the distinguished Chairman of the committee [Mr. SPRINGER] I concluded that I was perhaps in error, and so admitted the amendment; but upon further examination I am satisfied that the original decision ought to stand as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. May I be allowed to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he has consulted any authorities on the subject?

Mr. DOCKERY. None, except the very able Chairman of this committee [Mr. SPRINGER], who is one of the best authorities in this body upon parliamentary law, and who was at first of the opinion that my decision was wrong, but who, I am inclined to think, has changed his views and will so announce.

Mr. ADAMS. It may be inconvenient to have this rule stand, but after all, that is not the question——

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly not. The question is whether it is right.

Mr. ADAMS. The question is whether, according to the rules of this House on the principles of general parliamentary law, a proposition can be put in a subsequent part of a bill which is inconsistent with a proposition in a preceding part of the bill. I have glanced through Jefferson's Manual, and I am pretty sure that there is no rule of the House on the subject, and I am strongly of the opinion that it must be remitted to the general principles of parliamentary law. Although I have not had an opportunity to consult Cushing's Manual, I have a very strong impression that there is a statement there that the insertion of something that is inconsistent with something else which is already in the bill is a matter of policy for the Committee of the Whole to consider; but that the inconsistency is not a reason why the proposition should be stricken out or kept out on a point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. A motion to reconsider is not in order in Committee of the Whole. Now, if the gentleman's position is correct and should be sustained by a majority of the committee, let us look at the position in which it would put the bill. In one part of the bill you would have an item on the free-list, while in a subsequent part of the measure the same item would appear on the dutiable list—a most absurd and ridiculous result.

Mr. ADAMS. Admitted.

Mr. DOCKERY. And parliamentary law should not be construed so as to permit such an absurdity.

Mr. ADAMS. But Cushing says exactly the contrary. He says that it is not a sufficient reason for excluding a proposition from a bill under a rule of parliamentary law that it results in a ridiculous or absurd form of the bill. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] discusses this question he puts it upon the ground that the amendment is equivalent to a motion to reconsider. Not at all. This is the insertion of an amendment which the gentleman thinks, and I think, might probably lead hereafter in the House to a motion to reconsider the one or the other of the two inconsistent propositions; but when you have repeated precedents from Cushing's Manual of Parliamentary Law showing that you can put in an inconsistent provision in a subsequent part of a parliamentary proposition, how can you say that the insertion of it is subject to a point of order on the ground that it is equivalent to a motion to reconsider? It is not. The only argument the gentleman makes is that probably a motion to reconsider might, on the grounds of propriety, be made hereafter. That is a very different thing from a point of order. I simply ask the gentleman whether there is any rule of the House, or any principle of parliamentary law, in support of his view that is relied on or to be relied on, and if so what it is.

Mr. BLAND. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is the very plain principle of common sense that when the committee has considered a subject-matter and agreed to it in any form it can not be brought up again. This is a subject-matter that this committee has already passed upon. It is a provision of the bill that we have agreed upon and passed, and it can not be reconsidered and brought back again. Otherwise we could never legislate at all. We might come together and consider proposition after proposition and dispose of them and get through the bill, and then we could turn around and consider the whole bill again by amendments. The subject-matter of the free-list has been gone through with and acted upon by the committee, and if we could be brought in this way to go over the whole subject again we never could legislate at all. Rules are supposed to be made to facilitate legislation, but if, after having passed a subject, we can turn back and bring up every item from one end of the bill to the other in this way, we had better have no rules. This is a simple, plain proposition of common sense which no parliamentary rules would ever contravene. No legislation could be had unless it was understood that when we have passed upon a subject-matter in committee and agreed upon it, that is the end of it. Unless that is so, you would never have an end of any disputed measure.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I differ so widely from my friend from Missouri that I think the adoption of such a rule as he suggests would indicate a lack of common sense, would deprive the Committee of the Whole of the power to perfect this bill, and would leave it in a dilemma when the bill came to be presented to the House. For instance, in the wisdom of the committee it might be desirable to make a change with reference to some article in a tariff bill like this, which article might have been previously put on the free-list or an article nearly related to it might be on the free-list. An article might be taken from the free-list and a duty put upon it, and the article upon the free-list might be the result of a higher stage of manufacture than the one that had the duty upon it.

Then you would have the anomaly of a manufactured article on the free-list, while a constituent of that manufactured article would be on the dutiable list. The proposition of the gentleman on the other side would entirely disable the committee from rectifying such a mistake. As we progress with the discussion of this bill and elucidate, as we suppose, the principles upon which our tariff legislation should be formulated, we should not lose control of the subject; we should not lose the power to amend and change and perfect the bill all the way through. These different paragraphs can not be treated as different bills; they form parts of an entire measure, and the power of the Committee of the Whole to control this legislation and report this measure to the House in such shape as it may deem best, should be, it seems to me absolute. If there were a power to reconsider in the Committee of the Whole, a matter of this kind could be easily remedied; but there is no power to reconsider. Why, sir, suppose that both pig-metal and iron ore should, in the framing of a bill by the Committee of the Whole, be placed on the free-list. Suppose when the Committee of the Whole came to the pig-metal it should be retained on the free-list, but the very next article, iron ore, should be left off the free-list and a duty of 75 cents a ton put upon it. How would you rectify a matter of that kind? When you come to a vote on the measure in the House you could not vote upon putting pig-metal on the dutiable list, because it is a part of the bill; and you could not call for a vote on a proposition to put iron ore on the free-list. But suppose it should be the sense of the House that iron ore should pay a duty of 75 cents a ton and pig-metal a duty of $6 a ton; the House, according to the position of gentlemen on the other side, would be absolutely powerless under parliamentary law to carry out its wishes. There is neither reason nor common sense in any such position. We must keep control of this bill from one end to the other, so that we may rectify and revise its provisions all the way through, thereby being enabled to report to the House a complete measure without contradictions or stultifications within itself.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The gentleman will remember that we have already passed on the free-list the subject of woolen rags. Now, when we come to the subject of wool, our action on that matter might render it necessary to go back to the subject of woolen rags.

Mr. BAYNE. The suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] shows how necessary it is that our power over all parts of the bill should be retained. Gentlemen on the other side have asked that certain things should be passed over until we come to certain other things which bear on the same subject.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That has been done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYNE. But anybody could have opposed it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then it would have had to be done by order of the committee, or not at all.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I submit to the gentleman from Kentucky the control of the action of the committee would be substantially placed in the hands of one man who would have the power to object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, I do not think that is parliamentary law or good sense.

Mr. BLAND. According to the gentleman's rule we can go back and place upon the dutiable-list everything that has been placed on the free-list.

Mr. BAYNE. I have no proposition to recur generally to matters already passed. But these are all subjects relating to each other. There is nothing else on the free-list which I propose to call up. These matters are all connected, and therefore I would like a vote on this proposition.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The question of parliamentary power here involved is a very important one. Personally, I would be perfectly willing that the gentleman should have a vote on this proposition.

Mr. BAYNE. Then it had better be held open.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think, however, that the point of order against this amendment is perfectly sound; it seems to me clearer the more I think about it. I base my position upon this statement of the Digest:

> Where a bill is being considered by clauses or sections, and the committee has passed from the consideration of a particular clause or section, it is not in order to recur thereto.

Now, what is a clause or section of this bill? It is each particular line or subject; and certain of these we have already agreed upon. What is the amendment which the gentleman has offered?

> Sulphate of soda, known as salt-cake, crude or refined, or niter-cake, crude or refined, and Glauber's-salt, 20 cents per 100 pounds.

In a preceding clause of the bill this subject has been considered and passed upon. Now, the rule is that "it is not in order to recur thereto."

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman recite once more the paragraph which he read from the Digest, and give us the reference?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It will be found on page 315 of the Digest.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it one of the rules?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is a decision under Rule XXIII, clauses 1 and 8, which relate to the order of business in the Committee of the Whole. It reads—

> Where a bill is being considered by clauses or sections, and the committee has passed from the consideration of a particular clause or section, it is not in order to recur thereto.

Mr. ADAMS. "To recur thereto;" that is, to recur to that clause or section.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, this is a clause or section which relates to the subject of "sulphate of soda, known as salt-cake, crude or refined, or niter-cake, crude or refined, and Glauber's-salt."

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman allow me to make a distinction? What he speaks of is the subject of the clause, not the clause itself. The rule does not declare that you shall not recur to the subject of a clause.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The rule is that you shall not recur to a clause or section which has already been passed, unless you have unanimous consent to do so; and the reason of this is perfectly apparent—that there is no such thing as reconsideration in Committee of the Whole; and there must be an end of this preliminary business done in Committee of the Whole. In order that the measure may be enacted into legislation it is necessary that there be an end of its consideration in Committee of the Whole, and that when a clause or section has been considered it shall be regarded as passed.

The contention of the gentleman from Illinois is, that while you can not go back to take up that clause or section again directly you can copy it verbatim, and have it put into a subsequent part of the bill, not by recurring to it in that sense, but indirectly by nominally making an original section of it.

Mr. ADAMS. Pardon me, the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not copy it verbatim.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But he does copy it verbatim, as to the substance.

Mr. ADAMS. Exactly, but——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is precisely as in Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill, if the committee should decide that the salary of the Secretary of the Navy was to be fixed at $4,000, and when we passed to the building of the ships a clause should be put in that the Secretary of the Navy should receive $2,000; and when we got lower down to the general supplies, that it should be $1,000. Now the clause under consideration is the salary of the Secretary of the Navy. That is the clause; and there is no mental legerdemain that can by any possible mode of construction escape the conclusion that you make this rule absolutely nugatory, if by clause you mean every word in the clause. For the very thing you do in passing from a clause is to vote down somebody's proposition, or to vote in somebody's proposition.

Mr. BAYNE. Is not this subject different from that proposed in the former line of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Precisely not. It is precisely the same subject.

Mr. BAYNE. Does the gentleman pretend that the fixing of a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem is the predicate, and that the alum is the subject?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The subject of legislation is what shall be done with sulphate of soda.

Mr. BAYNE. Ah!

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Sulphate of soda is the subject, and legislation by way of taxation is the method by which we are dealing with that subject. Now, I repeat, the clause is sulphate of soda. The result of the consideration of that subject is that it shall be put upon the free-list. The action of the committee is, then, to pass from that clause to consider another subject and determine what shall be done with the other subject. The contention of the gentleman, however, is that you can go back, not directly, not recur to it openly, but that by indirection you can go back to the same subject, to wit, what shall be done with sulphate of soda and the tax upon it?

Mr. BAYNE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not go back to that at all. I say when you add a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem or any other duty on an article that is free, it becomes part of a new specific and substantive proposition. It is not, as the gentleman from Kentucky would try to make it appear to be, a predicate on which to base as in logic a conclusion, but it becomes a new subject for consideration by the committee. The 20 per cent. tax is a part of a substantive proposition and the whole thing is the subject. You couple a new condition to a condition that already exists, and after having coupled it you make the entire matter a new and different subject from what you put upon the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That simply means that gentlemen here can move to amend every schedule in this bill by changing what the committee have done on every clause or section of the bill after it is passed.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. So that when we come to the end of the bill all that is necessary for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to do is to simply move to insert some clause with an addition to it of a different rate of duty, and that motion thereby changes the subject of the clause and makes an entire new provision.

Mr. BAYNE. But it does not mean that at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not mean to say that that is his purpose, for the gentleman says that he has but one amendment to offer here and I accept his statement as candid; but it is in the power of any gentleman to do so if this point shall be admitted.

Mr. BAYNE. Assume that even to be true, is it worse than the repeating of pro forma amendments, by which the debate could be carried on indefinitely?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think it is a very bad thing to start with. The other has been already started.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky while I read one paragraph from the Digest, on page 271, which I think has a direct reference to this subject, and I will state to the gentleman that my volume is of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and possibly the pages of his may not conform to mine.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have the same, my later volume being in the hands of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW].

Mr. ADAMS. I find this language:

If an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to, it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress it as if it were against order.

Everything that the gentleman has said in regard to the inconvenience of this style of logic I do not question. It may be all true. But what I say is, that although the committee might be possibly prepared to adopt some rule which should apply to bills of this kind, that rule has not yet been adopted, nor has it yet been laid down as a general principle of parliamentary law, whatever the preferences of gentlemen may be, and I hold that the law is precisely what I said this morning—simply to put in the discretion of the House power to regulate an amendment which may be inconsistent with something already passed in the House, but it does not make such an amendment liable to the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. The point is that it is not inconsistent with anything the committee has considered. The point is that we are going back to consider something that has been already considered.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no. The gentleman adopts that form of statement.

Mr. BLAND. If we were on the free-list where that came in and one amendment had been offered and another inconsistent amendment had been offered it would not be against the rules; but having passed it, and the free-list having been adopted by the committee, there is no power to go back. Otherwise we could go back and travel over this bill from one month to the other and from one year to the other.

Mr. ADAMS. We do not propose to go back. We are on the dutiable-list.

Mr. BLAND. I know that; you want to take from the free-list what has already been put there and put it on the dutiable-list. While the free-list was under consideration it would have been perfectly proper to offer any inconsistent amendment, but not now.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman tries to change his reasoning simply by changing the mode of stating the proposition.

Mr. BLAND. Not at all.

Mr. ADAMS. I think so.

Mr. BLAND. Your amendment, if inconsistent when that subject-matter was up, would be very proper under the rule.

Mr. ADAMS. I will ask the Chair to consider the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has moved to insert after line 43 the words which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Against this amendment the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has made the point of order that the subject-matter of the amendment is embraced in lines 83 and 84, page 4, of this bill, which has been passed, and that therefore it is substantially a recurrence to a previous portion of the bill. If this were a question of mere inconsistency of a subsequent amendment with a former matter the Chair would not hesitate to hold, under the rule laid down in Jefferson's Manual, and also in the Digest, that the mere inconsistency of a proposed amendment with something already done was not cause for the suppression of the amendment by the Chair, but was a question directed solely to the discretion of the committee and of the House; but this is more than a question of consistency between the amendment proposed and the previous action of the committee. It is a recurrence to a portion of the bill already passed over. That recurrence of course would not be necessary if the committee were simply to do what it had already done; but the recurrence is for the purpose of undoing what the committee has already done, and that can not be asked except for the purpose of reconsidering in effect the action of the committee already had. The question of consistency would come up on ordinary legislation. But in considering bills making appropriations and revenue bills, the question whether the subject-matter has been passed over heretofore and considered in a previous part of the bill would be better illustrated perhaps by referring to the sundry civil bill. On page 9 of the last bill you will find a clause, as follows:

Court-house at Santa Fé, N. Mex.: For approaches complete, $12,000.

If that portion of the bill had been passed it would not be in order to move to insert $20,000 for the same purpose. It would be in effect recurring to the subject-matter already passed over and disposed of.

So in this case it is not a mere question of inconsistency, but of recurrence to a former portion of the bill and a proposition to make a different rate of duty upon a particular subject-matter already considered than that to which the committee had agreed. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order on principle and also as a matter of convenience, which the Chair perhaps need not necessarily refer to. If the amendment was in order it would be in order to move to insert every item heretofore passed and there would be no end to legislation. Rules were made to bring about results and not to prevent results from being brought about. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] calls the attention of the Chair to a decision in January, 1859, which is found on page 1429 of the Congressional Globe, and which sustains the position the Chair has taken.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not ask to have the decision read.

Mr. BAYNE. I now ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken on this proposition.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no objection.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, I want to occupy one minute in addressing the House.

There are large quantities of this article imported. The amount is now about 8,000 tons per annum. To put it on the free-list will undoubtedly swell the importations and thus deprive our own people of the opportunity to manufacture, as they are now doing. In view of that fact I protest on behalf of these manufacturers against putting the article on the free-list, and I think it should remain as it is in existing law. That is all I have to say.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BAYNE, and it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Soda silicate or other alkaline silicate, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound.
Sulphur, sublimed or flowers of, $12 per ton.
Ultramarine, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I move to amend by striking out "three" and inserting "five."

The CHAIRMAN. That is the present rate. The gentleman may move to strike out the line.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is to prevent my colleague from moving to strike out "three" and insert "five," if he desires to make that motion?

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing at all. It is simply a matter of convenience. The Chair will entertain the amendment in that form if the gentleman prefers it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not intend to take up time in asking this committee to adopt this amendment, which would leave the duty on ultramarine the same as it is at present. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that since this article has been manufactured in the United States, which has been for only a few years past, the price has declined from 30 cents a pound to 12½ cents a pound. Previous to that the sale of ultramarine had been in the hands of a wealthy importer, and I understand that at his suggestion this reduction and many other reductions in the chemical list have been made by the Committee on Ways and Means. I send to the Clerk's desk a letter which was sent to the chairman of that committee, a public letter, which I am afraid the committee did not read or consider, and I ask to have it read here now. It will be very interesting reading for this committee and for the country. If the present duty is reduced, I am afraid it will not be for the benefit of the consumer, but for the benefit of the importer, and when this American industry is completely destroyed the prices will be advanced by these importers, and the consumers will have to pay higher prices.

The letter was read, as follows:

To the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means:

A letter of Mr. William Pickhardt, of New York, to the Secretary of the Treasury has been found of sufficient importance to be presented to your honorable committee; for that reason we ask your permission to reply to the same.

The letter shows that Mr. Pickhardt is not a good authority, as most of his statements are incorrect and strained; besides, we consider him ill-fitted to pose as a benefactor of the textile industries of this county, after having exacted from them between eight and ten millions of dollars in the course of thirteen years as an emolument for a patent on one of his commodities, which, after a long law suit, was declared invalid.

Mr. Pickhardt says that unprotected farm labor supplies Europe with cereals, beef, etc. If he had compared the map and population of Europe with that of the United States he would understand why the Europeans have to buy a portion of their bread, beef, etc., from us, and why farm labor and factory labor can not be compared in tariff discussions in this country.

Mr. Pickhardt also speaks of chemicals and dye-stuffs, and says it would be a matter of great importance to the textile manufacturers whether they have to spend $100 or only $60 for the production of their goods, thus insinuating that the duties on chemicals and dye-stuffs produced such a difference in the cost of textile goods. Such was not the case even when Mr. Pickhardt charged $1.25 per pound for alizarine, which was sold all over Europe for 25 cents, which product Mr. Pickhardt succeeded in getting on the free-list, and immediately added his own private tariff of over 400 per cent. His remark that acid magenta is probably the only monopoly in coal-tar dyes does not come with good grace from a man who was one of the owners of the great monopoly above mentioned, and who struggled hard to hold the patent for acid magenta against the English owners of the United States patent, and lost his title thereto by decision of the court.

Mr. Pickhardt seems to be poorly informed in regard to the history of the chemical industry, or he would not state that of the artificial colors only ultramarine was known before 1860. He forgets chrome colors, Prussian blues, cobalt, Paris green, carmine, vermilion, in fact very few new colors have been added to the list since that time, except coal-tar dyes.

His statement in regard to the American aniline dye industry is also incorrect. He asserts that we have had the principal raw material for coal-tar dyes free since 1870. He knows, or should know, that aniline oil, the only raw material of the kind on the free-list, is the raw material for not even one-tenth of the coal-tar dyes used, and that all the other coal-tar products, not dyes, pay 20 per cent. duty, which amounts in the practical use to from 30 to 40 per cent. When the specific duty of 50 cents per pound on coal-tar dyes was taken off four factories established by European houses had to close, because 35 per cent. on coal-tar colors was more than counterbalanced by the duty on raw materials, chemicals, and price of labor.

The four factories now in existence continued hoping for a change, and have been successful in preventing almost entirely the importation of such goods as they could produce by reason of the aniline oil being free. Had they the same favorable opportunity for the production of other coal-tar colors, the industry would have been increased to a large extent.

The reasons why the coal-tar dye industry has not flourished are—

1. Capitalists were too timid to invest much money in expensive factories under the uncertainties of tariff laws.

2. That skilled chemical talent was difficult, almost impossible to procure. Inexperienced chemical help which could be procured in German laboratories for the asking would come to this country only at high wages, and caused much disappointment to American manufacturers.

3. That American labor and cost of plant in this branch, as in many other, are about two or three times as high as in Europe.

Mr. Pickhardt's remarks about ultramarine are just as misleading as anything he says in regard to coal-tar dyes. He knows very well that he sold his fine paper ultramarine at 30 cents until the American manufacturers forced him down to 16 cents. The present price of the American is 12½ cents; other grades have declined in a similar manner.

His statement of the great bulk of ultramarine being sold in Europe for 5 cents is based on the highly adulterated grades, for which qualities the American manufacturers find very limited demand. These goods do not compare with the articles sold in this country for 9 cents. The low prices of pure ultramarine in Europe are only for the purpose of meeting American competition and to dispose of surplus stock, which would be sold at high prices as soon as American competition disappeared.

The cost of an ultramarine plant is enormous in comparison to its production.

If reasonable protective duties can produce such results as these have done in the ultramarine trade, they should be the policy of this country.

These industries have been started under certain tariff regulations, they have grown to great importance, and would become, if fully developed, immense consumers of chemicals. They are a source of employment to much skilled and unskilled labor, and, as in Europe, form an excellent practical school for young chemists and an opportunity for inventive talent. The success of American manufacturers always forces European, and consequently American, prices down.

For these reasons it would not be good policy to strangle these industries, one of which has already suffered so severely by the tariff reduction of 1883.

Respectfully submitted by the American coal-tar, dye, and ultramarine manufacturers.

Mr. BURROWS. I have a letter from gentlemen who are familiar with the industry affected by this provision of the bill, transmitting to me a statement of the effect upon the industry should the provision be adopted. I ask to have the statement inserted in the RECORD, that the committee may know to-morrow the mistake it has made to-day. [Laughter.]

The statement was read, as follows:

ULTRAMARINE.

DEAR SIR: Allow us a few words on ultramarine with regard to the proposed change of tariff.

The price of ultramarine was about 50 to 100 per cent. higher before the change of tariff of 1870 from 25 per cent. ad valorem to 6 cents per pound went into effect.

The price reduction was the consequence of our competition, only no improvements in the manufacture having been made in that time.

European manufacturers since preferred to place their surplus product at cost or less in this country and wherever else we tried to sell and take the benefit of cheaper because larger production on the sales in their own country. Of course driving them out of our market meant still lower prices for us, and thus the American consumer was benefited during the last ten years to the extent of over $1,000,000 on former prices.

The difference in cost of labor, plant, wear and tear, selling, and office expense between the United States and Europe is so large that we could not compete against Europe without protection. Labor in this industry in Europe is at the highest 2.50 marks = 60 cents per day. In our country $10 per week is the lowest pay. This will be a—

Difference on 60 men per annum	$20,000
Difference in selling and office expense	8,000
Interest, wear, and tear	15,000
Duty on china clay	1,800
Duty on soda ash	3,360
Duty on silica, etc.	500
Total	48,660

on 15,000 hundredweight of ultramarine, or 3¼ cents per pound. Interest and wear and tear account is so high because the plant is an enormous one, costing about $250,000 for a comparatively small production.

You will readily see that 4½ cents duty per pound will leave us very little profit, while 3 cents per pound would force us to shut down.

As there are not many manufacturers in Europe who can adapt themselves to the American market, and each one has his specialties not competing with the others, prices would be advanced as soon as this industry was abolished here.

We hope this statement will give you a clear view of our position and induce you to give us such help in the coming struggle as will be consistent with your duties and patriotism.

Yours, respectfully,

HELLER & MERZ.

NEW YORK, April 12, 1888.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. LEHLBACH, and it was rejected—ayes 36, noes 52.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally to receive a message from the Senate.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had appointed Mr. ALLISON a conferee on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889, in place of Mr. HALE.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the sixteenth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6833).

TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, we have reached now some matters which I hope the committee will not enter upon so late on Saturday afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to move an amendment in line 76 in regard to china?

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the committee will rise without proceeding with the consideration of these subjects to-day.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Have the lines to which the gentleman refers been read?

Mr. BAYNE. No.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let them be read, and then we can probably come to some understanding.

The Clerk read as follows:

China, porcelain, parian, and bisque, earthen, stone, or crockery ware composed of earthy or mineral substance, including plaques, ornaments, charms, vases, and statuettes, painted, printed, enameled, or gilded, or otherwise decorated in any manner, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, I hope the gentleman will let the committee rise.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No; we want to go on with work, but we may be able to come to some terms concerning this provision.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that lines 76 to 94 inclusive be passed over informally. I make that request for the reason that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] who are interested in these provisions are not present.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If it will be any accommodation to gentlemen we have no objection to that, and the Clerk can go on with the reading, beginning with line 95.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey makes a request for unanimous consent that line 76 to line 94 inclusive be passed over informally for the present, the committee recurring to them hereafter.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now let the Clerk read line 95.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paving tiles, not encaustic, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
Encaustic tiles, not glazed or enameled, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I was serious in the expression of the hope that we should not proceed with the consideration of this clause to-day. There are some gentlemen representing interests involved who are not now present.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the gentlemen be present.

Mr. BAYNE. It is very well to say that, but they are not present.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We have had no request of the kind indicated by the gentleman.

Mr. BYNUM. I think, in regard to the reduction here proposed, there is no controversy.

Mr. BAYNE. There will be controversy the moment we strike the next page.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then let the Clerk read, and when we come to a controverted paragraph it will be time enough to meet the difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BAYNE. Having moved to strike out the last word, I was occupying my five minutes in an effort to reach a conclusion by which we should not proceed further with this bill this evening, but resume it at this point on Monday or Tuesday or whenever the Committee of the Whole shall again sit.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not think that is the best thing to be done. It does not appear to me a reasonable request. We certainly can proceed further with the bill this evening.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that while we want to be as accommodating and courteous as possible toward gentlemen who are absent, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] on this side, who is immediately interested in this clause, desires to leave the city to-night.

Mr. BAYNE. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the arrangement proposed.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is no arrangement. It was merely stated that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] is about to leave the city and wanted these questions disposed of before he leaves. Let the Clerk read.

Mr. BAYNE. I thought we were to discuss the question of encaustic tiles.

The Clerk read as follows:

All glazed or enameled tiles, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BYNUM. I move to amend by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-five," so that the clause will read:

All glazed or enameled tiles, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to hear some reason for that proposed change.

Mr. BYNUM. The reason is that the duty named here is higher than in the earthenware schedule. While there has been here a reduction from 55 per cent. to 50, I understand there is no objection to a reduction to 45 per cent., so as to make this matter uniform with the earthenware schedule.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not understand that 45 per cent. is a reduction. I understand that it is an increase, and a very proper increase.

Mr. BYNUM. There is a controversy about the construction of the law. The Secretary of the Treasury has ruled that enameled or glazed tiles shall pay a duty of 55 per cent.; but the importers are continually contesting that decision, and a great deal of litigation has resulted. It is a very doubtful construction. The manufacturers are willing to have the matter settled by fixing the duty at 45 per cent., being really a reduction from 55 per cent. to 45 per cent., which I think a fair and equitable rate of duty.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman tell me what is the average price of these tiles? I may as well state my purpose in asking this question. The gentleman speaks of a difficulty at the Treasury Department with regard to the construction of the law. Has the question of undervaluation ever arisen in connection with these tiles?

Mr. BYNUM. Oh, no; there has been no question of undervaluation. The present law really contains nothing in connection with this subject except the encaustic tiles, and the Treasury Department has ruled that glazed or enameled tiles come in under the clause relating to "decorated earthenware," and must pay a duty of 55 per cent. But that construction is very doubtful.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the price of these tiles uniform, or do they vary in grade?

Mr. BYNUM. They vary in grade. The glazed or enameled tiles are a much higher class than the encaustic tiles or the paving tiles.

Mr. ADAMS. I am aware of that; but taking one class by itself—the glazed or enameled tiles—is there a variation in the grade?

Mr. BYNUM. There is no great variation unless there is some decoration put upon the tiles besides enameling and glazing.

Mr. ADAMS. Is there objection to the adoption of a specific duty applicable to them?

Mr. BYNUM. A specific duty could not be placed upon them at all. They embrace a rather wide class.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the present law provides for a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem upon encaustic tiles. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] has stated, the Secretary of the Treasury, in construing the existing law, has ruled that glazed tiles shall come in as "decorated earthenware." I believe, with the gentleman from Indiana, that this is a strained construction, because the articles are different commercially; still glazed or enameled tiles are enjoying this protection at present, and under the benefit of it the industry has become very large and flourishing in my own city. These tiles have been made there in very considerable quantities during the past two years, and the industry is giving employment to a large number of people; it is a growing industry. It seems to me that the first thought of the Committee on Ways and Means, which was to place these tiles in the bill at 50 per cent., was the better thought, and that the motion now made to fix the duty at 45 per cent. is really retrogression. I wish to express my firm belief that if the duty be left at 50 per cent., the surplus in the Treasury, resulting from duties upon these articles, will be less than if the duty be fixed at 45 per cent. It means just the difference between importing and not importing. In other words, I think that a 45 per cent. duty will reach the danger-point, whereas 50 per cent. will accord a proper protection. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be agreed to.

The gentleman says that the manufacturers are content with 45 per cent. I was talking the other day with one who expressed no such content. I think he had no information that it was the intention of the Committee on Ways and Means to move a change in the bill in this respect. We had no knowledge that committee would make a change in the bill. Why do the committee wish to go back on their own work?

Mr. BYNUM. A gentleman engaged in manufacturing in the gentleman's State, formerly a constituent of mine, said they could get along with 45 per cent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. To whom does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BYNUM. To a resident of the gentleman's State of New Jersey, who was formerly a constituent of mine—Mr. Mathershead, who lives in your own town and who lived formerly in Indiana—who states they could get along with 45 per cent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I undertake to say that the rate of wages in that factory, owned almost entirely by gentlemen of a political faith other than mine, is as high as that paid to operatives of skill in other occupations. I do not see the necessity, therefore, for this action. Farmers do not use them. They are not the necessaries of life.

The question recurred on Mr. BYNUM's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 37.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. BYNUM, and Mr. HOPKINS of New York.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 37.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Slates, slate pencils, slate chimney pieces, mantels, slabs for tables, and all other manufactures of slate, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to strike out "20" and insert "30." Mr. Chairman, the industry of slate mantels is purely American. It is entirely labor from the beginning of the slate all through. All the ornamentation is labor. Year in and year out the cost to the consumer has been reduced by American competition. There are $9,000 of revenue out of this last year, just little enough to protect measurably the American workingman in this industry. I have no additional remarks to make. I say it is a cut on an American industry which should not be made by an American Congress.

The question recurred on Mr. FARQUHAR'S amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 59.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next paragraph.

Mr. BAYNE rose.

Mr. McMILLIN. Finish the reading of the paragraph.

Mr BAYNE. It seems, Mr. Chairman, properly divisible into four or five. I think, for the purpose of having it well understood and clearly defined, we should take each one of these as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order to the effect that the paragraph beginning with line 103 and ending with line 117 should terminate with the word "pound," in line 107. Is that correct?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not hear the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make the point of order that the paragraph beginning with line 103 should end with line 107. Is that the point?

Mr. BAYNE. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The definition of the paragraph given in Webster's Dictionary——

Mr. McMILLIN. Before you get to that I wish to know of the gentleman what he would make of the balance of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state his decision. The definition of the word "paragraph" in Webster's Dictionary is that it is a complete sentence, a substantive proposition. If that proposition were divided at the point indicated by the gentleman, the subsequent portion of it would be meaningless. They are so nearly related they are one paragraph down to the end of it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Does the Chair say a paragraph is only a complete sentence?

The CHAIRMAN. It relates to one subject; that is, it can not be divided and leave sense in the remaining part.

The Clerk will read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Green and colored glass bottles, vials, demijohns, and carboys (covered or uncovered), pickle or preserve jars, and other plain, molded, or pressed green and colored bottle-glass, not cut, engraved, or painted, and not specially enumerated or provided for, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound; if filled, and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are subject to an ad valorem duty, or to a rate of duty based on their value, the value of such bottles, vials, or other vessels shall be added to the value of the contents for the ascertainment of the dutiable value of the latter; but if filled and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are not subject to an ad valorem duty or to a rate of duty based on their value, they shall pay a duty of three-fourths of 1 cent per pound in addition to the duty, if any, on their contents.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to state that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] was desirous of proposing some amendments to this proposition in reference to filled bottles. What the amendments are I do not know; but I know that he was exceedingly anxious to present them and have a vote upon them.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, I presume that was on the impression that the section was to remain in the bill.

Mr. REED. No; there is something in the present law that needs rectification in that regard, but I am not familiar with the details.

I think the effect of the present law is to allow the importation of bottles free when filled with certain substances, and that provision is taken advantage of to avoid the tariff tax upon the bottles.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, I am very glad to find that there is one thing at least in the present law which is admitted to be defective by the gentleman on the other side.

Mr. REED. The gentleman has come to that knowledge newly, I assume, and therefore I do not wonder that he jumped to his feet with such alacrity to proclaim the discovery.

Mr. McMILLIN. Because it has been a matter of surprise to those who have witnessed the conduct of the gentleman from Maine, and heard his expressions in these debates, to find there is no defect in the existing law or any reason why there should be a change in anything connected with it.

Mr. REED. The trouble with the gentleman may arise, not from what has been done, but from a defect in the perceptive faculties.

Mr. McMILLIN. I may not have perceptive powers equal to those of the distinguished gentleman from Maine, but one thing, I never will boast of what I have, as he habitually does.

Mr. REED. I would not if I were in your place. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee tell us what the existing law is?

Mr. McMILLIN. One cent.

Mr. ADAMS. I mean in relation to filled bottles.

If the gentleman from Tennessee can not give the information will some other member of the committee be kind enough to do so?

Mr. McMILLIN. The following is the existing law in this respect:

Flint and lime glass bottles, and vials——

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that is not the paragraph.

Mr. McMILLIN. No; this is the paragraph, just preceding that:

Green and colored glass bottles, vials, demijohns, and carboys (covered or uncovered), pickle or preserve jars, and other plain, molded, or pressed green and colored bottle-glass, not cut, engraved, or painted, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1 cent per pound; if filled, and not otherwise in this act provided for, said articles shall pay 30 per cent. ad valorem in addition to the duty on the contents.

That is the existing law.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, as I have said, I do not know what the difficulty is exactly, but my impression is that certain commodities are admitted into this country under this clause "glass bottles," under that very provision, at a far less rate of duty than would be chargeable to them if they came into the country in another form. I know that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] desires to be heard on that proposition. He is a manufacturer and can explain this thing very thoroughly. It is now very nearly 5 o'clock and I am desirous that the gentleman from Wisconsin shall have a hearing before action is taken on the paragraph. I do not ask that it may be passed over, or that we may go to the next subject, because the next and the succeeding will all be more or less discussed I presume. My request is that we may not enter upon that discussion this evening at all; and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to let the committee now rise and this thing to go over for the present.

Mr. McMILLIN. We can not pass everything over.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well, then, if you can not, I want to perfect this before we proceed.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, proceed to perfect it.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the words "three-fourths," in line 107, be stricken out and that "one" be substituted, so that the duty will be 1 cent per pound.

Now I tell the gentleman he will have to have a quorum to determine that matter.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman that that is the effect of the amendment I have offered. That leaves it as it is under existing law and does not change it.

Mr. BAYNE. But I propose an amendment further down that will not make it in accordance with the existing law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee, I suppose through inadvertence, did not read the proviso which must be taken in connection with the words read by him in the old law, which is as follows:

All glass bottles, and decanters and other like vessels of glass, shall, if filled, pay the same rates of duty, in addition to any duty chargeable on the contents, as if not filled, except as in this act otherwise specially provided for.

That proviso must be taken in connection with the words the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] read. Standing disconnected from those words, I can easily understand how you overlooked it.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it true that under the existing law certain classes of bottles are let in free colorably filled, in order to evade the duty?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would suggest that these words should be considered not only in connection with the words read by the gentleman from Tennessee, but also with the next proviso in the old law, which refers to flint and lime glass bottles, etc. So it will be seen that those two paragraphs and this proviso are to be taken in connection in determining the effect of the old law with reference to the admission of bottles free, or with reference to the amount of duty to be charged upon them when they are filled with dutiable contents.

Mr. ADAMS. If that is all stricken out will there not remain a defect in the existing law which ought to be changed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have not determined as to that. I rose simply for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that all the information had not yet been given.

Mr. BAYNE. That proviso, as I understand it, is a provision of existing law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir. It comes in after the paragraph with reference to green bottles and a paragraph with reference to flint and lime glass bottles.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I would inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee if it is the intention of the committee to move to strike out the succeeding paragraph also—the flint-glass paragraph?

Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir.

Mr. FARQUHAR. You do not mean to strike that out?

Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then is it the intention that the original proviso, though a law, shall remain with the paragraph stricken out?

Mr. McMILLIN. The intention is to strike out this paragraph and to leave the remaining portion, down as far as line 134, as it is in the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then I would inquire of the gentleman if this is simply meant as a restoration of the old law?

Mr. McMILLIN. It will restore the old law as to what is embraced in that paragraph.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In that paragraph alone?

Mr. McMILLIN. In that paragraph alone.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The proviso still remains in the old law?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have not looked at the proviso.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is the question now being discussed on this side.

Mr. McMILLIN. It has been discussed in such a low tone of voice and in such a fraternal way among our friends on the other side that we have not been able to hear it here.

Mr. BUCHANAN. So far as I am concerned I will say my voice generally reaches the other side.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman did not employ his usual thundering tones in this case.

Mr. BAYNE. Explain it over again.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I simply called the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that the paragraph he read was qualified by a proviso which appears further on in the old act, and that therefore escaped his attention; also to the fact that that proviso in the old law also followed the provision in reference to flint and lime glass bottles and seemed to qualify both the provision with reference to green-glass bottles and flint and lime glass bottles; and that the three must be construed together in order to determine the effect of the old law. Then I desired to know what the effect would be of striking out the provision from this bill with reference to the green and colored glass bottles, retaining the flint and lime glass bottles, and not touching the proviso. We desire to know the effect of it, and upon the spur of the moment we could not without some explanation tell, because it takes a little time to look into the matter.

Mr. McMILLIN. To what proviso does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BUCHANAN. To the proviso in these words:

All glass bottles and decanters and other like vessels of glass shall, if filled, pay the same rate of duty in addition to the duty chargeable on the contents as if not filled, except as in this act otherwise specially provided for.

I am not personally familiar with the subject.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman that I do not think that there is a clause in the existing bill which repeals the proviso to which he refers. I do not recall one now. But it was called to my attention now for the first time, and I may be in error. I do not think I am.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But it has been stated here that this bill does not propose to repeal anything in the old law by inference; that what this bill does not specifically change will stand, and that a general provision is to be added to that effect. I want to know what the effect will be upon the provision which he proposes to have remain in the bill of this proviso which will remain untouched in the old law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If this section is stricken out, section 133 of the tariff compilation, the existing law, will remain as it is now.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the very thing complained of is that proviso; that is my impression.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does the gentleman propose an amendment to repeal the proviso?

Mr. BAYNE. I have frankly stated that I do not know the situation of the case; but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] does, and I would like to have him here when it is considered.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We do not desire to do anything that is improper in connection with this matter. The committee can proceed to the next paragraph, passing this over informally.

Mr. REED. It is ten minutes of 5 now.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, we want to get along as far as possible. If it is desired to pass this over informally, let the Clerk read the next paragraph.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to section 2, on page 8 of the bill, and I suggest to him whether the language there used would not repeal existing law. It reads "that on and after the 1st day of July, 1888, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed on the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rates of duty on said articles severally;" and the gentleman will remember that so far as the schedule touching earthen and glass ware is concerned all the articles named in the present law are named in the pending bill. I simply call the gentleman's attention to that in connection with other suggestions that have been made touching the effect of the proviso that is found in the existing law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will state to my friend from Ohio that according to section 2, which he has just read, if there is a part of the glass schedule that is untouched in this bill, or that, having been touched, is stricken out and nothing is said concerning it, it will carry the rate of duty provided in the old law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] asks unanimous consent that from line 103 down to and including line 117, on page 13 of the bill, be passed over for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flint and lime glass bottles and vials, and other plain, molded, or pressed flint or lime glassware, not specially enumerated or provided for, 30 per cent. ad valorem; if filled, and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are subject to an ad valorem duty, or to a rate of duty based on their value, the value of such flint or lime glass bottles or vials, or other vessels of like material above provided for, shall be added to the value of the contents for the ascertainment of the dutiable value of the latter; but if filled, and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are not subject to an ad valorem duty, or to a rate of duty based on their value, they shall pay a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem in addition to the duty, if any, on their contents.

Mr. ADAMS. I want to understand this matter of the defect in the existing law, and I have an impression that there is in the pending bill an attempt to remedy that defect. Therefore, if the gentleman really desires the existing law as to rates to stand, instead of striking out the paragraph on page 13—I speak of it now because there is precisely the same provision in the paragraph just read—it would achieve his purpose, and it would be better to simply restore the existing rates in this paragraph and leave the language of the paragraph to stand; because in the language of the paragraph I believe (although I am not familiar with the subject) will be found the remedy for the defect in the existing law which has been under discussion.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We passed over informally the paragraph upon which discussion arose, and the Clerk has just read the next paragraph.

Mr. BURROWS. Is it understood that that paragraph is passed over informally?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Which one?

Mr. BURROWS. The one which has just been read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Then we have something to say about it. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BURROWS; and it was rejected—ayes 37, noes 50.

Mr. BURROWS. This is an important matter, Mr. Chairman, and I think we had better have tellers. [Laughter.]

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers proceeded with the count.

The CHAIRMAN (before the completion of the count). The hour fixed by order of the House for adjournment having arrived, the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 188) authorizing the loan of tents and camp equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

The House then (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 2, 1888.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Kansas praying that certain amendments of the interstate-commerce law may be made; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. QUAY presented resolutions adopted by the Junior Order of United American Mechanics of Greble Council, No. 13; Ellsworth Council, No. 14; Diligent Council, No. 4; American Star Council, No. 49; and Fredonia Council, No. 47, of Philadelphia; Birmingham Council, No. 260; General Putnam Council, No. 125; and Laurel Council, No. 126, of Pittsburgh; Manchester Council, No. 124, of Allegheny; Middletown Council, No. 156, of Middletown; Wilkinsburgh Council, No. 92, of Wilkinsburgh; Invincible Council, No. 33, of Allegheny; Philos Council, No. 188, of Madison; Dawson Council, No. 75, of Dawson; Shickshinny Council, No. 203, of Shickshinny; Good Will Council, No. 42, of Tyrone; Scottdale Council, No. 102, of Scottdale; Warden Council, No. 182, of Stoners; and Orient Council, No. 72, of Johnstown, all in the State of Pennsylvania, in favor of the passage of Senate bill 553 to restrict immigration; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. QUAY. I also present resolutions adopted by the Pittsburgh Coal Exchange and others, favoring the purchase of lock and dam No. 7 of the Monongahela Navigation Company, and remonstrating against the improvement of the Ohio River by means of movable dams. For the information of the people of the Ohio valley, I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the resolutions of the Pittsburgh Coal Exchange and others may be printed in the RECORD. If there be no objection it is so ordered; and as the bill to which the resolutions relate has been reported they will lie on the table.

The resolutions are as follows:

At a meeting of the coal operatives, shippers, and the Pittsburgh Coal Exchange held Saturday, June 30, 1888, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas we learn with surprise and regret that the appropriation in the river and harbor bill for the purchase of lock and dam number 7 of the Monongahela Navigation Company has been stricken out by the United States Senate and an appropriation for $100,000 inserted for the purpose of purchasing sites for building a lock and dam at Beaver, Pa.: and

Whereas the construction of a dam at Beaver, Pa., would not be of any benefit to navigation, as the fall of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh to Beaver, Pa., is 24 feet 6 inches, and in order to make sufficient water for navigation from Pittsburgh to Beaver would require the construction of not less than four locks and dams, including the one now at Davis Island. The improvement would, therefore, be useless, admitting that to lock and dam the Ohio River would be a benefit to navigation, which it would not, but be a great injury and largely increase the expense of transporting coal and other merchandise; besides each dam would cost from one to two millions of dollars, and under any and all circumstances the appropriation would be a useless expenditure of the public money to begin at Beaver. The proper location would be immediately below the present dam at Davis Island. Therefore why Beaver is selected as the place to build the second dam, and which should be not less than the fourth, is to all river men a mystery. The insertion of this appropriation was made without the knowledge or desire of those whose occupation and business is the navigation of the Ohio River and is entirely in opposition to their wishes. We therefore most respectfully protest against the appropriation (as it now stands) for a dam at Beaver, Pa., and ask your honorable bodies to make an appropriation for the purchase of the locks and dams on the Monongahela River, and place us on the same footing as the coal operators of the Great Kanawha River, and we think in all fairness that we have a right to ask this, at least when we observe that other States are receiving appropriations for the improvement of the rivers which empty into the Ohio River. For example, the Great Kanawha River is now having (in the present bill) an appropriation of $350,000, in addition to the large amounts that have been already expended in building locks and dams by the Government to make it (the Kanawha) navigable, while the Monongahela River has never had a dollar appropriated and expended on its improvement in this State. The locks and dams having been built by a stock company, to whom tolls have to be paid on all coal and other merchandise, and boats that navigate said river which is (and always has been) a very heavy tax, thereby placing a burden on the trade and shipping interests of the Monongahela valley, while those navigating the Great Kanawha are relieved from any tax or charges, the improvements having been made by the Government. We therefore think in all fairness that the business of the Monongahela River and valley should be placed on the same footing as any other navigators are on other rivers under control of the United States Government.

We therefore hope and pray that this portion of the Monongahela River which is not in the State of Virginia will not prevent it from receiving the same benefits from the Government as Virginia has received and is now receiving.

Respectfully, yours,

THOMAS FAWCETT,
President pro tem.

Attest:
RICHARD BARROWS,
Secretary.

Mr. BROWN. I presented some days since a petition of citizens of Summerville, Ga., praying that an appropriation be made to bore and construct an artesian well at the Augusta arsenal, in Georgia. I desire to supplement that petition this morning by presenting a very full statement by Col. Charles C. Jones, jr., one of the prominent citizens of Augusta, and also a statement made by Maj. J. W. Reilly, who is in command at the arsenal, and a petition of the city council of Augusta, Ga., all praying that an appropriation be made for that purpose.

I move the reference of these papers to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL presented the petition of M. M. Lewis and others, citizens of Virginia, praying for the repeal of that portion of the internal-revenue laws which classes druggists as liquor dealers, and that the tax on spirits used in the arts and medicines may be reduced; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a memorial of District Assembly, No. 66, Knights of Labor, of this city, remonstrating against the striking out of some provisions for increase of teachers' salaries in the District. As the matter is now in conference, I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2430) explanatory of an act entitled "An act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Mississippi and other States, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1019) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to place on file in the War Department the names of the officers and members of the Frontier Guards, mustered into the volunteer military service of the United States on the 18th day of April, 1861, and issue discharges to the same, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7647) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I report from the Committee on Public Lands favorably, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. Res. 184) to amend the joint resolution approved May 14, 1888, relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States approved May 14, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to extend the provisions thereof to the States of Florida and Louisiana.

Mr. PLUMB. The joint resolution approved May 14, 1888, to which reference is made, is in these words:

That the public lands of the United States in the States of Mississippi, Arkansas, and Alabama now subject to private sale as offered lands shall be disposed of under and according to the provisions of the homestead laws only until the pending legislation affecting such lands shall be disposed of or the present session of Congress shall adjourn.

Then follows a proviso to the effect that isolated or disconnected tracts may continue to be sold at a dollar and a quarter an acre.

This House joint resolution extends the provisions of the joint resolution which I have read to the States of Florida and Louisiana. The Senate Committee on Public Lands have recommended an amendment to extend the joint resolution as amended, not until the adjournment of the present session of Congress, as originally contemplated, but until the adjournment of the present Congress. It has been shown that by reason of the passage of the joint resolution persons are proceeding to take lands under the private-entry law who have heretofore been buying in the States of Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, and so on, and have gone in great numbers into the States of Louisiana and Florida.

Congress will adjourn within a few weeks undoubtedly, and it is altogether probable that no legislation on the subject will be obtained. With the notice which has been given of the intention of Congress to limit entries to the homestead law, it is feared that persons will flock in there in great numbers and take up all of the lands in those States at private entry, and thus leave none to be entered under the homestead law, unless this resolution is passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution, having been this day reported, may be now considered. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was, after the word "Louisiana," in line 7, to insert:

And the provisions of said joint resolution as hereby amended are extended until the close of the present Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that a committee of conference be requested upon the joint resolution and amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate ask for a conference on the joint resolution and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. WALTHALL, and Mr. BERRY were appointed.

RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. FRYE June 27, 1888, reported it without amendment; and the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to employ the necessary assistants for the examination and revision of the statistical and other information collected by the said committee in response to a resolution of the Senate which passed February 8, 1888, directing the said committee to prepare for the use of the Senate certain information touching the commercial relations of the Dominion of Canada and the United States, and other subjects, as are fully set forth in said resolution, and that the necessary expenses thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3247) to grant the right of way through a part of the military reservation at Fort Morgan, Ala., to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3248) for the relief of John W. Durr; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3249) for the relief of Zo. S. Cook; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3250) to authorize the construction and operation of a bridge and its approaches at New York City over the Hudson River, in and between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to confer upon the same the character and privileges of a post-route; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3251) for the relief of Col. Jonathan D. Stevenson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3252) to place Col. Jonathan D. Stevenson on the retired-list of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN and Mr. DANIEL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 2952) to allow certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PADDOCK (for Mr. MANDERSON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (for Mr. MANDERSON) submitted two amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also (for Mr. MANDERSON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KENNA submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) to allow certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TRAFFIC OVER CANADIAN RAILWAYS.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Treasury transmit to the Senate all correspondence and information in his Department relative to the arrangement made for traffic between Suspension Bridge and Detroit, whereby merchandise was allowed to be conveyed over the Great Western Railway of Canada without payment of duty upon the completion of the railroad bridge across the Niagara River in 1855.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate conferees on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill authorize me to make a report which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask that it be now considered?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that the Senate is especially interested in the reading of the report in detail. There are no material changes made in the bill. They all relate to surrenders of clerks here and there, and unless there is some objection I ask that the report be adopted without being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there be inquiry about any specified amendment. The report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 34, 55, 56, 58, 59, 67, 68, 69, 78, 80, 83, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 108, 109, 112, 113, 116, 117, 118, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 146, 147, 149, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, and 171.

Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. H. FORNEY,
SAM'L J. RANDALL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be glad to answer any questions respecting the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

DISTRICT STEAM-RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business, that order is closed.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I ask leave to call up Senate bill 2919.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2919) to define the routes of steam-railroads in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1894, it shall be unlawful for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, and each of them, to maintain their tracks, or any of them, or to run their trains, or any of them, into or within the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, except upon and over the routes hereinafter specified and provided, any existing provisions of the law or of the charters of said companies, or either of them, to the contrary notwithstanding; that from and after said date no variation of, or departure from, or extension of the tracks hereinafter provided for shall be made without the consent of Congress thereto previously obtained; and that on or before said date all other tracks, buildings, and structures of any and every description now occupied or used by the said companies, or either of them, in any street, avenue, or public space in said city, except such of them as may conform to the provisions of this act, shall be removed, and if any such track shall not be removed by the railroad company maintaining the same within ten days after notice from the District commissioners so to do, the same shall be summarily removed by the said commissioners at the expense of said railway company, such expense, if not paid, to be recovered at the suit of the United States in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. That from and after the date aforesaid the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad shall enter the said city from the north at the northern line of Boundary street at or near its intersection with Third street east, and proceed thence as follows: Southwardly along and over Third street east, with a double track, by means of open cut, to such point as shall be determined by the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia; thence by means of tunnel to or near the northeast corner of reservation numbered 17; thence westwardly through said reservation on as direct a curved line as is practicable, subject to the approval of said commissioners, to the nearest convenient point on the north to the tracks of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad on Canal street and Virginia avenue; thence alongside the northward of the said tracks of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company westwardly to a passenger station to be constructed south of the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues, as hereinafter provided for, and thence through and from said station westwardly along and over Maryland avenue alongside the tracks of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad to the Long bridge, so called, over the Potomac River, at the foot of Fourteenth street west. The entire new line of railway which the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company is authorized and required to construct under this section shall be taken and considered to be a new and wholly separate line of railway belonging to said company, and said company shall have power to mortgage the said new line of railway, and all buildings, structures, and yards used in connection therewith, to secure any moneys loaned to said company, or bonds or evidences of debt issued for the purposes of aiding in the construction of said separate line of railway and works.

SEC. 3. That from and after said date the tracks of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall enter said city from the north and east, along the northern shore of the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, at a point between L and M streets south, and shall proceed thence westwardly, with a double track, on and under K street south, Canal street, and Virginia avenue, alongside and parallel with the route hereinbefore prescribed for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from the point of approximation of the two routes, as aforesaid, to the said passenger station south of the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues, as aforesaid, and thence from said station westwardly along and over Maryland avenue to said Long bridge aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That the present tracks of the Washington and Metropolitan branches of the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad lying within the said District, and outside of the limits of the said city, shall, under the supervision of the said commissioners, as aforesaid, subject to appeal to the Secretary of War, be changed and relocated as may be found necessary and convenient to unite the same outside the city limits; that the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company may, under the supervision and subject to the appeal aforesaid, locate, construct, and maintain, as near said point as may conveniently be, but beyond the city limits, the necessary yards and other equipments for the transaction of its freight business; and also may, under the supervision aforesaid, locate, construct, and maintain a passenger station for local business as near as conveniently may be to the point aforesaid, on Third street east, at which the tunnel aforesaid shall or may begin; and shall also have the right to cross the Potomac River on and over the Long bridge aforesaid, upon and over the said tracks of said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad to the southern or Virginia shore of said river; and is hereby authorized and empowered to use the said tracks in common with the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company upon such fair and equitable terms as may be agreed upon by said companies; and in the event the said companies fail to agree upon satisfactory terms, either of said companies may apply by petition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which shall provide for proper notice to and hearing of all parties interested and shall have power to determine the terms and conditions upon which and the regulations under which the said Baltimore and Ohio Company shall be entitled so to use and enjoy the said tracks and the amount and manner of compensation to be paid therefor; and the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company may also, under the supervision aforesaid, locate, construct, and maintain at such point or points within the said city aforesaid, and to the southward of its tracks and the said station south of the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues southwest, such yards and other equipments as may be necessary for the transaction of its freight business.

SEC. 5. That the entire route of each of said railroads within the said city shall be inclosed by an iron fence or railing upon a stone parapet, and of such construction as shall be approved by the commissioners as aforesaid, with an opening therein at each street crossing or intersection, protected by guard gates or other device, under the supervision aforesaid, and by a watchman to be employed by the said companies, or one of them, as the case may be; and also at such point or points as may be prescribed, under the supervision aforesaid, suitable bridge or bridges shall be constructed at the joint cost of said companies on the lines of the streets crossing or intersecting the said routes; that from and after passing South Capitol street in their course westward, as aforesaid, to said station or stations, the several tracks of both said Baltimore and Ohio and said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad shall be depressed below the adjacent surface grades, under the supervision and subject to the appeal as aforesaid, and all the tracks herein provided for shall, throughout their entire course through said city, be laid upon such grades as shall be determined by said commissioners, subject to appeal, as aforesaid; and that the construction of the tunnel of the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad aforesaid, and all other details of construction of any of the tracks, yards, or equipments in this act mentioned and provided for, shall be under the supervision aforesaid: Provided, however, That the width of roadway to be occupied by the tracks aforesaid on or in any street, avenue, or public space in said city shall not exceed 50 feet.

SEC. 6. That the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall, on or before the date aforesaid, respectively abandon and remove their respective stations and depots now located at New Jersey avenue and C street northwest and on the public reservation at Sixth and B streets northwest, in said city, and in lieu thereof the said companies shall each, under the supervision aforesaid, construct and maintain, at the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues aforesaid, upon land described as squares 464, 434, 410, and 386, or any part thereof, to be secured by purchase or condemnation as aforesaid, south of said intersection, a passenger station or stations of such extent, architectural design, and arrangement as may be found advisable and necessary, as nearly uniform as practical, however: Provided, however, That the said companies shall have equal and independent ground spaces for their respective accommodation in the said station or stations, and that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall be entitled to the western half and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to the eastern half of said station.

SEC. 7. That for the purpose of locating, constructing, and maintaining the yards, stations, and facilities hereinbefore provided for, each and either of said companies aforesaid is hereby authorized and empowered to take, acquire, and hold the land necessary to such purposes; but before proceeding so to do the said companies, and each of them, shall first obtain the assent of the commissioners of the District, with the approval of the Secretary of War and of the owner or owners of such land, and if such owner shall be absent from said District or shall refuse to give such assent on such terms as the said company shall approve, or in case of infancy, coverture, insanity, or any other cause, shall be legally incapable of giving such assent, it shall be lawful for said company to apply to a justice of the peace of the District of Columbia, who shall thereupon issue a warrant under his hand and seal, directed to the marshal of said District, requiring him to summon a jury of twenty citizens, being freeholders of said District, none of whom shall be interested or related to any person interested in such land, or a stockholder or related to any stockholder in said companies, or either of them, to meet on the land so required on a day named in such warrant, not less than ten nor more than twenty days after issue of the same, to proceed to estimate, after viewing the premises and hearing the allegations of the parties, the value of the land so proposed to be taken by the said company and the damages consequent upon such taking; and if at said time and place any of the said jurors summoned do not attend, the marshal shall immediately summon as many persons, similarly qualified, as, together with those in attendance, will furnish a panel of twenty jurors in attendance, and from such panel each party, his, her, its, or their agent or attorney, or, if either or any party be not present in person or by agent, the said marshal, for him, her, it, or them, may strike off four persons, and the remaining twelve shall act as a jury on the inquisition of damages; and to each, before he acts as such juror, the said marshal shall administer an oath or affirmation that he will justly and impartially estimate the damages that the owner or owners of such land will sustain by the occupation of the same by the said company; and the jury shall reduce its inquisition to writing and sign and seal the same, and it shall then be returned by said marshal to the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia and be filed by said clerk in his office, and shall be confirmed by the said court holding a general term at any time that it may be in session after thirty days from and after such return, unless an appeal from such inquisition shall have been taken and perfected as hereinafter provided; and either party may appeal to the said court, holding a general term as aforesaid, within thirty days from and after the said return of the said inquisition to the said clerk as aforesaid, and in all cases where the said company shall so appeal it shall, within ten days, give bond to the party or parties claiming and entitled to damages in a penalty at least double the sum found by the jury, with a condition that the said company shall pay or cause to be paid such amount of damages and costs as the party may be entitled to received on the judgment of said court without delay, and on which bond ample and sufficient sureties shall be given, to be approved by said court conformably to its rules, and in all cases where the party or parties claimant shall appeal it shall be lawful for the said company, if it shall require the immediate use of the property condemned and valued as aforesaid, before such appeal can be heard and decided, to execute and tender a bond to the party or parties aforesaid in at least double the sum found by the jury, with sureties to be approved by the said court, in manner aforesaid, with a condition to pay without delay such sum and costs as may be awarded by the said court without further delay; and upon the delivery and tender of such bond, and the payment into court of the sum awarded by said jury, the said company may proceed to the construction of its said yards and equipment aforesaid, as if the parties claimant and the said company had agreed upon the compensation to be paid for the land therefor to be used; and in all cases where the said company shall appeal and give bond and make payment as aforesaid it shall have the power to proceed in the construction of the said yards and equipments and appropriation of the land for the uses thereof as if no appeal had been taken and the parties had agreed upon compensation for the land so acquired; and in all cases where the said company and the parties agree upon the price to be paid for such land the same shall be paid before the land shall be taken and used; and if no such appeal shall have been taken and the said inquisition accordingly confirmed as hereinbefore provided in such cases, or if upon such appeal the said court shall be of the opinion that the said inquisition should be confirmed, the same shall be confirmed, and when confirmed, in either manner, the same shall be recorded by the clerk of court aforesaid at the expense of the said company, or if upon such appeal the same be set aside, the said court shall direct another inquisition to be taken and proceeded upon in the manner above described; the inquisition shall in every case describe the property taken or the bounds of the lands condemned and the quality or duration of the interest in the same valued for the said company, and such valuation, when paid or tendered to the owner or owners of the property, his, her, or their legal representatives, shall entitle the said company to the interest and estate in the same so valued as if it had been legally conveyed by the owner or owners of the same, for the uses and purposes of such railway, and so long only as it shall be so used, and the value, if not received when tendered, may at any time thereafter be received without cost from said company by the owner or owners, or his, her, or their legal representatives; and the said supreme court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases, and is authorized and empowered to hear and determine the same, and shall so hear and determine the same after notice to the parties, and the judgment of the said court shall be final, subject to the appeal as in other cases. And each and either of the said companies shall be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to construct and maintain tracks to and into the yards and stations aforesaid, and any of them in connection with the tracks or any of them hereinbefore prescribed. And in all cases in which the traversing or crossing of any street, avenue, or public space in the said city is rendered necessary in the carrying out of the provisions of this act, such traversing, crossing, and use of such street, avenue, or public space are hereby authorized and empowered: Provided, however, That the natural and free use of said street, avenue, or public space shall not be thereby impaired more than is absolutely unavoidable in the premises.

SEC. 8. That every railway company now owning or operating or hereafter constructing a railway into said city, in conformity to law, so situated that it can use the said tracks and the said stations, shall, as well as its successors, lessees, and assigns, have the right to use said tracks and stations for its passenger, mail, and express business only, upon such terms as to rental and under such rules and regulations as may be agreed upon between the company so desiring to use said facilities and the company owning the same; or, if they can not agree, upon such terms as shall be fixed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, upon petition and hearing thereon: Provided, That such joint use is compatible with the adequate and safe use of said property by the owner and its lessees, to be determined by said court.

SEC. 9. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to carry out the provisions of this act, and each and every thing done or requisite to be done in the execution thereof shall be, except as herein otherwise provided, under the supervision and control of the said commissioners, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; but all costs arising under this act shall in every case be borne by the company on whose account the same is or may become necessary in conformity to the provisions and requirements hereof.

SEC. 10. That there shall be paid by the United States to the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company for the depot building and bridge on the public reservation at Sixth and B streets northwest, as hereinbefore provided, such reasonable sum, as the value thereof, as may be agreed upon by and between said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company and the commissioners of the District of Columbia; and in case of failure of the said company and commissioners to agree upon the sum so to be paid the said commissioners shall apply by petition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia sitting in general term, which is hereby given authority and jurisdiction in the premises. And the said court shall, upon such petition, provide for proper notice to and hearing of the said company and commissioners in the premises, and shall have power to determine in such manner as it may deem proper the price so to be paid as aforesaid; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, when it shall have vacated its station on Sixth street, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as is herein provided for when the same shall have been ascertained, determined, and adjudged according to the provisions hereof.

SEC. 11. That for the purpose of locating, constructing, and maintaining the yards, stations, and facilities of the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company and of the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company they are hereby authorized and empowered each company for itself to take, acquire, and hold in fee-simple by purchase or condemnation the land necessary for such purposes; but before proceeding to do so, the said company shall first obtain the assent of the owner or owners of such lands, and if such owner or owners shall be absent from said District, or shall fail to agree on terms for the same with the said company, or in case of infancy, coverture, insanity, or any other cause, shall be legally incapable of giving his, her, or their assent, it shall be lawful for said company to apply at once to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or a judge thereof, who shall thereupon issue a warrant directed to the marshal of said District, requiring him to summon a jury of twenty disinterested citizens of said District to meet on the land so required on a day named in such warrant, not less than ten or more than twenty days after the issue of the same, upon such notice to the owners of, and persons interested in, the premises proposed to be taken as the said court or judge shall direct, to proceed to estimate after viewing the premises the value of the land so proposed to be taken by the said company, and the damages, if any, consequent upon such taking and use, and if, at said time and place, any of the said jurors summoned do not attend, the marshal shall immediately summon as many persons, similarly qualified, as, together with those in attendance, will furnish a panel of twenty jurors in attendance, and from such panel, each party, his, her, its, or their agent or attorney, or if either or any party be not present in person or by agent, the said marshal for him, her, it, or them, may strike off four persons, and the remaining twelve shall act as a jury on the inquisition aforesaid; and to each, before he acts as such juror, the said marshal shall administer an oath or affirmation that he will justly and impartially estimate the compensation that the owner or owners of such land will be entitled to by the acquisition and occupation of the same by the said company; and the jury shall reduce its inquisition to writing and sign and seal the same, it shall then be returned by said marshal to the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and be filed by said clerk in his office, and notice of such filing shall be given by the clerk, personally or by publication, in such manner as the court or judge shall direct, to the persons interested in said award who shall not have appeared at said inquisition, and shall be confirmed by the said court holding a general term at any time that it may be in session after thirty days from and after such return, unless an appeal from such inquisition shall have been taken and perfected as hereinafter provided; and either party may appeal to the said court holding a general term as aforesaid, within thirty days from and after the said return of the said inquisition to the said clerk as aforesaid, and in all cases where the said company shall so appeal it shall, within ten days, pay to the clerk of said court the amount awarded by said jury, and give bond to the party or parties claiming and entitled to compensation in a penalty at least double the sum found by the jury, with a condition that the said company shall pay or cause to be paid such amount of compensation and costs as the party may be entitled to receive on the judgment of the said court without delay, and on which bond ample and sufficient sureties shall be given, to be approved by said court conformably to its rules, and in all cases where the party or parties claimant shall appeal, it shall be lawful for the said company, if it shall require the immediate use of the property condemned and valued as aforesaid, before such appeal can be heard and decided, to execute and tender a bond to the parties aforesaid in at least double the sum found by the jury, with sureties to be approved by the said court in manner aforesaid, with a condition to pay without delay such sum and costs as may be awarded by the said court without further delay; and upon the delivery and tender of such bond the said company, such payment into court having been made, the consent of the commissioners of the District, with the approval of the Secretary of War, being first had and obtained, may proceed to the construction of its said yards and facilities as if the parties claimant and the said company had agreed upon the compensation to be paid for the land therefor to be used; and in all cases where the said company shall appeal, make said payment, and give bond as aforesaid, it may have the power to proceed in the construction of the said yards and facilities and appropriation of the land for the uses thereof as if no appeal had been taken and the parties had agreed upon compensation for the land so acquired; and in all cases where the said company and the parties agree upon the price to be paid for such land, the same shall be paid and the assent of the commissioners of the District, with the approval of the Secretary of War, obtained to the use thereof before the land shall be used; and if no appeal shall have been taken and the said inquisition accordingly confirmed as hereinbefore provided in such cases, or if upon such appeal the said court shall be of opinion that the said inquisition should be confirmed, the same shall be confirmed, and when confirmed, in either manner, the same shall be recorded by the clerk of court aforesaid at the expense of the said company; or if upon such appeal the same be set aside, the court shall direct another inquisition to be taken and proceeded upon in the manner above described; the inquisition shall in every case attach a plan of the property taken and such valuation tendered to the owner or owners of the property, his, her, or their legal representatives, and if not accepted by said owner or owners paid into court as aforesaid, shall entitle the said company to permanently occupy the said premises by itself, its successors and assigns, for railway purposes, and the value, if not received when tendered, may at any time thereafter be received without cost from the said company by the owner or owners, or his, her, or their legal representatives; and the said supreme court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases, and is authorized and empowered to hear and determine the same, after notice to the parties, without the intervention of a jury, and either party shall have a right to trial by jury in accordance with the practice prevailing in said court, and, subject to the laws of the United States, to an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. And the said companies shall be, and are hereby, authorized and empowered to construct and maintain tracks to and into the yards and stations aforesaid, and any of them, in connection with the authorized tracks of said company. And in all cases in which the traversing or crossing of any street, avenue, or public space in said city is rendered necessary in the carrying out of the provisions of this act, such traversing, crossing, and use of such street, avenue, or public space are hereby authorized and empowered: Provided, however, That the natural and free use of said street or avenue or public space shall not thereby be impaired more than is absolutely unavoidable in the premises.

SEC. 12. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to supervise the carrying out of the provisions of this act, and each and everything done in the carrying out thereof shall be under the supervision and control of the said commissioners, with the approval of the Secretary of War; but no expense on account thereof shall be incurred or paid by the United States or by the District of Columbia, but shall in every case be borne by either or both of said railroad companies affected thereby.

SEC. 13. All supervision and action of the commissioners of the District of Columbia under or by virtue of the provisions of this act shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 14. That the owner of any interest in any real estate which may be injuriously affected by the exercise of any of the powers or authority by this act granted (in cases in which no part of such real estate is taken or occupied under the authority of this act) shall be paid the damage done to his interest in such real estate so injuriously affected as aforesaid by the corporation or other person or persons who shall cause such injury. To this end any such owner may apply by short petition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, at any general term thereof, stating the case and the amount of the damages claimed, and said court shall, upon reasonable notice to the party complained against, thereupon appoint three competent and disinterested persons commissioners to examine the property alleged to have been so injuriously affected, and hear evidence on the subject, and to decide and report to the court what amount of damages, if any, has been or is likely to be done to such interest in such property by the exercise of the powers of this act granted. The court may confirm, modify, or set aside such report as may be conformable to law and justice, and render judgment accordingly, with costs. Any sum so finally adjudged any such petitioner shall be paid to him by the party against whom the judgment shall be rendered, and execution may issue therefor. And if any such judgment shall not be satisfied within sixty days after its rendition, the said court shall have power, and it shall be its duty, upon petition therefor by the party aggrieved, to enjoin the further exercise of the powers and the operation of the works in respect of which such damages were adjudged.

SEC. 15. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act; and all existing laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. MORRILL Mr. President, were I to consult my own comfort alone, or that of my fellow-Senators, I should not inflict a railroad speech upon the Senate to-day, but what seems to be a stern duty must not be shirked.

To our great hurt we here appear to have subsidized, so to say, the most wealthy and powerful railroad corporation of the country, by permitting one of its many feeders or branches to enter the city of Washington rampant, there to be petted as a spoiled child with legislative sugar-plums, and to strangle with an iron garrote a public park of much promise to the city, and to overrun and practically swallow up other important reservations, as well as large avenues and streets, which have often been stained with human blood by numerous railroad homicides.

Ought we not to have some faith, even though we could wish it were stronger, that the representatives of States and of the people will courageously declare this unfortunate railroad land grant unearned—treating the case with the same measure of even-handed justice we award to other unearned land grants elsewhere—and restore it to the city of Washington, to which it rightfully belongs, as a precious and inalienable gift from its founders?

The substitute offered by me for the steam-railroad bill will be recognized by the Committee on the District of Columbia in its main features as the previous laborious work of a most respectable number of that committee; and, while it may not all be beyond amendment, it appeared to me so well and fairly drawn that I have taken the liberty to present it, with the hope that it may find some favor with the committee and much more with the Senate. It is, however, in some respects a transcript of the bill for which it is offered as a substitute, except the provision that the tracks on Sixth street are to be removed, and that the depots, instead of being on the park, are to be south of the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues, or nearly as originally intended by Congress and asked for by the road in 1878. Some of the provisions of the bill reported by the Senator from Illinois, granting extraordinary additional privileges to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, may be tolerated, but, if all were to be granted, there would hardly be room left for any other railroad accommodations in that part of the city.

The substitute will largely not only relieve the northeastern part of the city from unnecessary occupation of streets and avenues, but wholly relieve the park from present absolute railroad domination.

With the passenger stations placed, as proposed by the substitute, south of the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues, they would be nearer to some of the principal hotels of the city, and not one-third of a mile or more than three minutes farther away from any. The cost of reaching the stations from hotels would not be increased a single farthing, and the great Maryland and Virginia avenues, as well as some reservations, would be released from some part of their present unlawful occupation. The hotels were mostly in their present positions long before the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad was introduced here; and if this road were to be removed from Sixth street, the hotels would still remain where their original proprietors chose to plant them, and would still retain any small advantage to be found in the shorter distance to the railroad stations.

The hotels now existing or which may hereafter exist, can safely be left to adjust their own relations to railroad depots. Transient visitors coming here by railroad, seldom oftener than once a year, or once in a lifetime, should have proper consideration, but not more, rather less, than the life-long residents of the city whose welfare and property are to be oftener, more seriously, and permanently affected; and not so much as national legislators, whose reputation for wearing no badge of corporation servitude, and for sound judgment and impartial justice should not be exposed to any disparagement.

Like the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, I willingly credit the Pennsylvania Railroad Company with being managed by the most astute and accomplished railroad men of the country, and with dealing handsomely with the public in most all other localities but that of Washington, where it stands ready to higgle and quarrel with Congress and with everybody for the ninth part of a hair. In Philadelphia it is lavish in its display of accommodations in the heart of the city, and there ungrudgingly assumes the expenditure of millions of dollars. Here, on the contrary, it seems parsimonious and to rely upon the bounties of the Government, and, after that, upon grabbing like a freebooter, as I shall hereafter show, what ever it can get hold of.

On the great thoroughfare between Washington and the city of New York, the Pennsylvania Railroad appears to have an iron-bound monopoly, impenetrable at either end by any rivals proposing competition. The accommodations on their limited express trains are unsurpassable, and, if the charges for fares are not also unsurpassable, they are very much more than the charges per mile to Chicago and much more than the rates allowed on the great lines in the State of New York.

No one appreciates more than I do the power of the gigantic Pennsylvania Railroad Company, or more fully comprehends the difficulty that Congress must meet in doing anything in relation to the interests of that company to which it does not freely consent. It has eminent and very reputable friends. To escape any new competition, and to maintain any lawful advantages it now holds, I do not say that it has retained in the District or will retain a single attorney; but it is safe to say that it is able to retain every attorney in Washington to see to it that the smell of fire shall not touch the hem of its garments. It has got its foot on the neck of the park, and it has come to stay, if it can, but it would not willingly consent to a joint occupancy of even Naboth's vineyard, and has no idea of loving any railroad neighbor like itself.

I have no personal grievance whatever against this or any other railroad company, but I feel that the people of every State have some interest in the matter now pending, and will hold Congress to a rigid accountability for any action that does not point to the permanent well being of the city of Washington and especially to the preservation of the old Mall, as it was handed down to us by the Father of his Country, to be maintained as a national park, such as decorate all other national capitals, and a decoration of which very few of the principal American cities are now destitute.

In order, it would seem, that no evidence should be wanting of the absolute cleavage and wide disintegration of the park, the bill in charge of the Senator from West Virginia provides that, on the east and west sides of the strips 1,000 feet long by 100 feet wide of the park, which are to be freshly granted, the railroads shall erect substantial walls 10 feet high! These walls, therefore, are to inclose a space, including Sixth street, of over 300 feet wide and 1,000 feet long, in order, as the bill without a blush confesses, to make two parks, east and west, where there is scant room for one, or "that a view of the trains upon said tracks shall be shut out from the view of persons using the public parks lying east and west of the said railroad tracks." The present bridge over Sixth street is also to be extended over the additional "strips of the public reservations granted," and as described, with "proper ornamentation and side-guards to prevent a view of the engines passing under said bridge by persons or animals using the same." Engines, however, under this narrow bridge, to hide their diminished heads, should be of the Tom Thumb variety, not the Big Moguls, and any ornamentation to conceal their approach must be a rare example of high-art, but no "side-guards" will be likely to deaden or spike the ears of persons or animals when exposed to the calliope music of the steam-whistle.

It is undoubtedly true that a large portion of the public has been asking for a bill from the Committee on the District of Columbia which would remove the depot and all tracks from Sixth street. Instead of this they present a bill to increase the wretched existing outrage by doubling the tracks on Sixth street and by planting on the opposite side another depot, also upon the park, and finally by surrendering Sixth street altogether to two railroad companies. Instead of sixty trains a day moving across the park, we are thus hereafter to have not less than one hundred and twenty. The people asked for bread, and instead they have presented to them stones, difficult to swallow and wholly indigestible. They asked for the restoration of the parcel of ground occupied on the park by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, and instead it is proposed to rob the park of further large and valuable strips of land, and to bestow them with royal munificence as a free gift upon two railroad corporations instead of one. We are as unfortunate as the boy who got one thumb into his muskrat trap, and in trying to get that out got his other thumb into the trap. But most assuredly we can not afford to pretend to amend a grievance while manifestly buttressing and perpetuating it by more than doubling its magnitude. I do not believe that any member of the majority of the Committee on the District of Columbia can be entirely satisfied with their own bill as reported. They must have consented to it in order to get rid of the subject, as some maidens consent to wed an annoying suitor in order to get rid of him, but soon find it best to seek for a divorce.

I confess that I do not like to have comparisons with past generations made against the present. When Mr. Douglas, that eminent and brilliant Senator from Illinois, was chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, he proposed, in order to perfect and to preserve the park, to extend its limits between Sixth street and First street, so as to make it more nearly of equal width towards the Capitol, and to remove what seemed to be invasions upon its proper boundaries. Then it might have been done perhaps at trifling expense. Now the expense would be great. Senator Douglas had no fear of being charged with having too much of sentiment and pride in behalf of the capital of his country. If I have no power to increase respect for Congress, I hope I have still less to drag it down, and trust the time may never come when men will say as a reproach, "See! The Fiftieth Congress did this."

Congress originally authorized the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in 1867, to enter the city, gave it a most valuable franchise, but prohibited the occupation of any lot or square owned by the United States, and the right was also reserved to grant equal privileges to any other roads. In 1869 the company was given its choice of two lines in entering the city, neither of them, however, further north than Virginia and Maryland avenues.

In 1870 the company was empowered to take Long Bridge and its draws, to be held in perpetuity by keeping the same in repair and by giving other railroad companies also the right to pass over the bridge.

In 1871 the company was authorized by Congress (and it was the extreme limit of the railroad company's demands) to erect a passenger depot on Virginia avenue, between West Sixth street and West Seventh street, of the same style of architecture as that of the Pennsylvania road at Lancaster, with the assent of the notable and forever to be distinguished board of aldermen of this city, who, with "quick conception and easy delivery," proposed, instead of this, to outdo Congress and to give so much of the Mall and of Sixth street as might satisfy the railroad company. The amazing gift was promptly and hilariously accepted. But the board having no more legal authority to place the company under so heavy a load of gratitude than Satan had to give away the kingdom of the world, application had now to be made to Congress, and the reckless action of the board was at length submissively confirmed in 1872. Touching this action the earnest prayer of many people is now made, "Good Lord, deliver us!"

I have obtained, from the courtesy of the commissioners of the District, a statement in detail of the amount of real estate now held, including what is held at the pleasure of the Government, and of the amount of taxes respectively paid by each of the steam railroads now entering the city of Washington, and the documents will be found interesting reading. Washington does not own the railroads, and I hope the railroads are not to own Washington. By this statement it appears that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company hold and are taxed upon eighty-eight pieces or parcels of land, containing 490,480 feet within the city and 45,193 feet in the country, of which the assessed value is placed at $190,813, and upon which the company pays a tax of $2,799.36. It also pays a personal tax upon the tracks and equipments of $2,079.18. In this is included ground and improvements in the city other than the depot and grounds, valued at $64,018.

The statement concerning the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shows the assessed value of the depot to be $125,000, and of the land occupied by the depot, at the pleasure of the Government, is $240,690, and that they hold in all one hundred and thirty-four pieces or parcels of land, containing 751,231 feet in the city and 8.89 acres in the country, and the assessed value of the whole, including the depot land not paid for, is $496,481, upon which a tax is levied of $7,440.27. They also pay a personal tax upon tracks and equipments of $2,470.

Of course these statements do not cover the large amount of avenues and streets occupied by the tracks of these roads. It will be seen at once that the taxes paid by the roads are a mere bagatelle compared with the rates and amount which would be paid if improved and occupied by citizens of the city. The amount invested here, however extensive the area covered by these companies for their accommodation, appears incredibly small, and unless the cost of these numerous parcels of land has been greatly in excess of the assessed value, if the companies were willing to dispose of them, they might reap very handsome profits. The amount of present taxation certainly does not greatly diminish the burdens of the people.

The General Government is here compelled to pay the cost value of sites for buildings constantly required for additional accommodations, and would it be any hardship for rich railroad corporations to submit to the same terms to which our Government itself is inexorably subjected?

It should not be accounted a trivial or minor matter that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company appears to have long disregarded with entire impunity many of the conditions imposed upon it by the original act of Congress. Some of these broken conditions have been reported by the very competent Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds to the district attorney, with a request for judicial action in the premises, but little or no attention has been paid to these official requests. The company has doubtless felt sure of a condoning or healing act on the part of Congress, whenever it should be needed, as it appears now to be tendered unasked by the bill under consideration. The sharpest criticism, perhaps, ever made is that of facts. I do not intend to indulge in any slovenliness in statements of facts, but shall submit a catalogue of charges which appear to me to be based on ample authority. If they are true, they would not seem to justify haste on the part of Congress in the bestowal of large additional railroad land bounties upon the offending party.

1. The speed of steam-railroads within the District has long been regulated by law, and yet the law is constantly, recklessly, and notoriously violated. The police sometimes stop fast-going horses, but apparently they have enough to do to look out for themselves when a locomotive heaves in sight; and the district attorney also lacks courage to seize the bridle of a locomotive. Within ten days a coroner's jury has rendered a verdict of manslaughter on account of a man killed by a Baltimore and Potomac Railroad train going at more than double the rate of speed allowed by law.

2. One of the conditions imposed by Congress upon the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad was as follows:

> That while trains are moving to and from Virginia avenue, along Sixth street and said depot, the said railroad company shall keep flagmen at the several street-crossings to warn people of danger.

The danger has never been absent, but that can hardly be said of invisible flagmen; for if they have not been often absent how is the record of human slaughter and the long list of serious injuries to persons and property to be accounted for? The number of persons killed since November 12, 1872, on the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, as given to me by the District commissioners, has been 33, of which 28 were in the city and 5 in the country. Besides these bloody tragedies there were 101 serious accidents, of which 95 were in the city, making a sad list of 80 persons suffering from mashed heads or broken noses or crushed arms, feet, and legs, or from other bodily injuries. The number of persons killed by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has also been fearfully large, being 24 since July 12, 1873, of which 16 were in the city and 12 in the country. In addition to these there were 59 other serious accidents, with a list of 47 maimed and mangled in the usual rough style of railroad smash-ups, not easily to be dwelt upon with composure by the victims or by their friends.

By this bloody record it appears that there have been 57 human beings killed in the District within a little more than a dozen years by these railroads, and 127 cases of serious personal injury. In connection with this large and apparently increasing slashing and slaughtering of the people of this District, where the Baltimore and Potomac road appears to have the pre-eminence, it should not be forgotten that until the passage of the Poland act of 1884 the families of those who were actually killed were left without remedy for damages even for the grossest wrong or neglect of the railroads, although the common law, not any statute law, furnished a remedy for personal injury when less than that of death. The railroads were scot-free, and had entire impunity if they only succeeded in actually killing their passengers.

In addition to the occupancy of important portions of Delaware, Virginia, and Maryland avenues, there are now within the city more than sixty crossings of streets and avenues at grade by these steam railroads as perilous as sixty spring-gun traps, and all tending greatly to the depreciation of the value of real estate in the city, as well as to the multiplication of deplorable accidents. With the changes now proposed these crossings will be reduced to the minimum and, with additional safeguards, the recurrence of life-taking accidents, it is to be hoped, may cease.

It has been suggested that Philadelphia, a larger city than Washington, permits steam railroads to traverse many streets and to cross public parks. To show the results of this permission it is only necessary to quote an extract from one of the Philadelphia newspapers, as follows:

> The startling statement is made that fifty-two lives, or one a week, were sacrificed last year in Philadelphia by the crossing of the city streets at grade by steam railroads. In no other civilized nation is this practice tolerated, and as our population becomes more crowded our regulations must conform to those which a due regard for the safety of human life has decreed elsewhere. It will be remembered that the constantly recurring homicides on the surface tracks leading into the heart of New York City led to the sinking of the road-bed at an expense of many million dollars. But the outlay was not only required by humanity, but proved to be a judicious step financially. Railroads would probably find it to their advantage to adopt the same system generally, as they would make up in speed, convenience, and security for the additional expenditure.

These are wise words, but whether any other city tolerates being railroad-ridden or not furnishes no reason for thus humiliating or punishing the national capital.

A reform in relation to the railroad tracks crossing streets at grade is loudly demanded, and especially from the hostile occupation of the right flank and center of the city, where many streets are perpetually blockaded, we ought to be forever relieved. An insufficient remedy is proposed by the bill of the committee; but on or south of Maryland and Virginia avenues the elevation of the ground is sufficient to permit the tracks to be sunk below the surface and to be walled in and made wholly safe.

So destructive of human life have been the railroads leading into the city of Buffalo on a grade level with the streets that the governor of New York has just approved an act of the Legislature by which seven leading roads will be compelled to enter that city by elevated tracks, which will subject the roads to a very large expenditure of money.

3. The Baltimore and Potomac Company were also to pay all damages to the owners of private property on Sixth street, the owners of property elsewhere apparently having to take their chances at common law, and yet seventeen years have elapsed and these damages are not yet fully paid. The bill under consideration does not provide a remedy as the substitute does for damages of this sort.

4. An extraordinarily fine bridge was to have been erected over Sixth street at a cost, as its friends asserted, of $75,000, "a thing of beauty;" but after long years of delay we have a narrow iron structure to which only "distance lends enchantment to the view," and it rather aggravates than diminishes the danger. An untold number of engines at this point are constantly spouting fire, panting and pirouetting one way or the other, sixty or more trains in every twenty-four hours; and no breed of horses is so destitute of mettle as not to snuff the battle of fire, smoke, and steam when directly under the nose, or not to hear the steam-whistle when screeching in their front. Instead of having to dodge one engine, while approaching and crossing the bridge, the horses dodge and sheer right and left at every one in sight, and become as frantic as any we have in the city made of bronze, and one puffy drum-major engine would seem forever on parade-drill, leading the music of several more which give out the discordant signals of incoming or outgoing trains. Every carriage driver at the bridge is found to be the "Man-afraid-of-his-horses." In fact, even among horses, the bridge is the veritable pons asinorum, where the whole class are wont to balk.

5. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company have placed a freight depot on square 386 without any authority of law, and in spite of notice of objections against the selection of the site. They have also invaded reservations 174, 178, 241, and 309, although prohibited from entering any lot or square owned by the United States, and it appears to be the readiest land-jumper of the age. Between New Jersey avenue and South Capitol street, where, by the map of 1872, it would appear that one track only was authorized or contemplated; there are now not less than eight tracks, some of which even trench upon the side-walk of reservation 17. In addition to this four tracks cross and cover reservation 174; four other tracks cover reservation 178, and four more tracks cross and cover reservation 241. All of these, as well as the track across New Jersey avenue to square 737, though short, have been made without the slightest authority and in defiance of law. These reservations are of the triangular shape peculiar to Washington, and are greatly appreciated by its citizens, but the aggressive war powers of appropriation by this steam railroad seem to be autocratic, and an act of Congress is looked upon apparently with contempt.

The four tracks which go over reservation 174, also cross New Jersey avenue and First street southeast, without any legal authority whatever, nor is there any authority of law for the four tracks which have invaded reservation 178 to cross Half street southeast. There is still another branch of tracks over the small reservation 109, which crosses F street without authority of law. Having only an implied right to pass through the large reservation 101, of 2½ acres, with one track, or at most with two, they have placed upon it a large group of tracks, which are constantly covered with trains or with loaded or empty cars. Their principal freight delivery is here and on the public avenues and streets. Heavy freight is daily unloaded from daylight until dark along Virginia avenue from Sixth to Seventh streets and along Maryland avenue from Ninth to Thirteen-and-one-half streets, for which there is no authority of law. The most important reservation as well as many minor ones in the south part of the city have thus been seized by the railroad company, and instead of being improved and made a possible decoration they have been made a positive nuisance. The desecration is keenly felt by citizens in this vicinity, who observe that favors such as were granted and protected elsewhere are here denied. The value of property in this locality, it is declared, is less than it was thirty years ago, while values only two squares away have been quadrupled. There are further weighty considerations affecting business interests. A committee of the citizens of Washington reported as follows:

The constant obstruction of these avenues at the transverse streets by shifting engines and trains practically cuts in two the business of the city, so that merchants and business men have almost ceased to look to the river [Potomac] as a means of transportation because of the inconvenience and delay experienced in transferring it after leaving the wharf.

The lawful rights of those who have purchased lots and have built residences near to any of these reservations with the just expectation, according to the original plan of the city, that they would remain forever open spaces, have been rudely invaded if not destroyed. The vested rights, however, of these residents are not inferior to those of any railroad, and they are entitled to some proper remedy.

The interest and convenience of the company appear to have been the only limits of authority to do whatever it chooses, and its audacity, it will be seen, has been amazing even for a corporation.

That I have not overstated the infractions of its charter or of the willful trespasses upon the public grounds by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company may be seen by reference to the repeated annual reports of Colonel Wilson, the able and faithful Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds.

In one instance it is understood that the company claims to have had the consent of the District commissioners for its lawless action, of which, however, there is no record; and, if such there were, it would have no more legal value than the consent of the Superintendent of the Insane Asylum. The law binds the commissioners as well as railroads.

6. Again, it was provided—

That the tracks of said company shall turn out of Sixth street and enter the said depot with suitable curvature at the south end thereof; and the said depot shall not extend beyond B street north, nor shall the tracks ever extend beyond B street north.

Obviously it was intended the tracks should enter the depot grounds by a curvature "at the south end thereof." This has not only not been done, but tracks without "curvature" have been extended outside the depot grounds nearly the whole length of Sixth street for the sole purpose of obtaining standing room for cars, and there in grim and stubborn self-assertion, it seems. "they also serve who only stand and wait." It is clearly a bald usurpation, or an attempt by slopping over to get possession of more than was granted.

The criminal case reported of the United States against the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, indicted by the grand jury for maintaining a nuisance by allowing cars to stand on the street, and there loading and unloading the same, was recently decided in general term against the company. But it is not understood that the company shows any more obedience to the court than it has shown to the laws of Congress.

The proof of there flagrant abuses is so abounding, as to show that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company has willfully broken its so-called charter and would justify its forfeiture under the most summary process by the courts; but full power having been especially reserved to alter or amend, it is incontestable that the road is now as amenable to the discretion of Congress as it would be if now, for the first time, it were asking for permission to enter the District.

I have no chronic hostility to railroads; I often patronize them; I own stock in some of them, and would own more if able, but this does not change my opinion that they owe obedience to public laws quite as much as private citizens. Laws should not be made, according to the venerable proverb, like cobwebs, only to catch flies and let the hornets go free.

A tunnel for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company under Capitol Hill so far removed as Third or Ninth street east does not appear to me so very objectionable. When it was proposed by a majority of the committee some years ago to have a big tunnel much nearer to the Capitol and in front of the new Library, the question might then have been asked, If we were to get it and should not like it, what could we do with it? However prone to escape from it we might be, it would certainly be a difficult hole to creep out of. Great bores are not easily dismissed. I regret that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company are no longer willing, as President Garrett formerly appeared to be, to place all their tracks outside of the boundary, and then to enter the city by the Eastern Branch.

When the national capital was established here railroads had not been invented, and no provision was made for their introduction. Now all arrangements for them must be laboriously studied and carefully fixed, so far as possible for all time, where they will do the least harm and most promote the convenience and future welfare of the city.

The permanent interests of the roads can only be secured by a removal from their present inharmonious relations with each other, and with a large portion of the people of the city, by some radical change of their too extensive occupation and hostile obstruction of streets and avenues, and by a just and final adjustment of their own mutual and clashing rivalries. The present railroad stations are both, as to their sites and approaches, almost equally scandalous and unsatisfactory, and only less so as to the character of the depot buildings. Removal and reform should alike impartially overtake them both together. There is no reason why we should be sooner rid of one abomination than the other, save that the youngest and latest is the more aggressive offender. "Asking nothing but what is right and submitting to nothing wrong," we may, if need be, use either road to drive out the other—

Even as heat another heat expels,
As one nail by strength drives out another.

We can not afford to treat one road as a pet and crucify the other, nor can we afford to trim and limit our action to less than one-half of our duty and trust the future to unknown contingencies and to the well-known potential influences of the railroad higher powers concentrated and made operative here through even very distant connections. Their dominance, if longer submitted to, I fear will show that Congress itself has not yet found constitutional relief from "involuntary servitude."

Pardon me for saying, if these ill-planted depots and incongruous sites could anywhere appear and compete at a World's Exhibition for the primacy among miscreated railroad-passenger "dumping-places," they would swoop the foremost premium and win the grand medal. Ill-advised and ill-perpetuated as they have been, we should still feel some regret were a cyclone to tear them up by the roots, but none whatever when it is only proposed to give them an evolutionary chance for a new birth where each one may come forth not only a greater convenience, but, I trust, even as an ornament creditable to both the city and the railroads.

In the measure presented by the substitute to remedy these manifest wrongs it is not proposed to involve the Government in any expense except at a single point, and there a full and most opportune equivalent—a building appropriate for the city government—will be received; but it is proposed to emancipate from railroad bondage a goodly number of avenues and streets now unnecessarily occupied, to give the city worthier accommodations, less obnoxious to the public sense of decency, and, beyond this, to restore to the city, as well as to the whole country, a portion of its ancient and invaluable public reservations.

It may be innocently said that we are interfering with the chartered rights of corporations, but that would be wholly untrue. We are only interfering exactly as the charters provide that Congress may interfere; and we are interfering, not with their rights, but with palpable public wrongs—with a defiant and stubborn monopoly which tramples upon the rights of the people who are suffering under the formal sanction of our authority and of our prolonged acquiescence. It is, therefore, our highest duty, as it appears to me, to interfere and to redress flagrant wrongs where Congress itself has by no means been altogether an innocent looker-on.

Both of the steam railroads have large holdings of real estate obtained here at a cost supposed to be much below their present value. Each of the roads claims to have a large surplus standing to its credit. Both are the recipients of large revenues derived from the much-coveted passenger and freight business of the city, and both at least have redundant capital and credit to meet all necessary expenditures. They stand in no need of charity or largesses. The Baltimore and Potomac road is but one of many branches of the great Briarean Pennsylvania Railroad Company, drawing abundant nutrition from many States, and whose annual gross earnings are greater than the revenues of many considerable nations. The earnings of the branch to this city the past year were over $200,000 greater than the previous year. In 1884 the total mileage of railroads in the United States was 125,000 miles, and the total earnings $770,684,908. The mileage of the Pennsylvania road then being 7,122 miles, and its gross earnings $97,849,875, or, with less than 6 per cent. of mileage, the company had 13 per cent. of the total gross earnings of all the railroads in the United States! Behind fat dividends to its stockholders and behind its millions of annual surplus profits the company is here intrenched, and will not budge until forced by the strong arm of the law.

These corporations are not paupers, and are abundantly able to pay for the new and larger accommodations required by the public, but required quite as much by the railroads, and which will never be obtained by an outlay more moderate at any future day.

A change as proposed by the amendment now offered as a substitute, or by some other measure of a more rigorous character hereafter, I must venture to say is as fixed as will be its obvious and everlasting propriety. It may be evaded and postponed, but if postponed to-day it will haunt our legislative halls again and again hereafter to the greater ultimate loss of the railroads as well as of the city. What is now asked for is a minimum never to be reduced.

The city of Washington was not made solely for the benefit of railroads, but railroads were made for the benefit of the city, whose honor and welfare, as well as that of the people at large, should be considerately cared for and resolutely protected to the very front line of all their rights and privileges in the national capital.

That it would be an immense improvement to diminish the circuitous length of these roads into and through the city and diminish the large number of street-crossings will not be denied by anybody. It will also be just, in any permanent arrangement which may be made, that absolutely equal privileges shall be extended to all railroads now asking or hereafter to ask for proper accommodations. Means of a freer communication with the rapidly growing enterprise of our fellow-citizens in the Southern States, whose property has so marvelously increased, almost by billions, within a half dozen years, should not be withheld, postponed, or monopolized by any single corporation. Here is a great continental gateway of commerce and travel between the North and South, and it should be open to the world with a wide and generous policy, and wholly liberated from the narrow dog-in-the-manger jealousies of a single corporation.

May I not be pardoned for appearing to urge as a worthy incident of a worthy measure the rescue of our public park from railroad spoliation? If not rescued as proposed by the substitute for the bill of the committee we shall ere long have it absorbed by irresistible demands for miscellaneous public buildings, and we shall certainly be importuned, as Congress has been already, to spend millions of the public money for a distant, more pretentious, but not a more appropriate public park elsewhere. The loss to the park here from the disconnection of the grounds of the Capitol from those of the Executive Mansion can never find compensation in a new park, whether near or remote. As a question of pure economy, looking before and after, the park should be preserved.

Congress very reluctantly, and not without the most cogent reasons, allows a railroad to trespass upon or to cross Indian reservations; and if the reasons are less urgent why such trespasses should not be permitted on reservations here in the very lap of the capital, it would seem to argue that we have less love for our own people than for the Choctaws and Arapahoes.

It is not too much to claim for the health and adornment of the capital of the American people what appears to have been universally accorded to the people of other enlightened nations. In other lands railroads are often only permitted to approach the outskirts of their capitals. At London, Paris, Vienna, and Madrid they are wholly excluded from all parks. In London no railroads cut through Regent's Park, Hyde Park, St. James Park, or any others.

When Queen Caroline, consort of George II, inquired of the elder Mr. Pitt, afterwards Earl of Chatham, how much it would cost to shut up the parks of London as private grounds, he replied, "Three crowns, Your Majesty." She took the hint, and it is hardly necessary to add that the British public still go and come at pleasure over all the London parks. Yet the park in the capital of our Republic is cut in twain, 50 acres of the head and neck severed from the body, by a railroad which seems to have no fears of being uncrowned, though daily and hourly guilty of shutting up the park of Washington.

Were a railroad and depot to be thrust any day upon and across the beautiful Common of Boston, the petted gem of that city, it would be likely to prove a signal for another "Boston Tea Party," and before the break of another day the débris of the railroad would be found steeped in the deep sea.

In London their numerous parks are esteemed as breathing places, or the lungs of the city, and, as everywhere else, they are held to be absolutely essential to the public health.

Perhaps the greatest service to the people of England by Mr. Ruskin, the eloquent writer upon art, architecture, and other related topics, will be found in his successful efforts, brought to bear upon public opinion, to preserve public parks and open spaces from the invasion of railroads, and especially the widely known region usually termed the "lake country." If that has been accomplished in England, on that little island where it has been said an American must be constantly on the lookout lest he should step off into the sea, it should not be impossible here to rescue a small park in Washington from its only formidable invaders, from corporations which have been often charged with being destitute of both sentiment and conscience.

This railroad-bemangled park, now almost and soon to be wholly ruined, if the bill of the committee shall be accepted, by an ill-starred severance into comparatively useless fragments, will soon have many acres of ground and some small but glittering sheets of water added to its western boundary by reclamation from the Potomac, as well as from the shameless cupidity of bootless and bottomless land-jumpers. The expenditures for this noble work have been large, but they will have been made with a clipped wing, if not improvidently, if there is to be not only no reclamation of the original park from the iron grasp of the great Pennsylvania Railroad corporation, but that the also great Baltimore and Ohio corporation shall be invited to lend a hand to the spoliation, leaving the widowed fragments to be fritted away, or to "survive, no longer loved, no longer whole."

In the present obtrusive position of a depot and railroad tracks upon the public park and other reservations, with many branches diverging from the main stem, prominent as they are, but yet so awkward and incomplete for business purposes, there is a suggestion of meanness akin to that of a wealthy skinflint who plants a pig-pen on the open space in front of his house rather than to occupy any rear ground which might possibly bear a root crop worth sixpence. Let us agree and declare that the original open space in front and in sight of the doors and windows of the Capitol shall be restored. It is too much to expect that the public and Congress can be forever reconciled to its present degradation.

The park, as reserved one hundred years ago—reserved not for one generation, but as an eternal possession for all succeeding generations—if it had now to be purchased, as have been recently the parks in many other American cities, would cost millions of dollars; but all that is asked for now by the people of Washington, as well as by the disinterested voice of the nation, is that we shall rescue the park we have from pitiless railroad domination. We are not asked to be as liberal as New York has been, nor as liberal as Chicago, Buffalo, and Boston have been, nor even as liberal as many rural towns have been; but we may be expected to be not wholly strangers to their refinement and public spirit, and expected to reclaim the modest little park we own and once possessed.

We are professing to revere the memory of Washington by a monument on the western portion of this ground, which lacks nothing of sublimity in its unequaled height and dimensions, completed at a cost of more than a million dollars; but all who may hereafter ascend to its lofty summit and look out upon the wonderful panorama presented—where men are reduced to the size of pigmies, where we seem to "take up the isles as a very little thing," and to "lay the earth in a balance"—will often have their eyes riveted upon the park once as dear to Washington as the apple of his eye, and not less dear to us as the painstaking work of Jefferson, now proposed to be completely beheaded, the head forever separated from the trunk, by an impassable and walled gulf from which the steam, smoke and soot of a rookery of engines will be continually ascending, and will wonder why an American Congress should permit so foul a blotch to besmirch the face of so grand a picture, and more wonder why the reverence paid to Washington should be so blasphemed on the ground where his memory was intended to be forever consecrated.

Ought we not to have the privilege to visit the monument directly from the Capitol, without peril and without going a roundabout zigzag way to it through back streets?

We spare no expenditure for the preservation of a National Park on the Yellowstone, which comparatively few Americans will ever see, and yet we are almost hopelessly contending for the preservation, without any expenditure, of a park in the National Capital, which all good Americans hope to see before they die.

Washington and Jefferson had most to do with the location and plan of the city of Washington. They looked upon it as it would appear after the march of centuries. It was to be the city where would be lodged the power and government of the chief part of North America; and Washington, more elated than was in accord with his usual temper, wrote in 1791 to Mrs. Fairfax, that—

> A century hence, if this country keeps united, it will produce a city, though not as large as London, yet of a magnitude inferior to few others in Europe.

Jefferson, a great lover of the natural beauty of American scenery, had resided some years abroad, where he acquired much of his artistic taste and liberal culture, and, though he was a theoretical republican of the straitest sect, he brought home plans of a dozen of the most famous capitals of Europe with which to supply some ambitious hints for the capital of the New World. Jefferson would be content with nothing inferior to the Old World, and with nothing short of scientific accuracy as to the points of the compass of the streets north and south, east and west; but for all this he demanded the rigid standard of republican economy, and would pay the engineer for laying out the ground, according to the plan already adopted, $5 per day only. The excellence of the original plan secured its prompt acceptance—an excellence more and more appreciated as the skeleton plan gradually puts on its beautiful garments and practically displays the symmetry of advancing maturity and completed proportions.

In these early days the Government had no embarrassment of riches; there was no surplus revenue to perplex Congress or with which even to build the proposed new and more Southern capital, and, therefore, Virginia donated for this object $120,000 and Maryland $72,000 more; but these sums were not enough, and, after many fruitless attempts to raise more money, the President made a personal appeal to the State of Maryland for a loan of $100,000. The credit of the United States Government, however, was then so feeble and uncertain that the State absolutely refused the loan without an additional personal guaranty from the three building commissioners, which was at length given; and Washington said, although it looked "strange," that "the necessity of the case justified the obtaining of it on almost any terms." The indorsed paper was in due time paid to the State of Maryland, although the records of the Treasury Department, having thrice been destroyed by fire, do not now show the details of the transaction.

Strained as our Government then was for funds, and as rampant as was the speculative demand here for city lots, the Government did not part with one jot or tittle of Jefferson's darling park, then called the Mall, but it was held intact, as sacred as the garden of the Hesperides, in order "to form," as it was declared—

> A broad and uninterrupted landscape connection between the square on which were to be placed the executive buildings and the grounds for the future site of the Capitol.

We hold this ancient park in trust from the original proprietors, and can not afford to do less than to hand over the heritage with deferential fealty to our successors, whole and unincumbered.

We hold the park for the health and happiness of the greatest number of people, of those destitute of horses and carriages, and unable to incur daily expense for their hire, but who, with their families, when through with the labors and fatigues of the day, or of sedentary life, including weary brain-workers, would often gladly seek one of the dearest pleasures of life—fresh air and restored vigor—on terms which they could accept. It is a park close at hand, in the very heart of the city, with a landscape and walks to be made sweet and attractive by the foliage and fragrance of all the trees and shrubs which thrive in this favored latitude with a natural splendor of health and beauty.

It is true that the suburbs of Washington are sweetened by the charming rural scenery of the Soldiers' Home, brimming with rhododendrons and the odors of the forest, and those who can afford the expense occasionally also may visit the rare and silent beauty of Oak Hill and Arlington—those silent cities of the dead; but these hallowed grounds so far away, are chiefly visited by mourners, who sadly bring their tributes of tears and flowers, and are only rarely seen by weary citizens, or by playing children in the buoyant pursuit of health and happiness. These must have their joys near home or have nothing.

The city of Washington belongs to the nation and should be guarded by the representatives of the nation with at least as much patriotic pride as the capitals of States are guarded by State representatives.

Little heed appears to have been given to former petitions, or to later protests, of large numbers of the most substantial citizens of Washington, and therefore the non-resident capitalists and promoters of the destruction of the park appear to expect Congress will respond to every fresh demand that may be made by railroad potentates. It was not enough that the park should receive a fatal stab from one railroad corporation, but it is proposed to inflict some punishment after death by a division and distribution of its garments among those assumed to be willing to become equal partners in the outrage. The bill in charge of the Senator from West Virginia is based on the idea that not enough has been done for the benefit of the Baltimore and Potomac Company. We granted, beyond a valuable franchise, the use of avenues and streets, without cost for their tracks. We gave the company the Long Bridge in perpetuity, and have let them have the use of depot land assessed at $240,000 (but worth much more) for sixteen years, subject to the payment of taxes. The appetite of the corporation has grown upon what it has fed, and the ability of the United States to furnish further bounties is assumed to be equal to the greed of the company. By this bill further large slices of the park, to be cut "nearest to the heart," on each side of Sixth street, 100 feet wide and 1,000 feet long, and then further extended through the park with a width of 50 feet, are offered as an additional half-million inducement to the railroads not to abandon the public park. A still further royal bounty is offered in the complete surrender of Sixth street to the railroad companies to be occupied by their tracks and sheds. Lots, wherever the companies think necessary, in any direction and almost without limitation, are also authorized to be acquired. The era of railroad ascendancy may not yet have passed away, and, if ticket-offices within the Capitol were to be demanded, I am not sure they would not be refused with some regret, as they would be so neighborly and so convenient.

The improvident provisions of the grant, and I hope to be pardoned for resurrecting the fact, were originally made by justly exasperated Congressmen to punish one railroad corporation for a witless refusal to make close and proper connections with another; but our bitter experience, like that of Æsop's frogs, has shown that we can not afford to change King Log for King Stork, and let us admit that few human punishments, even of railroad sinners, should be everlasting. The past offenses of omission are more easily condoned than those of present actual and obstinate transgression. Self-interest possibly might have been trusted in the long run to remedy disjointed railroad connections, and to have supplied brass checks for through baggage; but it rarely makes haste without coercion to remedy a grievance that yields dividends, and therefore the people of Washington have been compelled with almost a united voice to come to Congress and humbly pray relief. Congress must be held responsible for the beginning, and I hope will obtain credit for the ending of this long-endured and rank-growing grievance.

The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, while asking unstinted favors of Congress, four times from 1867 to 1871, never hinted at a depot on the park, but was content with the act of Congress which placed the depot no nearer than Virginia avenue; but the city aldermen here, the clay in the hands of the potters, ordered it otherwise, and gave the railroad the freedom of the park, supposing themselves superior to Congress, and Congress in 1872 jumped to the same conclusion. On an appeal, now, from that decision, the question is shall it be affirmed by the sober second thought of Congress?

The danger to life and limb from tracks placed on the surface of streets and crossings needs no further illustration by the railroads, certainly not by me, and the question is, shall it be indefinitely continued?

If the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad has repeatedly violated the conditions of its charter, as I think has been fully shown, in what quarter is it to summon pity, when there is no purpose of vengeance, nor of injustice, but only a purpose to confer upon the road all the proper privileges which could be claimed even by a corporation adorned with modesty and all the virtues?

The steam-railroads here appear to be eager and extensive purchasers of lots and parcels of land, evidently having great confidence in such investments, and able to pay for more. Then why should the city of Washington be called upon to donate land in half million lumps for their benefit? Is there a city in the country with 200,000 inhabitants which has ever donated any part of a central public reservation to a steam-railroad years after the construction of its main stem to be used as a passenger depot? The city nearly doubles its population at every decade, and is likely to hold 400,000 within the next dozen years.

Conceited foreign critics with compassionate superiority often sweetly remind Americans of many short-comings, of making the "almighty dollar" the gauge of every man's eminence, of having no interest in anything which does not add to the bulk of material prosperity, and of being wholly destitute of the instincts which respond to letters, to the arts, and to the love of beauty. However gross and unsubstantial these charges may be, would not Congress and the American people incur a more merited reproach were we now to prefer the distinction of intrusive railroad stations in the foreground of the National Capitol to that of a clean, interesting, and beautiful park, and a park hallowed with all the memories of the dawn of our Republic? Would it not show some decadence of public spirit from that of our ancestors?

But, leaving the park wholly outside of the question, I am persuaded that any competent board of engineers, acting in the interest of the roads as well as of the public, would locate the railroad stations south of the intersection of Maryland and Virginia avenues. It would be a great boon to the roads. There they would no longer be cramped for room, nor would the public, and there the elevated ground would permit the sinking of the tracks below the surface and out of the way of all danger. The railroads can afford to treat the city of Washington generously. They can not afford to leave the question as to the proper site of stations in a condition to excite unrest and perpetual discontent; nor can railroads afford to augment their capital by the diminution of one of the most conspicuous resources of Washington to rank and precedence among the foremost national capitals of the world.

Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate bill No. 2916, to define the routes of steam-railroads in the District of Columbia and for other purposes, and all amendments thereto, together with the substitute proposed, and Senate bill No. 2615, to authorize the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to acquire and use real estate for railway purposes in the District of Columbia, with all amendments proposed thereto, be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with instructions to report a bill:

First. Appropriating one street only to tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in the northeastern part of the city, and authorizing a tunnel under Capitol Hill to a point on the north side of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad tracks.

Second. Providing equal sites for stations of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company south of the intersection of Maryland and Virginia avenues.

Third. Providing equal privileges to acquire real estate adjoining their lines for their railway use and accommodation.

Fourth. Providing for the removal of tracks and sheds on Sixth street, and for the payment to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company for the depot and bridge on Sixth street.

Fifth. For placing all railroad tracks as far as possible below the surface of any streets and avenues.

Sixth. Providing for the payment to abutting lot-owners or occupants for any and all damages that they may sustain by reason of the construction, maintenance, and operation of the said railroad or any tracks thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont desire immediate action upon the resolution?

Mr. MORRILL. No, let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table, and be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On Thursday last the Senate ordered that the consideration of the resolutions of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the fisheries treaty should be resumed at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-day, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] being entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I will say that it is necessary in order to consider the treaty that we should go into open executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. MORGAN. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion will be necessary to proceed to the consideration of the treaty in open executive session.

Mr. HOAR. It was my purpose to make that motion, but the Senator from Alabama anticipated me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion not being debatable, the Senator from Maine can proceed only by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. I am compelled by the situation of the river and harbor bill to ask further indulgence on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts, and that he will permit us to proceed with that bill this morning, as it is in the Senate and all the amendments have been concurred in but two or three.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the order for the consideration of the resolutions of the Senator from Alabama and the fisheries treaty made on Thursday last may be informally laid aside to enable the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the river and harbor bill was fully discussed last week and reported to the Senate, and all the amendments concurred in except three, which have been fully discussed, but which are of an important character, and on which a yea-and-nay vote was desired. If we can have an understanding that we shall come to a vote on those amendments, I shall be very glad to agree to the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The number of amendments reserved for separate action was five. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask for any understanding?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have an understanding that the amendments be voted upon without debate.

Mr. TELLER. They can not be acted on without some discussion. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] reserved the right to call for a separate vote on the Hennepin Canal and the Illinois River amendments, and they will certainly lead to some discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Colorado to object to any agreement or understanding——

Mr. TELLER. I shall have to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the vote shall be taken on the reserved amendments——

Mr. TELLER. Without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Senate without debate. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] asks unanimous consent that the order of Thursday last may be informally suspended so that the consideration of the river and harbor bill may be resumed. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I do not think that a vote ought to be taken upon the Illinois and Hennepin Canal propositions in the Senate without a further presentation of the facts in the case. I do not want to delay the Senator from Maine, who wishes to go away, I understand, but neither of the Senators who had this matter in charge is here. When it came up in the Senate I was illy prepared to present the matter; the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is interested in it, was engaged in the Committee on Appropriations; and it does not seem to me, if the Senator from Missouri insists on calling for a vote in the Senate, that it ought to be allowed to pass without some further attention. If the Senator will withdraw his call and let it stand on the vote that we gave as in Committee of the Whole, I am satisfied then to let the matter go.

Mr. VEST. I am anxious to take up the river and harbor bill and dispose of it, and I shall not insist upon a vote in the Senate. I will let the vote stand and risk the conference committee on it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the conference will not regard the proposition as having been passed without a judgment of the Senate on the question.

Mr. VEST. Oh, well, if you are going to have a debate, let us go into it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want a debate. I am ready for a debate, however.

Mr. VEST. Well, I am. I am ready, too, to leave it to the conference; but if the Senator is not we shall go into a debate, that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his demand for a separate vote on the Hennepin Canal amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Then I suppose there will be no objection to having a vote on the other amendments without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the order of Thursday last may be informally laid aside and that the consideration of the river and harbor bill may be resumed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 29th ultimo, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 901) for the relief of Sophia W. Wright;

An act (S. 1241) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses;

An act (S. 2882) to pay Aaron Friedheim the rebate due him under the act of March 3, A. D. 1883; and

An act (S. 2930) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hook's Ferry, Red River County, Texas.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, reserved for a separate vote, was, in section 1, page 6, line 128, after the words "New York," to strike out "continuing" and insert "to complete;" and in line 129, after the word "improvement," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "ninety-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Buttermilk Channel, New York: To complete improvement, $95,000.

Mr. EVARTS. I hope the Senate will refuse to concur in this amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I will make a suggestion. Since the committee reported that amendment a report from the engineer has been presented to me, one more recent than we had, which shows that on account of the time consumed in this improvement it will take more than the $95,000 they reported would have completed the work six months ago. They now report that it will take at least $110,000 to complete it. Therefore the words "to complete" would be improper. I ask unanimous consent that the vote adopting this amendment may be reconsidered, and that the amendment may be non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be non-concurred in in the Senate. It is non-concurred in. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 49, line 1180, after the word "harbor," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the clause extending to line 1188.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the committee was rejected by the Senate. The Chair understood the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to desire to have some action taken in the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I do. I have a letter that I desire the chairman to read.

Mr. HOAR. If an amendment proposed by a committee is rejected, whether by recommendation of the committee who reported the bill or in any other way, in the Committee of the Whole, there is nothing before the Senate on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky gave notice that at that point he desired to move an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. That requires a new motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire to submit an amendment in the Senate?

Mr. BECK. I have one suggestion to make. I have a letter here, and if the chairman does not think after reading the communication that that clause ought to go in I will consent that it may be stricken out in the conference. It is a matter merely in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FRYE. It does not increase or decrease the amount appropriated. I shall not object to allowing the amendment of the committee to be agreed to, with the understanding that in the committee of conference it will be rejected if the committee is not satisfied from the letter given to me that the amendment ought to be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves to amend the bill by inserting what will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1179, after the word "harbor," insert:

And $30,000 of said sum of $380,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War in repairing the dam at the head of Cumberland Island, and building a dam from the head of Dog Island to the Illinois shore; and $30,000 of said sum of $380,000 may be expended in protecting the harbor at Cairo, Ill., in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The next reserved amendment was, in section 1, line 1138, to strike out the word "continuing" and insert:

For the purchase of the improvements known as the Green and Barren River improvements, $135,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a full and absolute conveyance of said improvements, together with rights of way, easements, piers, docks, and appurtenances of every nature belonging to or connected with said improvements, by the owner or owners thereof, and the Attorney-General of the United States shall have certified to the Secretary of War that the title is perfect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment having been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and the amendment having been reserved by the chairman of the Committee, the question recurs upon concurring in the same in the Senate. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. FRYE. I think that there ought to be a yea-and-nay vote on concurring in the amendment, because there is another amendment pending, known as the Portage Lake improvement, which certainly ought to go into the bill if this one does. I shall feel, so far as I am concerned, instructed by the vote of the Senate on this amendment as to the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that upon concurring in this amendment the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Senator from Maine will not insist on the yeas and nays. Let this stand as it is now carried, and should the other proposition be voted on and rejected, I shall move to reconsider the vote by which this amendment was concurred in. I agree entirely with the Senator from Maine that these two things stand in precisely the same category. They are both important; they both impose heavy taxes now on commerce, which everywhere else in the country is free. I fully agree with him that they ought to go together, but I think the course I suggest will enable us to apply the sense of the Senate as it may be indicated in the one instance alike to the other.

Mr. TELLER. Both ought to go in?

Mr. KENNA. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be regarded as concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. VEST. If both these appropriations are right, then both ought to go on the bill. If one is right and the other is wrong, the one that is right ought to go on the bill and the other ought to be rejected. There is no sort of logical or geographical connection between them—none whatever. I do not care about discussing either one of them, but I certainly dissent from the proposition of the gentleman from West Virginia. Let the chairman of the committee explain these appropriations and then let the Senate vote upon them by a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. KENNA. I quite agree with the Senator from Missouri that there is no geographical connection between these two improvements. There is, however, in the relationship which they bear to commerce precisely the same connection, and I trust the Senate will adopt them both.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 47, line 1138, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the word "continuing" and inserted:

For the purchase of the improvements known as the Green and Barren River improvements, $135,000——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that on the question of concurring in this amendment the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I second the demand.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. GEORGE. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will again report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 47, line 1138, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the word "continuing" and inserted:

For the purchase of the improvements known as the Green and Barren River improvements, $135,000, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment was inserted as in Committee of the Whole. It was reserved for a separate vote, and the question now recurs on concurring in the Senate in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. It is the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. TELLER. It is a motion to amend the bill by inserting this appropriation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was amended as in Committee of the Whole upon the motion of the Senator from Kentucky by inserting the language that has been read at the desk. The question recurs in the Senate upon concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary will call the roll on concurring in the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). On this and all other questions I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] on party questions. As I do not understand that there is any partisanship in this question, I vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER.] I am not aware how he would vote on this question. I suppose his colleague [Mr. KENNA] can inform me.

Mr. KENNA. I have no positive knowledge on the subject, but I think my colleague would vote "yea." I will take the responsibility of relieving the Senator from Pennsylvania of his pair if he desires to vote.

Mr. QUAY. Then I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] upon party questions, but not considering this to be a political question, I vote "yea."

Mr. HISCOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that a previous pair had been announced with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. Does the Senator desire to have his vote recorded?

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Allison,	Evarts,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Bate,	George,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Beck,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Blair,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Teller,
Brown,	Hawley,	Payne,	Turpie,
Call,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa.
Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,

NAYS—6.

Davis,	Edmunds,	Reagan,	Vest.
Dolph,	Frye,

ABSENT—35.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Riddleberger,
Berry,	Cullom,	Ingalls,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hale,	Platt,

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 1600—

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the vote is taken on the next reserved amendment I wish to reserve, if I am not too late, and if I am too late I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote on the Hennepin Canal amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will consider the right of the Senator to ask for a separate vote as reserved.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was absent on duty of the Senate in a conference committee when the reservations were made.

Mr. TELLER. If that is done I shall then regard it as the right of the friends of the canal to discuss the proposition further, notwithstanding the inconvenience it may cause to the Senator from Massachusetts. It was agreed in the absence of the Senator from Ohio that the call for a separate vote on concurring in the amendment should be withdrawn and that it might go to a vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no desire to discuss it. I simply desire to record my vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The next reserved amendment was stated to be, in section 1, after line 1600, to insert:

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884, creating the Missouri River Commission, defining its powers and duties, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in in the Senate?

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope this amendment will not be concurred in. I think the Committee on Commerce is not tenacious as to the adoption of the amendment. As I stated Saturday, this subject is under consideration by the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, and until we shall have an opportunity to complete that investigation and make our report I do not think that so radical a change as this ought to be made.

Mr. VEST. I suppose I am responsible for the amendment. I am not at all exigent about the matter. If the Senators upon the Upper Missouri River who have some steam-boats left want to try this commission until another river and harbor bill is prepared, I have no disposition to detain the Senate. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska, however, if this amendment repealing the law creating the commission be not agreed to, then he will have to amend the text of the amendment of the committee by inserting, after the words "Secretary of War," in line 1568, the words "in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Missouri River Commission."

Mr. FRYE. That is right. That ought to be done.

Mr. VEST. When it was proposed to repeal the act creating the Missouri River Commission, as a matter of course those words were taken out of the bill as it came from the House; but they will have to be put back if the commission is retained.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the amendment is not concurred in that will have to be done.

Mr. VEST. If the amendment repealing the act that creates the commission be not agreed to, that is, if the action of the Commerce Committee is overruled as to that amendment repealing the act approved July 5, 1884, it will be necessary then to add at the end of line 1568, "in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Missouri River Commission."

Mr. ALLISON. "Except as herein modified." It may be possible that some of the subsequent provisions may modify their plan. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to add "except as herein modified."

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will treat the two propositions as one question, if there be no objection, and the amendment proposed in line 1568 will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to line 1568 the words:

In accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Missouri River Commission.

Mr. ALLISON. "Except as herein modified." That may not be necessary, but I think it would be safer to insert those words.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to line 1568 the following words:

In accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Missouri River Commission, except as herein modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, and the amendment on page 66, between line 1601 and line 1607, inclusive, made as in Committee of the Whole, will be non-concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not understand that these questions are being put to a vote. I understood that the clerks were getting the motion ready to be stated. I should like to have it understood that I do not mean the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole to be voted down without having something to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that it was an agreement or understanding which had been reached on the subject.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all; I was only waiting to have the question stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the announcement of the agreement to the amendment to line 1568 will be reconsidered, and the question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, inserting the clause from line 1601 to line 1607, inclusive.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know what the understanding may have been among those who are potential in this body, but I can not allow the amendment to be non-concurred in without entering my protest against it.

For a number of years the Missouri River has been under the control of this commission, and I do not think there has ever been any time in the history of that river when it has been so badly taken care of for the amount that has been appropriated as it has been during the administration of that commission.

But aside from that, the theory upon which the commission proceeds, the theory upon which the appropriations were made measurably for the use of that commission, is destructive of private interests along the banks of that river. I was not present the other day, but I read in the RECORD a statement coming, I believe, from the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the effect that there was no navigation practically on the river, and that is true.

Mr. VEST. On the lower part.

Mr. PLUMB. On the lower part of it, and that is the part on which this money is to be expended, and the part in which I have deep concern, as the people of Kansas have.

To improve the Missouri River from Omaha to St. Louis so as to answer the reasonable purposes of navigation would probably cost $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. I believe the commission have estimated $10,000,000, and we all know that the estimates are within rather than without the requirements of the situation. That amount of money will never be appropriated; that is, it will not be for many years to come, at all events not in time to do any good. In the mean time we are casting into that turbid stream half a million dollars a year, over a million this year, and with no perceptible effect upon any interest which can be said to relate to that stream. Meanwhile the stream is cutting away the banks at important places. It is destroying every year hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property located upon its banks, and that is going on notwithstanding Congress has done everything except to order the Commission to do something to prevent it.

Congress gave them an admonition in the river and harbor bill that the money should be, or at least might be expended, if it was not an exact direction that it should be expended—I do not know but that it said that so much as they deemed necessary should be expended at certain specified points. The result was that they expended none. At St. Joseph, at Atchison, and at Leavenworth great interests are in peril, large property interests, interests of individuals, interests of railroad companies, and interests of bridge companies, and interests of private persons, and unless something is done at once the destruction there will be irremediable, and we might just as well not have it done at all unless it is done very soon.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I ask him if that is not due to the fact, as stated by the Senator from Missouri on Saturday, that the commission had not been supported by proper appropriations by Congress; that it had made its recommendations, and that Congress uniformly had refused to grant its requests? I do not propose to indorse the personnel of the commission; I do not know anything about it. My desire is simply to keep it until something better can be secured.

Mr. PLUMB. The commission adopted a theory that they would begin at the mouth of the river and work up with their improvements. That is all right as a theory; but while they were working it out under any appropriation Congress could be induced to give the upper portion of the river was being destroyed—that is, the properties of which I have spoken were being destroyed.

Now, it is absolutely improbable, it is totally out of the anticipation of anybody, that Congress is going to appropriate the money to improve that river according to the plan of the commission. It only needs to be said that it will take ten or fifteen million dollars to improve the river to have it understood at once that the money is not going to be given within any reasonable period of time. A million dollars a year can not be expended on that river, according to the theory of the commission, so as to do it any good.

While the improvement of the lower river is going on, where there is no navigation and where there is to be no navigation, the river, as I said, is destroying the estates of individual citizens and corporations a few miles above. I understood that the Committee on Commerce had acceded to this proposition, that as long as the present scale of appropriations was to be indulged in the money was to be used in places where it could protect the property that has been located on the banks of the river, at the places named in this part of the bill, and that that was to be the main effort and the main result to be reached through these appropriations, believing that to be, as of course it would be to a certain extent, an improvement of the general navigation of the river and a part of some general system which might hereafter be carried out. That is to say, to improve the banks of the river at Atchison and other points, to prevent the encroachment of the river on the shore, to prevent the destruction of the packing-houses and of the railroad bridges and railroad tracks and the dwellings and farms which are on the river, would of itself tend to confine the channel of the river, and would to that extent improve the navigation at those points. Of course it might be said to be an infinitesimal part of the general system of improvement of the entire river, but at all events it would do some good, it would prevent property from being destroyed, and it would be a recognition of the obligation of the Government to keep its own highway from working damage to its own citizens.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will permit me to suggest that if we are to appropriate for local improvements $25,000 here and $50,000 there why not let the money be spent under the general discretion of the commission if it will tend to the improvement of the navigation of the river?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think that would do, because we had in the last river and harbor bill that very provision.

Mr. VEST. No; that was a different provision. That was that they might expend. Now we say that they shall expend.

Mr. PLUMB. But it is to be done under plans to be prepared by them.

Mr. VEST. I prepared a clause following that precedent, but Senators from the Upper Missouri insisted on a specification of places where money should be expended. The whole question is, whether it shall be spent by the Engineer Bureau or whether it shall be spent on the plans of the commission. The discussion here amounts to very little, because the commission is composed of three engineer officers and two civilians, and if it is put back under the supervision of the Engineer Bureau the thing will still be exactly where it is to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. It might or it might not be, because it is now in the hands of a commission in which the engineers constitute a majority. I think the Senator is mistaken as to the number; I think there are two engineers and one civilian.

Mr. VEST. No; three engineers and two civilians, one from Nebraska and one from Missouri.

Mr. PLUMB. But the fact remains that they are constituted as a separate board, and they are not under the responsibility that the Secretary of War would be if he were commanded to do this thing, and should be at liberty to use his instrumentalities to work it out. As it is now it is to be in accordance with the plans of the commission——

Mr. VEST. Oh, no.

Mr. PLUMB. If he is not to accept their plans of what good are they?

Mr. VEST. That is what I suggested to the Senate the other day.

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly that is a wrong position. The board is subordinate in all its work to the Secretary of War and reports to him, and its plans have to be approved by the Secretary of War before a dollar can be expended. The whole matter is with the Secretary of War, except that he has this special agency to investigate and report.

Mr. PLUMB. According to this provision the improvement is to be made on their plans, and I venture the prediction that if that provision is retained there will never be any improvement of the river at these points, because the commission is organized to do the other thing. It is organized against expenditures of that kind. There was never a commission that was so determined not to carry out the will of Congress. I do not care whether you speak of them as a totality or of the individual composition; that spirit has appeared to permeate the action of the commission from the beginning. The work it did at Kansas City subjected the commission to great imputations respecting its reliability and ability to make contracts to serve the public interests. Things occurred there which, if they had been carried on by anybody else but Army officers, would have led to but one general conclusion, and that was that the board was corrupt.

But I do not care to go into that feature of the case. I only say that hereafter as heretofore there will be no improvement of these specific points on the river so long as the commission are left to draw the plans and the Secretary of War is to carry out the plans they draw. For that reason I am in favor of abolishing the commission.

I repeat that under this course of proceeding the Missouri River will not be improved in such a way as to become navigable and will not be navigable during the lifetime of any person now living. Therefore, whatever money we put upon it we ought to expend it in such a way as to prevent the destruction of property primarily, of course, expending it as far as possible with a view to its being a part of the general system which in time may be adopted for the river, if any system ever is adopted which Congress is willing to vote the money to carry out in a comprehensive and practical way.

As it is now it is simply a question whether we shall expend this money in such a way as to do no good, absolutely bringing no return whatever to anybody in the United States, and meanwhile allow the river to go on sweeping away the accumulations of individuals along its banks. That is the question which is to be met, as I think, by this amendment. If anybody wants a pension from the Government of the United States or anybody wants a salary, for heaven's sake put it somewhere else, put him under the Civil Service Bureau, but do not ask us to put him in a position where by his obstinacy, by his lack of judgment or knowledge, or his corrupt determination not to do the thing which Congress has directed to be done, he obstructs beneficial action.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not care to have what I said quoted incorrectly, and I do not assent to the remarks of the Senator from Kansas. I do not know anything about the contracts made by the commission at Kansas City. I know but one member of the commission—Mr. Broadhead, of Kansas City, who is as reputable a man as exists on the face of the earth. There is no question in regard to that.

My idea in proposing to abolish this commission was simply that it had become unnecessary, because Congress paid not the slightest attention to any recommendation it made. I drew the amendment to the river and harbor bill of 1884 creating the commission. They recommended that the Missouri River be improved by reaches upon a plan similar to that adopted on the Mississippi, but immediately there was antagonism to that plan in favor of what are called local improvements—that is to say, the encroachment of the river on the respective banks should be prevented at different localities to preserve railroad corporation property and private property.

The Mississippi River Commission has reported over and over again, and so has the Missouri River Commission—and the whole Engineer Bureau is solid on the proposition—that these appropriations for local improvements are antagonistic to a general system of improvements for a stream and its navigability, and that antagonism has existed in regard to both great rivers from the beginning and will continue. I believe myself that the Missouri River Commission was right. I believe the only way we can make these streams navigable to the largest and fullest extent is by systematic improvements, and that sporadic and local improvements and appropriations are simply throwing money away. We have brought on us here from year to year in the river and harbor bill appropriations for $50,000 at one point, $75,000 at another, and so on, and each year the improvement done the year before is washed away.

Mr. PLUMB. Was not that because enough was not appropriated?

Mr. VEST. That may be so, but still it was all Congress would give. The commission have estimated a million dollars. Congress say, "We will not give you a million dollars, but we will give you half a million dollars to be expended at certain points. We impeach either your capacity or your honesty, and we will take the matter into our own hands." When I found, by long experience on the Commerce Committee in the Senate, that it was perfectly useless to resist any such item in regard to the provisions of the bill, I yielded reluctantly and drew the amendment abolishing the commission, because I believed Congress would not accept the judgment of the commission in view of this local antagonism or rather this desire for improvement at localities, and therefore I drew the amendment which Senators on the upper river object to.

I may be wrong. I had no real intention to destroy the commission, but I know the result. I know it just as well now as if the bill had passed. The result will be that all their recommendations for the next year will be ignored, and every locality will come in and demand a specific appropriation and one Senator will ask another Senator to help him. "Help me, Cassius, or I sink. Liberty lies bleeding in the streets if I do not get this for my town." The other says, "I will do it if you help me," and so by agreement——

A SENATOR. Log-rolling.

Mr. VEST. Yes, log-rolling, and no Commerce Committee can resist such things for a minute.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator if his criticism of the commission is against the plan which has been attempted to be forced upon it in place of its own plan, and that the money appropriated shall be expended at local points instead of carrying out its general plan, which involves an improvement of the whole river with the idea of securing permanent navigation.

Mr. VEST. I believe the river ought to be improved according to the plan of the commission, and systematically, but I agree with the Senator from Kansas that it will not be done in our generation. Congress is not going to appropriate $10,000,000 for the Missouri River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator from Missouri explain to the Senate on what principle it is that the United States is under any obligation, constitutional, legal, legislative, or moral, to protect the banks of this river for the benefit of private property, as stated by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. VEST. None at all. But I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont that if he will look at the reports of the Engineer Bureau he will see that they always find that cheap local improvements help the general navigation of the river. That is the way the money is spent. No Senator will get up here and say "I want $50,000 to save a railroad bridge."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That, in substance, has been said.

Mr. VEST. "Or $75,000 to save a town in my State."

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question? If the flood overflows the bank from the body of the stream, is it not of course improving the navigation of the stream to confine the river to its channel? Is it not true in the cases which have been specified in reports from the Committee on Commerce where the banks have been protected that navigation has been kept secure?

Mr. VEST. That is part of the argument made.

Mr. HOAR. I want to know if it is not the fact?

Mr. VEST. I suppose it is. They say it is true. I have heard the same argument made on the Mississippi River.

Mr. HOAR. The river and harbor bill is reported to the Senate year after year by men of personal honor, men of personal character, men who have usually no large interests of their constituencies involved, like my honorable friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and I have got sick, for one, of hearing Senators get up here and try to blacken the character of their own associates in public life by charging that it is a bill made up in considerable part through log-rolling and cheating. I have not any interest in it as a Massachusetts citizen; but I examined one of the most attacked and vilified river and harbor bills that ever was before the public, and went over it item by item with the reports of the engineers and such other facts as I could get. I took the editors of some newspapers and presented the bill to them with the reports. One gentleman of very high standing and distinction went over the items. Another newspaper which had joined in this talk, which gets its indorsement, I am ashamed to say, from gentlemen who sit in seats here, employed one of the ablest men on its editorial staff to answer a letter which I wrote to my constituents on the subject; got him all the documents, intending to make an attack upon my record, and the editor reported to his principal that "Mr. HOAR was entirely right," and he would not write the article.

I say it is a vile slander upon the trusted representatives of the American people to declare that these river and harbor bills to any considerable extent, to any appreciable extent, to an extent amounting to 5 per cent., contain provisions which are not thoroughly defensible upon their face as demanded by the interests of international or interstate commerce, and I never have heard any of the gentlemen who indulge in this vilification get up and point to items on which they could put their fingers.

Mr. President, if the bill which is before the Senate at this moment contained items of that sort in any considerable number, my honorable friend from Maine, with a character as unsullied as any man who walks this continent, is either unfit for his place in the Senate by reason of want of capacity or by reason of the want of integrity. There is no alternative; and when Senators make these charges they ought to be able to substantiate them against their associates.

Mr. VEST. I do not know that I have given any occasion for this onslaught on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts. I made no such charges.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand my friend from Missouri to do so.

Mr. VEST. I take the full responsibility of saying that our legislation in regard to rivers and harbors is not free from the criticism that has been made upon it. Not to say log-rolling, agreements, combinations made; that is to say one Senator goes to another and says "You stand by my amendment and I will stand by your amendment."

I undertake to say this much for the Committee on Commerce, on which I have served for ten years, that we have honestly tried to do our duty. We have put appropriations in here against our own judgment in many instances, certainly against my judgment, because we have been overwhelmed by personal solicitation and the effect of personal solicitation; and I say from my seat that of all the duties that I perform here as a Senator the most disagreeable are those connected with the river and harbor bill. I have made some, I will not say enemies—but I have drawn more criticism from friends, more antagonism by doing my duty on this committee than by the performance of all my other Senatorial duties. It seems to be impossible for Senators to eliminate from the duty they owe to the United States Government the local interests of the people who sent them here. It is inseparable from humanity that this bill should be what it is.

For myself, I have ceased to hope that it will ever become any better. If some Senator could invent a system by which the rivers and harbors of the country could be improved without these general appropriation bills; if some rule, some system could be adopted, he would be the greatest benefactor ever known in the history of this country. That is all I have to say about it.

Now, Mr. President, in regard to this commission, I shall only add a single word. If Senators on the upper part of the Missouri River desire to try this commission for another year, I have not any objection, but our experience will be the next year exactly what it is now; the recommendations of the commission will be ignored, and the criticisms, such as we have heard from the Senator from Kansas to-day, will be continued.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I shall sustain the amendment in the Senate, not because I have thoroughly investigated the subject, but because of the arguments which we have heard.

I understand from what was said by the Senator from Kansas that he believes a large portion of this money ought to be spent in local improvements in the preservation of town fronts, bridges, railroad tracks, and other private property, and he objects that the Army part of the commission want to improve the navigation of the river while the civilian part of it want to improve private property; and he argues, therefore, that if the private property is to be improved we must dispense with the commission, abandon the theory of opening the Missouri River to navigation, and devote the public money to private benefaction.

Now, sir, if that is the policy, it seems to me that we have gone outside of the authority given to Congress to appropriate money for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Texas say that I stated any such thing?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; I referred to the Senator from Kansas; but I did understand the argument of the Senator from Missouri to go partially to the same extent.

Mr. PLUMB. I disavow any such statement.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know how the Senators understood me. I think I know what I said. Undoubtedly the Senator from Kansas did appeal to us on the ground that we should never get this private property improved for the preservation of bridges, and railroad tracks, and private property that was drifting down.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator said that this commission divided, the Army officers in favor of improving the navigation and the civilians in favor of improving private property.

Mr. REAGAN. That was what I said I had understood the Senator from Kansas to state.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will state that on his own authority it may be all right, but if he states it on my authority he is incorrect, because I do not know anything of that kind to exist.

Mr. REAGAN. I stated what the Senator from Kansas said, but from the drift of the argument of those Senators it was fairly inferable that the trouble was that the Army part of the commission was for the improvement of the navigation of the Missouri River, and the civilian part for the improvement of private property.

Mr. PADDOCK. The criticism of the Senator from Kansas upon the commission is that it adheres persistently to the plan of general improvement rather than the plan of the improvement of local points and places, and the fact is beyond any question that the majority of the commission has insisted upon adhering to such plan of general improvement from the beginning to the end. Therefore the conclusion of the Senator from Texas, if I understand him, is incorrect, that on account of this division in the commission to which allusion has been made there has resulted this state of things, of which he complains that there must necessarily be expenditures for local points without reference to improving navigation, or that nothing at all can be done. While there may have been differences in the commission, the plan, whether right or wrong, has been a consistent one.

Mr. REAGAN. I feel responsible for my own statement, and Senators who heard it will know whether I have correctly stated the fact or not. I have no qualification to make.

Mr. President, in the Forty-fourth Congress the first item in a river and harbor bill went for a purely local improvement—$80,000. At the time I protested against it as a system that would ultimately break down the river and harbor bill; but the popularity of the member proposing it secured its adoption. We have gone on increasing the number of local projects for the expenditure of public money from that time up to the present until a large number of such works have been provided for. The present bill does not contain the catalogue we have usually had in such bills of late years. It does contain something of a catalogue, however, but it varies the purpose to bring it within the possible bounds of legality. It provides for the appropriation of $1,100,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River, and I desire to say right here that while it may be possible to improve the navigation of the Missouri River, it is a very difficult problem. It is a bad stream. Its channel is shifting. It will be difficult to improve its navigation permanently, and it never can be done short of a very large appropriation.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator if it is any different from the Mississippi River itself.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; it is very materially different from the Mississippi, unless you speak of the Upper Mississippi.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is exactly the same character of stream as the Mississippi below the mouth of the Missouri. Really it should have been the Missouri all the way down, for the characteristics from the headwaters of the Missouri to the mouth of the Mississippi are the same.

Mr. REAGAN. It took many years to investigate that subject, but I do not understand it as the Senator from Nebraska does. I only mean to say that it will be very difficult to improve the navigation of the Missouri River, and it never can be done without very great expense. I was, however, speaking of the number of local points that we are asked to appropriate money for, to protect town fronts, to protect railroad bridges, to protect private property. There is no one familiar with the river and harbor bills passed but knows that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been, under one pretense or another, employed to protect and preserve private property. It is a wrong, it is an injustice to the public, and it is endangering our great system of the improvement of the internal navigation of the country.

As I was saying, this bill appropriates $1,100,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River, and then it goes on to say:

> Out of the above sum the following amounts shall be applied to the purposes hereinafter specified, namely: One hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on that portion of the Missouri River lying between the cities of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., and a point 5 miles above the bridge of the Omaha and Council Bluffs Bridge Company, by the course of said river; that the sum of $100,000 or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on said river at Sioux City, Iowa, and in Nebraska, opposite said city; that the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on said river at or near Plattsmouth, Nebr.; that the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on said river at or near Rulo, Nebr.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on said river at or near Nebraska City, Nebr.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Kansas City, Mo.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near St. Joseph, Mo.; that the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Arrow Rock, Mo.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Leavenworth, Kans.; that the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Atchison, Kans.

It will be seen that instead of appropriating $1,100,000 for the improvement of the navigation of the Missouri River and leaving it to the commission to expend that money where it should be expended to the best advantage for the improvement of the navigation of the river, Congress undertakes to distribute it out and require the commission in the improvement of the navigation of the river to expend much of the money on mere local works for the protection and preservation of private property.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. At every one of the points named the improvement will constitute a part of the plan of the Missouri River Commission for the general improvement of the river.

Mr. REAGAN. It may be that it may have some effect of that kind. I do not know what information was before the committee in acting on this bill, but I do know that the committees who investigated this subject before had the impression that the object of making these local appropriations was the protection and preservation of private property. I have no doubt that the navigation of the river may perhaps receive some incidental benefit from it, but if the purpose had been to improve the navigation of the Missouri River, after appointing a commission of three United States Army engineers and two civilians, Congress would have allowed them the power to use the appropriation where it could be used to the best advantage for improving the navigation of the river.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PADDOCK. There is not an appropriation that the Senator criticises or speaks of that is not based on estimates made by this very commission in and for each and every case that has received the attention of the Committee of Commerce.

Mr. REAGAN. I am aware that such estimates are asked from the engineers, but they are not the estimates which are adopted or originated by the judgment of the engineers; they are those presented on application and solicitation for local improvements.

Mr. PADDOCK. They are part and parcel of their general plan.

Mr. REAGAN. Of course the Senator has his notions about that. I have had considerable experience with these bills and considerable information about them, and I only say that my judgment is that this river ought to be improved; and if we should deal rightly with this clause of the bill, we would strike out all after the appropriation of $1,100,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River, and leave the commission to improve the navigation, and not undertake to compel them to expend money on local points and threaten them with dismissal from the service if they attempted to improve the river and refused to expend this money in the improvement of local points.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the river and harbor bill has now progressed by the indulgence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is getting very anxious to have the floor, and if this debate continues any longer the river and harbor bill will be obliged to go over for a fortnight.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me to say about a dozen words, I think we shall soon get through.

In answer to what my friend the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] said about the interest some might have in the personnel of the commission, I desire to say for myself that I have no interest whatever in any person who is upon this commission. In fact, there is one gentleman who is a member of the commission who is personally somewhat offensive to me. There is another person upon the commission that I did not think of as being upon it until a few days ago. I mean the member spoken of from Nebraska. I have no interest whatever in him as a member of the commission.

The only consideration that has influenced me in opposing the amendment is this: There is a standing committee of the Senate which has special charge of the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, of which I have the honor to be chairman. Under an instruction of the Senate given a short time ago through a resolution adopted to that end, this committee—the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries—was directed to inquire into and examine this whole subject of commission work. It has been prosecuting that inquiry with great diligence, particularly in respect to the work of the Mississippi River Commission, but generally with respect to both. We are in the midst of that investigation at the present time. It will be a thorough and exhaustive investigation of the whole subject.

The president of the Mississippi River Commission has been before the committee and given his testimony. The officer under him, having the principal charge of the work between St. Louis and the Gulf for ten years, has also been before the committee and made a most elaborate and a most intelligent statement. Other gentlemen connected with the steam-boat business upon the Mississippi River and in other branches of business upon the river, who are specially interested in its navigation, have also testified before the committee, having a contrary view, with respect to the commission work, from those who testified on its behalf.

The general subject of the Missouri River work has also come up and the committee desire to investigate that further, the object being to secure all the knowledge that is possible to be obtained by the committee on the whole subject, and to be able to advise the Senate as to what should be done at as early a date as possible in the future with respect to this whole matter. And, sir, I think I may say that hardly any subject of legislation can come before the Senate of greater importance than that of improving the navigation of these two great streams. The Missouri River itself is navigable 3,000 miles above its mouth, and of course everybody knows about the Mississippi River. Everybody knows that it is one of the greatest water ways on this continent. They are both great rivers. They drain an enormous district of country.

The great corn belt, the immense wheat-growing region of the Northwest, is drained entirely by these rivers. Were they sufficiently improved to admit of safe and easy transportation of successful commerce upon them, it would be, if nothing more, a menace to, or perhaps I should say a restraint upon the railroads, and in that respect an important competitive factor for lower rates of transportation for the products of that vast region to the seaboard, and to the consumers of the whole country.

I do not know about this commission; I do not know whether it is the best thing or not; I am not prepared to indorse it; I am not prepared to condemn it. I am not prepared to indorse the Mississippi River Commission. I do not know but that this committee may recommend the abolishment of both commissions; it may recommend the consolidation of both of them into one; or it may recommend some other agency under the Secretary of War to take charge of this whole work; but I think it is due, in fact only decent treatment of this committee, which has been charged with the responsibility of investigating the subject by the Senate, that it should be left alone, that there should be no radical change in respect to these instrumentalities and agencies until it shall have concluded its labor which the Senate instructed it to perform, and shall have made its report to the Senate.

It may be truly said of the committee that it has not in time past given any particular attention to the subject which it has had in charge. But this subject belongs to it to deal with primarily and the Senate should sustain it. It is irregular and in bad form for the Committee on Commerce to assume exclusive charge of this subject, considering that there is a committee charged specially by the Senate with the duty and the responsibility of looking after this very matter.

Mr. FRYE. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think that the United States are not the proprietors of the Missouri River or the Mississippi River as you or I may be of a horse or a locomotive or something else that is going to injure another man's property by the way we use our own. The people of the United States have the right of navigating those streams, and Congress, under its power to regulate commerce and navigation, has the power to aid that navigation; and so far as any money can be spent justly to aid that navigation I am for it, but under color of aiding navigation I do not believe in taking money from the Treasury of the United States and using it for the benefit of private owners of property along the banks of these streams or any other.

My honorable friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who has fallen in love with all river and harbor bills, that continue to be good, at least, says that if you do not protect the bank the sand and the silt will fall in.

The Senator says that he did not say so. I will put it, then, in another way, if my friend will allow me, so that it will be satisfactory to him. I will say that I understand my honorable friend to have said in substance that the falling in of the bank would naturally and necessarily put earth into the body of the river, and that if the earth went into the body of the river that might impede navigation, if it stopped in the proper place to impede navigation. I will state it with the utmost circumspection.

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend will allow me to correct him. I asked the Senator from Missouri, in reference to the case of which he was speaking, where the banks were falling in, whether or not the raising of the banks tended to improve the navigation, and then whether in that case appropriations were or were not proper?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I take it that the RECORD will show to-morrow what we all say, because my friend from Massachusetts will not change what the RECORD shows him to have said.

This is not the first time this has happened; for years and years there has been an effort from somebody and from somewhere to persuade the Committee on Commerce and the Senate that the public interest in navigation required the appropriation of sums of money that could be used, and sums were authorized to be used to protect the banks of these streams and to protect them chiefly and practically, not at the places where swamps and worthless lands and mere wild forests existed, where the undermining was going on, perhaps, in many places faster than anywhere else—none of these places are mentioned—but where there is a railroad bridge or a town or a wharf or some improved private property the owner of which finds the water cutting into the shore that is his, and where no United States engineer officer has a lawful right to set foot upon it without his consent, and to have that protected for the benefit of his warehouses or his railroad bridge at the expense of the United States, not because the water is not 20 feet deep for a mile in front of him up and down, or 40 feet, it may be, for the deeper it is the more easy it is for the current to cut away the bank and to tumble in the fine silt that composes these shores; and what is left of it that does not get over the shores goes to the mouth of the Mississippi, where Captain Eads is washing it out into the almost bottomless Gulf of Mexico, where I think we can hope it will stay when it gets there.

So my belief is—and I have searched in the documents to find something to show that I am wrong in my belief—that in most of the places which are named the navigation of the river is good now; that is to say, the water is deep enough for all the purposes of navigation; and that the real benefit, ninety-nine one-hundredths of the benefit to any possible interest, is the benefit to the railroad company that has got to embank around its bridge to protect its shore-line, the benefit of the wharf-owner and the warehouse-owner and the property-owner in these towns that will have to rip-rap his bank at his own expense to keep his warehouse or whatever it may be from being undermined. If that is so, as I believe it is, I think, with great respect to everybody, that it ought not to be done. I do not believe that we have the right; I admit we have the power; we can give away the people's money just as we choose, in point of law; but I do not believe we have any moral right, as responsible for the care of money that is not our own but belongs to the people, to expend it for private benefit unless we do it openly and fairly as a matter of charity, as we sometimes do. I hope everybody agrees with me. Believing as I do that this scheme of compelling the appropriation of this money, as read by the Senator from Texas, is a scheme, ninety-nine dollars of every hundred of which is to be expended for private benefit only, it ought not to be agreed to.

If the Mississippi River is such a stupendous monster that the interest of the whole nation is concerned in building a wall from its upper waters to the Gulf on either side of it to keep it from overflowing and keep it from undermining, if it were a possibility, that would be one thing. Nobody supposes that. It has not been suggested that an embankment ought to be made from the mouth or very near the mouth up to Cairo and that the United States ought to do it. That has not got force enough yet to even attract attention in this body, but—and if I am incorrect in this position I should be glad to be corrected by the documents—we are doing in detail what nobody would pretend we ought to do as a whole, and we are expending this money substantially purely for the benefit of private interests that ought to do it themselves. The same principle would apply to the shores of the ocean, over which we have exactly the same rights and in respect to which we have the same duties, as this bill shows, and it would be just as well to provide that a wall should be built in front of Long Branch, where I see that in a recent storm the shore has been washed down, and so at Coney Island, where houses had to be moved back because the navigable waters of the United States are encroaching upon the land. If they are our navigable waters and if it is our duty to keep them within bounds, why not? I do not believe in that, and therefore I can not vote for it.

Mr. PLUMB. The difference between the Senator from Vermont and myself is clear. The Government of the United States has undertaken formally to improve the Missouri River. There is no question at all that under the system it has adopted and carried on it should go to the points that have been mentioned, and finding the condition of the banks there as it is, it would do exactly what is proposed in this bill; and the only question now is whether, having determined to do these things, it shall anticipate the final completion of the work in consideration of valuable interests involved by doing it now rather than waiting ten years from now. That is all there is about it.

Believing as I do that the river ought to be improved, not because I expect to see navigation on it to a very great extent, but because, as has often been said, it can be made to a certain extent a competitor of railroads, I am willing to vote money for its improvement; but seeing, as I do, by reason partly of the result of the action of the commission, partly from the fact that Congress is not willing to act on the question in a large way by giving the money necessary to complete the improvement of the river at once, I say that we ought to reverse the order of the improvement there, and vote the money appropriated for the river in such a way as to anticipate the time when, under the ordinary system, we should come to those particular improvements and make them now. I would not think a great deal of a government which had anything to do if it should hesitate in the order of doing it because it would reverse the usual order so as to accommodate some of its own people.

On the general question, I do not know that I have ever voted for a river and harbor bill. I have not indulged in any log-rolling or any combination or any swap of any kind in regard to any item that ever appeared in any one of these bills, and I do not mean to do so. When I say that, I do not mean to say that I am a person of superior virtue, but it is simply because there is not so much navigable water in the State in which I live as to make it worth while for me to negotiate in that sort of thing. But I have always been willing to vote more money than any river and harbor bill pending in Congress contained if I could only be reasonably assured that the money would be properly spent.

In the first place, I do not believe in doing things by driblets, casting $5,000 into a stream at this point and $10,000 at another point, or $15,000 or $50,000 for the entire stream, knowing as I do that the result will be imperfect work and a destruction of a large portion of it each year. I personally know of a harbor on Lake Erie where the engineer originally estimated that he could make the harbor accessible for vessels of a certain draught of water at a cost of $100,000, where the Government has spent $175,000, and $30,000 are in this bill now for that harbor.

Mr. PADDOCK. Where is that?

Mr. PLUMB. A harbor on Lake Erie. Thirty thousand dollars are in this bill now for that improvement, and it will cost $250,000 at least—$150,000 more than was deemed necessary if the money had been properly appropriated and properly spent. One wing of a jetty will be put out one year at an expenditure of twenty or thirty thousand dollars. The storm will come and destroy a portion of it, which is incomplete of course, and then comes in the sand from the lake, and the next spring 15 or 20 or 30 per cent. of the next appropriation must be devoted to dredging that out and making the necessary repairs before new work can be commenced. Congress is at fault for that. I have objected to that method of expending the public money; and I have objected to it for another reason. I believe that instead of taking up every single object of appropriation we could find, we ought to adopt some system whereby the most important works would be taken up first and completed. For that purpose I have been willing to put in the hands of the President of the United States a lump sum at any time. I would not object to giving $50,000,000 in a year on a good showing.

It ought to go without saying that the Government has the means to meet what is needed, and I distrust, more than that, the establishment—the engineer establishment—that is to spend this money. In the first place, they are not engineers for this purpose. They are military engineers; they are not civil engineers. They can not have that practical experience which they ought to have in such matters. They spent at the harbor of Galveston, in the State of the Senator from Texas, $5,000,000, and besides that more than half a million dollars given by private contributions in that city, and what is the result? The necessary water is not there. They are military engineers. They are not engineers having by experience and education the qualifications necessary for this work. Besides, the very nature of their calling, their fixed tenure, the fact that promotion does not depend upon merit, but depends upon death, is enough in itself to check their ambition and to prevent the exercise of genius in doing the work they are supposed to be doing. They employ, of course, some civil engineers to do the work and make plans in the various localities. They do not do the work themselves, and yet they are responsible for it; and if you had put the Mississippi River improvement in the hands of the Engineer Corps of the Army alone the commerce of the Mississippi River would have been standing still to-day.

A Senator told me the other day that the only thing which gave any hope of the improvement of the harbor at Galveston under the Army management was that since the death of Eads, since he was out of the way with the proposition he had made to Congress to improve that harbor for a certain number of millions, they had in a grudging sort of way partially adopted his plan. Of course they only adopted it partially. That is the only assurance that great city has that it ever will have a harbor, because these people have reluctantly taken up the plan of Captain Eads, which they had not the ability or the genius to invent.

If we could have a system of river and harbor improvement under which some responsible authority should expend the money just as rapidly on such works as should be selected for the purpose as could be done economically, it would pay this country to give twice, or three times even, as much as it gives every year for this purpose, and we should make money out of it in a commercial sense. It not only would improve property—of course that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is afraid of; it would contribute to the benefit of somebody in spite of him—but, more than that, it would contribute to the promotion of the commerce of the country at large to an extent which would compensate every year for the money spent; but we shall never have anything unless what we have now if we go on as we are doing.

The Engineer Corps is intrusted with this expenditure. It may be because of the conspicuous lack of ability they have displayed heretofore in these things and their utter disregard of the interests of the public Treasury. They have a facile way of doing business. Thus many items, not necessarily bad items of appropriation, but those which are relatively unimportant (of which there are numerous instances in this present bill), creep in. If I cared to go into that I might take the reports of the engineers themselves and show that there are items of appropriation here which are not justified, which are of no importance at all compared with the Mississippi River, or with the Missouri River, or with the Ohio River, or with hundreds of other improvements where we spend money.

And yet it can not be said that the river and harbor appropriations are vicious wholly. Now and then a bill will be vetoed and then there will be a temptation to make the bill as small as possible the next year to escape another veto; and as long as we pursue this system we shall be perfectly certain that we are wasting at least one-half of all the money we appropriate, while at the same time we are postponing the accomplishment of that which we ought to have first in mind; that is to say, the improvement of rivers and harbors where they will accommodate the commerce of the country. Whenever a bill with that view is presented I shall vote for it.

When I say this I am not saying that which is new, I am not saying that which is not confessed all around; but driven by these various local applications of which I am speaking, we are led to extremes contrary to the general sense of the Senate, and I think of Congress. When we come to the true basis of these bills we shall have no trouble about the money.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the sixteenth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 6514) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BRIDGE AT NATCHEZ, MISS.

Mr. VEST submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company, of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same.

G. G. VEST,
J. N. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
JAMES PHELAN,
A. R. ANDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the bill here? Let the action of the House on the report be read.

Mr. VEST. The message has just come from the House informing us of the adoption of the report by that body.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 2, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate bill 1669.

The report was concurred in.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Library, reported seven amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of Whole striking out the clause.

Mr. FRYE. Included in line 1601 to line 1607, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, which abolishes the Missouri River Commission.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. FRYE. Now, in line 1568, there must necessarily be an amendment, which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will suggest.

Mr. VEST. At the end of line 1568, of section 1, I move to insert:

In accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Missouri River Commission except as herein modified.

Mr. PLUMB. Does that apply to recommendations already made?

Mr. VEST. It is an amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] which refers to the recommendations of the commission as modified by the action of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have their last report here, and in that the Missouri River Commission, referring to the appropriations in the last river and harbor bill, say:

The current act, while materially reducing this estimate, directs that "necessary work" shall also be done at nine specified localities according to plans and estimates to be presented by the Missouri River Commision. What this necessary work consists in is not stated, but the commission infer that the protection of land exposed to the encroachments of the river is what was intended.

So this language is asked for to accomplish the purpose the commissioners understand to be in view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 15, at the bottom of the page, beginning in line 355 of section 1, there was a committee amendment which was not concurred in, touching the leasing to a certain railroad company of the pier at the mouth of Grand River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is Grand River?

Mr. FRYE. On Lake Erie, in Ohio. That matter has been further investigated. The two Senators from Ohio have agreed upon the following amendment, which, it seems to me, ought to be adopted in this place. It is to insert, after the word "River" at the end of line 354 of section 1, the words:

That the owners of such property abutting on Grand River at the mouth thereof shall have the right to load and unload coal, ore, and other freight over so much of the east Government pier as lies north of the present low-water mark, under such limitations as to time and use as shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend that amendment by inserting in the proper place:

And on the payment of such compensation as the Secretary of War shall determine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont offers an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we are going into the business of connecting ourselves with private enterprises, if the United States furnishes the dock, I think the coal operators ought to pay something reasonable for the use of it.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think that is a proper amendment. Here is a Government pier and the only purpose is to authorize the carrying of goods across this Government pier, so that the great portion of the harbor can be used for coal and ore. I do not believe there ought to be any compensation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why should the United States provide the means of unloading coal for the operators?

Mr. FRYE. They do not propose to unload it on the Government pier. They want to cross the Government pier.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But they have to go across the Government pier to carry it across. The pier is not between two parts of dry land, I take it. At any rate, I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment of Mr. FRYE it is proposed to add:

On the payment of such compensation as the Secretary of War shall determine.

Mr. FRYE. I do not care anything about it. Let it go.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1257 of section 1:

For the purchase of the two improved water ways known as the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company Canal, and the Lake Superior Ship-Canal, Railway, and Iron Company Canal, being the improved harbors of refuge and the water communication across Keweenaw Point from Keweenaw Bay to Lake Superior, by way of Portage River and Lake, in the State of Michigan, and to make the same a free passage-way and harbors of refuge to commerce and navigation, $350,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a full and absolute conveyance of said two harbors of refuge, canals, easements, rights of way, piers, docks, and appurtenances of every nature belonging to or connected with said works, or either of them, has been made to the United States by the owner or owners thereof, and the Attorney-General of the United States shall have certified to the Secretary of War that the title is perfect. And when such title shall have been acquired, the said canals and harbors of refuge shall thereafter be subject to the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I was opposed to putting the Green and Barren improvement on this bill, and also opposed to putting the Portage Lake improvement question on our river and harbor bill. The Senate, by a very decisive vote, as much as a two-thirds vote at least, has now placed upon the bill the purchase of the Green and Barren River improvement. Where there is one reason existing for that action there are at least five in favor of this, and I shall withdraw any opposition I have to this proposition.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I have not examined this subject carefully, but when I voted against the Green and Barren River improvement proposition I undoubtedly knew that the improvement would accommodate the commerce of those two rivers. In this case the estimate is that $182,500 will be required for the completion of the existing project, and $70,239.44 has been expended already. The report of the engineer shows that "neither the present nor prospective commercial importance of this point would of itself seem to justify so large an expenditure by the General Government," but it goes on to say that it may be justified as a harbor of refuge. We have quite a number of harbors of refuge around the borders, and whenever there is a place where there is no other ground on which it is to be improved it is stated to be a harbor of refuge. It is not for the improvement of commerce; it is not a harbor improvement in any sense that justifies an appropriation in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I have an amendment to offer on line 916 of section 1, by striking out "one" before the word "hundred" and inserting "two;" so as to read:

Improving St. John's River, Florida, from Jacksonville to the ocean, $250,000.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator desire to discuss that? It was discussed in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALL. No, I shall not detain the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I want to get the bill out of the way of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. CALL. The letter of the engineer in charge of this work states the fact that $150,000 is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the work already done, and it is upon that ground this amendment should be made increasing the amount of the appropriation to $250,000.

If the report of the engineer who has had charge of the work from the beginning is true, the money which is appropriated by this bill and that which has already been appropriated and expended in former years will be thrown away unless the additional $100,000 is given. The entire further progress of this work must be stopped because the present amount is only sufficient to preserve what has already been done.

This is one of the most important rivers in the whole bill, and although there are places of larger commerce than Jacksonville and the St. John's River, there are none that present greater possibilities, and this amount is a very small portion of the amount which will be annually saved in the reduction of charges for freight and transportation on the business now transacted on the river.

I call attention to the fact that the commerce has grown largely in the last few years on account of the improvement, and this is the most successful jetty work on the Atlantic coast, according to the reports of the engineer, and this additional $100,000 is an absolute necessity for the preservation of the work already done.

Mr. PASCO. I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment proposed by my colleague. He has substantially stated the facts in the case, but I should like to add a little to what I said when the matter was before the Committee of the Whole last week. The jetty work at the mouth of the St. John's River benefits not the people of Jacksonville alone, but the inhabitants of the entire country watered by the St. John's River and its tributaries, extending for hundreds of miles into the interior. There are nearly 5,000 miles of railroad communication centering on different points on the St. John's River that will be benefited by this improvement. A large amount of money, more than half a million dollars, has already been expended on the work.

The commerce of the St. John's River is not a local commerce. It extends to nearly every portion of the Union. Vessels come there from nearly all the seaboard States. It does not concern the State of Florida alone. There are few works in this entire river and harbor bill that are so general in their character as this, and if any one will study the reports of the engineer in charge as to the amount of this commerce and the extent of it, he will see that it is a commerce mutually advantageous to Florida and the States with which she interchanges her products, amounting to many millions of dollars annually, in which nearly every State in the Union is interested.

In addition to the letter from the engineer read by my colleague as to the necessity for an early and liberal appropriation, I wish to call attention to the report of Captain Black, made officially as engineer of this work, on pages 1213 and 1214, part 2, of the report of the Secretary of War. He gives some important reasons for an enlarged appropriation, which I will read:

The sources of loss to the United States on this work arising from the irregularity in the prosecution of the work are as follows:

1. The deterioration of the unfinished work.

2. The additional work needed to repair damages caused during the time when no funds are available by the partly controlled currents cutting around the ends of the jetties and pouring over the low portions, causing scour and settlement. The cost of 600 feet of shore extension of the north jetty may be placed under this head.

3. The uneconomical methods rendered necessary. Under the present system, since he can not know when his plant can be used again, the contractor must arrange his prices so that the profits under each contract will cover the value of the plant required, in addition to the customary allowances made for interest on money invested, for risks run, and for time consumed. Should the work be done by the United States by hired labor, during the intervals of idleness the plant must be cared for and its deterioration paid for, as under the law it can not be sold for the benefit of the appropriation.

The straight and steadily deepening channel already formed is a guaranty of the final success of the work. In the interests of economy it should be vigorously pushed to completion.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have already been expended upon this work. It has been a great success, and is so pronounced both by those who have examined and reported upon it in their official capacity and those who have visited and inspected it because of their interest in the work. I have myself had opportunities to give it a careful examination, and I can testify to its value and the great results that have been already accomplished. Any one who studies the hydrography of the Florida coast and the contour of the shore line can see how the entrances to the rivers in that section are affected by the forces of nature, which invariably force the channels in a southerly direction. This jetty work has changed the direction of the channel of the St. John's, but the same forces are still operating now to force it again to the south, and there is very great danger that the northern jetty, which has been pushed out more than 4,000 feet into the ocean, may, if these ordinary forces should be aided by the storms which sometimes prevail, be washed across the new channel, blocking it up and rendering absolutely worthless all that has been already accomplished, causing an injury to the river in place of a benefit.

The amount estimated as necessary to complete this work can be more beneficially and economically expended by appropriating a larger sum now, sufficient to secure what has already been accomplished, than by doling it out in driblets from year to year.

I do not wish to take up any great length of time in discussing the matter at this stage of the bill, as the Senator from Massachusetts is anxious to consider another subject, and will not delay the Senate further now. But in view of its importance, in view of the great injury that may result to this great national work because the appropriation in the bill is so small, I hope that the amendment offered by my colleague will be adopted, and that the appropriation will be increased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GRAY. On the assurance of the chairman of the committee as to the attitude of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. As my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FAR-

WELL] has been transferred to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT], I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Beck,	George,	Payne,	Vance,
Brown,	Gray,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hearst,	Quay,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Daniel,	Morgan,	Spooner,

NAYS—18.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Sherman,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Vest,
Chace,	Frye,	Kenna,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Reagan,
Coke,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—35.

Berry,	Davis,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Butler,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Hale,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Teller.
Cullom,	Harris,	Platt,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. An amendment which was adopted ought to be modified as to the amount of the appropriation. On line 1587, page 65, a change should be made in the amount from $75,000 to $65,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 65, line 1587, of section 1, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty-five;" so as to read:

That the sum of $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Kansas City, Mo.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Another is necessary in line 1590. I move to strike out "seventy-five" before "thousand" and insert "sixty-five;" so as to read:

That the sum of $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near St. Joseph, Mo.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 1592 I move to strke out "fifty" and insert "forty-five;" so as to read:

That the sum of $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Arrow Rock, Mo.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. At the end of line 1600, on page 66, I move to add:

And that the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended on said river at or near Miami, Mo.

This is to carry out the allotment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I move to amend, on page 38, after line 926, by inserting:

For improvement of the Indian River, of Florida, $25,000; $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the construction of a water way and steam-boat channel not less than 6 feet in depth between Jupiter Creek and Lake Worth, the remainder to be expended in deepening and straightening the channel from a point at or near the island known as "Grant's Farm" to the southern termination of Jupiter Narrows.

Mr. FRYE. I do not understand that that amendment has ever been before the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL. It has been.

Mr. FRYE. Then I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. CALL. I will modify the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, after line 926, it is proposed to insert:

For improvement of the Indian River, of Florida, $10,000; $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the construction of a water way and steam-boat channel not less than 6 feet in depth between Jupiter Creek and Lake Worth, the remainder to be expended in deepening and straightening the channel from a point at or near the island known as "Grant's Farm" to the southern termination of Jupiter Narrows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to get through with the bill and let the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] have the floor. The State of Florida will absorb everything it can get if this is kept on.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The Senator from Florida can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. QUAY. I trust the chairman of the Committee on Commerce will withdraw his motion to enable me to say one word.

Mr. FRYE. If I withdraw the motion for the Senator from Pennsylvania I shall be obliged to do so for the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] and then for the other Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. FRYE. The amendment has been considered carefully by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. FRYE. I beg pardon. I was wrong.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 19.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the division a quorum did not vote. The Chair will put the question again and have the division retaken.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator desires to occupy five minutes I would a good deal rather he would occupy it than to have a call of the yeas and nays, which would take fifteen minutes.

Mr. CALL. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALL. In the first place I wish to say that I do not think there should be such urgent haste to lay upon the table propositions to amend the bill which the committee have reported. There is no fair nor proper legislation in that method of proceeding.

Now all I wish to say about the amendment is that this subject has received the favorable consideration of the Congress of the United States for a period dating back some forty-five years. It will be found in the reports of engineers and in the statutes of the United States that this project of opening an inland communication along the coast of Florida through Key West is one of the most important that can be presented, and that it has at every period of the history of this Government received its favorable consideration.

I have a report here from the Chief of Engineers, after having made a survey and an estimate of a part of that river. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] having introduced this amendment, we have simply asked for a small sum of money for an improvement which is one of the most important in the whole country, both in a military and in a commercial point of view.

Five thousand dollars will open that river for the ordinary purposes of navigation, and the other $5,000 will open the Lake Worth country, which is settled now by a large and enterprising colony of people from all parts of the country, engaged in the production of fruits and vegetables which are absolutely necessary to the comfort of the people in the cities of the East, and who are doing a large trade there, and are cut off from all means of communication except the open ocean.

Without saying anything further on this subject, I ask that the communication which I have from Mr. Colonna, of the Coast Survey, may be printed in the RECORD without troubling the Senate to read it. This communication was given to me by Mr. B. A. Colonna, the assistant officer in charge of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. It consists of observations made by him while surveying the coast and that river. It gives the history of the settlements upon the river, the present development, and the practicability of the improvement. I desire to have it appear in the RECORD as an interesting and valuable contribution to a work of internal improvement sought to be appropriated for by this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed in the RECORD if there be no objection.

The communication is as follows:

CANAL ALONG THE EAST COAST OF FLORIDA.

The inside passage or water way along the Atlantic coast from Charleston, S. C., to the southward is interrupted at the St. John's River, Florida. For although it runs parallel with the coast, it is so far inland as to form no part of a continuation of the coast-line, inside water way.

Eighteen miles south of the St. John's commences a series of lagoons with inlets through which the waters from the sea enter in larger or smaller quantities. From St. Augustine southward for hundreds of miles these lagoons form an almost uninterrupted water way to Jupiter Inlet. From thence to Lake Worth there is an inside passage, the improvement of which will open up thousands of acres of land that will produce anything grown in the tropics, and Lake Worth itself connects to the southward with the waters of Hillsborough Lagoon, New River, and Key Biscayne Bay, which, at its southward extremity, opens into the inside passage of the Florida Keys direct to Key West.

Garden spots in Florida have been so frequently described that I shall not designate this east coast by that name. After the bloody Indian wars it remained for years depopulated and almost forgotten except by a few officers and soldiers who remembered its delightful climate and fruitful soil, and when the late civil war closed most of these veterans had passed away.

With the return of peace home-hunters, spurning every privation, made inroads into this isolated region. The Indian River country was soon sending its delicious oranges, pineapples, and bananas into the Northern market in spite of portages and difficult navigation, and land which a few years before was part of the public domain began to bring very fair prices, ranging from $10 to $1,000 per acre, according to location and quality, and there has never been a boom, either.

Settlers soon reached Lake Worth, the most eastern point in Florida, the shores of which are washed by the waters of the Gulf Stream. Here are great cocoa-nut groves, the farthest cultivated ones to the northward in this country (the most northern cocoa-nut trees growing out of doors in the United States being two at Indian River Inlet, 40 miles north of Lake Worth. They grew from drift seed, and prove conclusively that the cocoa-nut will flourish at least this far north). Frost on Lake Worth is absolutely unknown. Even the most delicate of tropical fruits grow luxuriantly, and its ocean beach is a favorite place for the green turtle to deposit its eggs.

Fifty miles south of Lake Worth is a beautiful sheet of water, known as Key Biscayne Bay. In its bounds are the northern limit of the sponge fisheries in the United States. Its shores are high. The soil is a sandy loam and readily improved. There grows wild in the woods a bulbous plant from which is manufactured an article which in trade is called compte, a kind of starch much sought after by confectioners in the manufacture of their choicest delicacies.

The south end of Key Biscayne Bay opens through Cæsar's Creek and other channels into the great inside passage along the Florida Keys, a beautiful water way, on which you appear to have only the boundless ocean to the eastward, but the Florida Reef is between you and the Gulf Stream that is ever pouring northward through the Strait of Florida, and that gives you a great water way along the edge of the Strait of Florida, more placid than any great bay or strait can ever be. It is walled off to itself.

The waters of this whole coast, inside and out, from the mouth of the St. John's southward to Key West, teem with the most delightful fish. The bluefish is caught with its roe fully matured—a fact in which the late Fish Commissioner, Professor Baird, was deeply interested. It is generally supposed that fish can not be salted so far South, but such is not the fact. From the month of October to the month of April they can be cured as well as upon the shores of Newfoundland. It is seldom done, because the fresh fish are always to be taken, but it has been done repeatedly by an amateur of my acquaintance merely as an experiment.

The east coast of Florida is the boatman's paradise the year round. On the ocean shore the waves do not break upon marsh lands or outlying islands, but upon a beautiful sandy beach, between which and the lagoons or rivers, as they are called, lies a strip of land generally from a quarter to 1 mile wide, and it is this strip which furnishes the most delightful abodes for man from about October to April.

The western shores of the bayous or rivers are generally high sand-hills or coquina rock, and stretch back about a mile before you come to the fresh-water ponds that lie in between the sand-ridges. The water percolates under the hills through the sand and forms beautiful springs of clear water wherever a hole is dug and a barrel set in the ground at the foot of a bluff.

When these waters are opened up one of the most productive industries will be the making of potash from the mangroves that grow all along the salt-water shores within the lagoons. It is an industry not thought of as yet by the people, but bound to come to enrich them. Private enterprise was not long in discovering the great natural advantage of the inside water way from the St. John's southward, and a company was formed and secured important rights from the State in consideration of its improving these natural water ways.

St. Augustine is now in direct communication with the Indian River through channels improved by this company, but the progress has been slow because the enterprise has been in the hands of parties who lacked the means. The corporation is dignified by the name of Canal Company, but is such only to a very limited extent, the work being with few exceptions the improvement of natural water courses. Beginning at St. John's River there is—

		Miles.
First. Pablo Creek, to improve natural water way	about	10
Second. Of canal, to dredge through sand	do	10
Third. North River water way, to improve	do	20
Fourth. Matanzas River water way, now improved	do	25
Fifth. Matanzas River to Halifax Creek, canal already cut	do	10
Sixth. Halifax River and Mosquito Lagoon, improved	do	57
Seventh. Canal at Haulover from Mosquito Lagoon into Indian River, already cut	about	2
Eighth. Indian River to Jupiter Inlet, to be improved	do	130
Ninth. Canal, Jupiter Inlet to Lake Worth, through streams already flowing	about	10
Tenth. Lake Worth, to be improved	do	20
Eleventh. Natural streams to be improved from Lake Worth to Key Biscayne Bay	about	40
Twelfth. Key Biscayne Bay, to be improved	do	30
Thirteenth. Key Biscayne to Key West, no improvement	do	125
In all, from the St. John's via the Florida inland and seaboard route to Key West	about	489

And I estimate roughly that to give a channel 200 feet wide and 8 feet deep throughout the whole distance of 489 miles along that coast will only cost about $5,000,000, and it will drain land worth many times that amount, besides what it otherwise brings in the market.

The enterprise as a Government undertaking commends itself to every disinterested person who knows the country and its resources. When done it will be a national highway traversed by many in the pursuit of business, health, or pleasure.

Mr. CALL. I hope that this small amount of money will be allowed.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate, but merely to indorse all that the Senator from Florida has said in regard to the importance of this improvement. I visit the Indian River and traverse annually the ground covered by this proposed appropriation, and I assure the chairman of the Committee on Commerce that no money appropriated by this bill would be more wisely and beneficially expended than the small pittance contemplated in the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division—ayes 21, noes 22.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 79, line 92, of section 7, I move to strike out the words "on the Illinois side of said river." I think the Senator in charge of this bill will agree to this amendment. It is merely to give the engineers an opportunity of making an original survey.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator please explain his amendment so that we may understand it?

Mr. ALLISON. There is here a proposition to authorize a survey for a canal along the Rock Island Rapids. The provision as it reads now would confine the surveyor to a particular line on one side of the river. I do not know but that it is the right side. However, I want to leave the right to survey on either side. So I move to strike out, in line 92, the words "on the Illinois side of said river."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 79, line 93, of section 7, I move to strike out the words "near Rapids City, Ill."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a part of the same amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. It is part of the same survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon the statement made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], in the absence of the two Senators from Illinois, I shall not insist upon calling for the yeas and nays upon the Hennepin Canal amendment, hoping that the House will disagree to it, although I wish now to record my opposition to it. In their absence, and with the understanding which was had when I was absent, I do not feel at liberty to call for the yeas and nays on that amendment, although I am opposed to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the amendment still pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. On page 29, in line 691, of section 1, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate struck out "twenty-five" in the appropriation for the James River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator desires a separate vote on concurring in that amendment in the Senate?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent that can be ordered.

Mr. FRYE. That amendment was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and it has been concurred in in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The more formal way would be a motion to reconsider, but the shortest way would be to allow a separate vote to be taken on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We may as well take it that way.

Mr. FRYE. I shall not make any objection to the mode of putting the question suggested by the Chair. The amount allowed by the bill is a very large amount for that river.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia desires a separate vote on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 29, in line 691 of section 1, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out the words "and twenty-five" before "thousand;" so as to read:

Improving James River, Virginia: Continuing improvement below Richmond, $200,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment striking out the words "twenty-five," leaving the appropriation $200,000.

Mr. DANIEL. The clause of the bill to which I refer is a clause as it came from the House, appropriating $225,000 for the improvement of James River below Richmond. The Senate Committee on Commerce reduced the appropriation $25,000, and it is a separate vote upon that proposition of the committee that I ask the Senate to take.

The appropriations in this bill for the water ways of Virginia are not large. On the contrary, they are rather small, considering the number of water ways she has, their needs, and the magnitude of the general appropriation. Therefore I do not feel that I am trenching upon the liberality of the Senate in asking them to confirm the judgment of the House of Representatives as to what should be a fair appropriation for the benefit of the James River.

It is, as is well known, the greatest river in our State. It is one whose commerce already is large, and it has a great future. The railroads that connect the capital city of Virginia with the West are yearly, almost daily, increasing their facilities and their connections with the West, and are pouring into the valley of the James River a tremendous Western commerce. It is a shorter line to the West than from some of the great commercial cities of the North. Every dollar of this appropriation will be well spent for a public improvement of permanent value to the whole country.

If any of the appropriations are to be reduced in this bill, it would be much better to strike out this sum from some of the small creeks and insignificant waterways, which are in some cases liberally provided for, rather than to stint this great highway of commerce.

It is local in a certain sense, in that it lies within the boundaries of one State, but it is essentially national in its uses to the commerce of the country.

I hope it may be the pleasure of the Senate to confirm the judgment of the House of Representatives as to this appropriation.

Mr. FRYE. The amendment of the committee ought to be concurred in, as it was before. The James River gets its full proportion, considering the interests of commerce, the divisions among the States, and everything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. An affirmative vote leaves the appropriation $200,000; a negative vote restores the appropriation as it was in the bill originally.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 15, noes 21; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays. That will settle the question of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that upon this question the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

Mr. FRYE. I should hope that the vote might be taken once more by a division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FRYE. Let us trust the thing on time, if the Senator wants very much to occupy it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But you want to get the bill through.

Mr. FRYE. It will go by in a very few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allison,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Sherman,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Teller,
Chace,	Frye,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa,
Davis,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

NAYS—22.

Bate,	Daniel,	Pasco,	Vance,
Beck,	Faulkner,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Brown,	George,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Call,	Gray,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hampton,	Reagan,
Colquitt,	Morgan,	Turpie,

ABSENT—35.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Berry,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Butler,	Hale,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Harris,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Platt,	Stockbridge.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. CALL. On page 38, after line 926 of section 1, I move to amend the bill by inserting:

For the improvement of Indian River from Gilbert's Bar to the mouth, $5,000.

I hope there will be no objection to this amendment.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 11, noes 22; no quorum voting.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw his objection to this amendment. Forty-five years ago the Congress of the United States passed an act for the improvement of that river.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain debate while less than a quorum is present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us take the question by yeas and nays; that is the shortest way.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. I very earnestly ask the Senator from Maine not to resist this amendment. This is a very small amount of money. This improvement has been recommended and it has been approved in the legislation of this country for forty-five years. The United States have a canal now, the Haulover, to Indian River, and should maintain it as a military necessity for the country. This great stream runs 200 or more miles down the coast of Florida, and connects with the inland navigation inside the reefs to Key West. I have only asked that the small sum of $5,000 be appropriated for the removal of the obstruction at Gilbert's Bar.

Both sides of Indian River are now being settled and cultivated. It is one of the most beautiful regions of the world. It is visited every year by tens of thousands of people from all over this country, and contributes largely in its fruits and vegetables to the health and comfort of the cities in the North and the East. This little obstruction is now a barrier to the commerce of those people, as will be shown in the communication which I have had put in the RECORD from Mr. Colonna, an accomplished officer of the Coast Survey, inclosing them, so that they can not get to market with their supplies, their perishable trade. This little appropriation of $5,000 will remove the obstacle so that navigation may be had there and those people brought into communication with the world.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 13, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Allison,	Gray,	Stewart,	Voorhees.
Brown,	Paddock,	Teller,
Call,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Daniel.	Quay,	Vance,

NAYS—29.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Vest,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Walthall,
Blair,	Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chace,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Wilson of Md.
Chandler,	Frye,	Palmer,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pugh,
Coke,	Hampton,	Reagan,

ABSENT—34.

Berry,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	George,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Butler,	Hale,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Harris,	Payne,	Stanford,
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Platt,	Stockbridge.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized o appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FRYE, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the bill be printed as amended by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is desirable that there should be an executive session, and I move it accordingly.

Mr. HOAR. I think I am entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor under the agreement of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought it would be agreeable to the Senator from Massachusetts. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HOAR. I gave way to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who desired to go away to-night, at the risk of a good deal of personal inconvenience to myself, for I also desire to be absent from the city for some days, on the expectation which he, I know, entertained, as I did, that the river and harbor bill would be disposed of in a very short time this morning. I also gave way to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], whose convenience every Senator will respect. It is now so late an hour in the afternoon that I doubt whether the Senate would like to remain here and hear a speech of any considerable length to be begun at this time. I should like to have some understanding as to a day when the fisheries treaty may be taken up again, that I may address the Senate. I suggest, if there be no objection, that the fisheries treaty be set down, by unanimous consent, for Tuesday of next week, after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the resolutions of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and of the fisheries treaty, assigned for this day, at the conclusion of the formal morning business, be fixed for Tuesday, the 10th instant, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6514) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion for an executive session.

Mr. TURPIE rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] gave notice of his intention to speak to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right. I yield to the Senator from Indiana, if he desires to submit some remarks.

Mr. TURPIE. I move to take up the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the President's message.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution is before the Senate, and the Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, the Federal Constitution forbids the States to levy taxes upon imports. Congress alone is authorized "to lay and collect" such duties. Our earliest statesmen, illustrious by their labors in the camp and in the Cabinet, worthy to be not only the founders of a nation, but the authors of its form of Government, devised a fiscal policy of characteristic simplicity. It is that of absolute free trade between the States, fair trade with all the world besides.

To direct a levy of taxes without collection would seem an idle ordinance in so grave an instrument. In their regulation of foreign commerce our fathers avoided both free trade and prohibition. They wisely chose the middle ground of safety. Their method so established is like the Union they made, in contemplation of law perpetual. The first acts of Congress on this subject show no trace of mere inhibition. That idea, the growth of a later period, appears most distinctly in 1861. The overwhelming exigencies of the civil war may have excused or justified a departure so radical, but the legislators of 1883, in virtually re-enacting the rates of the war tariff, designed, not a temporary use of this novel expedient; rather a permanent change of policy. There is somewhat, very much, in our present condition which may give us pause, may induce us to retrace our steps, to stand once more within constitutional bounds and limitations.

Congress some years ago provided what was deemed to be, if not a generous, at least a reasonable supply of money for the use of the people. The volume or quantity of currency thus furnished was carefully guarded against diminution—so much in Treasury notes, fixed at an amount not to be lessened; so much in coined silver to be regularly enlarged by a monthly increment; so much in other forms, that the country might not again be embarrassed for want of a circulating medium. Sorely vexed by this, the influential and theretofore governing classes who had profited so largely by a different policy, cast about for means to thwart this legislation and to defeat its purpose. Beaten in the open contest for monetary freedom, they yet sought by indirection to deprive the people of the use of that currency so provided for them. They cast about for some such means; they found it close at hand. They found the leaders of the party then in power, with full knowledge of their ulterior design, ready to aid them therein; they found all parties at that time willing and ready to help them in their apparent purpose. The revision of the war tariff had become a part of the text of all political platforms and associations—a household word, expressive of a household want in every section of the country. This they eagerly seized upon, not with a view of correcting the injustice of the existing law, but with an elaborate pretension of so doing, to effect the contrary. The numerous sections, clauses, and lines of the tariff act of 1883, the tediously hypocritical parentheses of pseudo-reduction and revision held in solution a single design, the forced accumulation of a surplus—a dead surplus—buried in the vaults of the Treasury, which should drive the country once more to the verge of a money famine.

The whole of the effective operative provisions of that law of 1883 are subordinated to a paragraph of a few lines obscurely placed in the section of an appropriation act concerning the surplus. By textual arrangement this paragraph is remote, distant from the statute to which it relates; it might have actually served as a preamble to their bill. But this would have been a dangerous juxtaposition. The terms of this paragraph are not subjunctive nor conditional; they contemplate no contingency. Expenditure of the surplus is spoken of as an assured and certain requirement, well known and foreseen. That this accumulation was deliberately prepared and intended is evident from the language of the clause authorizing not only the redemption but the purchase of United States bonds; the perfected plan and completed project being to tax the products of land and labor in such degree as without doubt to induce in the volume of the currency a scarcity only to be relieved by paying large premiums to the public creditor, offering him such a generous and liberal largess as might tempt him to transmute his bonds into money.

The power to buy bonds was doubtless intended to create a sort of waste-weir for the overflow or excess of moneys taken from the people by taxation; yet even this may not return to the regular course and channel of circulation without being tolled by the holder of our public securities. A precise analysis of the whole system is this: to tax all the people for the benefit of a few protected classes up to the danger-line of monetary restriction; then to tax all again for the sake of another class still less numerous and more highly favored.

It might indeed have been said, "The public creditor can wait until his debt is due—he has his interest, and is satisfied; his bond, and he is content." But such a course would have afforded no excuse for this needless accumulation. The excess must in some way be disposed of; it would be dangerously in the way; it would create a demand for less taxation. Let the boudholders have it—it will thus disappear. Then it is asked, "Do you not wish to pay off the national debt?" Certainly, but we did not expect to pay for the privilege of paying it; to pay large amounts above the principal and interest—premiums unearned, for which there is no return. The exorbitant tariff now laid upon imports thus subserves the double purpose, first, of releasing our protected classes from their just share of the public burdens, then of depriving the people of the money provided by law for circulation.

The supply of currency to-day—upon what does it depend? Upon the action or inaction of a single person, the Secretary of the Treasury; or upon the whim, caprice, or rapacity of the holder of national bonds. Is that a wise, efficient, or patriotic financial policy which has reduced the country to the very narrow straits of such a monetary dilemma?

Then we have manifold schemes for expending the surplus, endless diatribes against an invisible phantom, as if the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. CARLISLE, or any other charged with the duties of administration of affairs had proposed free trade—mere pretexts to prevent the reduction of taxes. We hear criticisms of the President and of the party which supports him concerning the power to buy bonds and the use of it, as if either the President or the Democratic party had enacted the law giving that power, or had imposed the necessity of its exercise. These things have come down to us as legislative heirlooms from a former régime. It is true the President was chosen by the people to administer upon the estate of that famous partisan called Republican, lately deceased. He is as yet, however, much embarrassed by the will, codicils, contracts, and especially by the profuse bequests and legacies left by the decedent in his lifetime to his various friends and allies, by statute of strict entail, yet in force.

These pressing necessities, originating from former evils, will be removed.

LABOR.

It has been written there is a perennial sacredness about work. The Lord of all the harvests has said, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." It is not so said of others, as some may receive hire not deserving it.

The system of tariff laws now in force imposes a most unjust and needless assessment upon the wages of labor. We know in part, in part we do not know the amount of this exaction. The known amount of this tax laid and collected per day, as shown by the receipt of customs duties for the year 1887, was, in round numbers, $600,000. It is now no less. For the seventeen millions of workers in all branches of industry in the United States the rate per capita amounts to 30 per cent. of average daily earnings. With the other expenses of living, for these the wages of the day pay, and do hardly pay, the taxes for the day. The tide of tax and time keep equal pace, save that on the seventh day, the day of rest, when wages are not paid, taxes are.

When such a contribution is levied, as it is, upon the kitchen and the cupboard, upon bed and board, upon hunger, thirst, and nakedness—when every living soul within our borders becomes a tax-payer, enormous receipts accrue and the surplus gathers like the snowball in a thaw. In the ordinary household of five persons where there is one wage-earner and five tax-payers they are not encumbered with unused deposits. The collector of this tax keeps no delinquent list; there is no delay, and there can be no default.

If a man eat, drink, or wear, he must pay; if he move, breathe, or live, he must pay; death scarcely brings relief. The tax-gatherer clips wages, be they ever so small; no pittance escapes. The amount of this collection is a direct daily charge upon wages fund—that portion of the wealth of the country which is in transit day by day from those who employ to those who are employed. The moneys due to labor are thus seized in passing. Any reduction of the amount thus exacted, and especially any readjustment thereof as to the list of taxed articles, would shift the burden from this wages fund in transit to wealth in situ, to wealth accumulated—mainly to the wealth accumulated by the beneficiaries of the present law. There is the rub; there is the hitch and hurt; this is where and how the shoe of reform pinches the foot of monopoly. Now, it is not intended to be said hereby that there may be anything wrong in the general policy of requiring all those who live in the United States to contribute somewhat to the support of the Government.

But it is asked, nevertheless, why should a penny be taken from any one beyond what is needed for that support, and why, as to the sum needed, should it be levied so largely and exclusively upon those classes of our fellow-citizens least able to spare and to pay it?

At such time as the Government takes from the laborer by taxation upon his food and raiment, upon the ordinary comforts and conveniences of life, more than is necessary for the public use, then we say, "The laborer is not worthy of his hire"—we have found those more worthy thereof. Who are these? The law-made rich, the most worthless and grasping of all Mammon's sons, misers of that unblessed lucre unjustly wrung from the sweat of other men's faces.

It would be impossible for these favored classes, although they have succeeded in controlling the policy and organization of a certain political party, although they have procured the Government of the United States to act as salesman in their marts and stores, to stand behind their counters, and to fix prices upon their wares—it would be impossible for them to make an open avowal of their purposes. They could not say to labor: "Go to; let us take for the nonce a portion of your wages without return—without recompense." They have a saving amount of caution, of complaisance, or of cowardice. But they cry, "Pay us this tribute, as for some time past you have been. It will enable us to make our profits large, still larger, wherewith we will certainly in some way requite you."

Is it a thing taught or shown by human experience that those classes of men who have, by the mere operation of statutes, heaped up for themselves riches which moth and rust may corrupt, but which the tax-gatherer leaves untouched, have shared such gains with the victims of their injustice?

This feeble pretense is founded upon the manifest fallacy that such men will, against their own interest, do that they ought or should because they can. They might afford to pay better and higher wages, because their law has imposed taxes which enable them to fix their own prices upon their goods. Have they ever done so? Whence comes the strike, that most remarkable social phenomenon of the century? It originates from the circumstance that those who might pay fair wages will not do so; will resort to any means to avoid doing so. It springs from the fact that the incorporated and tariff-clad shareholder refuses to divide his profits current or long since accrued with his workmen.

Before the passage of the law forbidding the importation of workmen under passage contracts, and even since, in violation thereof, these classes brought the low-priced laborers of Europe, of Asia, hither to take the places of their own countrymen, Americans whom they had discharged. Foiled in this they have invented and organized the "trust," a syndicate of corporations, which, like the Six Companies of China, checks production, foreshortens the wage-time of labor, by this means destroying both external and internal competition and securing the unlimited and absolute control of the prices of both labor and commodities. Such is their aim and end. The Dynasty of Pelf, a costly rule founded upon craft, cant, and cunning. An impartial history of this highly privileged order will show their course and conduct to have been uniformly the same—to reduce wages to the lowest figure, to maintain taxes at the highest—to retain their employés as dependents, upon the line of bare subsistence.

I do very well recollect how last April when the honorable Senator from Texas was speaking upon this subject he caused to be read at the Secretary's desk, in this presence, the testimony of one Thomas O'Donnell, from evidence taken by the Senate Committee upon Labor, as to the condition of the operatives in the factories at Fall River, Mass., in the year 1885. Mr. O'Donnell was a skilled laborer, in an establishment whose wares have been protected for many years up to the point of the prohibitory line. His case is in no wise peculiar; he testifies that one thousand others of his fellow workmen live as he does, not any better. He was a cotton-spinner—a very good one, a peaceable man, had no trouble with the company or their men. There had been a strike three years before; he had not been in it. He was healthy, industrious, temperate, frugal to the last degree. Here, then, is an American laborer, protected, secured, guarded, and inclosed by the plenary providence of the prohibitory tariff.

His gross earnings were $133 per year. With this he must pay rents and procure the daily necessaries of life for himself, his wife, two children—a family of four. He could not get work more than half the time. The company, with fear of glut of goods in the markets, laid its hand upon the wheel and piston. They stopped from time to time; with them wages ceased.

What an extravagant practice the people of this country had twenty-five or thirty years ago of eating meats—beef, pork, mutton served every meal, three times a day.

O'Donnell was protected from this dangerous excess; he could only afford meat three or four times a year on Sundays. He dug and gathered clams from the sands to eke out this scanty supply. His fuel he got mostly from the same source; coal he could not buy; one-quarter ton for the winter must serve. The wife was poorly clad, the children worse. The little ones went barefoot in summer—of course this would be different in the cold weather of a New England winter—yes, in summer the children went barefoot, in winter they had no shoes. The father had not the money to buy them. On the day he was examined as a witness he had no money in the house—the same supply of bread, but the mother had gone out somewhere in the morning and had gotten a loaf for the children, who were crying with hunger. Would he move away? Would he go West? Willingly, but he had no means of doing so. He remained, bound like Ixion to his wheel, without hope, without help, a skilled artisan, with his thousand comrades, waging a doubtful contest between living and starvation.

As for the multitude of unskilled laborers, the corporators of the prohibitory tariff trust do not employ them. But let us be candid, they do not overlook or neglect them—with impartial greed they tax them as they do all others. Not anything is less creditable to our race than the impunity with which privilege has always imposed upon labor the fiscal burdens of Government. These modern defenders of exclusive privilege are only copyists. They scorn because they have injured the whole order of unskilled labor. This order is the oldest in the world. It is one of the most venerable, one of the most honorable, and it is the most numerous of human societies. There is no ceremony of initiation, neither sign nor pass-word; any one may enter it at any time; only those do who must. Occasionally persons are demitted from this order, but its numbers are never diminished; accessions are constant, and those who join remain for the most part life-members.

This order, ages ago, builded the stately tower of Babel, unskilled, using brick for stone, slime for mortar. They worked at the founding of the Pyramids, and may yet look upon their ruins. The canal of Suez, the dikes of Holland, the tree-grown mounds in the valley of the Great River of the West are theirs. The character of the society is that of its work, durability. Moreover, it is a class more generous, less self-seeking than any other, not unintelligent, but not wary, not suspicious. Here, upon these, the inquisitors of the tariff-tithes have fallen devouring their substance without even the paltry pretense that they are to receive either increase of work or wages thereby.

AGRICULTURE.

Much is heard now about the business of the country. If the meaning of the phrase is to be closely scanned, certainly it might be correctly defined as that vocation in which the largest number of our citizens are engaged.

The capital invested in this pursuit, comprising as it does the immense acreage under tilth and the improvements thereon, is many times larger than that employed in any other.

Seven millions of the people of the United States are found at work in planting and farming. If to this number be added those employed in the manufacture and sale of agricultural implements and machinery, in the transportation and preparation of farm products for the market, who are really as directly interested therein as if they held the plow, it will appear that the number of those engaged in agriculture far exceeds that found in any other calling, and is equal to the whole number of those in all other industrial pursuits combined. There are also some plain, unmistakable indications that not the finger but the whole hand of destiny designed this.

We have in the domain of the United States the largest area of tillable soil ever embraced within the limits of a single Government, greater than that of the Roman Empire at its period of widest extension. This area of land is situate in a kindly climate, it is facile of cultivation, fertile, productive, and is placed by that errant daughter of the flood and fire, called steam, at a much less distance from the densely populated portions of the globe than the granaries of Egypt or the Euxine were from Italy and its ancient metropolis. More than this; we know that in years not long gone by, American wheat, corn, and cotton and their secondary products did command and dominate the market for these staples in the emporiums of the world. That period, not yet passed, is passing away.

From what causes? Commerce doubtless began between nations, as among individuals, with barter. With all its modifications, improvements, and dependencies it is barter yet. But we now barter debts, and exchange accounts, for the commodities which have been disposed of, instead of the commodities themselves. The balance struck, always a small sum compared with the whole amount of transactions, is paid in money by the debtor. Nor is this balance of trade always accounted as a loss by those who pay it. The really commercial nations neither shun this balance nor its payment. They pay the balance because they have received something for their money worth more than that they parted with. But they decline to trade or pay except of necessity where they are forbidden to trade in return. A commercial people, needing such supplies, will buy their wheat, cotton, and other staples where they may sell, or have an opportunity to sell, or at least are not forbidden to sell their own merchandise.

By long years of a highly restrictive policy as to duties upon imports we have driven the trading people of the globe to the Black Sea, to the Baltic, even to India, for wheat, to Egypt, to Bengal, to the uttermost isles of the sea for cotton. This policy returns to plague us. The plague is manifest in the great and steady reduction in the demand and consequently in the price of our farm products.

The friends of this restrictive policy tell us in answer of the home demand and of our domestic resources.

There is no man who this spring drew a furrow expecting to raise more than enough for his own use who does not know that the value of the surplus of his crop, and consequently of his labor, depends not upon his own settlement or neighborhood. He will find the price set upon what he has to spare and sell is fixed at the county seat or the railroad station; there it depends upon the price at New York or Chicago or elsewhere, and at these points upon the price at London or Liverpool or other trade centers of the world. The price of our surplus produce is fixed by those who need it, not by those who do not. The farmer can organize no trusts, and the ever-bountiful forces of nature are not lessened by fear of overproduction. It is true that American staples are yet purchased—they are the best and most useful of these articles. But they are purchased at reduced prices and in less quantity. The foreign buyer does not purchase as under circumstances of fair trade he would or might, but only when he must.

A return to our former policy, that of fair trade, would bring with it that superiority in the market of the great agricultural products which we once enjoyed. Nor can any one truly say that a reasonable reduction in the duty-list upon imports could injure any other interests. No period in the history of our country can be found when agriculture highly flourished and manufactures declined or commerce decayed. When the pecuniary advantage of the majority is subserved, that of all others will be aggrandized. The abundant and diversified products of the soil, these constitute our largest material for export, have always done so; the highest price for the largest quantity, this is the grammar of our commercial life.

There is no array of statistics, there is no fiction of labored calculation, there is no romance of arithmetic which will demonstrate that a nation has ever grown rich and prosperous by a continued disparagement and depression of its chief industrial occupation.

Even American manufactures are wholly competent for and now require a more extended outlet. We have during the present session appropriated money and authorized the appointment of commissions to attend expositions of trade and mechanism abroad. To what purpose, if the present system is to be continued? We can imagine the American commissioner at Melbourne, at Paris, or at Barcelona, surrounded by his exhibits, preaching the deep philosophy of mercantile restriction and embargo: "The articles you see before you are specimens of the products and manufactures of the United States—they are only to be seen. Like the famous pictures by the old masters at the art shows, they are not for sale. Our breadstuffs, our utensils and machinery are meant and made but for Americans. We care naught for purchasers—we seek no sales outside. We sigh only for the gains, the profits, and the dividends of the home market."

Was there ever a superstition more strange or more irrational than the notion of converting the whole body of our farmers, artisans, and manufacturers into a mass of cloistered hermits, employed solely in furnishing each other with supplies, and when by this distorted conversion large portions of the wealth of the country are transferred from the many to the selected and protected classes to call this national prosperity? Whereas by this transfer not one jot or tittle is added to the nation's wealth; there is merely a change of its possession—a change of the persons holding the fund.

It is not perceived how manufactures are to be really fostered and encouraged by unnecessary and excessive taxation upon the materials used therein, upon the cost of subsistence of the men using them, or by a stinted market for their sale. No doubt these methods protect and enrich the owners of the stocks and shares; but a Government charged with the duty of promoting the general welfare can not be bound forever to the fortune of a small minority. These processes must be regarded as in deadly hostility to the true and real interests of manufactures by all except that intelligent contraband of commerce who will only hear of the imposing and impossible myth of exclusive domestic consumption. The farmer, the skilled artisan, the laborer find now a large part of their moneys needlessly impounded in the public Treasury.

Many are the sayings of the wise, consolatories writ, to comfort the losers by this confiscation. There is an eternal jeremiad concerning the pauper labor of Europe. The farmers and planters of the United States have now for many years been competing with the pauper labor of Europe, of Asia, of Africa; with that of the peasant of the Nile delta, who works for 10 cents a day. The existing policy of so-called protection has forced that competition. What has thus cheapened and pauperized labor in India, in Egypt, in China, or elsewhere? Long ages of commercial restriction and repression; the entire inhibition of foreign traffic; a constant isolation and seclusion of manufactures; an exclusively internal consumption, both of work and wares, the dry rot, and ataxia of national enterprise.

Yet it is seriously proposed that this nation, new born, in its strength and youth, should receive its lessons in political economy and the practical rules of its revenue administration from the archaic and moldering systems of the Mikado and the Mandarin. The trade of Great Britain with our near neighbor, Mexico, and the countries south thereof last year very much exceeded the entire foreign commerce of the United States. The countries of South America, lying near us and many of them closely related to us by the similarity of their governmental forms, have a large external trade, but not with us—it is with England, Germany, Italy, and France. Is this because the pottery, cutlery, utensils, textiles, or machinery of these countries are better than our own?

The South American will himself say no; but he will also say that the duty-rates here upon the products of his own country, which he has in abundance, which we lack, are so high that they can not profitably be exported hither; and these being his material and stock in trade, he must buy where he can make some disposal of them, not elsewhere. But although all inquiry into the causes of the wealth of nations, the experience and observation of mankind, have alike shown that an extensive foreign commerce is a chief element in national thrift, and especially in that of manufactures, the prohibitory protectionist will none of this; he prefers discoursing upon the imaginary free-trade tendencies of Mr. MILLS or Mr. COX, both of whom are this very moment urging the passage of a bill imposing the highest duties ever known as peace-rates in the history of this country. Protection, like fire or water, is a good servant, but a bad master. Overprotection leads by every way and road to overproduction, to consequent stagnation and decay.

It can not be shown or proven that any person or corporation in good faith engaged in the business of manufacturing will be injured by the reasonable reduction of duties, or that any employé of such an one will be so harmed. That they will be is only a prediction made by a very small school of the prophets, whom the narrowest self-interest has prompted to assume the rôle of Amos or of Malachi.

The emancipation of labor from the operation of unjust laws, the liberation of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures from inequitable and impoverishing restrictions, the restoration of the people to their ancient commercial rights and franchises—this is what is proposed by the message of the President. The enjoyment of these rights and franchises by the multitude of dealers, whom no man can number, buyers and sellers not known at the board-room or on 'change, the men and women who chaffer daily wage for daily bread, whereof the consummation will not be retarded or prevented by the recent action at Chicago. The platform and the nominee of the convention held there are alike exponents of the views and interests of those privileged castes who have so long, under loud and false clamor of protecting others, cared only for themselves, who have learned nothing of popular interests except to betray them.

The candidate is a well-beloved and chosen representative of that rank and lawless growth of incorporated power whose insolence his principal rival in our State did so much to curb, and which this new aspirant favors. He would faithfully befriend, protect, and encourage American industries—by the highest, most prohibitory, and unnecessary restrictions, and by the permitted migration hither of the cheap alien labor of the Chinaman. A man of no inconsiderable capacity, of great mental force and acumen, he has that not often found with these—a harsh intolerance which treats dissent as idiocy. Deeply touched and tinged with the prejudices of an exclusive class aristocracy, he belongs to that group of reactionary statesmen, traditional paternalists, whom the people have so often rejected, and will again.

Justice to the greater number in this commonwealth of States can injure no others. As uncommercial and unsophisticated as the notion may appear, simple justice, to those who by the work of their hands create and produce it, is a principal ingredient, a necessary element in the accumulation of national wealth.

A free people cheered to their labors by the assurance of a fit reward, vexed by no unnecessary exactions or the fear of them, will not be lacking in skill or diligence. They will have the genius to wrest from nature the best use of her best forces; tact to take advantage of opportunity in watching the grand economic and commercial changes which sweep from time to time across the disk of civilization; they will have the courage to meet hand to hand and face to face the nations of the earth, and in those contests for supremacy, whether in arts or arms, which attend the progress of humanity, they will come forth more than conquerors.

ADJOURNMENT OVER FOURTH OF JULY.

Mr. VEST. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOLPH. What is the regular business before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, upon which the pending question is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. Is the Senate ready for the question?

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] indicated just before the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] took the floor that an executive session was necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont withdrew the motion for the convenience of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, July 5, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 2, 1888.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Peter F. Knight, of Florida, to be marshal of the United States for the southern district of Florida, vice Fernando J. Moreno, resigned.

CONSUL.

Charles de Blanc, of Louisiana, to be consul of the United States at Puerto Cabello, vice David N. Burke, transferred to Bahia.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate July 2, 1888.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

James G. Jenkins, of Wisconsin, to be United States judge for the eastern district of Wisconsin.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 2, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DIBBLE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOGG, until the 28th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. HATCH, Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama, and Mr. CONGER, from the sessions of the House to-day, to attend the sessions of the conference committee on the agricultural appropriation bill.

To Mr. LANE, for five days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. PENINGTON, for two days, on account o sickness.

To Mr. OSBORNE, for four days, to attend the Gettysburgh reunion.

To Mr. MCCLAMMY, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BYNUM, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCCULLOGH, until the 9th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. MORROW, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. LAIDLAW, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEPHENSON, for ten days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, to withdraw from the files of the House petitions and papers filed in support of House bill 6305, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, for the relief of Robert Fillson.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask an amendment of the Journal. I send to the Clerk's desk the RECORD of the proceedings of June 14, and ask to have read a portion of it with reference to the appointment of tellers and the vote on a motion submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] on that day.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROPOSED EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the House will, on the days mentioned below, take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. until 8 o'clock p. m., and that the evening sessions shall be devoted exclusively to bills and measures reported from the committee indicated in the order to be designated by such committees, namely:

"On Saturday evening, June 9, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

"On Monday evening, June 11, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

"On Tuesday evening, June 12, to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

"On Wednesday evening, June 13, to the Committee on the Territories.

"On Thursday and Saturday evenings, June 14 and 16, to the Committee on Commerce.

"On Tuesday evening, July 10, to the Committee on the Territories.

"And that, if at the adjournment of the House on either of the evenings indicated any bill called up should remain undisposed of, such bill shall be considered in the House on the succeeding legislative day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and, after one hour's debate thereon—except on Wednesday, June 13, when three hours' debate shall be allowed, to be equally divided between those in favor of and those opposed to the bill—the House shall proceed to vote upon all pending amendments and on the final passage of the bill without any intervening motion or business."

Mr. CANNON. Before demanding a second, I ask the gentleman from Texas to withhold the resolution a moment, in order to permit an amendment giving two days to the Committee on Invalid Pensions for the consideration of general pension bills.

Mr. MILLS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CANNON. I demand a second.

Mr. CANNON. That is sufficient. A little lower down on the same page the following occurs:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MILLS, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 2.

Mr. CANNON. No quorum.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the resolution.

I want to suggest to the Chair that the Journal does not show this motion, or anything touching it; and I ask, therefore, that the Journal be amended to show ——

Mr. MILLS. What?

Mr. CANNON. The motion——

Mr. MILLS. What about it?

Mr. CANNON. That it was submitted and withdrawn, and all that occurred in relation thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Journal should show that the gentleman from Texas moved to suspend the rules and pass the resolution; that a second was demanded, and that pending the demand for the second, the point of order being made that no quorum had voted, the resolution was withdrawn. That entry will be made in the Journal if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that the hour of adjournment, fixed for to-day at 5 o'clock, may be modified so as to provide that at 6 o'clock to-day the House shall adjourn, unless ordered otherwise by the House.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I object.

Mr. MILLS. Then I move that the House take a recess to-day from 5 o'clock until one minute past 5 o'clock, with a view to continuing the session until 6 o'clock.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this could only be done by unanimous consent. The motion for a recess could not be ordered in advance, except by unanimous consent. At any time before 5 o'clock it will, of course, be in order to move that the House now take a recess.

Mr. MILLS. Then I move to suspend the rules and fix the hour for adjournment this evening at 6 o'clock instead of 5.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point of order that this is not a motion which can be received except by unanimous consent. The motion to suspend the rules is not in order until after the call of States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is correct.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of States for the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

FORT MORGAN MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a bill (H. R. 10679) to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask to have read the heading of the petition which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. A petition is not in order under this call.

Mr. LAWLER. My object is to ascertain where the petition should be sent. I have some doubts in regard to the proper reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the petition; but it goes in the petition-box under the rules.

Mr. LAWLER. Well, I will withdraw it.

IMPROVEMENT OF WABASH RIVER.

Mr. LANDES introduced a bill (H. R. 10680) authorizing the removal of certain obstructions in the Wabash River, opposite Mount Carmel, Ill.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

VENTILATION OF THE HALL.

Mr. LANDES also introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be directed to close all perforations in the floor of the Hall of Representatives where such may be practicable, and to enlarge the openings in the floor along the walls of the Hall, and to procure seats or sofas to be placed along these walls. The cost of said work and the purchase of seats shall not exceed $3,000, to be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

CONTROL OF FORFEITED RAILROADS, ETC.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (H. R. 10681) providing for the control and regulation of railroads acquired by the United States under judicial foreclosure or forfeiture, and for other purposes; which was read a first time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask that this bill be read in full.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BLAND (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether it is now in order to move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point that it is not in order pending the reading of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, but before it was concluded

Mr. BELMONT said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report, the report of a committee of conference. I believe that is now in order under the rules.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point of order that the reading of the bill of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] must be concluded.

Mr. MCCREARY. If there is any doubt on this question I would like to have Rule XXIX read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DUNN). The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] states that he rises to submit a conference report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point that the conference report can not interrupt the reading of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order that the reading of this bill can not be interrupted by the presentation of a conference report. The Chair hardly thinks it necessary to have the rule read. The rule provides that a conference report is always in order, except during the reading of the Journal, during a call of the roll, or while the House is dividing. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] is in order in presenting at this time the conference report.

Mr. BELMONT. It will not take long to dispose of the report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does not the consideration and disposition of this conference report act simply as an interruption of the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is all. The House will resume its regular business just where it left off, and in the same order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. All right.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the conference report.

Mr. BELMONT. The bill has already been agreed upon with the exception of one amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment numbered 16 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"For salary and expenses of a commercial agent at Boma, in the Lower Congo Basin, with authority to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper and Lower Congo Basin, their products, their minerals, their vegetable wealth, the openings for American trade, and to collect such information on the subject of that country as shall be thought of interest to the United States, $4,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

PERRY BELMONT,
JAMES B. McCREARY,
WILLIAM W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
JOHN SHERMAN,
JOHN T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement of the House conferees, submitted under the rule, was read:

JUNE 30, 1888.

The managers on the part of the House submit the following statement to accompany the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. As indicated by the previous report an agreement was reached upon all points of difference except upon the following amendment inserted by the Senate:

"For salaries and expenses of a scientific commission of three persons, to consist of one officer of the Army or Navy competent for such service, a geologists and mineralogist, and a naturalist, to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper Congo Basin, its products, its minerals, its vegetable wealth, the openings for American trade, and to collect such information on the subject of that country as shall be thought of interest to the United States, $25,000; and the President may fix the salaries and compensation of the members of this commission at such sum, not exceeding $6,000, as he may deem proper; and said commission shall expire on the the 30th day of June, 1889."

The Senate has receded from that amendment, and the House conferees have agreed, as a compromise, to an appropriation of $4,000 for the salary and expenses of a commercial agent, to be stationed at Boma, in the Lower Congo Basin, with authority to report upon the resources of the country.

PERRY BELMONT,
JAMES B. McCREARY,
WILLIAM W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, the House conferees considered it to be their duty to oppose firmly the Senate amendment of $25,000 for an exploring expedition to the Congo region, on the ground that such expenditure would be unnecessary and fruitless; and inasmuch as according to the Senate provision the commission would expire on June 30, 1889, even should such an expedition be undertaken, the time would not be sufficient to produce the result desired. After two conferences on this subject the House conferees agreed to a compromise. Considering that there are American interests to be protected in this region and that American missionaries are there at present, it seems important to have an American representative there. The other powers are represented by commercial agents to the Congo Free State. We could not send a consul because the peculiar nature of the Government of the Free State would not permit us to send a consul who could be received. We therefore have followed the example of other Governments and propose to send a commercial agent. The salary is placed at $4,000 because the duty of the commercial agent would according to this provision be to report upon the resources of that comparatively unknown region; and the expenditures necessary for obtaining information would certainly make it important he should receive a sufficient salary.

The Senate wished, I believe, to place the salary at a much higher rate. I notice when the report was made in the Senate the sum here provided was considered inadequate. Still we feel confident $4,000 will be sufficient. I trust the House will so consider it, and that the report will be adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a good deal has been said in the press and at the other end of the Capitol in regard to the prospective commerce of the Congo Basin. I think it is due to the country that some explanation should be made of the prospective commerce of that country, which makes it necessary for the creation of an office and the appointment of an officer of this character.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Arkansas I will say that the Senate amendment ordinarily provided for $25,000 to pay for the employment of three commissioners to visit the upper and lower Congo Basin in Africa. Two gentlemen have been sent from this country to that country within the last few years. I hold in my hand the report made by Mr. Tisdel. He says in regard to that country:

It is my belief that in all the world there is not a richer territory than that which borders the sea, commencing at the Senegal River, in latitude 16° north, and extending to latitude 18° 30′ south, and inland an average distance of 100 miles.

The most valuable productions of the country and for which there is an ever-increasing demand are rubber, palm kernels and palm oil, gum, copal, ground nuts, and wax.

The report also shows that that country is very rich in ivory; rich also in gold and silver. It has attracted much attention in the last few years, and England, Belgium, Germany, Italy, and Sweden have sent their commercial agents to that country. On account of its importance and of its prospective wealth great interest has been manifested, and it has been deemed best that our country should not be behind other countries, but that we should send an agent there to investigate and report on its commercial interests, and on its mineral and its vegetable products, and ascertain what benefit that country might be made to ours.

The Senate in its amendment asked for $25,000, but we thought after conference $4,000 would be enough for us to send to that country a commercial agent who would make report to us on its commercial interests and on its mineral and vegetable products and attractions. The committee believe after lengthy conferences we have arrived at a very proper conclusion. If this is the great basin it is represented to be, and if there is to be the great development in that country that some persons think, and if other countries are sending commercial agents there to make explorations and report, it is certainly proper for us to send a commercial agent there to report to our country.

Mr. BELMONT. I move the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR NATCHEZ.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report, a conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2 and agree to the same.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
JAMES PHELAN,
A. R. ANDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

G. G. VEST,
J. N. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 1669, submit the following in explanation of their report:

The first amendment of the House looked only to the more perfect protection of the navigation of the river; a careful examination of the matter has satisfied us that the provisions of the Senate bill are sufficient for that purpose.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the second House amendment.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
JAMES PHELAN,
A. R. ANDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRISP. I move the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. A bill (S. 2949) granting a pension to the widow of G. K. Warren.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLAND (before the conclusion of the reading). I move that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes. I make this motion in the hope that we may come to some understanding by which we can proceed with business.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order while a bill is being read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Kansas that a motion to adjourn and a motion to take a recess are always in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does the Chair hold that while a gentleman has the floor, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] has, when he has introduced a bill, and has called for the reading of that bill, and the bill is being read, he can be taken off the floor by a motion to take a recess?

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman from Kansas were right a man might introduce a bill here which it would take a week to read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] has not the floor. The bill is being read in accordance with the rule, but the rules of the House provide that a motion to adjourn and a motion to take a recess are always in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The motion to take a recess would undoubtedly be in order if the gentleman had the floor to make it, but my point is that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] holds the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is where the gentleman from Kansas is mistaken. The gentleman from Iowa has not the floor. The bill is being read in accordance with the rules of the House, and not in the time of any gentleman. The gentleman from Iowa could not possibly have held the floor for this length of time under the call of States for the introduction of bills. No gentleman has the floor on this call except to introduce his bill. The gentleman from Iowa demanded the reading of this bill under the rule, and it is being read in accordance with the rule, but it is not being read in any gentleman's time, and no debate is in order. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Chair in his ruling that a motion to take a recess is in order, as would be also a motion to adjourn; but I hope that my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will withdraw his motion for a recess. It is now only 1 o'clock; we have been in session only a short time; this day is set apart for particular business; the call of the States for the introduction of bills is the first thing in order, and we are engaged in that business now, reading a bill which has been introduced under the call, and I can not see that any good will be accomplished either by taking a recess or adjourning. I hope, therefore, that we shall go on with the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. I proposed a recess for only fifteen minutes, in order to see if we could not arrange to proceed with the business of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the motion for a recess is carried——

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course my parliamentary inquiry falls with the motion.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY, from the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9377) "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 34, 55, 56, 58, 59, 67, 68, 69, 78, 80, 83, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 108, 109, 112, 113, 116, 117, 118, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 146, 147, 149, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 171.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 28, 50, 51, 52, 60, 61, 62, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 81, 82, 85, 86, 87, 88, 96, 97, 98, 104, 105, 110, 111, 129, 130, 142, 143, 144, 145, 160, 164, 166, 167, 168, and 169; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$322,015.30;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and in line 1, page 4 of the bill, strike out "twenty-seven" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$93,472.43;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "eight," and after the word "each," in line 4, page 14, of the bill insert: "One of whom shall be in charge of international exchanges;" and in line 5, page 14, of the bill, "one at $960;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$39,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$116,070;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "For indexing records, one clerk of class 2, $1,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$64,319;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$41,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert "for legislative expenses—namely, for rent of secretary's office, hire of a messenger, light, fuel, stationery, postage, office furniture, repairs, and other incidentals, $1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "sixteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$513,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "two clerks of class 1;" and in line 27, page 59, of the bill, strike out the following: "One clerk of class 1;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,280;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "One computer, $1,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$19,320;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For connected and separate United States and other maps prepared in the General Land Office, $15,000; and 2,500 copies of said maps shall be delivered to the Senate, and 5,000 to the House of Representatives for distribution."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Add at the end of the amended paragraph the following:

"Provided, That five special examiners or clerks detailed and acting as supervising examiners and special examiners or clerks detailed as such, not exceeding three in number, with headquarters in the District of Columbia, may be allowed, in addition to their salaries and in lieu of per diem and all expenses for subsistence, a sum not exceeding $900 each per annum: Provided further, That the salary and such allowance to each shall in no case exceed $2,400 per annum;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 134 to 140 inclusive, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following: "For rent of buildings for Interior Department, namely: for the Geological Survey, $10,000; for store-room for documents, $360; for Indian Office, $5,500; for General Land Office, $1,800, which may also be occupied by the Railroad Office until not later than December 1, 1888; and for the Bureau of Education until not later than December 1, 1888, $1,667; in all, $19,327;" and strike out line 2, on page 74 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$116,880;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 170, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM H. FORNEY,
SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement, submitted by the House conferees under the rule, was read:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1889 submit the following written statement in explanation of the action recommended on the amendments as compared with the bill as it passed the House:

On amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 28, relating to the Senate: Provides for annual clerks, at $2,220, to the Committees on Education and Labor, Territories, and Rules; provides for two additional messengers, one at $1,800 and one at $1,440; two carpenters at $960 each; one additional page, at $2.50 per day; for an assistant in the document-room, at $1,200, in lieu of a page at $900; for an additional conductor of the elevator, at $1,200; one machinist and assistant conductor of the elevator, at $1,000; and for an additional laborer in the engineer's department, at $720; places the engineer's department of the Senate under the control of the Architect of the Capitol; and increases the amount for miscellaneous expenses from $15,000 to $25,000.

On amendments 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38: Provides for an additional assistant librarian, at $1,400, in the Library of Congress, to have charge of international exchanges, in lieu of an assistant, at $960; and increases the amount for the purchase of books for the Library from $3,000 to $4,000.

On amendments 44, 45, and 46: Provides for an additional assistant messenger and for a clerk, at $1,400, to index records in the Department of State.

On amendments 47, 48, and 49: Provides for an additional clerk of class 4, and one of class 1, in the division of loans and currency of the Treasury.

On amendments 50, 51, and 52: Provides for one clerk at $1,000, instead of a clerk of class 2 in the miscellaneous division of the Treasury.

On amendments 55 and 56: Restores one clerk of class 4, proposed to be stricken out by the Senate, in the office of the Second Comptroller.

On amendment 57: Provides that the Secretary of War shall prepare and submit to Congress for the fiscal year 1890 estimates in detail for the support and maintenance of the Soldiers' Home.

On amendments 58 and 59: Restores one laborer, proposed to be stricken out by the Senate, in the office of the Third Auditor.

On amendments 60, 61, and 62: Provides for one messenger, at $840, in lieu of a clerk, at $1,000, in the office of the Fourth Auditor.

On amendment 67: Strikes out proposed increase from $7,000 to $8,000 of the amount for expenses connected with the collection of facts relative to internal and foreign commerce.

On amendments 68 and 69: Strikes out proposed increase of $200 in the salary of the translator in the office of the Director of the Mint.

On amendment 72: Increases the amount from $8,000 to $9,000 for paper for interest and other checks and drafts for use of the Treasurer of the United States.

On amendments 73, 74, 75, 76, and 77: Provides for the expenses of the mint at Carson, Nev., in accordance with the appropriations for the fiscal year 1887.

On amendments 78 and 79: Strikes out proposed increase of $200 in each of the salaries for the book-keeper, abstract clerk, weigh clerk, and warrant clerk in the mint at San Francisco.

On amendment 80: Strikes out proposed increase from $7,500 to $10,000 for incidental expenses of the assay office at Boisé City.

On amendments 81 and 82: Provides for an additional associate judge in the Territory of Utah.

On amendment 83: Strikes out proposed increase from $7,000 to $10,000 for traveling and other expenses of the Utah Commission.

On amendment 84: Strikes out the entire provision for expenses of the twelfth biennial session of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, and appropriates $1,500 for miscellaneous expenses in the office of the secretary of that Territory.

On amendments 85, 86, 87, and 88: Provides for a clerk of class 3, or stenographer, at $1,600, for the General of the Army.

On amendments 91, 92, 93, 94, and 95: Leaves the provision for the office of the Quartermaster-General just as passed by the House.

On amendments 96, 97, and 98: Provides for an additional assistant messenger in the office of the Commissary-General.

On amendments 99 and 100: Provides for an additional laborer in the office of the Surgeon-General.

On amendments 103, 104, 105, 106: Provides for an additional clerk of class 1, and three copyists at $720 each, in the office of the Naval Records of the War of the Rebellion.

On amendments 108 and 109: Strikes out the proposed increase in the amount for rent of buildings and other expenses of the Hydrographic Office, including expenses of removal, from $1,500 to $6,000.

On amendments 110 and 111: Reduces the amount for contingent expenses of branch office of the Hydrographic Office in certain cities from $15,500 to $11,000.

On amendments 112, 113, 114, and 115: Strikes out proposed increase in pay to the assistant astronomers in the Naval Observatory, and provides for one computer at $1,200.

On amendments 116, 117, and 118: Strikes out proposed increase of one clerk of class 3 to assist in the preparation of work for the Board of Pension Appeals, and restores the two carpenters at $900 each proposed to be stricken out under the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

On amendment 119: Strikes out the proposed reduction from $15,000 to $7,000 for United States maps, and provides that 2,500 of said maps shall be delivered to the Senate, and 5,000 to the House of Representatives for distribution.

On amendments 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, and 125: Leaves the provision for the force in the Pension Office as it passed the House.

On amendments 126, 127, 128, and 129: Restores the limitation requiring that the diem shall be paid to pension examiners only when absent from home and traveling on duty outside the District of Columbia; provides for assistance to such examiners, and authorizes per diem in lieu of subsistence to five special examiners or clerks detailed to act as supervising examiners and special examiners or clerks detailed as such, not exceeding three in number, with headquarters in the District of Columbia, in addition to their salaries not exceeding $900 each per annum; but providing that the salary and such allowance to each shall in no case exceed $2,400 per annum.

On amendment 130: Appropriates $2,400 for the share of the United States in conducting the international bureau at Berne, Switzerland, for the protection of industrial property.

On amendments 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, and 140: Appropriates for the rent of buildings for the General Land Office for the entire year and for the Bureau of Education and Railway Office until not later than December 1, 1888.

On amendments 142, 143, 144, and 145: Provides for an additional clerk of class 2, three clerks of class 1, and one laborer in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

On amendments 146 and 147: Strikes out proposed additional laborer in the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

On amendments 149 and 150: Strikes out proposed increase of three additional clerks at $900 each in the Dead-Letter Office.

On amendments 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, and 157: Strikes out provision for rent of an additional building for the use of the Division of Post-Office Supplies of the Post-Office Department, and the additional force and expense of caring for the same.

On amendment 158: Strikes out proposed reduction of amount from $18,200 to $18,000 for publication of the Official Postal Guide.

On amendment 159, restores the provision proposed to be stricken out, requiring that one of the Assistant Attorneys-General shall take charge of business in the Court of Claims under the Bowman act.

On amendment 160, appropriates $1,000 for purchase of session laws and statutes of States and Territories for the Department of Justice.

On amendments 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, and 171, makes provision for the expenses of the Department of Labor, recently established by law, as proposed by the Senate, except the amount for per diem in lieu of subsistence of special agents, is reduced from $47,500 to $43,500; the amount for contingent expenses is reduced from $6,000 to $5,000, and the provision for street-car tickets is stricken out.

The bill as agreed to in conference appropriates $20,653,445.57, being $75,775 less than as it passed the Senate, $130,290.47 more than as it passed the House, $7,301.90 more than the last appropriation act, and $846,675.23 less than the estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1889.

WM. H. FORNEY,
SAM. J. RANDALL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] to amendment numbered 103. According to the statement as read by the Clerk, it appeared that the House had receded from its disagreement to that amendment of the Senate, with an amendment the effect of which was to strike out something in regard to which the House and Senate had agreed. Is that so?

Mr. FORNEY. The case is simply this: The Senate provided for a clerk of class 2; and we thought a clerk of class 1 was sufficient. That was the only difference. There is the same force, but the amount of salary is $200 less.

Mr. ADAMS. It makes not the slightest difference to me whether this particular amendment is adopted or not; but it ought to make a considerable difference to all of us whether a conference committee shall be permitted to strike from a bill anything in regard to which the two Houses have come to an agreement. I submit to the gentleman that a conference committee has no more right to strike out a provision of that kind than I have.

Mr. FORNEY. We have not done so. The Senate added that amendment; and of course we had the right to amend the Senate amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Let us see whether I understand the case. The House in that part of the bill provided for one clerk of class 1. The Senate proposed to add to that provision one clerk of class 2. As I understood the reading of the report, the House conferees agreed to the insertion of one clerk of class 2, with a provision that a clerk of class 1 be stricken out. Is that correct?

Mr. FORNEY. No, sir.

Mr. ADAMS. What is the provision? Are there two clerks of class 1?

Mr. FORNEY. Only one clerk of class 1. We refused to concur in the amendment of the Senate. We have increased the force one clerk of class 1 and three copyists.

Mr. ADAMS. Then you did not accede to the proposition of the Senate there should be any addition of one clerk of class 2?

Mr. FORNEY. Only one clerk of class 1.

Mr. ADAMS. You struck it out.

Mr. FORNEY. We compromised by giving three copyists instead of one.

Mr. ADAMS. How many clerks of class 2 will remain in consequence of the adoption of the conference report?

Mr. FORNEY. Two of class 1, none of class 2, one of $1,000, and three copyists.

Mr. ADAMS. All right.

Mr. FORNEY. We think that is a sufficient force. I move the conference report be adopted.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the States and Territories be called and the call be completed with the understanding and agreement that there shall be no motion made to suspend the rules.

Mr. BURROWS. There will be no objection to that if we can be permitted to suspend the rules and pass the dependent pension bill.

Objection was made.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand there is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard objection to the request.

Mr. BURROWS. Who made it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. CLARDY. I move to proceed with the consideration of Senate bill 1305, to incorporate the Maritime Company of Nicaragua

Mr. BURROWS. Who objected to my proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Several gentlemen objected. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HOPKINS] objected.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My understanding is if consent be given to that bill then we will be taken out of the position in which we now are.

Mr. CLARDY. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reading of the bill to which the gentleman refers will be resumed when the call of the States is resumed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Without any business coming in?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HAYDEN. I object.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent to take up a bill to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, to which there can be no valid objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WARNER. Perhaps the gentleman might withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman from Massachusetts will not object to this bill. It has been indorsed by the Chicago Convention. I do not think any objection will come from that side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection? The Chair understands the gentleman does not withdraw his objection.

The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill introduced by Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, was concluded; and it was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

MUNICIPAL CODE FOR THE DISTRICT.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask, by unanimous consent, to introduce a bill (H. R. ——) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask for the reading of the bill in extenso.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rise to ask, by unanimous consent, that the House pass to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) for the reduction of the revenue. It is evident unless this motion is adopted we will transact no business to-day.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. If there is——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. I move to take a recess for twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move an amendment so we may take a recess until one minute before 5 o'clock.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask the gentleman from Kansas to yield to allow me to pass a little bill that will not take a minute. It is merely to correct the description of a piece of land.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I have no possible objection, so far as I am concerned, if it does not interfere in any way with our rights under the call of States.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then I ask consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind the gentleman from Minnesota that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] made the motion to take the recess. The gentleman from Kansas, who moved an amendment to that motion, can not withdraw the pending motion; and until that is withdrawn the Chair can entertain no requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. MACDONALD. I only ask the gentleman to yield to me long enough to allow the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas as an amendment to the pending motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the House take a recess until one minute to 5 o'clock to-day.

Mr. MACDONALD. The gentleman from Missouri consents that I may call this bill up. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the question is taken on the motion, I think perhaps we might reach some agreement by which business could be transacted to-day. It is evident that the House at this late time in the session and at the present stage of its business does not desire to waste this day in useless dilatory proceedings.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. I ask unanimous consent to take up the land-forfeiture bill——

Mr. CANNON. And I ask unanimous consent to take up the dependent pension bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORD. The ruling passion strong in death.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to taking up any bill that we can agree upon and dispose of it——

Mr. BAYNE. Very well. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask——

Mr. SPRINGER. But I do object to wasting the time of the House for the whole day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind the gentleman that it can not entertain any matter by unanimous consent pending the motion for a recess. The regular order being demanded——

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] assented to the withdrawal of his motion for the purpose of permitting the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand the gentleman; and in addition to that a gentleman in front of the Chair has demanded the regular order. Now, if the motion for a recess is withdrawn, then the regular order of business will be the proceeding under the call of States.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit a point of order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind the gentleman that the regular order has been demanded, which is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the House take a recess until one minute to 5 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I wish to submit a question of order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If the gentleman from Missouri who made the motion to take a recess for thirty minutes will withdraw his motion I will withdraw mine.

Mr. BLAND. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion for a recess having been withdrawn, the regular order is the proceeding under the call of States. The gentleman from Iowa demands the reading of the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I understand that the regular order is not insisted upon. I want the House now to agree to take up and consider——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the regular order is demanded.

Mr. BAYNE. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not so understand him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has also demanded the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. Very well; I renew my motion for a recess.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is to ask unanimous consent that the House take up and consider the bill declaring the forfeiture——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Indiana that the regular order is demanded, and that the Chair can not entertain any request.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my question involves one of order which I desire to submit to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is that I have asked unanimous consent to take up the bill declaring the forfeiture of certain land grants. I submit, sir, that the presentation of that request entitles me to have it submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order; and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And I renew the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. But, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to remind the gentleman from Indiana, because the Chair wishes to be perfectly patient and respectful to the gentleman, that the regular order was demanded before the Chair had an opportunity of recognizing the gentleman to submit his request.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the Chair state who has demanded it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] in front of the Chair for one, and the Chair has heard several gentlemen make the same demand from different parts of the Hall.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I renew the amendment that the House take a recess until one minute to 5 o'clock.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And that members be permitted to file their bills with the Clerk.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is not my motion.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. Is it not in order for the Chair to recognize a member to ask unanimous consent that a special bill be taken up and made the regular order of business for the day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not when the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. BAYNE. Will not the request, if granted, supersede the demand for the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. BAYNE. If unanimous consent be given will not that supersede——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not the liberty to entertain a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I propose to ask that the dependent pension bill be taken up, to which there will be no objection on either side of the House. I propose to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the dependent pension bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain the motion pending the demand for the regular order. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] that the House take a recess until one minute to 5 o'clock.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The suggestion was accepted by the gentleman from Kansas that members be allowed to file bills with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain requests for unanimous consent pending the demand for the regular order.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is for the purpose of giving the reading clerks a rest.

The Chair put the question and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 75.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I ask for tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McSHANE. On that motion I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 70.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Tha House again divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 58.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has yet voted. The tellers will retain their places.

Mr. BAYNE. I suggest we have a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not adopt the suggestion. It requires a vote.

The Chair put the question and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. BAYNE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 69.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent when there is a demand for the regular order.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I call for the regular order.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 3, 1888.

The House was called to order at 11 o'clock a. m. by Mr. CRISP, as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 3, 1888.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House of Representatives to-day.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

AMENDMENT OF LAND LAWS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 184) to amend the joint resolution approved May 14, 1888, relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 2, 1888.

Resolved, That this joint resolution pass with an amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the resolution which has just been read.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

Page 1, at the end of line 4, add:

"And the provisions of said joint resolution as hereby amended are extended until the close of the present Congress."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will be concurred in.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS FLINT RIVER, GEORGIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H.

R. 5096) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Flint River, in the State of Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 30, 1888.

Resolved, That this bill pass, with amendments.

Mr. ROGERS. On behalf of the presiding officer [Mr. CRISP] I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments to the House bill.

The Clerk reported the amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "war," insert "the construction of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate amendments? The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

BRIDGE AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9816) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 30, 1888.

Resolved, That this bill pass, with amendments.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, there are two formal amendments to this bill, one simply changing the word "Congress" to the "Secretary of War," and the other providing that if the bridge is not constructed within three years it shall be forfeited without any judicial or legislative act.

I ask unanimous consent to concur in these two amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk reported the amendments as follows:

Page 3, line 26, strike out "Congress" and insert "Secretary of War."
Page 4, line 4, after "bridge," insert "under the provision of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate amendments? The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNIE GIBSON YATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7708) to increase the pension of Annie Gibson Yates.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 30, 1888.

Resolved, That this bill pass with an amendment.

Referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PROMOTION OF ASSISTANT SURGEONS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 35) to authorize the promotion of certain assistant surgeons of the Army after twenty years' service; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GEORGE E. W. SHARRATTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 59) for the relief of George E. W. Sharratts; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 705) to establish additional life-saving stations; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LIGHT-HOUSE WHARF, ASTORIA, OREGON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 707) providing for the purchase of a site and the construction of a wharf at Astoria, Oregon, for the use of the light-house establishment; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (S. 2449) granting a pension to the widow of G. K. Warren—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (S. 2778) making an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the construction of a light-house on the headlands near the mouth of the Umpqua River in the State of Oregon—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1521) for the relief of M. C. Mordecai—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1438) providing for the appointment of assistants to the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill (S. 1257) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah H. Wood—to the Committee on War Claims.

REPRESENTATIVES OF HENRY S. FRENCH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 82) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be now put upon its passage. It merely provides to refer the case to the Court of Claims for adjudication. The claim has been favorably reported to this House, and it has been acted upon favorably by both Houses in previous Congresses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the legal representatives of Henry S. French, deceased, late of Nashville, Tenn., be, and are hereby, authorized to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of the net proceeds of 230 bales of cotton taken at Jonesborough, Ga., in September, 1864, by General William G. Le Duc, by order of General Sherman, and turned over to the Treasury agent, and by him sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States; and for this purpose jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine and render judgment in conformity with the rights of the respective parties: Provided, That an appeal shall lie in said cause from said court to the Supreme Court as in other cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have the report read, reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a Senate bill which has just been laid before the House, and of course there is no House report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there a House bill for the same purpose?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not informed as to that.

Mr. KERR. Has the case been referred to a committee?

Mr. WASHINGTON. The case has been favorably reported to the House by Mr. GAINES, of Virginia.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] that this bill be now considered?

Mr. BYNUM. I object.

ANCHORAGE OF VESSELS OFF THE PORT OF NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report and submitting an estimate of an appropriation for carrying into effect the provisions of the act in relation to the anchorage of vessels off the port of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BACON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. CARLTON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HAYDEN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. LANDES, indefinitely, on account of important business.

REPRESENTATIVES OF HENRY S. FRENCH.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 82) for the relief of Henry S. French lie for the present on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 653) defining the positions and salaries of assistant astronomers at the United States Naval Observatory, and for other purposes; and it was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report back the Post-Office appropriation bill with the Senate amendments and certain recommendations of the committee.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889.

Mr. BLOUNT. There were seven amendments made by the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The first amendment strikes out the paragraph providing "for compensation to clerks in post-offices for unusual business, as contemplated by Revised Statutes, section 3863, $50,000." The House committee recommend non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate striking out that item.

The second amendment of the Senate strikes out the appropriation "for rent, light, and fuel to post-offices of the third class, $650,607," and proposes to insert in lieu thereof "$450,000." The committee recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

The third Senate amendment is the insertion of a proviso in connection with the appropriation for rent, light, and fuel to post-offices of the third class, which proviso is in these words:

Provided, That there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post-office for rent a sum in excess of $300, nor more than $60 for fuel and lights in any one year, nor shall any contract be made calling for the payment of either rent, or fuel, or lights beyond the fiscal year 1889.

The committee recommend non-concurrence in the amendment.

The fourth amendment made by the Senate strikes out the following provision in the House bill:

The Postmaster-General in his discretion may hereafter allow rent, light, and fuel at offices of the third class, in the same manner he does now at offices of the first and second classes.

The committee recommend non-concurrence in this amendment.

The fifth amendment of the Senate is—

For the additional expense of the free-delivery service made necessary by the act entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter-carriers in cities shall be employed per day," approved May 24, 1888, $1,000,000.

The committee recommend concurrence in this amendment.

The sixth amendment of the Senate provides—

That hereafter the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, and scions shall be charged at the rate of 1 cent for each eight ounces or fraction thereof, subject in all other respects to the existing law.

I beg to call attention to the fact that under the terms of this amendment the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, etc., would be reduced to 2 cents a pound, while the debate in the Senate discloses the fact that the purpose of the Senate in adopting the amendment, as of the gentleman who offered it, was that the rate should be 8 cents a pound. By some clerical error the rate has been fixed in this amendment at 2 cents a pound. The committee recommend non-concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. STEELE. What is the present rate?

Mr. BLOUNT. Sixteen cents a pound.

The seventh amendment is what some of us term the "subsidy amendment," though other gentlemen might prefer some other designation. I will read the amendment:

To provide more efficient mail service between the United States and Central and South America and the West Indies, $800,000. To promote the purposes of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to contract with American built and registered steam-ships for the transportation of the United States mails to such ports in said countries as in his judgment will best subserve said postal service. Said contracts shall be for a period of not less than five nor more than ten years, at a compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth.

The Postmaster-General shall cause schedules to be furnished by the contractors stating dates of departure of steam-ships from the United States six months in advance, and in case of unreasonable failure of any steam-ship or steam-ships to depart with mails on the date or dates therein stated, the Postmaster-General may withhold from the contractor or contractors as penalty one-half the contract price for said trip or trips, and in the event of continued failure to depart on dates stated in the schedule the Postmaster-General may annul the contract or contracts, or the same may be terminated by Congress.

The committee recommend non-concurrence in this amendment. There is a division of opinion in the committee in relation to the merits of the amendment; but I believe there is a unanimous feeling on the part of all the members of the committee that at this stage of proceeding it is better to non-concur in the amendment and let it go to the committee of conference. It is believed that in reference to all the amendments, save what I have designated as the "subsidy amendment," there has not been the fullest information in the possession of the Senate—at least not so full information as was in the possession of the House, and which was not, by reason of the limitations on debate, brought to light in the discussion upon the passage of the bill.

It is therefore deemed best to non-concur in all these amendments, trusting that we shall reach in the committee of conference a conclusion satisfactory to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it proposed to non-concur in the letter-carrier amendment?

Mr. BLOUNT. We recommend concurrence in the fifth amendment with relation to letter-carriers, because a careful estimate made under the direction of the Postmaster-General discloses the fact that the appropriation proposed in that amendment is the least sum that can be got along with in order to execute the law; and the House committee agree entirely with the Senate in thinking it advisable to get that matter out of the way. The committee therefore recommend non-concurrence in all the amendments, numbering seven, except the fifth amendment. Therefore, unless some gentleman desires a separate vote, I will move to non-concur in all the amendments except the fifth, and ask a committee of conference.

I also ask to be permitted to print in the RECORD the views of the Postmaster-General in reference to all these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks leave to print in the RECORD a letter of the Postmaster-General in relation to the pending amendments. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., July 2, 1888.

SIR: In compliance with your request I have the honor to return herewith H. R. 9345, with my views upon the several amendments, which appear by erasures and italics, and are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

1. "For compensation to clerks in post-offices for unusual business, as contemplated by Revised Statutes, section 3963, $50,000."

In my opinion, this provision of the appropriation bill should be retained. Very early in my administration of this Department my attention was called to many cases where visitors attracted by business enterprise, in pursuit of health, or for other considerations, had been drawn in such numbers to localities as to completely overwhelm the ordinary means and facilities provided by the Department for the service of the mails at such places. In one place the population increased from 20,000 to 80,000 in four months. The result was that not only were there no adequate means to serve the public at the local post-offices, but what there were, were prostrated. By the ordinary legal methods under which allowances might be increased at such places, by an advance in class—third and fourth class offices—there could be no advance, and consequent allowances to such offices, except upon quarterly returns of business; and even then unless the office reached the grade of second-class upon such returns no allowance could be made for such an exigency, to enable it to employ clerks, or to provide adequate quarters for conducting the increased business. There was no fund on hand from which an extraordinary allowance could be made under the statute above referred to. There had been no fund provided from which it could be allowed. And even if the appropriation for clerk-hire of first and second class offices could have been drawn upon legally, which a proper construction of the statute would not permit, there was no fund in that appropriation which could be spared. Obligations for which no appropriation had been made could not be incurred. In this state of things I had the honor to submit to Congress an estimate for an urgent deficiency appropriation embracing an amount to relieve these cases. That appropriation was promptly voted and relief was granted, after great hardship borne by a very large number of citizens from the delay.

Every observant citizen knows that in this country, with an exceptionally restless and enterprising people, with facilities for rapid and safe travel to every part of the land, the conditions above described frequently occur, and must continue to do so. Power and means should be at hand to give instant relief. In so far as the Government serves its citizens it should care for them whether at home, at summer or winter resorts, upon their travels, in their business enterprises, and at all places which know them. It has been suggested that this small sum provided might be used to increase the salaries of postmasters under the statute above cited; but the estimate, and the bill as drawn, provide for nothing but clerical assistance in the extraordinary cases specified. The appropriation should be made separately, so that there may be no confusion and no trenching upon the regular appropriation for clerk-hire, which is barely sufficient for the purposes for which it is appropriated with a properly economical administration of the fund. Applicants for this relief should know that the fund is limited, and that the case must be one strictly within the object of the appropriation before it can be trenched upon.

2 and 3. "For rent, light, and fuel to post-offices of the third class, $450,000: Provided, That there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post-office for rent a sum in excess of $300, nor more than $60 for fuel and light in any one year; nor shall any contract be made calling for the payment of either rent or fuel or lights beyond the fiscal year 1889."

In my opinion the item for rent, fuel, and light for post-offices of the third class should be restored as originally fixed, to $650,607. There should be no arbitrary limitation of the allowances from the fund to the ten different grades of this class as proposed. There are 1,908 third-class offices, the aggregate of whose gross receipts reaches $7,202,808, an amount equal to the gross receipts of all the more favored second-class offices. The business of these offices differs in amount and largely differs in the work imposed. The gross receipts range from $1,900 to $8,000. The business of separating and preparing mail to send out to other points on star routes or railroad routes does not appear in gross receipts. In the majority of the third-class offices mails are received, not for local distribution, but for retransmission, without new payment of postage, for distribution on subroutes of which the third-class office is the local terminus. If the limit named in the proviso for rent, fuel, and lights were assigned to each of the third-class offices the amount required would be $688,889, but many, in all fairness in the interest of good service, would require more than that limit, and many would require less. Certain it is, that if relief at all is to be given to these offices, which constitute over 75 per cent. of the Presidential post-offices of the country, and on whom rests the chief burden of the business outside the great cities, the amount should be at least the original estimate.

Under the present law, on the face of the relations between the Government and the third-class postmasters, the Government offers each a salary of from one thousand to two thousand dollars. Practically, however, the supposed recipient of the salary does receive it, but pays it out again—save as he may be relieved by special but wholly inadequate allowances for separating service—to secure quarters for the proper transaction of the public business, and for necessary help or clerk-hire to enable him to properly serve the mails, and for furniture, fixtures, and stationery.

As I have before had occasion to state, after a careful consideration of the whole subject, the policy pursued by the Government towards those who serve in the capacity of third and fourth class postmasters has not been such as is worthy of this enlightened, liberal, prosperous, and just Republic. The treatment of the fifty-six thousand seven hundred and eighty-five offices of the third and fourth classes, who do the business of the country at large, does not compare favorably with the properly liberal policy pursued toward the less than six hundred offices of the first and second classes, comprising those which transact the business in the cities.

As well stated by my distinguished predecessor, the late Hon. T. O. Howe—

"Every postmaster receiving less than $2,000 per annum finds his own office, furniture, warms and lights it, does his own work, and buys his own stationery; but the moment his salary reaches $2,000 the whole condition is changed. Then the office may be, and usually is, provided by the Government; is furnished, warmed, and lighted by the Government. His stationery and his clerks are paid for by the Government. In possible if not actual cases the salary is a mere sinecure for which no service is rendered beyond signing the official papers."

It may be said, too, of the fourth-class offices that through all reductions of postage the amount of postage received has furnished the standard of compensation. No other standard has been adopted and no other readjustment of compensation has been made which in justice is required, especially when the increased labor imposed by increased business has resulted from lower postage, which has at the same time reduced compensations.

There are now first and second class offices as follows:

First-class	97
Second-class	497
	594
Of these there are in Government buildings paying no rent	91
	503

Irrespective of the comparatively large salaries paid to Presidential postmasters of these two classes, the following are the appropriations made for their maintenance:

Rent, fuel, and light for but 503 offices, including stations	$550,000
Compensation to clerks, 594 offices	5,950,000
Free-delivery service for same	7,000,000
Furniture for same	25,000
Such post-office supplies as in which third-class offices do not share (estimated)	40,000
	14,565,000
Salaries to first and second class postmasters are	1,318,500
	15,883,000

The gross receipts of the first and second class offices are 31,246,413

It will be seen that there is paid out for the business of first and second class offices about 50 per cent. of the gross receipts.

The aggregate of the gross receipts of the third-class offices is $7,202,308

They have no allowances for rent, fuel, and light. No allowances for clerk-hire (save as may be assigned under a special statute for separating service, amounting in the aggregate to but $268,734). So that the nineteen hundred and eight third-class offices can claim nothing but the salaries aggregating $2,561,300.

I append herewith the tables furnished me by the chief of the salary and allowance division from which the above figures have been gathered.

If it is still contemplated to afford any amendment to the condition of the fourth-class offices, I may add for your information that on returns just completed for the four quarters ended March 31, 1888, the aggregate postal revenues from those offices was $13,031,190.90.

The postal revenue of the third and fourth class offices together for the same period is $20,233,498.90; of the first class for that period it is $23,316,337.

"4. The Postmaster-General, in his discretion, may hereafter allow rent, light, and fuel at offices of the third class in the same manner he does now at offices of the first and second classes."

For the reasons I have heretofore given, I do not think there should be an arbitrary limitation on the Postmaster-General's discretion as provided in the provision (3) above quoted. The provision, however, should be amended, for the reason that the standard applied to first and second class offices would not serve for third class offices, as the system of compensation by box-rents and commissions does not apply. In my opinion, a limitation upon the discretion of the Department should be imposed by providing a maximum allowance by a system of percentages on the gross receipts, and I suggest that this be fixed at 8 per cent. with a proviso that nothing herein contained shall be construed as taking away the power of the Postmaster-General to allow for separating as at present; such allowances to come from this fund.

5. "For the additional expense of the free-delivery service, made necessary by the act entitled 'An act to limit the hours that letter-carriers in cities shall be employed per day,' approved May 24, 1888, $1,000,000."

You have already had my views that the appropriation of $1,000,000 to carry out the provisions of the eight-hour law is adequate and needed.

6. "That hereafter the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, and cions shall be charged at the rate of 1 cent for each 8 ounces or fraction thereof, subject in all other respects to existing law."

I have had the honor to express my views on the subject of postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, and cions in several previous communications. I can not doubt that the amendment inserted in the accompanying bill, as printed, inasmuch as it provides that the postage shall be "at the rate of 1 cent for each 8 ounces or fraction thereof" is a clerical error. I do not understand that it has ever been contemplated that this postage should be reduced more than one-half. I have not before heard that it had been suggested to reduce that postage to 2 cents per pound.

SUBSIDY.

The remaining provision of the bill is as follows:

7. "To provide more efficient mail service between the United States and Central and South America and the West Indies, $800,000. To promote the purposes of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to contract with American built and registered steam-ships for the transportation of the United States mails to such ports in said countries as in his judgment will best subserve said postal service. Said contracts shall be for a period of not less than five nor more than ten years, at a compensation not exceeding, for each outward trip, $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course to secure the ends above set forth.

"The Postmaster-General shall cause schedules to be furnished by the contractors, stating dates of departure of steam-ships from the United States six months in advance, and in case of unreasonable failure of any steam-ships to depart with mails on the date or dates therein stated the Postmaster-General may withhold from the contractor or contractors as penalty one-half the contract price for said trip or trips, and in the event of continued failure to depart on dates stated in the schedule the Postmaster-General may annul the contract or contracts, or the same may be terminated by Congress."

It will hardly be claimed for this legislation that it is either demanded or required, or that it can be utilized for the benefit of the postal service merely. The resources and powers of the Department have proved entirely adequate to afford to the citizens of the United States a foreign mail service equal to, and in most cases superior to, that of any nation in the world. Nine-tenths of our foreign letter mail crosses the Atlantic, and the settled policy of the Department has been to employ the swiftest vessels from week to week for carrying the mails. The Department, at the request of prominent merchants, importers, and bankers of the United States having commercial relations with foreign countries, has endeavored to induce foreign postal administrations to adopt a similar policy to promote expedition and security in correspondence.

Under the present system, on routes other than to European ports, mails have been carried in American steam-ships at four times the rates paid for transatlantic service, although no foreign vessel has ever refused or hesitated to accept the sea postage, or one-fourth the rate paid to American bottoms. Under the present conditions the Central and South American letter mail increases at the rate of about 10 per cent. in weight a year, and the number of sailings to West Indian and Central and South American ports from the three ports of New York, New Orleans, and San Francisco increased in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, from 712 to 831. In addition to the compensation paid in money, all common carriers by water are greatly benefited by carrying the mail. Provision for their benefit in Brazilian ports are as follows: Mail steamers are allowed to immediately discharge their cargoes, preference being given them before any other vessel and before they have been entered at the custom-house, both on week days and on Sundays or holidays.

They may sail at any hour, day or night, after they have received the mail, and can not be detained under any pretext whatever beyond the hour fixed for sailing. Similar benefits are provided for mail steamers at other West Indian and Central and South American ports. While the Department in every case has given the preference to American ships at four times the cost of carriage on competing foreign ships as permitted by law, yet in very many cases because of very much greater expedition or because of the absence of proper facilities in American steamers, or because of very great delays, the other ships offering have been given the business at the lower rate on the principle that the first duty of the Department to our citizens under the law was to give them the best, most expeditious, and certain mail facilities within its resources.

If there shall be superadded to the functions of postal administration that of administering a subsidy or a bounty for the promotion of American shipping interests I can readily see why, in practice, these two offices must so conflict that, so far from being of advantage to and promoter of efficient mail service, such a subsidy, with such a purpose, in the hands of the Postmaster-General must antagonize and overbear the primary object of his office, which is to give to the correspondence of our citizens the best expedition and certain transmission. If the bounty or bonus system is to be revived, it should be done without involving this Department in the complications certain to arise from administering it, and without hampering its fundamental rule of action, which is that the mails must go at all events.

While we granted aid to Pacific railroads, with conditions imposed that the mails should be carried for a credit on the debt, yet the Department was left free to employ better or more expeditious routes in its discretion. The proposed legislation will be in effect a mandate to the Postmaster-General to contract with American-built as well as American-registered steam-ships for the transportation of the mails to the ports of Central and South America and the West Indies for a period of not less than five years and with a compensation for each outward trip of $1 per mile. There is no condition for advertisement, and indeed, unlike even the British subsidy acts, competition is not contemplated or permitted, as the contracts are to be limited to American ships, and as to these will be practically limited to those now in existence, between whom there is comparatively no competition because of the number which can be employed in the service.

In the present conditions the proposed law might as well have named the few persons to whom this money is to be paid. Even the laws (Revised Statutes, sections 3976 and 4203) under which American ships might be compelled to carry the mails have been repealed (23 United States Statutes at Large, 58), and it goes without saying that the proposed legislation intends the Department to pay the maximum rate provided, i. e., $1 per nautical mile for five years, to these few persons, without troubling them with any negotiations as to terms, and, indeed, as you will observe, without even the lodgment of discretion in the Department to designate from what ports of the United States the mails shall sail. It may be said in passing that presumably the "terminal points" from which sailings will be made, if self-interest, as is usually the case, governs, will be those from which the greatest number of nautical miles may be computed, rather than from those at which the convenience and needs of the service would be suited. It may be noted also that the schedules of sailings are to be furnished by the contractors, and not by the Postmaster-General; altogether from an analysis of the proposed legislation it would seem to exclude the exercise of any power of any representative of this Government to provide for this mail service in the interest of the people, except after contract, which must be on the carrier's own terms and after the carriers have fixed the schedules according to their ideas of what the mail service should be, to compel them to conform to their own expressed views and decision as to the public convenience and the public interests.

I beg you to believe that in this criticism of the bill I am not commenting unfavorably at this place upon a policy of granting bounties to American ships. I do think, however, that the carrying out of that policy should not be involved in the postal administration. Such gifts should be voted and given directly, if the Government shall determine to pursue a policy of engaging in this branch of private business. With very great respect, however, to the framers of the bill, I do seriously object to that provision of the proposed legislation which places the mail service at the mercy of any firm, individual, or corporation. While, indeed, the subsidized lines might be compelled to carry the mails if tendered, yet the Department should be independent, and should at all times be enabled to send the mails by the most expeditious routes and make use of the best facilities afforded for that purpose from among all carriers offering. The Department should be free to take advantage of all sailings, of increased facilities coming from increased business, of changes for the better wrought by time, extension of commerce, and competition, and should not be tied up for a decade to single lines of communication, unstimulated to improvement and all progress by the existence of a settled, inordinate, and certain income.

Herewith I furnish you two tables, marked "A" and "B." From them you will see that the mails of this country were carried to Central and South America and the West Indies for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, by foreign steamers at a cost of $7,936.27 at the single rate, and by steamers of American register at a cost of $39,381.57. The number of miles sailed by the foreign ships employed was 666,448; the miles sailed by the ships of American register employed were 546,758. It will be seen, on the plan of payment proposed, which is fixed without regard to the amount of mail carried, that the service, which cost us in the fiscal year 1887 $47,317.84, would have cost us, if paid for as proposed, $1,213,206. It is estimated that the weight of mails will be for the next fiscal year increased 20 per cent. over these figures, and from what I have before shown it will be seen that the number of sailings will be increased in about the same ratio over the figures given in Tables A and B. The total cost of the sailings under this bill, predicated upon the business of 1887, can be but an approximate standard by which to estimate the cost under a provision of $1 for every nautical mile for each outward trip.

But without regard to the cost, it is perfectly evident, from an examination of these tables and from the experience of the Department in affording the best attainable service, that "American-built ships" alone, with whom the Department can now contract under this bill, and with which it must contract for a term of years, can not perform the service absolutely essential. Heretofore, as I have said, whenever it has been possible and consistent with the best interests of the public which this Department serves, American ships have been employed to carry the mails at four times the rate paid to foreign ships; yet with this policy steadily maintained, to give proper service at all it has been necessary to employ other carriers, as shown by Schedule A. One of the most serious disadvantages from connecting the proposed subsidy with this Department will be that, even in cases where service is not furnished to certain ports by American ships at all, carriers that might be had will hardly suffer the enormous discrimination in compensation for the carriage of the mails. The conditions would certainly predispose human nature to refuse to perform the service at all.

Again, it will not commend itself to our people if, with this enormous compensation, avowedly for the carriage of the mails, frequency of transmission shall be largely curtailed, even to ports touched by American ships, as must be the case where we pay one carrier about two hundred and fifty times as much as we offer for the same service to another. In my opinion the bill would not be advantageous to the service, but the disadvantages would be positive in so far as this Department is concerned; while if it shall become a law, the Department will of course faithfully administer the fund in accordance with the spirit of the act. I feel confident that such administration will result only in a very great pecuniary benefit to a dozen individuals, at the expense and embarrassment of good service, and of inconvenience, injustice, and material injury to the great body of the people, whose money will be used in the purchase of those results.

Considering this as a subsidy pure and simple, unconnected with the postal service, it becomes a question of general policy with which this Department has nothing to do. The subject has been ably and exhaustively discussed in Congress, notably in the Thirty-fifth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-ninth. You, sir, and other distinguished members of the Post-Office Committee as at present constituted, have on the floor of the House presented the learning which the history of the subject, political economy, or the experience of legislation can teach. It has been frequently demonstrated by the experience of this and other countries that to enable one line by Government aid to carry more cheaply and thus to destroy competition, does not promote commerce.* The most successful ocean steamship lines of the Continent—those of Hamburg and Bremen—receive no pay from the government other than the moderate postage rates.† The British precedent is not in point and would not be even if Great Britain did not offer her mail service to the carriers of the world. "Her aims are political and not commercial. She must have constant communication with the colonies, and she has spent large sums for this object. She must have an efficient and capable transport service for the protection of those colonies."‡ The views of that government are stated in Mr. Scudemore's report (Parl. Papers 1867-'8 XII, 131) as follows:

"The question (mail subsidy service) can not be dealt with on commercial principles. * * * For the sake of keeping up such communication with the East as the nation requires they must set commercial principles at defiance, and cost what it may the nation must either pay them what they lose thereby or forego the communication."

‡ Hadley.

Of course England may subsidize lines of ships to open up new markets for her surplus, because she freely exchanges commodities with such markets, and her policy is after establishing the commerce to steadily decrease the subsidy. If the policy of giving bounties to promote commercial relations with other countries be ever adopted again after the failures in our history, it would seem that its adoption should be deferred until closer commercial relations with those countries can be maintained, and are not antagonized by an opposing system of laws. Commerce in the very essence of its meaning is exchange. It is not to sell and never to buy. The individual or nation does not exist that will buy all one has to sell for cash with no reciprocal return in profitable exchange. Cargoes out and cargoes back are needed for the creation of a merchant marine. The cargo out will not be bought unless we buy in exchange, and it will be bought if we are willing to trade. Until these conditions come, subsidies may maintain a line so long as the subsidy lasts and then the line will go down for want of legitimate trade. If, however, the subsidy policy is to be pursued, I venture to suggest the Mexican method. When a ship arrives with a cargo the tariff tax is divided with the ship-owner, the latter taking 50 per cent. of the duty on the goods he brings in payment on account of his subsidy. The trading-ship is thus enabled to remit to the consignor, if he will employ his ship, a portion of the government duties, and thus the ship-owner is indeed enabled to promote trade with foreign countries directly. An improvement upon the Mexican method in the interest of the promotion of trade and of the building of ships to conduct it, would be to enable the owners and the builders to receive at the port of consignment in that country still a greater proportion of the duties imposed by the government upon the cargo.

In this way the Mexican ship would be enabled to get her cargo, charge a fair profit for carriage, and sell to the Mexican consumer at a price at which he could conveniently buy, take out a cargo for exchange, and repeat the process, to the cultivation of much closer commercial relations with foreign countries, and to the maintenance of Mexican shipping. Of course, the Mexican method is somewhat cumbersome, and the same end might be reached without indirection and without the payment of a subsidy by the removal or reduction of the Mexican tariff on imports.

While on the subject of closer commercial relations with South and Central America, for the promotion of which the bill under consideration is doubtless intended, I call your attention to some interesting figures. Our total trade with Brazil for the year ended June 30, 1887, was as follows:

Total imports	$52,955,591
Our total exports to Brazil were	8,137,794
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	47,076,473
We did impose a tariff upon	5,876,703

Our total trade with Central America for the same period was as follows:

Total imports	$7,706,978
Total exports	3,006,714
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	7,195,705
We did impose a tariff upon	441,916

Our total trade with Venezuela was as follows:

Total imports	$8,444,967
Total exports	5,504,215
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	8,248,450
We did impose a tariff upon	12,786

Our total trade with the United States of Colombia was as follows:

Total imports	$4,771,303
Total exports	7,158,235
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	3,934,559
We did impose a tariff upon	16,594

Our total trade with the Argentine Republic was as follows:

Total imports	$4,104,102
Total exports	6,364,545
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	3,347,936
We imposed a tariff upon	752,256

Our total trade with Chili was as follows:

Total imports	$2,863,233
Total exports	2,060,138
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	2,634,396
We did impose a tariff upon	228,897

These illustrate the universal rule by which the limitations upon commercial relations and the carrying trade with all the countries of Central and South America may be measured. A comparison of the amount brought into the country free of tariff with what we send in exchange is instructive. It should be noted that of the Brazilian imports free of duty, the large proportion value is the item of coffee, after deducting which the lesson on exchange of trade as bearing on closer relations with all these countries is the same, and the universal one.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

NICHOLAS M. BELL, Superintendent of Foreign Mails.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, the gentleman proposes to non-concur in all the Senate amendments, except the fifth, and his motion to non-concur includes the amendment relating to foreign mail service. What about the discussion upon that particular matter?

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee have thought that the views of the Senate were perhaps quite different from those of the House, and that a conclusion might be better promoted by having the debate later on.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then it is the understanding that there shall be a full debate upon that point if there shall remain a difference between the two Houses when the committee of conference reports?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir; if the conferees can not agree in reference to that item the matter will of course come back to the House. The committee think it will be proper to have it fully debated, and the deliberate action of the House taken on the question.

Mr. BINGHAM. That meets with the views also of the minority of the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. ADAMS. I propose to vote for the gentleman's motion, not only with the understanding that there shall be a full debate on this question when it comes back, but also with the confident expectation that it will come back, because I am heartily in favor of the Senate amendment. I vote for the present motion simply to expedite the business of the House, and with the confident hope that we shall have the debate, as the gentleman from Georgia has expressed it, at a later stage.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Will the gentleman from Georgia pardon me for making one suggestion in respect to the amendment of 2 cents per pound provided upon seeds, roots, and cuttings as the rate of postage offered by the Senate. I should not speak at this time were it not I am clear my colleague on the committee has made a mistake in the suggestion that the Senate intended to fix the rate at 8 cents per pound. On the contrary, the Senate have already passed a bill which is now pending in this House fixing that rate at 4 cents per pound, and this House, Mr. Speaker, stands prepared by a vote of two to one to ratify that amendment of the Senate whenever it can be got out of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in order that a vote may be taken. In regard to the non-concurrence, so far as the 2 cents per pound is concerned, I desire, when the conferees meet and the report comes back, that the question whether the rate shall be 2, 4, 8, or 16 cents shall be thoroughly discussed, because I am sure that this House concurs in the sentiment of those who have already expressed their views in favor of 4 cents per pound.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend need have no question about the purpose of the Senate. If he will examine the report of the discussion of this bill and this clause in the Senate he will find the motion was made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and in presenting it to the Senate he announced the rate as 8 cents per pound. I will say to my friend that that matter has been examined by the committee fully. I believe he was not present on that occasion; but other members of the committee, majority and minority both, will bear me out. I did not expect any dispute upon this question, or I should have brought with me the records of the debate in the Senate. If confirmation were lacking, I am quite confirmed in my position by the statement of the Senator from Kansas himself to me, and also by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, both of whom advocated it, showing that at the time the Senate passed the bill providing for the 4-cent rate on seeds, bulbs, etc., the late treaty with Canada had not been made. The countries were on a different footing. So I am quite sure there can be no mistake in relation to that matter, and trust the motion will prevail.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. All I want is the privilege of debate when the report comes back.

Mr. BLOUNT. With the utmost frankness to my friend in relation to this matter I wish to say I have no idea this question will come back here in shape for debate. It may. I will not undertake to say as to that. It is possible, for instance, that there may be an agreement on every item in this bill except the subsidy clause. I am inclined to think there will be. If that should be the case, it is possible my friend might not have an opportunity to debate the amendment except by voting down the whole report; and I think it is only fair to my friend to say so. I ask the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia moves to concur in the fifth amendment of the Senate and to non-concur in the other amendments. On that question the previous question is demanded.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will first be put on agreeing to the fifth amendment of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now as to non-concurring in the other Senate amendments. Is there a demand for a separate vote? The Chair hears no such demand. The question will be put on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the Chair will announce the conferees on this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will name as conferees the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MILLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I now move that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, to-morrow being the Fourth of July.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY], who desires to introduce a joint resolution.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY submitted the following joint resolution (H. Res. 191):

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, to insert under the head of appropriations "In the Signal Office" the following: "Four copyists at $600 each;" so that said paragraph may read as follows:

"In the Signal Office: For one professor of meteorology, at $4,000; three assistant professors of meteorology, at $1,800 each; two clerks of class 4; one bibliographer and librarian, at $1,600; one clerk of class 2; one lithographer, at $1,200; one clerk, at $1,000; four clerks of class 1; one translator and type-writer, at $840; four copyists, at $720 each; four copyists, at $600 each; four copyists, at $480 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; one watchman; one carpenter, at $660; one messenger, at $600; one messenger, at $480; two laborers, at $600; two laborers, at $450 each; two stitchers and folders, at $480 each; and for the services of such other messengers, mechanics, laborers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, in the office of the Chief Signal Officer, to carry into effect the appropriations made for the support of the Signal Service, $2,540; in all, $40,460."

The words directed to be inserted having been omitted by error when the bill was engrossed.

Mr. FORNEY. This item for these four copyists passed the House in the bill, but the enrolling clerk failed to insert it, so it did not go to the Senate, which makes it necessary to pass this joint resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. Did this provision pass both Houses?

Mr. FORNEY. No, sir; it passed this House.

Mr. ADAMS. The provision passed this House, but did not pass the Senate.

Mr. FORNEY. It did not pass the Senate, because it was not enrolled in the bill as it went to the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand; but is there any precedent for a joint resolution like this?

Mr. FORNEY. I do not know; but this is the only way we can correct the mistake. These four copyists are necessary, and this joint resolution proposes that the Clerk shall put the item in the bill before it goes to the President.

Mr. ADAMS. Could not this money be appropriated by joint resolution without mutilating the bill as it passed both Houses?

Mr. FORNEY. This is the quickest way to do it.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is intended to make the enrolled bill correspond with the facts.

Mr. ADAMS. No, sir; it is to make the bill claim to correspond to the facts.

Mr. RYAN. No; it is to make the bill correspond with the facts.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask the adoption of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOUSE PAGES.

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to introduce another joint resolution in relation to the pages of the House. It is provided in the legislative bill that the pages shall not be less than twelve years of age, but there are three employed here who are under twelve, and we propose to change the bill so as not to interfere with the present roll of pages. For that purpose I propose the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 192) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That so much of the act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, as requires that the pages of the House of Representatives shall not be under twelve years of age shall not apply to pages in the employment of the House on the 1st day of July, 1888.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. The House has agreed to adjourn over until Thursday morning; and as some of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means on both sides expect to be absent until Friday morning, I ask unanimous consent that after to-day the consideration of the tariff bill may not be resumed until Friday.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope there will be no objection to that proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that after to-day the tariff bill be not taken up until next Friday.

Mr. BLAND. I hope it may be further understood that the tariff bill shall be considered on Friday to the exclusion of private business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TARIFF.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

The pending paragraph is lines 118 to 130, inclusive, page 13.

The Clerk also read as follows:

Cylinder and crown glass, polished, above 24 by 30 inches square and not exceeding 24 by 60 inches square, 15 cents per square foot; all above that, 25 cents per square foot.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think there is some mistake. According to my recollection, a motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee to strike out lines 103 to 117 was pending.

The CHAIRMAN. That was passed over by unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window-glass, not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 1 cent per pound; above that, and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 1½ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 1½ cents per pound; all above that, 1¾ cents per pound.

Mr. McMILLIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 140, page 14, strike out "one and one-half" and insert "two;" in line 141 strike out "one and three-fourths" and insert "two and one-half;" so as to read "above that and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 2 cents per pound; all above that 2½ cents per pound."

Mr. PLUMB. As an amendment to the amendment I offer the proposition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 136, page 14, after the word "one," insert "three-eighths;" in line 138, strike out "one-fourth" and insert "seven-eighths;" in line 140, strike out "one and one-half" and insert "two and three-eighths;" in line 141 strike out "one and three-fourths" and insert "two and seven-eighths;" so that the paragraph will read:

Unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window-glass, not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 1¼ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 1¾ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 2¼ cents per pound; all above that, 2¾ cents per pound.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Committee of the Whole House to adopt the amendment just offered for the following reasons:

To pass the bill as it now stands will cause the ruin of a very important American industry. There are in this country 140 window-glass furnaces in fifteen States and Territories, with 1,246 pots, 1,100 of which are now running. These factories have a capacity of over three and three-quarter millions of boxes on ten months' run, which is more than the largest consumption of both American and foreign glass in any year in the United States, and nearly a million of boxes beyond the average consumption of the past ten years. There are about 8,500 workmen employed directly by common window-glass manufacturers, in addition to the large number indirectly engaged in mining and preparing the sand, lime, coal, lumber, clay, and soda necessarily consumed. In fact, 80 per cent. of the entire cost of glass is for labor.

Such is the magnitude and extent of the industry which this bill assails, and if it becomes a law will at once suspend, if not entirely destroy, a fate which nothing can avert except a cruel and unjust reduction in wages paid to workmen.

Prior to the tariff revision of 1883 the duty on unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window-glass 10 by 15 inches and upward was 1½ cents per pound; 16 by 24 inches and upward, was 2 cents per pound; 24 by 30 inches and upward, was 2½ cents per pound; 30 inches and upward, was 3 cents per pound. By that revision it was reduced one-eighth of a cent per pound. This bill proposes a further reduction of three-eighths cent, or three times the reduction of 1883. Now, I have before me the statistics furnished by the Government, which I will give, and which will assist the committee in casting aside theory and enable it to consider the condition which confronts us in respect to the proposed reduction.

The facts given show that the reduction of 1883 is all that this industry can possibly bear. In fact, as is well known to all who are familiar with the subject, the great increase in the demand for glass above 30 inches calls for a still higher rate on the larger size window-glass.

I invite the careful and candid attention of gentlemen on this floor to the effect of the reduction of 1883 on the quantity of foreign glass used since that period.

Increase since reduction of duty	64,296,766	1,247,354

From this official statement it appears that the reduction of one-eighth cent per pound in 1883 has resulted in an increase of foreign importation of window-glass amounting to 64,296,766 pounds in four years, and a net increase of revenue amounting in the same period to $1,247,354. Mr. Chairman, if the honest purpose of this bill is to reduce the surplus, my amendment must be adopted, or it will assuredly fail of accomplishing that result; for, if the slight reduction of one-eighth cent per pound has added to the surplus a million and a quarter of dollars in four years, how much will a reduction of three times as great add to the surplus? I contend that it will give the American market over to the foreigner, and that the revenue from window-glass alone will be more than four times what it now is.

Sir, coal and natural gas for fuel abound in this country; we have sand, limestone, and clay of the best quality, and these materials are generally found wherever there are coal deposits. We now produce our own soda, and with these raw materials we can make glass in competition with any other people on the globe, upon one condition only, and that is with as cheap labor as other glass-making countries have; and just here lies the difference—we have not the cheap labor, and for one I do not want it. Now, the wages to the different classes of workmen are from two to three times higher in this country than are paid in Belgium, from whence comes the most of the glass imported. According to the report of "Glass manufacture in Europe" (Department of State No. 29, page 329), the rates paid there as compared with the same class here are as follows:

Employés.	Belgium.	United States.
	Per month.	Per month.
Blowers	$50.00 to $100.00	$100.00 to $150.00
Blowers' assistant	25.00 to 30.00	67.00 to 100.00
Flatteners	25.00 to 26.50	100.00 to 150.00
Flatteners' assistant	8.00 to 15.00	30.00 to 40.00
Cutters	25.00 to 30.00	75.00 to 100.00
Shearers	30.00 to 35.00	80.00 to 100.00

The wages in Belgium are for a much greater number of hours daily, and for the whole year, while in the United States, the longest time worked is ten months, the average for past four years being less than eight months' blast.

No later official data for this class of labor are accessible, but from general information, and because 1882 was a year of activity and high prices abroad, it is believed the difference is greater now against the United States.

In order to be certain whether the present wage paid differs materially from that of 1882, I have procured the following statement from a very reliable officer of a window-glass company in my district, in which he says:

DEAR SIR: In answer to your favor of the 13th instant. It is difficult to get the exact wages paid in Belgium, as reports from private sources do not agree with consular reports, but I think the statement made below is about correct. I also give you the average wages in Pittsburgh and the West.

Some blowers will make much more than the amount stated, but that is exceptional.

Employés.	Belgium.	Pittsburgh and the West.
	Per month.	Per month.
Blowers, about	$75	$125 to $150
Gatherers, about	25	70 to 90
Flatteners, about	25	100 to 140
Flatteners' assistants	12	45
Cutters	25	90 to 130
Master shearers	30	90
Shearers	15	45
Pot-makers		90
Laborers		35 to 40

The wages in Belgium are for much longer hours and a greater number of days per annum. The workmen in the United States have averaged only about thirty-two weeks per year since 1883.

THOMAS D. CATLIN, Secretary.

Hon. RALPH PLUMB, Washington, D. C.

Now, the reduction provided for in this bill is three-eighths cent per pound, or about 35 per cent. on the value of the glass, and to meet this reduction would require a cut of not less than 50 per cent. in the wages of skilled labor. The profits of this industry to the capitalist have been fitful, uncertain, and entirely unsatisfactory since 1883. In my own city a window-glass factory has been established with a valuable plant which would cost from $75,000 to $100,000 to reproduce. It has been in operation about five years, and although the plant has been somewhat improved, it has never paid a dividend. Glass is made there under favorable conditions. The best sand is delivered in the factory at $1.15 per ton; the melting is largely done with coal screenings at 50 cents per ton; the facilities for transportation are excellent, and the quality of goods made is first class. There is a market at the current price, but this price can not be advanced for the reason that foreign glass, even at the present rate of duties, will come in and take the market if an advance is attempted.

Sir, let this bill pass without this amendment, and either window-glass making must cease or wages must be reduced, and this I protest should not be done. The work of the glass-blower is of the hardest. He is exposed to excessive heat, from which there is no escape during the blow, which often continues for ten hours, and the skill required for good work is almost scientific. The wage paid for this service is good, and I am glad it is so, for it is honestly earned. No consumer of window-glass who knows the character of the labor required to make it will begrudge to these workmen the wages now paid them, nor will he thank the tariff reformer for transferring this business to a foreign land. He will say, let our raw materials which we possess in such abundance be used; let the labor required be well paid; let us do the work among ourselves and for ourselves, and if the price is somewhat enhanced by such a policy, we shall reap more than equal advantage from making what we consume, and consuming what we make.

Protection to the window-glass industry has cheapened the manufacture of that article in the United States to such an extent as to reduce by competition the price of both the American and foreign product, so that the selling price of American glass has been reduced, as the following tables will show:

Imported glass has also been reduced in cost by American competition.

The foreign (invoice) cost, per statement of Bureau of Statistics, averaged for year to July, 1877, 4.10 cents per pound, averaged for year to July, 1887, 2.27 cents per pound.

The duty being specific, this large reduction in foreign cost (45 per cent. in ten years), increases the equivalent ad valorem rate, but is no real advance, and foreign manufacturers have practically paid all the duty.

Mr. Chairman, pass this bill as it stands and break down, as you will, the window-glass industry of the United States, and permit foreign makers to supply the American market, who does not know that the price would soon be advanced by combines among foreign makers to the present price, if not higher prices still?

Sir, if you want to destroy this industry refuse to pass this amendment and then pass the bill. If you want to protect the glass-workers of the country amend this bill as is now proposed. If you want to increase the surplus in the Treasury reject this amendment and pass the bill. If you want to deprive 8,500 workingmen of good wages in glass-making and force them into other employments already overcrowded—a proceeding that in the end must largely increase the number of agriculturists and so add to the surplus of their product while you lessen the number of consumers—refuse to adopt the amendment and pass this bill.

Sir, I do not plead for the capital employed in the window-glass business. If this industry is crushed and the investment made in the plant is lost, that will entail no burden on capital that can not be borne. It would inflict an unjustifiable outrage upon the owners, but capital can take care of itself, and it will do so without special protection for its interests. It is labor that is in danger. One of the most important movements of the present period is the organization of labor for its own protection. Whenever capital is employed in operations, whether requiring labor to carry them forward or not, it seeks organization under corporate authority, that it may the more effectually carry on those operations and protect its interests.

Labor in this country has become intelligent, and it also is combining. Organized labor is contending against organized capital. Who will deny its perfect right to do so? What just government will refuse in such a contest to extend the ægis of its protection to that grand army of wealth-producers, whether organized or not organized, who constitute the great body of our people, from the banker at his counter to the wage-worker with his pick and shovel? We call garnered money capital, and so it is, but it is by no means the only thing entitled to that name. It is, however, garnered money, whether held by individuals or by corporations, which is too often heartless in regard to the just demands of the laboring man. The rich manufacturer of to-day may look with indifference on the great struggle now impending. Nay, he may even prefer free trade, for he knows that if all protection of Government is withdrawn from the laboring man who has a stomach demanding food, who has limbs to clothe, who has a soul to aspire, or a family he loves dependent on his labor and effort, must resume his old place and take for his wage whatever capital may be able to give.

For testimony on this point I will give here the declaration of a well-known wealthy Western glass-maker.

Here is an interview with Judge Caton, of Illinois, one of the large manufacturers in our State, published in the Chicago Tribune shortly after the President's message was given to the country:

INTERVIEW.

Have you read the President's message?
It has been read to me.
What do you think of it?
It is a remarkable document, in view of what a message is supposed to be.
What will be the result of it?
The tariff question is now squarely brought before the country as a national, a political, and a Presidential issue. A notice has been served that the Treasury is sucking up the money which ought to be in circulation, and that the business and commercial prosperity of the country is at stake, and must be considered in preference to other questions.
You seem to be in favor of a reduction of the tariff?
I am at the present time.
Why?
Well, among other things, I am a manufacturer.
And as a manufacturer you believe that the tariff should be reduced?
I do; and for a reason which I think has not been advanced. The manufacturer is not making any money, and does not profit by the tariff. The skilled laborer gets the profit. Advance the tariff on the manufactured article, and the confederation of trades advances his wages often above the tariff advance.
You say you have had experience. In what direction?
As a glass manufacturer. I think we have in Ottawa the best glass-works in the country. We seem to be busy at all times. Up to date I have never received a dividend. On the contrary, in order to preserve our plant and the capital invested in it, I have advanced funds from time to time, and the several works instead of paying me a profit are in debt to me perhaps a hundred thousand dollars or more. The high tariff imposed for our protection has all gone to the skilled laborer. The blower, lowest in the scale of usefulness, gets $4 per day, and the best men $8 per day. The blowers are like the iron puddlers at the blast-furnaces, who get from $8 to $12 per day. I believe if the tariff were abolished and our works shut down for a year, as they would have to be, the laborer would return to reason and allow our business to be conducted with some profit to the manufacturer. I am not alone in this view. I think you will find the sentiment growing among manufacturers that their invested money brings no return, but rather outlay, and that the only remedy is in the abolition of the tariff and a general suspension of manufacturing until the labor system shall be placed on a paying basis to capital.

Democracy denies the right of Government to protect any industry. It declares that the struggle should go on without let or hinderance; that the "survival of the fittest" is the law which applies to man and to the Government, as well as to the lower forms of life. Laissez faire is the cry of Democracy, while Republicanism calls on us to listen to the voice of Him who spoke as never man spake, and who said, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when Mr. PLUMB'S five minutes had expired, Mr. MCKINLEY asked and obtained unanimous consent that Mr. PLUMB'S time be extended.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. The effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB] would be to maintain the present rate of duty on common window-glass of all classes mentioned in this paragraph which, under existing law, bear respectively 106 and 108 per cent. duty. I do not think it would be proper or wise to adopt the amendment of the gentleman. There is no excuse for doubling the cost of window-glass by legislation. The demand for a reduction ought to be heeded; and therefore I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will not be adopted.

Mr. DALZELL. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a letter from the president of the Window-Glass Workers' Association of America respecting the duties proposed in this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

I herewith submit to you a statement in relation to the tariff on window-glass, and reasons why it should not be reduced as proposed by Mills bill, as reported by the Ways and Means Committee.

First. The present tariff schedule on common window-glass was adopted in 1842. At that time 24 by 30 inches in common window-glass was as large as was made anywhere in the world, while at the present time there is common window-glass made as large as 50 by 76 inches, and the schedule that would apply to common window-glass forty-six years ago will not answer as a criterion in determining as to what is a just and fair measure at the present time, the surroundings of the case are so much changed in the period of forty-six years.

Second. There was a reduction of the tariff on window-glass in 1883, and since the reduction the importation of window-glass has increased very materially, thereby increasing the revenue in the Treasury from this source.

Third. The workingmen engaged in this branch of industry have had to work for less wages in consequence of the reduction of the tariff in 1883, and from the large increase in the imported article and the cheapness of the same. Even at the present time with the present duty one-fourth of the glass consumed in this country is imported from Europe. It is but natural to suppose that with a decrease in the duty that these imports would increase, and also as a natural result the imported article would displace that made at home, and must of necessity cause the workmen to lay idle or suffer a further reduction in order to meet the competition from the imported article.

Fourth. The wages in Europe in this industry are exceedingly low. Two years ago, while passing through Belgium on a tour of observation in the interest of the window-glass workers' organization, I saw women wheeling in coal, carrying in glass in the sheet. Their wages ranged from $2 to $3 per week, while here in America this class of work is performed by men whose wages range from $9 to $12 per week; and about the same ratio of difference prevails in all the skilled branches of the industry between the prices paid in Europe and America. I feel in view of this fact that with a reduction of 35 per cent., as proposed by the Mills bill, the difference will have to be met by a large reduction in the matter of wages by the workmen in the window-glass industry of this country.

In the annual report of the chief of the bureau of imported merchandise for the years of 1886 and 1887 you will find the following statement of the importation of window-glass for the year 1887: Glass of the dimensions of 10 by 15 inches amounted to 14,117,875 pounds, valued at $319,798.94; value per unit quantity, .023; ad valorem, rate, 60.71. The price of the glass of the 10 by 15 inches ranges from $9.50 up to $14.50 per box. The amount imported in the class that runs from 24 by 30 inches up to 50 by 76 was 17,608,435 pounds, valued at $466,603.55; value per unit of quantity, .026; ad valorem rate, 108½.

The price of the glass in the 24 by 30 inches up to 50 by 76 ranges from $15 up to $76 and upwards per box. The value of unit of quantity in the 10 by 15 inches is 2.3 cents, and the price does not go above $14.50. The 24 by 30 inches up to 50 by 76 is valued at 2.6 cents, which only makes a difference of three tenths cents per value, while the price runs from $15 to upwards of $76 above. There is imported of the class of 24 by 30 inches up to 50 by 76, 3,490,560 pounds more than there was of the 10 by 15 inch grade, and is only valued at $146,804.61 more than the cheaper glass. For what reason it is done, no one can dispute; it is undervaluation in order to make the ad valorem duty higher.

If the Mills bill should become a law, with the low wages in Europe, the cheapness of ocean freights between Europe and America, with a 35 per cent. reduction in the tariff duties, there will be no other alternative for the American workmen but to accept a reduction in wages or surrender the market to the goods imported from abroad.

As before stated, more than one-fourth of the window-glass consumed in this country is imported, and from the above statement of facts there is no doubt but what the tariff should be increased in order to better foster and protect home industry.

These facts that I have stated I feel can not be successfully controverted, and I submit them to you for your careful consideration.

I remain, yours respectfully,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
President of the Window Glass Workers' Association of America.

Mr. DALZELL. In substantiation of the propositions set forth in that letter I submit to be printed in the RECORD a statement of W. F. Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, showing the quantity and value of importations of cylinder window-glass, unpolished, during each year ending June 30, from 1880 to 1887, together with the amount of duty. This statement shows conclusively that the proposed reduction of duty upon this article, instead of reducing the surplus, will increase it. Such has been our experience since the legislation of 1883. This statement also demonstrates the utter falsity of the figures set out in the statement furnished by the Committee on Ways and Means in connection with this subject.

Mr. McKINLEY. Without occupying the time of the Committee of the Whole, I ask that the communication which I send to the desk be published in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

The communication is as follows:

Cylinder window-glass, unpolished, is a manufacture natural to the United States, because all materials required exist in widely extended territory.

The manufacture is largely developed, and the capacity of furnaces now existing is greater than the total consumption of both American and imported glass.

These furnaces are distributed through fifteen States, as follows: Massachusetts, 1; New York, 17; New Jersey, 25; Pennsylvania, 44; Delaware, 2; Maryland, 9; West Virginia, 2; Ohio, 20; Indiana, 6; Illinois, 8; Michigan, 1; Wisconsin, 1; Missouri, 2; Kansas, 1; Wyoming Territory, 1. Total, 140 furnaces in fifteen States and Territories.

There are about 8,500 workmen employed directly by manufacturers, in addition to the large number indirectly engaged in mining and preparing the sand, lime, coal, lumber, clay, and soda consumed. The cost of these materials is almost entirely for labor, in mining and transporting to furnaces.

The necessity for duty on imported glass arises from the greater cost of raw materials, because of higher labor cost in preparing them, as well as from the higher wages paid by manufacturers in the United States.

The wages paid for material amount to about 20 per cent. of the total cost; the wages paid by manufacturers amount to about 60 per cent. of the total cost making the total amount paid for labor in manufacturing window-glass 80 per cent.

The wages to the different classes of workmen are from two to three times those paid in Belgium, from whence comes most of the glass imported.

According to the report of "Glass Manufacture in Europe," Department of State, No. 29, page 389, the rates paid there are as follows, compared with same class here:

Employés.	Belgium.	United States.
	Per month.	Per month.
Blowers	$50.00 to $100.00	$100.00 to $150.00
Blowers' assistant	25.00 to 30.00	67.00 to 100.00
Flatteners	25.00 to 26.50	100.00 to 150.00
Flatteners' assistant	8.00 to 15.00	30.00 to 40.00
Cutters	25.00 to 30.00	75.00 to 100.00
Shearers	30.00 to 35.00	80.00 to 100.00

The wages in Belgium are for a much greater number of hours daily, and for the whole year, while in the United States the longest time worked is ten months, the average for past four years being less then eight months' blast.

No later official data for this class of labor are accessible, but from general information, and because 1882 was a year of activity and high prices abroad, it is believed the difference is greater now against the United States.

Since the reduction, July 1, 1883, of the duty on cylinder window-glass, manufacturers have averaged running less than three-fourths the usual length of blast.

Wages of workmen have been reduced;

Imports have greatly increased, and the Revenue for four years since July, 1883, has been $1,250,000 greater than for the same period before that date.

The rates of duty proposed by the Ways and Means Committee, in House of Representatives bill No. 9051, make a reduction averaging on the actual imports last year, 39 cents per half-box, or about 35 per cent., and could only be met by a reduction of over 50 per cent. in wages of skilled labor.

Imports of window-glass have largely increased since the reduction of duty, and foreign glass is now a much larger percentage of the total consumption, having advanced from the annual rate of from 16 to 29 per cent. before 1883, to 29 to 38 per cent. since 1883.

The effect of the largely developed manufacture in the United States has been to reduce the price of American product and of the foreign glass, so that the selling price of American glass was lower January 1, 1888, than in 1860, as will appear from the following comparison of prices for the two periods:

	56.10	28.42

Fifty per cent. less price in 1888=$27.68.

Imported glass has also been reduced in cost by American competition.

The foreign (invoice) cost, per statement of Bureau of Statistics, averaged for year to July, 1877, 4.10 cents per pound, averaged for year to July, 1887, 2.27 cents per pound.

The duty being specific, this large reduction in foreign cost (45 per cent. in ten years) increases the equivalent ad valorem rate, but is no real advance, and foreign manufacturers have practically paid all the duty.

Since the adoption of the sizes now specified in the tariff laws there has been a material change in the amounts consumed, so that a large quantity is required of large sizes.

The cost of such sizes is greatly increased, and just discrimination and protection requires they be added to the tariff schedule with proportionate rates of duty.

Decreased duty will increase the importation, inevitably and largely diminish the American product, and reduce wages, besides reducing the number and time of workmen employed, and increase the revenue, now in excess.

Instead of lower duties, necessary and fair protection of manufactures and the interests of workmen and consumers require the present rates on the actual weight of glass, with proportionate rate to cover additional larger sizes now used.

For these reasons it is asked that the proposed bill be amended to read, on cylinder window-glass (unpolished), as below:

"Not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 1¼ cents per pound; above that and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 1⅝ cents per pound; above that and not exceeding 20 by 30 inches square, 2¼ cents per pound; above that and not exceeding 24 by 36 inches square, 2⅞ cents per pound; above that and not exceeding 30 by 50 inches square, 3½ cents per pound; above that and not exceeding 40 by 60 inches square, 3¾ cents per pound; above 40 by 60 inches square, 3¾ cents per pound."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB] to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. PLUMB'S amendment to the amendment was again read.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB] will be agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. PLUMB'S amendment to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 72.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I demand tellers.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum has voted and the gentleman is entitled to tellers.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I do not make the point of no quorum.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. PLUMB and Mr. MCMILLIN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 73.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word. I rise more particularly for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I find the paragraph upon which we are just voting to be somewhat different from the original law in this respect; that is, to that proposition in the original law there is a proviso which admits 55 pounds of glass in a box as if it were 50 pounds. That proviso seems to be a substantive proposition—that is, it seems to contain a certain exception in favor of glass that is put up in a certain form. What I want to know is, in the event of the passage of this bill, will that proviso be repealed, or will that proviso stand as a part of the law in the Mills bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. In answer to the gentleman, I will say, of course, that those which are not touched will remain as they are.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman misapprehends the proposition. This proposition relates to unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window glass of certain descriptions. To that proposition in the original law there is appended a proviso which admits unpolished crown and window glass for boxes of 55 pounds——

A MEMBER. Fifty square feet.

Mr. BAYNE. As if it were 50 pounds.

A MEMBER. Fifty square feet.

Mr. BAYNE. As if it were 50 square feet. Does that proviso stand as a part of the law added to this bill in the event of its passage?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Stick to it; make them answer that question.

Mr. BAYNE. Unless that information can be given by the Ways and Means Committee——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have already stated to the gentleman that those parts of the existing law not touched by the pending bill are left as in the existing law. This is an amendment to the tariff, and the proviso would stand as applicable to that not touched. But so far as the amendments made by the committee affect the proviso, they would to that extent change and repeal the proviso, of course.

Mr. BAYNE. I understand the gentleman to state this proviso relating to the particular subject-matter under discussion will stand as a part of the existing law in the event of the Mills bill becoming a law n the subject.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman does not state me correctly. What I said was this: that it was the intention of the existing law to stand so far as not changed by this bill, but so far as the section now under discussion does change the existing law it would repeal the proviso, but beyond that the proviso would stand.

Mr. BAYNE. That I must characterize as a glittering generality. What I wish to know is, will the proviso stand?

Mr. ADAMS. I understand the gentleman's answer to be this: It stands as to things which are not repealed by this section.

Mr. BAYNE. Will that proviso stand?

Mr. MCMILLLN. I have answered the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS. There are different sizes in the existing bill and there is a different provision for each different size. Some of them are touched and some of them unchanged. Now, will this proviso in the original law apply to these sizes you have changed?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Unquestionably——

Mr. BAYNE. It will remain as part of the law, as a proviso to that part of the law which you have not changed. Will it be an existing proviso?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Wherein the section is inserted it changes the proviso. Of course it will be repealed, but not beyond that.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to make one remark. I do not believe there is a gentleman in this body—and there are able lawyers in this body—I do not believe there is a gentleman in this body who can say whether this proviso will stand or whether it will fall in the event of the adoption of this bill. I do not believe there is a lawyer in this body who would hazard an opinion about that subject the way this bill is being managed in reference to the existing law.

That proviso makes a change upon the very subject now under discussion, and a very important change, and yet there is not a gentleman on the Ways and Means Committee, or any other gentleman in this House, who will hazard the opinion as to whether that provision will stand as a part of the new law if this becomes a law or not. This is all I desired to say.

Mr. ADAMS. The point of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is as to whether the words of the provision embodied in the existing law would apply to the several sizes of window-glass in view of this proposed modification. Let us call them, for the sake of convenience, sizes 1, 2, 3, and 4, so as to make the point clear. This proviso applies to all those sizes. The committee change, we will say, size 4, leaving unchanged sizes 1, 2, and 3. Now it might be argued that this proviso still remains as to sizes 1, 2, and 3, and as to that probably the committee is correct; but it is certainly important to find out whether it applies to size 4, which has ceased to be a part of the provision to which the proviso attaches, as a part of the new bill which takes effect this year. I doubt whether that question could be answered. It has not yet been.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as having been withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HIRES. I move to strike out the last word.

I send to the desk, Mr. Chairman, and ask to have read in my time the body of a petition, which is but a sample of a vast number which have come to me from various sections, bearing upon this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

PETITION.

To the Representative in Congress of the United States representing the First Congressional district from the State of New Jersey:

We, the undersigned citizens, most respectfully petition you to enter this our protest against the proposed reduction of the tariff on window-glass, and request that you vote against any reduction of the tariff on the same, but use every effort to have the rates of 1882 restored, for the following reasons, namely:

1. The tariff was reduced in 1883.

2. Since said reduction, the importation of window-glass has increased to such an extent, that over one-fourth of the window-glass consumed in this country is imported and the revenue has increased over $1,000,000, in consequence of which the earnings of the workingmen have been materially reduced.

Mr. HIRES. I also send to the desk and ask to have read a letter from D. J. Partello, United States consul at Dusseldorf, in a report sent by him to the Department of State on the manufacture of glass bottles in Germany. This relates to the manufacture of glass bottles, but it has a very important bearing upon the question of window-glass, which is now under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A GREAT GERMAN BOTTLE FACTORY

D. J. Partello, United States consul at Dusseldorf, sends a report to the Department of State upon the "Manufacture of Glass Bottles in Germany," and the American Manufacturer reviews the report as follows:

"The glass-bottle manufactory of Fred. Heye, at Gerresheim, about 5 miles from Dusseldorf, is claimed to be the largest establishment of the kind in the world operated by one individual. Within a few hundred yards of the establishment are immense quantities of the best quality of sand, both yellow and white, which may be had at the cost of hauling. The buildings and grounds of the works in actual use cover an area of about 60 acres.

The grounds are laid off in divisions, squares, and streets, and graded and paved where necessary. There are ten stacks, having an average height of 100 feet. The grounds are surrounded by a heavy brick wall, and no one is admitted without permission. Adjoining the works, and within the inclosure of a park, laid out into squares and streets, are about 400 dwelling-houses, two stories in height, uniform in color and appearance, provided for homes for those who choose to occupy them at a low rent. Two, and sometimes three, families occupy a house. Those who occupy the houses are furnished fuel and light at cost prices.

The capacity of the works is about 300,000 bottles per day, but the number usually made is 200,000. It is a fact significant to our domestic manufacturers that a good share of the work under present contract is for the American market. For a year or two past the orders from America were small, but since the 1st of January the shipments have increased until they amount at the present time to 300,000 to 500,000 bottles weekly, which are invoiced at the Dusseldorf consulate consigned to dealers in New York, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Chicago, and Cincinnati, in bills of about 1,000 gross each.

About 5,000 different varieties of bottles are made, which include nearly every kind and shape of bottle in existence. It was shown by the books, says the consul, that a London firm had ordered annually for years past 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 of a certain kind of mineral-water bottle for mineral water procured from German springs and shipped from London to all parts of the world.

The sample rooms, fitted up with shelves, contain 10,000 to 15,000 bottles, all arranged according to size, number, and quality, and properly labeled, with the number of the mold also noted. The samples include duplicates of all bottles made at the works, besides a complete set of samples of foreign manufactures.

The consul was handed from the shelves bottles made at the glass-works of Baltimore, Md., and with them the same character of bottle made at Gerresheim. The main points of difference, the consul says, would be readily observed, the principal one being the seam always found running up the side of the American bottle and marring its appearance, which by the manner of blowing was obviated at Gerresheim. The claim was also made that the American bottle was inferior in other respects. If these points of inferiority really exist in the American, and are of any consequence, our manufacturers can no doubt overcome them easily.

The entire place is lighted by electricity, which system of lighting is fast finding its way throughout Germany. As previously stated, sand is found within a hundred yards of the works; a small adjoining town furnishes its labor, and the coal mines of Westphalia, in the neighborhood, supply the required coal at a low price. The production of the "Westphalia mines" last year amounted to about 27,000,000 tons. The ability of these works to compete with the domestic works in the United States is explained by their excellent location near a base of supplies, exceedingly low price of labor, and good management on the part of the conductors of the enterprise, avoiding strikes or any interruption in the steady and regular course of business. The number of persons employed in the entire works varies from 1,800 to 3,000, including many females.

The blowers are paid by the piece, or according to the number of bottles blown. Each workman has one apprentice allotted him to learn the trade and act as his assistant, and the bottles are all specially marked to show by which set of workmen made. If the houses of the employés belong to Mr. Heye the rent is small, about 4 per cent. on the cost of the building, not including the ground, which is charged against their weekly pay. Their food consists of beer, bread, coffee, tea, cheese, vegetables, with meat about once a week. The highest daily pay of the blowers averages from 87 cents to $1.20. The furnaces that are kept going night and day are run by three sets of hands, who keep the work steady for the twenty-four hours of the day. The wages of apprentices are about 12½ cents per day for the first year, with a slight increase each year; the women not generally over 48 cents; other employés from 35½ cents to 71½ cents per day, according to the special class of work employed upon, 50 cents being about the average pay of general employés.

During the reading of the above, the hammer fell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HIRES. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of that communication be printed.

There was no objection.

[The petition is printed above.]

Mr. HIRES. Mr. Chairman, the article just read gives to this House no doubt a true and correct statement as to the rates of wages paid not only in Germany but also in Belgium and France by the manufacturers of both bottles and window-glass.

As it has already been stated on the floor of this House the reduction made in the tariff on window-glass in 1883 had not only the effect to largely increase the importations but also to largely increase the revenue, and I venture the prediction, if the reduction proposed on window-glass by the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means should be passed by this Congress and become a law, the revenue from this source would be still largely increased by increased importations, which would certainly drive many concerns out of business and throw out of employment thousands of honest and willing workmen or reduce them to wages but little if any above those paid in Germany and other countries.

Mr. McMILLIN. As there seems to be some doubt as to what the effect of the amendment of the committee would be in regard to the proviso to which reference has been made, and it has not been the intention of the committee to repeal that proviso, I will move to amend my amendment by adding the proviso to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

Mr. McMILLIN. I send the amendment to the desk to be copied from the present law.

Mr. ADAMS. I would ask the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that this proviso contains two different propositions, one relating to the single thickness of glass, and the other to the double thickness.

Mr. McMILLIN. I propose to embody the whole proviso, and ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. ADAMS. The first part of the proviso relates to 50 feet of single-thick glass, not exceeding 55 pounds weight, which shall be entered and computed as 50 pounds only, and the other to 50 feet, double thick, not exceeding 90 pounds weight, to be entered and computed as 80 pounds only.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Does the gentleman from Tennessee propose to adopt the whole proviso as it stands?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is exactly what I have proposed. I ask the Clerk to read the proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window-glass imported in boxes containing 50 square feet, as nearly as sizes will permit, now known and commercially designated as 50 feet of glass, single thick, and weighing not to exceed 55 pounds of glass per box, shall be entered and computed as 50 pounds of glass only.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Now, that, if the gentleman will examine, does not embody the whole proviso, but he will discover there are six lines left out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the remainder of the proviso.

Mr. McMILLIN. I want the Clerk to read it all.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that said kinds of glass imported in boxes containing, as nearly as sizes will permit, 50 feet of glass, now known and commercially designated as 50 feet of glass, double thick and not exceeding 90 pounds in weight, shall be entered and computed as 80 pounds of glass only; but in all other cases the duty shall be computed according to the actual weight of glass.

Mr. McMILLIN. The proviso is simply the administrative feature of the provision. It was not the intention of the committee to repeal that; and, therefore, in order that there may be no confusion and to remove all doubt, we propose to insert the entire administrative feature of the present law in the pending bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit, I would like to have the Clerk read a part of the testimony taken before the Ways and Means Committee of the last Congress that is quite germane to the very question under consideration, and explains a good deal of this proviso. I would state that the Mr. Campbell who was before the committee is the same Mr. Campbell whose communication has just been read, the president of the Window-Glass Workers' Association of America.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is one thing that I wish to explain. The American manufacturers, in the price-lists that they send out, state that they will give so many lights for 50 feet to their customers in order to meet the French glass. In some sizes we have to do one-half more work to-day than we did in 1876 in order to meet foreign competition. They send in three lights for a box, and it runs all the way through for about forty or fifty sizes; for we have to add two lights per box in order to get the trade of this country; and we do that work for nothing, in addition to this reduction of wages.

Mr. REED. So that you are doing one-half more work?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In some sizes.

Mr. REED. And that is a material reduction from your apparent wages at present.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly it is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the proportion of the increased work in these boxes to your entire work?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The skilled part of it is in the neighborhood of forty or fifty different sizes, to which we have to add two more sizes per hundred feet in order to meet foreign competition; the American manufacturer, in filling orders for glass 40 by 52 feet, used to put in three lights; but a Western customer, in sending on a large order, would say that he could get foreign glass with eight lights in the box of glass, and that if the American manufacturer would take the order at the same price and furnish the same number of lights as the foreign manufacturer did, they would give the order, otherwise not. So the American manufacturer was forced, in order to hold his orders, to put this increased work upon his workmen, and we have to submit to it; we can not do otherwise.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I simply want to say, in the absence of Mr. MCCULLOGH, the Representative from the Twenty-first Pennsylvania district, that he left with me three petitions like the petitions which have been presented this morning and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. As they are just like the others it will not be necessary to have them printed, but I will place them in the petition-box.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. MCCORMICK], of the Sixteenth district of Pennsylvania, also to present some petitions, he not being present. I think one printing will be sufficient.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have only one word to say in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] when he opened the discussion on this paragraph this morning by what seemed to be a characterization that window-glass ought to be made cheaper to the American consumer. I am not aware under all the examinations made before our committee that the glass-blowers of this country have a scale disproportionately greater than any other class of workingmen. I think considering their lay-off, considering that they do not work the whole year around, though they apparently receive very large wages during the time they are engaged, their wages for an average of the whole twelve months will compare reasonably well with the wages of any skilled mechanics in the country. I want simply to read a comparison of the American wages and the European wages, put in an official shape:

	Pittsburgh average.	Belgium average.
	Per week.	Per week.
Blowers	$40.09	$20.00
Gatherers	23.03	6.25
Flatteners	34.45	6.25
Cutters	27.59	5.00

Now, Mr. Chairman, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of one year ago, which is in the hands and for the use of every member of Congress, dated February 16, 1886, contains page after page on this wage question and the cost of production. There was also before the late Ways and Means Committee, or the one preceding it, in the Forty-ninth Congress, pages and pages of testimony all pointing to the fact that even the cut that was made in 1883, which was very small, probably about one-eighth, positively reduced the wages. When you come to the cut proposed in this bill, I say at once, considering these are what are commercially known as fixed plants, the only cut this bill can make will be in the wages.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pro forma amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection, the Chair will assume that the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee as modified.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I have eight petitions from the glass-blowers of my district, containing the names of several hundred men. I send one to the Clerk's desk as a sample of the whole.

The petition is as follows:

PETITION.

To the Representative in Congress of the United States representing the Twenty-second Congressional district from the State of Pennsylvania:

We, the undersigned citizens, most respectfully petition you to enter this our protest against the proposed reduction of the tariff on window-glass, and request that you vote against any reduction of the tariff on the same, but use every effort to have the rates of 1882 restored, for the following reasons, namely:

First. The tariff was reduced in 1883.

Second. Since said reduction the importation of window-glass has increased to such an extent that over one-fourth of the window-glass consumed in this country is imported and the revenue has increased over $1,000,000, in consequence of which the earnings of the workingmen have been materially reduced.

Mr. DALZELL. I also ask to have printed as part of my remarks the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk.

[The paper referred to, in relation to cylinder glass, is the same that was submitted this morning by Mr. MCKINLEY, and is printed above.]

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to oppose the amendment, and I ask to have read from the desk a short letter which I have received on this subject on behalf of the Illinois Glass Company.

The letter was read, as follows:

ST. LOUIS, March 13, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Will you be so kind as to use your influence to prevent any reduction of the present tariff on bottles or window-glass. Any reduction which may be made in the present tariff must be entirely borne by labor, as these goods are already made on the closest possible margin. Our close-selling prices are dictated by the German manufacturers, with whom, at present rates of labor, we can only compete by the closest economy.

There are about twenty factories in Illinois with large capital invested, and the majority of these factories must be closed in case of tariff reduction.

Your kind attention will much oblige your obedient servant,

WM. ELIOT SMITH.

Hon. GEORGE E. ADAMS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. ADAMS. I simply wish to add that although that letter is dated St. Louis, the glass works are in Illinois. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I renew the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a suggestion. I believe there is no difference of opinion between the two sides of the House in regard to the adoption of the pending proviso. As regards the rates in this paragraph of the bill there are two or three changes that have been determined upon by the committee and have been put in my charge, but the memorandum of them is temporarily mislaid. I therefore ask unanimous consent that after we adopt the proviso, which we all desire to adopt, this paragraph of the bill be passed over informally until I can refer to my notes and propose the changes determined upon by the committee.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks unanimous consent that the vote be now taken on that portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] embraced in the proviso, and that thereafter this paragraph be passed over informally for the present.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The proviso is a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks for a division of the question. He asks that the proviso be now passed upon, and then that the remainder of the paragraph be passed over informally.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to the proviso going over also, if it is desired.

The request of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, was agreed to. The proviso was adopted and the remainder of the paragraph was passed over informally.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cast polished plate-glass, unsilvered, above 24 by 30 inches square and not exceeding 24 by 60 inches square, 20 cents per square foot; all above that, 40 cents per square foot.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not rise exactly to oppose the amendment; but I do rise to show that at an early stage how fortunate it is for some of these manufacturers to have their works located in certain districts. I understand that there is a large establishment of this kind located in the State of Missouri in a district represented on this floor by a very worthy gentleman, and that under the benignant and persuasive influence of that gentleman the old duty upon this manufacture is to be restored. [Laughter.] I congratulate the district upon having so worthy a representative, and the Committee on Ways and Means on having so much consideration for gentlemen who belong to the political persuasion of the majority of that committee. In this connection, and by way of explanation, I desire to have read a brief letter as a part of my remarks.

The letter was read, as follows:

DEAR SIR: I am a Democrat and have always voted the Democratic ticket. I am engaged in the manufacture of ——— and employ ——— men, nearly all of whom vote the Democratic ticket. The profits of the manufacture are all very small and the business is carefully adjusted to the existing tariff. If the Mills bill should become a law it would be impossible for me to continue in this business. The industry would be destroyed. Can not you prevail upon the Committee on Ways and Means to exempt this particular industry from the operations of the Mills bill.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CLARDY. I beg leave to say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], what the country knows, that the only aspiration of those who sought to influence and did influence the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means to accept amendments to the bill under consideration was to so adjust the duties which the bill imposes as to be least oppressive, and to lift the burden of unnecessary and therefore unjust taxation from the shoulders of the people.

The Democratic members of the committee are not infallible, and they do not affect to be. They did not think it improper to submit the result of their long and arduous labors to their party associates, who, like themselves, are pledged to revise the tariff laws in the interest of the people who elected us all.

Democrats believe now, as they have always believed, that the provision of the Constitution which declares that Congress shall have power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, and imposts, to provide for the common defense and general welfare," means what Mr. Justice Story says it means, that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, and imposts in order to provide for the common defense and general welfare; but they deny that Congress has the right to lay and collect taxes in order to promote private fortunes. They also believe that taxation should bear heaviest on articles of luxury and lightest on articles of necessity, and so they have determined that the plate-glass used by rich people should bear a heavier rate of duty than the common window-glass that the poor people of the country buy and use.

I would not have been surprised, Mr. Chairman, if my friend from Pennsylvania and his party associates had favored a substantial reduction of the duty on plate-glass. A party that put mahogany and rosewood on the free-list, and left taxed every piece of timber the poor man uses, from the cradle to the coffin, might be expected to demand cheap plate-glass for the millionaire. In answer to the letter which the gentleman has caused to be read, it is sufficient for me to say that it could not come from persons engaged in the plate-glass industry in my district, for while they are liberal-minded gentlemen they are Republicans in politics, and on all occasions manifest their fealty to their party.

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, while it may be true that the members of the firm to which he refers are Republicans, they have a large number of employés who may not be Republicans.

Mr. CLARDY. Oh, yes; all workingmen in my country are Democrats. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Porcelain and Bohemian glass, chemical glassware, painted glassware, stained glass, and all other manufactures of glass, or of which glass shall be the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to strike out "40" and insert "45," so as to make the duty 45 per cent. ad valorem. I wish simply to say that this amendment is in a line with petitions that have flooded our petition-box from the glass manufacturers of the United States, all asserting that it would be impossible to compete with a certain class of imported goods if a reduction of even 5 per cent. was made. Without going into the argument, I wish to say that these men ought to have a respectful hearing. The business is not very large, but it is growing rapidly in the land, and I think this House ought to give proper care and protection to an industry which has educated so many young men in this business.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the only reason given for a reduction of the duties on glass and glassware has been the simple assertion that those duties are too high. It does not seem to me that a duty is too high which permits a vast and increasing importation of the foreign articles. By turning to the last report on commerce and navigation I find that in the year 1882 there was imported into this country of glass and glassware $6,634,371 worth; in 1887 the importation had increased to $7,319,895; and for the ten months ending April 30, 1888, the importation was $6,484,190. If we estimate the importation for the two remaining months of the year at the same rate, we shall find that for the year just closing this importation has increased to the amount of $7,564,887.

Now, it certainly does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that this country ought to be able to make its own glass and glassware. It comprises articles for the production of which we should not be dependent upon any other country. I do know that we have the skill, the capital, and the enterprise to make these articles ourselves; and instead of passing a bill which will increase the importation by lowering the rates of duty, and thus adding to the surplus, I submit that some other action would be far more in consonance with the sound principles of statesmanship.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to put a question to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], whom I now see rising to address the committee. In the interest of what class of American consumers is this reduction of 5 per cent. made in this schedule? I will also ask him whether it will not increase importations.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] that the amount of duties received from this class of articles during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, was $360,608. By the proposed reduction there will be $45,000 less of taxes flowing into the Treasury to be locked up. The Government does not need the money, and even under the amendment proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means there will be an average rate of 40 per cent. duty on this class of articles.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Is it not certainly a premium on importation to lower this schedule on this class of articles? Is not all this schedule for the benefit of the rich? Is it not for the millionaire? The poor man is not interested at all in this schedule—Bohemian ware, porcelain, and stained glass. Any reduction of duty must be simply for the benefit of those who are well able to pay taxes for the support of the Government. I undertake to say, too, that this reduction of 5 per cent. is an invitation for increased importation.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman can not make any capital out of the proposition——

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am not trying to "make any capital."

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman is talking freely about the interests of the rich while he seems to be profoundly ignorant of the fact that the very tariff law which his party passed and under which we are now operating puts silk velvets at only about half the rate of duty which is put on woolen goods.

Mr. FARQUHAR. We are not discussing silk and woolen goods now, but porcelain and Bohemian glass.

Mr. McMILLIN. But I was showing that the gentleman is not consistent in his point.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Consistency on this paragraph is what I desire of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is no necessity whatever for the amount of money that is now raised from this tax, and it is proposed to reduce the duty in the bill under consideration to an average rate of 40 per cent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman honestly believe that lowering the rate of duty from 45 per cent. to 40 per cent. will at the expiration of the year during which the reduction may operate show a reduction of the amount received from this item?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I simply wanted to ascertain the extent of the gentleman's faith; I might call it credulity, but I do not want to be discourteous.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman can call it anything he wishes; he can satisfy his own mind on that subject. I shall not disturb myself by his utterances.

Mr. ADAMS. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's reasoning, as I understand, rests on the assumption that precisely the same amount of this class of glass will be imported under a reduced duty as under that now existing. Is that a fair assumption?

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not state that there would be exactly the same importation; but the idea I do intend to convey is that there will not be a sufficient increase of importation to make up the difference caused by the reduction.

Mr. ADAMS. Then the gentleman does not think that the reduction will be as much as is stated in the report?

Mr. McMILLIN. It may not be; you can only guess at that—only time can tell.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McMILLIN. I shall take pleasure in answering the gentleman if he will speak so that I can hear him.

Mr. BLAND. This is all very interesting, but some of us would like to have a vote and proceed with business.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Does not the gentleman's amendment increase the revenues of the Government for the benefit of the rich?

Mr. McMILLIN. I would take great delight in answering the question of the gentleman if I could hear it; but he speaks in so low a tone that, with the confusion prevailing in the Hall, I can not hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HOPKINS] is suffering with a complaint of the throat and can not speak in a loud tone.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN, it was rejected; there being—ayes 60, noes 66.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, $6 a ton.

Mr. McKINLEY. I move to insert after the word "dollars" the words "and seventy-two cents;" so it will read:

Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, $6.72 a ton.

That is the present duty.

Mr. BURROWS. I move to strike out line 155 for the purpose of having printed in the RECORD an abstract of testimony taken before the Tariff Commission, which is the last information we have on the subject of glass. I desire to have that printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right under the general leave granted by the House.

Mr. BURROWS. The abstract of testimony to which I have referred is as follows:

GLASS.

[Tariff Commission.]

Mr. De Pauw, of New Albany, Ind., testifies before the commission: "We manufacture two-thirds of all the plate-glass in the United States. The price of some sizes is only two-thirds and others one-half of what it was when we started. Regarding the tariff, I would say the cause of increase in importations is our competition in this country. We have invested $1,250,000, and employ 1,000 men.

"Plate-glass is made of the raw materials sand, soda-ash, and lime.

"Our industry is only about ten years old in this country; if a reduction is made in tariff we must then reduce our labor expenses, as everything else is run as cheaply as possible. A reduction of 25 per cent. would stop the industry."

Mr. Hitchcock, of the St. Louis Plate Glass Company, states: "We desire that the duty on plate-glass should remain as it is; it is a new industry; there are only four or five factories in this country; we have struggled along through ten or twelve years, and the profits amount to almost nothing. Eventually we will be able to stand without protection, but not yet. We pay in this country as compared with England, Belgium, and France all the way from two to four and a five hundred per cent. increased wages. In this year, 1882, we have a capacity of 2,000,000 feet, about one-half the consumption of the United States. The importation ranges from two to four millions.

"The establishing of these plate-glass factories in this country has reduced the cost to consumer from $2.50 to $1.

"Plate-glass mostly imported from Belgium and France; most extensive works in France. The moment duty on plate-glass is reduced, foreign manufactories will do exactly what they did before our factories were started. They may deny this, but it can be proven. Combinations were made in England, France, and Belgium not to sell to American consumers except at a certain price, and we were at their mercy. At present it will do them no good to combine against us, for our manufactories hold them in check.

"The French Government not only protects its manufactories of plate-glass by a protective duty, but it gave them a subsidy for years. We do not ask for subsidy; all we want is a reasonable protection.

"It has been stated that duty on plate-glass is 100 per cent. This is not so; it varies, according to size of the plate, from 2½ cents a square foot up to 50 cents a square foot. From statistics furnished by Mr. Nimmo it is shown that from 1870 to 1881 there were $26,000,000 worth of plate-glass imported, on which there was a duty paid of $13,000,000, showing average of those years about 50 per cent.

"Amount of capital invested in this country, two and one-half or three millions of dollars."

Mr. W. C. De Pauw, father of one already heard, stated some valuable information to the committee which they ordered printed. I went to Europe with my son and spent 13 months in studying foreign plate-glass industry. This information has been obtained after long, patient investigation and after many refusals. Americans do not realize the jealousy existing abroad against our manufacturing establishments; especially is this true of England, where we are regarded as her greatest rival.

I regret to say that plate-glass manufacturers in Europe who had been shown through my establishment at New Albany, Ind., flatly refused to let me look in their establishments, although I had letters from their largest customers in America and some of the most prominent men in America; hence I resorted to government officials and records.

In England from 1671 to 1856 the tariff actually prohibited the importation of plate-glass. From 1671 to 1714 duty was $1.29 per square foot; from 1819 to 1829 duty increased to $1.60, and then from $ .50 to $2.75 per square foot. In 1845 this extreme rate of duty was lowered, but is still prohibitory. These duties are more than five times as high as the highest duty ever levied by the United States.

In France up to 1860 importation of window-glass prohibited; plate-glass prohibited under severest penalty; for instance, in the law which was annulled in 1786 we find this: "Importation of mirrors prohibited under pain of confiscation and £3,000 penalty." Since that time it has always had a tariff duty double as high as ever levied in the United States.

In this way France, Belgium, and England built up and maintained the largest and most successful glass manufactories in the world.

Americans are paying about half as much for plate-glass to-day as they did prior to the time we manufactured it in this country.

All money put into this business prior to 1879 was a total loss. This was the experience of some of the shrewdest and most energetic business men of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, and Louisville.

The general agent for France, Belgium, and Germany, at Paris, said to Hon. J. J. Brown, of Indiana, "Shippers understand how to evade tariffs."

Mr. Bodine, of Pittsburgh, before the committee said, "I represent the American Association of Window-Glass Manufacturers. Consumption of window-glass in the United States amounts to 3,000,000 boxes per annum, both American and imported; of this three-fourths is American, one-fourth foreign. The capacity of American factories is or would be equal to the total consumption. The number of window-glass factories in the United States is 92 furnaces, with 836 pots; these are distributed through States as follows." (See page 1999 Tariff Commission, vol. 2.)

The manufacture of window-glass is a product of labor without machinery and from crude materials. Our labor competition is mostly with Belgium, where labor is cheaper than anywhere else in Europe.

The effect of the present duty on window-glass is unfavorable to none. The producer is benefited by the direct labor employed; the whole country is benefited by the consumption of native crude material and the giving of employment to our labor.

Window-glass is known as "double-thick" and "single-thick;" double-thick 50 per cent. thicker than single-thick.

The price per pound, as shown in this table (page 2004, Tariff Commission, volume 2), for imported glass proves that American competition drove down the price abroad for American shipments 5¼ cents per pound in 1873 and 1874; to 3.1 cents in 1881.

We have made attempts to ascertain wages accurately abroad, but owing to the fact that, as they expressed it, "the American tariff was not favorable to them," they have refused any information. As nearly as we can find, however, the wages are 33 per cent. higher here than in Belgium.

Mr. Hitchcock, of St. Louis, before the Morrison committee, in 1886, made another very able statement of the industry:

"Large plates which in 1872-'73 would sell for $2.50 per square foot and upwards now sell for 90 cents and $1. This decline in price is directly attributable to American competition, as whenever American manufacturers have suspended production occasionally foreign manufacturers have immediately put up the price."

[Treasury report.]

Five firms ask that the duty on beveled glass be the same as cut-glass, as the process is the same; now it is the same as plate-glass.

Four firms concur in this.

Mr. Ford, president of the Pittsburgh Plate-Glass Company, said:

We use in this manufacture—

	Per ton.
White sand	$3.00
Soda ash (domestic)	35.00
Sulphate of soda (domestic)	17.00
Limestone	3.40
Arsenic (imported)	62.00
Salt	20.00

Cost of labor, from 35 to 40 cents per square foot. Operating expenses average $42,000 per month. There are other elements in composition. (See page 155, if wanted.)

We believe the tax is being evaded from the fact that plate-glass can not be imported and sold at present prices without a heavy loss to the importers. If this is incorrect, why is it that merchants outside of seaport cities never import plate-glass? An importer informed a Western merchant who was going to attempt it, "You do not understand working custom officials."

The cost of production was so great when plate-glass was first manufactured that, though it was $2 per square foot and the duty was the same, yet every dollar invested prior to 1880 was lost.

Had it not been for the protection of the Government, not a foot of plate-glass would have ever been made in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now upon line 156, "iron in pigs, iron kentledge, $6 a ton," to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] has moved an amendment to insert after the word "dollars" "and seventy-two cents."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some misunderstanding in reference to lines 118 to 130.

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph was disposed of, no amendment being offered to it. The preceding paragraph was passed over by consent.

Mr. DALZELL. The members on this side of the House do not so understand, but both paragraphs were passed over to be recurred to hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. They were read at the last meeting of the committee, and no amendment was offered, and they were read again this morning, but no amendment was offered, whereupon the committee proceeded to the next paragraph.

Mr. ADAMS. It will be found there is an understanding on both sides of the House that these two paragraphs were to be passed over to be recurred to hereafter. I have made inquiries on both sides of the House and find that to be the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. From lines 103 to 117 were passed over to be recurred to hereafter.

It is as follows:

Green and colored glass bottles, vials, and demijohns and carboys (covered or uncovered), pickle or preserve jars, and other plain, molded, or pressed green and colored bottle-glass, not cut, engraved, or painted, and not specially enumerated or provided for, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound; if filled, and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are subject to an ad valorem duty, or to a rate of duty based on their value, the value of such bottles, vials, or other vessels shall be added to the value of the contents for the ascertainment of the dutiable value of the latter; but if filled and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are not subject to an ad valorem duty or to a rate of duty based on their value, they shall pay a duty of three-fourths of 1 cent per pound in addition to the duty, if any, on their contents.

The next paragraph, which was disposed of, is as follows:

Flint and lime glass bottles and vials, and other plain, molded, or pressed flint or lime glassware, not specially enumerated or provided for, 30 per cent. ad valorem; if filled, and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are subject to an ad valorem duty, or to a rate of duty based on their value, the value of such flint or lime glass bottles or vials, or other vessels of like material above provided for, shall be added to the value of the contents for the ascertainment of the dutiable value of the latter; but if filled, and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are not subject to an ad valorem duty, or to a rate of duty based on their value, they shall pay a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem in addition to the duty, if any, on their contents.

Mr. DALZELL. The understanding on this side of the House was that both paragraphs were to be passed over, to be recurred to hereafter.

Mr. DOCKERY. It will be remembered that refusal to make that agreement was the occasion of the dilatory tactics on Saturday evening.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Missouri will not call those dilatory tactics.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question before the committee is the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. REED. It is evident there was a misunderstanding as to that paragraph, and I ask, by unanimous consent, it be passed over, to be considered with the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks that the paragraph embraced in lines 118 to 130 be passed over, to be recurred to hereafter.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman from Maine that was disposed of by the committee. There was no purpose to pass it over informally. We would prefer to dispose of it now.

Mr. REED. It relates to the same subject as the preceding paragraph, and we ask they may be considered together.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is the objection to disposing of it now?

Mr. REED. It has been desired to have the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] present when the preceding paragraph was disposed of. I do not know whether he is concerned with this or not.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not know.

Mr. REED. If there is any doubt about it, Mr. Chairman, I think it should be passed over, and I ask, by unanimous consent, that be the understanding.

Mr. BLAND. How many lines does it include?

The CHAIRMAN. It includes from line 118 to 130.

Mr. BLAND. If we are constantly to recur to what we have disposed of, we will never get through with legislation. I object.

Mr. REED. It all relates to one subject.

Mr. BLAND. I do not care; we have disposed of it.

Mr. REED. In the confusion the Clerk sometimes reads so rapidly that we do not understand.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What has become of the paragraph included between lines 135 and 141?

The CHAIRMAN. That has been passed over.

Mr. DOCKERY. While I have not objected to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], I have sent for the RECORD and find it is in exact harmony with my statement in reference to this matter. It is as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

"Flint and lime glass bottles and vials, and other plain, molded, or pressed flint or lime glassware, not specially enumerated or provided for, 30 per cent. ad valorem; if filled, and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are subject to an ad valorem duty, or to a rate of duty based on their value, the value of such flint or lime glass bottles or vials, or other vessels of like material above provided for, shall be added to the value of the contents for the ascertainment of the dutiable value of the latter; but if filled, and not otherwise provided for, and the contents are not subject to an ad valorem duty, or to a rate of duty based on their value, they shall pay a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem in addition to the duty, if any, on their contents."

Mr. ADAMS. I want to understand this matter of the defect in the existing law, and I have an impression that there is in the pending bill an attempt to remedy that defect. Therefore, if the gentleman really desires the existing law as to rates to stand, instead of striking out the paragraph on page 13—I speak of it now because there is precisely the same provision in the paragraph just read—it would achieve his purpose, and it would be better to simply restore the existing rates in this paragraph and leave the language of the paragraph to stand; because in the language of the paragraph I believe (although I am not familiar with the subject) will be found the remedy for the defect in the existing law which has been under discussion.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We passed over informally the paragraph upon which discussion arose, and the Clerk has just read the next paragraph.

Mr. BURROWS. Is it understood that that paragraph is passed over informally?
Mr. MCMILLIN. Which one?
Mr. BURROWS. The one which has just been read.
Mr. MCMILLIN. No, sir.
Mr. BURROWS. Then we have something to say about it. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. REED. It may be that you are correct, but that has not been the understanding on this side of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I only stated this to show what occurred; but I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. DOCKERY. No, I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has objected.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. MCKINLEY. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment is simply the existing law; and the duty fixed by existing law is none too high for the successful prosecution of this industry. The importations last year were very large, competition was very sharp, and there is not a consumer in the country who is complaining of the price of pig-iron. The reduction proposed on this article in the bill will, of necessity, come out of the labor employed in the industry. I hope, therefore, the amendment I have offered will be adopted.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The present rate of duty on pig-iron is equivalent to 50.51 per cent., being $6.72 per ton. The reduction that is proposed is only 72 cents a ton, a very mild, a very moderate and reasonable reduction; and I do not think it would be either proper or wise, when there is an inevitable necessity and great demand for the reduction of the revenue, to restore the present rate of duty.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MCKINLEY; and on a division there were—ayes 64, noes 69.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. No quorum.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. MCKINLEY and Mr. MCMILLIN were appointed tellers.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I withdraw the point of no quorum; I did not understand the announcement of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers have been demanded.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I renew the point of order, in order to save time.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the preservation, repair, and improvement of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and requested a conference with the House thereon; and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. RANSOM managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1669) to authorize the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company, of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.

THE TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron railway bars weighing more than 25 pounds to the yard, $11 per ton.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to strike out lines 157 and 158.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 47, noes 54.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. No quorum.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw the point of order, and I will demand tellers.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Very well.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Now I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. MCKINLEY and Mr. MCMILLIN were appointed tellers.

The committee proceeded to divide, but before the announcement of the result,

Mr. MCKINLEY (one of the tellers) said: I withdraw the demand for a further count.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steel railway bars and railway bars made in part of steel, weighing more than 25 pounds to the yard, and slabs and billets of steel, $11 per ton.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 161, the words "and slabs and billets of steel."

Mr. BAYNE. What is the reason of the amendment?

Mr. MCMILLIN. One reason, and a very important reason, is that the railway bar is the advanced product of the billets, and we do not think it is proper to fix the same rate of duty on the slabs and billets that is fixed upon the more advanced product, namely, the railway bar that is made from steel in that shape.

Mr. BAYNE. What duty is proposed to be placed upon the slabs?

Mr. MCMILLIN. The present rate of duty will remain in force if these words are stricken out.

Mr. BAYNE. What is the present rate of duty?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Forty-five per cent.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. That leaves the steel billets as under the present law?

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is the effect of the amendment.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Forty-five per cent. ad valorem?

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is the present rate.

Mr. BAYNE. That is the equivalent, I understand, of about $8 per ton. At the present selling rate it is about $1.28 more per ton upon pig metal, and it is——

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is exactly as we find the existing law.

Mr. BAYNE. But are you not willing to correct inequalities or errors in the present law if you should find any? If there are defects in the law, do you propose to correct them? There seems to be a good deal of indisposition on the part of the committee to rectify any mistake or omission or error of any kind, however grievous, which they may find in the present law.

Here is an obvious case. Here is a place where soft steel should be raised and a duty of at least $10 or $12 a ton be put upon it, in order to bring it up to its proper rating in comparison with the other ratings of the iron and steel schedule. Yet there is no disposition whatever to do that. I regret to say that this is one case perhaps in which a Representative from a Democratic district has failed. This industry is represented in the State of West Virginia by a very excellent gentleman [Mr. WILSON], who is a member of the Ways and Means Committee. When the bill was first reported it was put in good form, and if it had passed the committee in that shape it would have been all right. But a discovery was made that it raised the duty. It properly raised the duty. The gentleman from West Virginia was quite right when he had that amendment put into the bill which raised the duty above the existing law. It was a proper thing to do. But it was discovered by the majority of his colleagues that the duty was being raised. That was enough. It was like shaking a red bandana before a good Republican or a red rag before a bull. It was cut out, and now you relegate steel slabs down to the low rate of duty which they pay under existing law. That rate of duty is too low. It is not right. There ought to be some disposition to rectify this error and put steel slabs at a proper rate of duty. But there is no such disposition.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In response to the gentleman's statement that there is no disposition to rectify errors in existing law, I need only state that the whole bill is framed to rectify mistakes in existing law. We can not hope, however, to rectify every mistake that has been made in the last twenty-five years.

Mr. BAYNE. Is 45 per cent. ad valorem a duty proportionate to the duty paid by the other articles on the iron and steel schedule under existing law?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I can not state about that; but we have given a very material reduction in steel rails—from $17 a ton to $11 a ton. At the same time we do feel a little disinclined to increase the cost of the material out of which they are made.

Mr. BAYNE. But you put in your bill $6 a ton for pig-metal.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Exactly.

Mr. BAYNE. And $8 a ton on, or about that for, steel slabs.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is in the existing law.

Mr. BAYNE. I know it is, but it needs rectification in that respect.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman would rectify by raising duties. I have never known the gentleman to propose to rectify by lowering duties.

Mr. BAYNE. The only rectification you would make would be by lowering.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I say you have never proposed to rectify any duty by lowering. That was my remark.

Mr. BAYNE. I will refer the gentleman to bichromate of potash.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The present paragraph as it stands provides:

Steel railway-bars and railway-bars made in part of steel, weighing more than 25 pounds to the yard, and slabs and billets of steel, $11 a ton.

The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out from the bill the words:

And slabs and billets of steel.

The reason he gives for that motion is that it is, as it now stands, placing the manufactured product and the article of which the manufactured product is made upon the list at the same rate. That is true, but I desire to call his attention to the fact that when this bill was framed slabs and billets of steel were not a manufactured product any more than they are to-day, and that railway bars were just as much a manufactured product. If the bill was correct then, his amendment is wrong now. If his amendment is correct, the bill was wrong when it was indorsed by the St. Louis convention.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. DALZELL. In a speech delivered in this House on the 11th day of May last, the gentleman who represents the Erie district of Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] made certain statements with respect to the cost of the manufacture of Bessemer-steel rails, and certain statements also with respect to profits derived from that industry.

I think the cause of truth demands that those statements should be met, and as I can not cover the ground in five minutes I ask leave to print, and will furnish to the Clerk, for the RECORD, an article upon that subject treating of these two propositions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. This, with the changes that I make, I adopt as my own.

The gentleman from the Erie district of Pennsylvania said:

The following is the cost of manufacturing a ton of steel rails, of 2,240 pounds, at the Edgar Thomson Steel Works, located near Pittsburgh, Pa., during the year 1887, one of the largest establishments of the kind in the United States:

Market price of 1 ton of No. 1 Bessemer pig-iron at the mill		$18.00
Converting same, per ton		1.50
Blooming, per ton		.72
Finishing, per ton		1.87
1¼ tons Connellsville coke, average $1.35 per ton		1.62
		23.71
Add for net loss on material, first to last, 13 per cent		3.08
Total		26.79
Divided as follows:
Labor	$4.09
Material and waste	22.70
		26.79

The percentage of labor cost to the cost of production is 15.26 per cent. The percentage of labor cost to the average selling price of steel rails, namely, selling price of rails, $37.50; labor, per ton, $4.09, is 10.9 per cent. The present rate of $17 per ton duty on steel rails is equal, under the present tariff, to an ad valorem duty of 85 per cent.

Referring to the figures thus given of the alleged cost of producing a ton of steel rails at the Edgar Thomson Works in 1887, which the gentleman places at $26.79, it is noticeable that he makes no allowance for the labor cost of producing the iron ore, coke, limestone, pig-iron, and other raw materials which enter into the production of steel rails, nor for the labor cost of transporting these raw materials, thus disingenuously attempting to create the impression that labor receives many times less than its due share of the price of the finished product. This labor cost of the production and transportation of raw materials is as much a part of the labor cost of producing a ton of steel rails as that which enters into the final manipulation of the raw materials in the converting department and in the rail-mill. Instead, therefore, of the labor cost of producing a ton of steel rails in 1887 being $4.09, as stated by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. SCOTT], it was many times that sum.

It is also noticeable that he makes no allowance in his table for spiegeleisen or ferromanganese in the production of steel rails. The manufacture of steel rails is not possible without the use of one or the other of these raw materials, both of which in 1887 cost much more per ton than the Bessemer pig-iron referred to in the first line of the gentleman's table. His subsequent incidental reference to spiegeleisen as an element in the production of steel rails which costs "very little" would be ridiculous if it were not wicked. The cost of spiegeleisen or ferromanganese in every ton of steel rails produced in this country in 1887 was about $3. Assuming that the gentleman's calculation of the cost of a ton of steel rails in 1887, namely, $26.79, was correct as far as it embraced the details of such cost, there must be added about $3 for spiegeleisen or ferromanganese, thus making the cost of a ton of steel rails in 1887, according to his own showing, not less than $29.79.

But the very first line of his table contains so serious an error that no confidence ought to be placed in any of his statements. His table pretends to give the cost of producing a ton of steel rails in 1887. In the first line of the table he gives the "market price of one ton of No. 1 Bessemer pig-iron at the mill" as $18. The market price of Bessemer pig-iron in this country in 1887 was at no time as low as $18. At the beginning of the year the price was $21.50 per ton; at the middle of the year it was $21.25 per ton; as late as November it was $20; and at the close of the year it was $19. These are quotations at Pittsburgh, where the Edgar Thomson Works are located. A fair average for the whole year would be not less than $20, or $2 per ton more than the price given by the gentleman.

He distinctly states that "the cost to produce a ton of steel rails at the Edgar Thomson Steel Works in 1877 was $26.79." It has been shown that in omitting the spiegeleisen or ferromanganese and in misstating the cost of a ton of Bessemer pig-iron his figures are at least $5 too low. To these serious miscalculations should be added the cost of the steam-power, which is not included in his table, and also the cost of all repairs, the cost of general management, taxes, insurance, and other elements of cost which he has omitted. The gentleman's calculations being grossly inaccurate, his conclusions are entirely without value.

The gentleman is said to be a millionaire many times over. He would resent as an impertinence any inquiry on the floor of the House into his profits in any particular year, yet he did not hesitate to refer to the alleged profits of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the principal owner of the Edgar Thomson Steel Works, in the following language:

One of the members of the Edgar Thomson Steel Works, Limited, admitted to me within the past month, within 200 feet of where I now stand, that a statement, made by myself in the fall of 1886, was correct, namely, that he drew out of the company as dividends in one year the sum of $1,500,000, the equivalent of $5,000 per day for three hundred days in the year, and this was but one member of the firm, with no statement of profits undivided. No intelligent business man will put the profits of this company at less than $5,000,000 in prosperous years, and we will allow them to employ 7,500 wage-workers.

Mr. Carnegie, not being a member of Congress, and not being in Washington when these charges were made, could not promptly contradict them. He, however, wrote the following letter, which places the gentleman's reputation for candor and fair dealing in a very unenviable light:

CARNEGIE BROTHERS & CO., LIMITED, BRANCH OFFICE,
No. 48 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, May 16, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry I beg to state exactly what occurred between Mr. SCOTT and myself in the room of the Ways and Means Committee, at Washington.

I said to Mr. SCOTT: "You have been making speeches around the country saying that I would not consent to become an American citizen, and that I was a foreigner profiting by the high tariff." Mr. SCOTT said that he had made that statement "under a misapprehension," and he now knew "it was not true." He had "read Triumphant Democracy," and knew that I was an intensely patriotic American. He promised not to repeat it.

I said: "There is another statement you have made which is equally incorrect, namely, that I took a million and a half of dollars of dividends from my manufacturing interests in one year." I gave away in one year a million of dollars to found three public libraries, and had given about half a million before, and I explained to Mr. SCOTT that these libraries would not be finished for several years. Mr. SCOTT appeared satisfied with the explanation, and said that I was entitled to credit for the disposition I had made and was making of my means.

So far from ever having drawn a million and a half from our firm in any one year, I have never drawn a million, nor half a million, nor any sum approaching it. The money that we have earned has mainly gone into new and improved works, to develop still further the resources of this great Republic.

So far from the steel-rail industry in this country having been excessively profitable, the capital invested has scarcely yet received a moderate return. There are eleven large steel-rail manufacturing works in America, and of these five have failed and been reorganized, two of them twice.

There is no steel-rail monopoly; anybody is free to enter upon the manufacture of steel rails. There are no patents. If Mr. Scott really believed the profits of the iron and steel business were beyond the average it is strange that he did not continue to operate the iron mill at Erie in which he once embarked. He can to-day purchase the shares of most of the steel-rail manufacturing concerns in this country for less money than there is capital invested.

As for one steel-rail manufacturing concern making $5,000,000 per annum, all the steel-rail companies of this country will not make $5,000,000 profit this year, nor anything like so great a sum.

With a capacity to manufacture double the amount of rails required, the steel-rail mills of this country have nothing to look forward to for some time but a severe struggle to run part of their works and maintain their organizations. The present price of rails ($30 at works) shows what we have to expect.

Yours, very respectfully,
ANDREW CARNEGIE.

Mr. JAMES M. SWANK, Philadelphia, Pa.

The CHAIRMAN. The formal amendment having been withdrawn, the question recurs on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. BAYNE. Let it be reported.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. Before further progress is made with the provisions of this bill relating to iron I ask that these provisions be passed over until my colleague [Judge KELLEY] is present. He is not here. I am certain he felt that this——

Mr. BLAND. We have already thrown away one day and given away two. I object to passing over anything more. If we are to get through with this bill before the dog-days let us go on and get through with it. I protest against any passing over or recurring on behalf of anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope that objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. BLAND. I hope it will not, and I enter my protest now against delaying the bill in this way or passing over anything.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bar-iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flats not less than 1 inch wide nor less than three-eighths of 1 inch thick, seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound; comprising round iron not less than three-fourths of 1 inch in diameter, and square iron not less than three-fourths of 1 inch square, and flats less than 1 inch wide or less than three-eighths of 1 inch thick, round iron less than three-fourths of 1 inch and not less than seven-sixteenths of 1 inch in diameter, and square iron less than three-fourths of 1 inch square, 1 cent per pound: Provided, That all iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig-iron, except castings, shall be rated as iron in bars, and pay a duty accordingly; and none of the above iron shall pay a less rate of duty than 35 per cent. ad valorem: Provided further, That all iron bars, blooms, billets, or sizes or shapes of any kind, in the manufacture of which charcoal is used as fuel, shall be subject to a duty of not less than $20 per ton.

Mr. MOFFITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 179, page 16, after the word "twenty" insert "two."

Mr. MOFFITT. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that if the committee fully understood the process of manufacturing charcoal iron and the great amount of labor reqnired to produce a ton of it, this amendment would be agreed to.

As I have been actively engaged in this branch of the iron industry during the past sixteen years, if the committee will give me their attention for a few moments, I will briefly explain the cost of manufacturing a ton of charcoal bloom iron in the Lake Champlain district of New York, which I have the honor to represent, which is as follows, namely:

7½ cords of coal wood on the stump (which is the amount required to manufacture a ton of iron)		$0.75
Cutting and hauling, at $1.50 per cord		11.25
Coaling and delivering 340 bushels of charcoal		7.00
Mining, separating, and transporting 2 tons of ore		13.00
Making and hammering the iron, including superintendence		8.00
Maintenance of plant		2.00
Total		42.00
Deduct value of wood on the stump	$0.75
And ore in the ground	.30
		1.05
Labor cost in each ton		40.95

And I am authorized to say that the manufacturers of this article in my district would and will pay a good commission to any man who will at this time sell their product at its cost to them.

I would state to the committee that the Lake Champlain district of New York furnishes to-day nineteen-twentieths of all the charcoal bloom iron that is now made in this country. I would further state that I am unable to name a single manufacturer engaged in this industry who has during the past six months been able to get a new dollar for an old one. Those who have had the courage to run at all have done so at a loss for the purpose of retaining their old and valued employés, hoping to drift on to better times. They have also been obliged to carry nine-tenths of their product in hopes that this bill would not pass, and that their old customers would again be in the market for at least a part of their iron. The consumers, upon the other hand, "fight shy," to use a trade term, and purchase in small lots from a hand-to-mouth character, thinking that if the Mills bill should pass they could purchase charcoal iron at $2 per ton less.

The total output of blooms and billets made in the United States with charcoal in 1887 was 43,306 tons. In 1887 there were 37 bloomaries prepared to make blooms from scraps and pig-iron, and their output was 22,018 net tons. There were also 48 forges arranged to make iron direct from the ore, and these produced, in 1887, 15,088 net tons, of which 15,043 net tons were made in my district. Forges of this kind were once numerous in the mountainous districts of North Carolina and Tennessee. Barely a half dozen are ever actively at work in both these States. Those which are occasionally active make a very few tons of blooms, which are hammered into bar-iron for local use.

The following table shows the proportion of ore blooms and billets made in New York in the past thirteen years as compared with the production of the whole country, and the proportion of the production in the United States of pig and scrap blooms which was made in Pennsylvania in the same time:

Years.	Net tons of 2,000 pounds.
	Ore blooms and billets made in New York.	Total make of ore blooms and billets.	Pig and scrap blooms made in Pennsylvania.	Total make of pig and scrap blooms.

The output of the charcoal-iron workers of the country would suffer with all other iron industries by any tariff reduction which admits into competition manufactures of iron at a less rate than is now paid. By reference to this table you will notice the crippled condition of the charcoal branch of this once prosperous industry, brought about by foreign competition, which the present duties permit.

The whole commercial struggle in this industry now is between the United States and foreign countries, and the question between them is, who shall finally be able to secure and hold control of the American market?

Why, Mr. Chairman, only a short time ago we had in the Lake Champlain district one hundred and seventy-five forge fires in full blast making charcoal bloom-iron. The employés then engaged in this industry were well paid and their families well provided for. A large number of the more industrious owned a horse and carriage and had accumulated a surplus over and above living expenses, which was placed to their credit in the savings-banks of the district. While to-day, owing to the depressed condition of the iron market, scarcely forty forge fires are in blast. The skilled labor that had formerly been engaged in this industry have been obliged in many instances to obtain work elsewhere at common labor. The iron produced in this valley has the reputation of being equal to any produced in the world, and with proper protection the output can be increased to satisfy the wants of our own people, without calling on the manufacturers of Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, Norway, and Sweden. The duty, instead of being diminished, should be increased. But, Mr. Chairman, I doubt not that the gentlemen upon the other side, who favor a reduction of the tariff, will say that this state of affairs was brought about by an overproduction of iron, while upon the other hand we hold that foreign importations, manufactured by the cheap labor of Europe, is the prime cause of our trouble.

I quote from the Annual Statistical Report of the American Iron and Steel Association for 1887, page 53, statistics of the foreign iron trade for 1887:

GENERAL SUMMARY FOR 1887 AND FOR PART OF 1888.

In our last annual report reference was mde to depression in the iron and steel industries of Europe, which commenced in 1883 and continued until the latter part of 1886, when a general improvement began, the demand increasing and prices advancing. This improvement was largely due to the active demand for iron and steel which then prevailed in the United States; the iron and steel manufacturers of Great Britain, Germany, and Belgium receiving large orders for their products from this country, some of which were not filled until 1887. The improvement in the iron and steel industries of Great Britain was most noticeable. The year 1887 witnessed in the main a continuance of the improved condition of the iron and steel industries of both Great Britain and the Continent. The demand for iron and steel very gradually increased—large quantities going to the United States; prices, however, fluctuated considerably during the year, although in the aggregate they were better maintained than in immediately preceding years.

This shows the cause of depression here to have been, not overproduction by our mills, but excess of foreign importations rendered possible by pauper labor. In 1886 Sweden and Norway manufactured 442,457 metric tons of charcoal pig-iron, a large part of which finds its way into the United States under the present rate of duty and undersells our manufactures in open market.

I wish to say to the gentlemen upon the other side who favor a reduction of the tariff that all claims for overproduction of pig or bloom iron amount to nothing when statistics are taken into account, for you will find that our stocks of pig-iron carried over are practically offset by the importations of foreign pig-iron, showing that our domestic industry is sensitive enough to take care of itself but not to provide for foreign importations.

Our production in 1887 was 6,417,148 gross tons—our imports during the year amounted to 467,522 gross tons, the unsold domestic stock with which we began the year amounted to 225,629 gross tons, and the unsold stocks with which we closed the year amounted to 301,913 gross tons. Tabulating these details we have the following as the probable consumption of pig-iron in this country in 1887 in gross tons:

Domestic production in 1887	6,417,148
Imported in 1887	467,522
Stocks on hand January 1, 1887	225,629
Total	7,110,299
Domestic stocks on hand December 31, 1887	301,913
Probable consumption in 1887 in gross tons	6,808,386

At the close of 1887 the quantity of foreign pig-iron in bonded warehouse and not sold was so small that it need not be considered, and our exports of pig-iron in the same year need not be considered for a like reason.

In and about the iron works in the Champlain Valley common labor gets $7 a week, while skilled labor gets from $10 to $18 per week.

In Belgium in the iron and steel works $4 a week would furnish an ample supply of common labor, while skilled labor seldom if ever averages more than $6.

Wages all over Great Britain are low and decreasing. Two shillings, and in favored localities two and six pence a day, equivalent to about 61 cents of our money, are the highest wages paid to common men laborers, and I am credibly informed that skilled labor receive less than one-half the compensation actually paid for like service in Northern New York.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, the fact is conclusively shown to the mind of any man having a practical knowledge of this industry that the passage of this bill will be a re-enforcement to our foreign competitor of such formidable strength as to turn the tide of the commercial battle now being waged between us in favor of the foreign producer.

Great Britain, Belgium, Norway, and Sweden are just as certainly sure of obtaining our market in this particular if this bill passes as if they already had it. Is it any wonder that the capital invested, the wage-worker employed in, and the industries dependent upon this branch of American manufactures are all crying out against this deliberate, premeditated, and thoroughly destructive blow at this leading and important source of national and individual wealth?

In my opinion no American who is proud of his country and desires to see it prosper can remain silent while such a deadly design is contemplated, or fail to raise his voice and cast his vote against it; and while I do not expect that any considerations I can urge will at all affect the organized bludgeon of the free-trade majority of this House, now so threateningly and ruthlessly raised against the business interests of this Union, I can at least here enter my most earnest and emphatic protest against the proposed action. And this I do, Mr. Chairman, accompanying it with the prophecy that when the people of this Union are heard upon this subject they will so speak that this House will no longer have the wish or the votes to annihilate the American market for any of our industries in favor of the foreign competitor, who owes no allegiance and gives no support to our Government.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the following proceedings took place:

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOFFITT] has expired.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to continue for five minutes longer.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOFFITT].

The amendment was rejected—ayes 54, noes 66.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to strike out the whole paragraph down to and including line 180.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will prevail. We are now dealing with a very important schedule, namely, the metal schedule, and when we consider how rapidly the industries embraced in it have grown it seems to me that we ought not to take any step that will cripple or destroy those industries. In 1850 we had only 1,434 establishments in this country engaged in these industries, while in 1880 there were 3,532. In 1850 there were but 22,000 hands employed; in 1880 there were 298,862. In 1850 the capital invested in these industries was, in round numbers, $16,000,000; in 1880 the capital invested was over $416,000,000. They paid in wages in these industries in 1850 only $7,000,000; in 1880 they paid more than $122,000,000. The value of the material used in 1850 was $43,797,854; in 1880 it was over $380,000,000. The value of the product of 1850 was, in round numbers, but $83,000,000; in 1880 it was more than $604,000,000.

And, Mr. Chairman, it is a significant fact that while these industries have grown so rapidly and have given employment to labor and investment to capital, there is not a single item in the schedule that has not been reduced in cost to the consumer. In confirmation of that statement I desire to have printed an abstract of testimony given before the Tariff Commission, showing not only the growth of the industries but also how the prices to the consumer of the articles embraced in this schedule have been reduced.

The following is the abstract:

IRON AND STEEL.

[Tariff Commission Report.]

Mr. S. J. Loughran testified before the Commission. "There is not much imported iron or steel used in our city of Des Moines. Common English is inferior to common American iron.

"American machinery steel is taking the place of iron in construction of machinery. The quality is excellent, and competition among American manufacturers has reduced the price as low as that of superior iron.

"The protective tariff has improved the quality and lowered the price of iron and steel in all their forms. The cost of iron and steel can be reduced permanently only by American competition and free trade at home, not with foreign nations.

"Admitting reduction of tariff on some articles as necessary, we dread the result of any reduction that would close mines or mills. The panic of 1873 would again be felt in every home."

Charles A. McNair, St. Louis, representing Missouri Furnace Company, said: "The iron manufacturers of the United States have just held a convention at Cresson, Pa. Our interests demand protection. Much capital invested here; our blast-furnaces have all been built since 1870."

John Roach, Chester, Pa., testified before the Commission, as follows: "The iron interest is national, not sectional. To the three great wants of man, bread, clothing, and fuel, must be added a fourth—iron. What has it not done for civilization? The nation that makes no use of iron is a barbarous nation. The nation that can not produce iron must forever be a weak and dependent nation without the means of self-defense."

England early recognized this, and is far ahead of other nations in her iron and coal interests. This it is which has made her the richest nation of the world.

Production of pig-iron in principal countries is as follows:

	Tons.
Great Britain	7,721,833
United States	4,295,414
Prussia	1,950,000
France	1,733,102
Belgium	610,000
Total	16,310,349

England alone produced nearly one-half of the total. Can we afford to let England increase and the United States decrease till we, with the rest, shall be almost dependent upon her?

I believe that were it not for iron and the use we have made of it we could not hold this vast territory known as United States under one central government; our brethren would say, "We can not suffer the great inconvenience incident upon going to make laws for the nation; we must have a government of our own."

When we have the iron shall we leave it in the mine undeveloped? There is but one answer. We must continue to give iron the protection needed to develop the vast resources yet undiscovered. This interest in this country to-day gives employment to one-sixth our actual working population. Much has been said about "monopoly" in connection with this interest; indeed, it is called the "father of monopolies." I have been engaged in this interest more extensively perhaps than any other and I have never found out yet where the monopoly is. In 1880 we imported $80,483,365 worth of iron and steel, showing that we required that much more than we could produce. Yet capital was perfectly free to go into the production of iron. Why was not the capital found to supply from our own mines and furnaces the $80,000,000 worth? From 1870 to 1880 we imported $430,223,753 worth. Why was not capital forthcoming to produce that supply at home? Three reasons why:

1. Maps of England, Scotland, and Wales, showing iron, coal, and limestone deposits, and the distance and location of iron centers from market: Great Britain has these within smaller space, and hence possesses advantages of location which render it impossible for other nations to compete with her without protection.

2. Labor: I am now going to tell you some stubborn facts which I have experienced within the last year. I have just completed a modern blast-furnace at a cost of over $250,000. Everything that could be done in reduction and compression of labor was done, and probably there is no other furnace in the world to-day that can produce pig-iron with fewer hours' labor per ton. But this furnace is composed of iron, stone, and brick. What shape was the iron in when I began the enterprise? Ore in the mine. Where lay the stone? Coarse rock in the quarry. What were the bricks? Clay. You know, gentlemen, the value of clay when you begin to make brick out of it.

These materials before labor was put into them was not over 5 per cent. of the furnaces' cost. The balance that made up the cost was labor. In England, France, and Germany the cost of this labor is 60 per cent. less than in this country. Hence the furnace built in those countries would cost 60 per cent. less ($150,000) while mine cost $250,000.

3. In sections of the United States where the iron interest is yet not entirely developed, the cost of capital would average 8 per cent., or $20,000 a year on $250,000, while in England, France, and Germany it would be only 3½ per cent., or $5,250 on the $150,000.

There were other difficulties, among them the constant hue and cry, which rendered capital frightened and uncertain over tariff legislation. This cry was raised chiefly by a class who have no interest in American development or in anything but selling the goods of foreign nations over the counter. Notwithstanding all this the industry is not crushed.

Shall we leave these 22,000,000 tons of ore, coal, and limestone buried in our own soil and encourage their development in a foreign land simply because labor is cheaper, and consequently productions of all kinds cheaper. What will the effect be to this nation of drawing each year from our financial resources and sending it abroad to purchase our iron supply? Will not this increase the cost of iron in the country we purchase it from?

From 1850 to 1860 (low tariff):

	Cents.
Ship-iron	4
Flange-iron	5
Angle-iron	3½
Rivets, iron	5
Average	4½

From 1870 to 1881 (high tariff):

Ship or tank plates	2¼
Flange-iron	4
Angle-iron	2½
Rivets	4½
Average	3½

Or 25 per cent. less than 1850 to 1860.

From 1870 to 1880, years of high tariff, the iron products of this country increased about 100 per cent. In those years it would be supposed increased demand would create an increased price, yet though wages were higher by 20 per cent. during the latter period the price of iron was reduced, as is seen, 25 per cent. This proves that cheap iron does not depend upon a foreign market, but upon competition, energy, and enterprise of our own people.

Much is heard of the steel rail monopoly.

James Park, president iron and steel convention at Cresson, Pa., testified:

"In 1860, the last year preceding the adoption of our present tariff policy the country's production of pig-iron amounted to 821,223 gross tons, its production of rails to 183,069 tons, and steel, 10,569 tons. In 1881, the last of the twenty-one years during which the present policy has been in force, our production of pig-iron was 4,144,254 gross tons; steel rails, 1,646,518 tons; steel, 1,588,314 tons."

When the Morrill tariff was adopted this country had not produced one pound of Bessemer steel, and it was not until 1867 that its manufacture in the United States as a commercial product may be said to have been established.

Our railroads consume more than one-half of all the iron and steel that the country produces or buys abroad. At the beginning of 1861 only 30,635 miles of railroad had been built in the United States; beginning of 1882, 75,000 miles more than in 1861.

It will be asked whether or not the prices of iron and steel have been reduced to consumers under our protective policy. Protection by encouraging competition has always reduced the prices of manufactured articles, but the occurrence of our civil war and the consequent creation of our greenback currency have retarded the cheapening effect which would otherwise have been produced.

But the test of cheapness is not the true test to apply to any economic policy. Everything bought or sold may be cheap in money price, and yet those who buy and those who sell may be very far from prosperous. It has been well remarked by a recent writer that in countries where prices are lowest the people are generally poor and ignorant, and that the blessings of low prices are nowhere so likely to be found as among a people who clothe themselves in breechclouts and grass mats and live on wild fruits and insects. The products of both agriculture and manufacture may be high in price, and yet consumer as well as producer be prosperous. An economic policy must be judged by its general prosperity of the people, and not by prices. If the consumption of iron and steel under present tariff has been so much in excess of all former times the inference is irresistible that the country was prosperous under protection or it could not have required so much and be able to pay for them regardless of price.

The ability to purchase and not the price of a commodity governs all trade operations. But protection does cheapen prices.

Let us see what protection has done for the industries of Great Britain, particularly iron and steel. The perfection which she gave to her iron industry after Cort had perfected for her the puddling-furnace and the rolling-mill, and the owners of these furnaces had generally introduced use of mineral fuel is especially noticeable. Prior to this time Great Britain had not made enough iron to supply her own wants. Now she could do this.

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE MORRISON COMMITTEE.

Mr. B. F. Jones, president of Iron and Steel Association and seventeen witnesses testify regarding iron and steel industry, and recommend continued protection. Why should iron ore be placed on free-list, or any reduction in tariff be made when new iron-ore fields are being discovered and developed in this country every year.

Lake Superior mines furnish about one-third pig-iron for United States. Capital employed in mining is:

Marquette district	$33,000,000
Menominee	18,000,000
Total	51,000,000

Fifteen thousand men are directly employed in mining, and these districts support 50,000 people.

Under a duty fully protective, home consumption can be relied upon to meet the wants of our iron and steel manufacturers with every variety of ore at lowest cost consistent with fair wages to American labor. Reliance upon importations would be dangerous and impossible. American ore can never be exported; it is entitled to a home market.

Mr. Wharton, on steel rails: "The profits had been large during four or five years; but altered conditions of trade have brought the prices of steel rails to a point where profits have vanished and losses have occurred; and looking at the question as a question of to-day, we say that to-day we are on a very narrow margin.

"There are twenty Bessemer steel rail works in operation in this country."

Mr. McMILLIN. The present rate of duty on bars, blooms, etc., is 51 per cent. on one grade, 58 per cent. on the next, and on the third 69 per cent. The proposed rates are: on the first grade, 46 per cent., and on the second 51 per cent. Therefore it can not be justly claimed that there is an unreasonable reduction here.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to strike out the last word. I notice that my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is still laboring under the delusion or superstition that protection benefits the manufacturers and the laborers employed in manufacturing establishments. In order to disabuse his mind of that idea, I ask to have read by the Clerk an interview had yesterday in New York with one of the most prominent manufacturers in St. Louis.

The Clerk read as follows:

A TARIFF-REFORM CONVERT—ONE OF THE BEST-KNOWN BRASS MANUFACTURERS ABANDONS HIS OLD REPUBLICAN FRIENDS.

One of the best-known manufacturers of brass and iron goods in the West, Mr. N. O. Nelson, of the N. O. Nelson Manufacturing Company of St. Louis, is the latest to bolt the Republican platform and its close communion protection plank. Mr. Nelson has never voted for a Democrat and, as he says himself, was born a Republican, but he can not stand the Chicago platform.

He employs three hundred men and manufactures machinery and steam and plumbing goods. A World reporter saw Mr. Nelson at the Murray Hill Hotel last night, and he was outspoken in his disapproval of what he termed, "so manifestly a party slogan, a catch."

"This country doesn't need the sort of protection they propose," he said. "It is un-American. It is intended to be prohibitory and to cut off our trade with other countries. It is, in fact, belittling America by assuming that she has not got surplus brains enough to compete with the simple cheap labor of other countries. We are doing a very considerable export business now. Eastern manufacturers in my own line send quantities of goods to Europe, and American lathes and tools, iron pumps, pipe-fittings, steam-valves, and the like are exported regularly and largely, notwithstanding the alleged excessive cost of our raw material. The radical mistake the party made at Chicago was in setting their face against reform of any sort or proper revision, which they had promised in their platform of 1884."

"Then you are not one of those manufacturers who tell their employés that in case Harrison is not elected wages will be cut in two and half the mills will be shut down?"

"That sort of talk is the sheerest and purest nonsense. Any manufacturer knows that it isn't the poorest and lowest-priced labor that is the most profitable. That is well illustrated by the fact that the slave labor at the South could not compete with the North, nor can convict labor compete with free labor now."

Mr. Nelson said that he has already met scores of his Republican friends who thought as he did in the matter. He sails on the Alaska to-day for a two months' European vacation.

Mr. Nelson is one of the few manufacturers who share their profits with their workmen.

Mr. NUTTING. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the letter which I have marked.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following, from the Tariff League Bulletin:

A LETTER FOR WORKINGMEN TO READ.

The following letter ought to be read by every workingman in this country. It speaks honestly and plainly.

"To the Editor of the Bulletin:

"DEAR SIR: I am very much interested in the present tariff bill now pending, which prompts me to write this letter to you. I am satisfied if the Mills bill passes both Houses that my wages will be reduced at least one-half. I am a mechanic, and have had a vote ever since 1871, and have always cast it for the Democratic party, but I will not vote for Mr. Cleveland or any other man that will reduce my wages. I am perfectly disgusted to think that I have supported that party so long and was so anxious to see them get into power; and the very first thing they they want to do is to ruin our industries and pull down our wages! If they are honest and conscientious in their views on the tariff I suppose they will be willing to have their salaries reduced in the same proportion that our wages are reduced.

"The proposition that I would like to make to Cleveland, Mills & Co. is this: That the wages of the President, members of the Cabinet, members of Congress, and every employé in the Government service, without a single exception, be reduced in the same proportion as the workingmen's wages of this country. I will refer you to an article published in the New York Herald on Sunday, November 21, 1886, under the head of "The Toiler." It tells of the wages, customs, etc., of the brick and stone masons of England, France, and Germany, and how they are obliged to live; and also tells how the same class live here, what wages they receive, etc. If these people think that the iron, glass, or pottery business is such a monopoly, let them go into the business and find out. They will find that there is enough competition to keep their eyes wide open, and will be very fortunate if they do not lose what they put into it.

"Who favored the working classes during the last panic? Not Grover Cleveland or Mr. MILLS. Not the men who were afraid of losing their money in banks or business. No, sir; it was the gentlemen of this country who, by keeping their money in the mills and factories, kept God knows how many good people from starving! The wages were small, it is true, but I believe in most instances the men made as much as the owners, and in some instances the men made more than the owners, as in case of a failure—and there were plenty of them—all of which the present low-tariff men escaped. Why did they escape? Because they would not put their money up and risk it to give you or I a day's work. What was the working class in this country before the war, and what were their wages? What have the working classes been since the war, and what have their wages been? Every person can answer this. I suppose they want good old Democratic times and slavery again.

"They say that if our wages are lowered we can buy cheaper. How can we buy when we have no work and no money? They want to stop the wheels that make our living in this country and start the idle wheels of Europe. I see enough of European customs without being forced to buy their goods. I am opposed to any person coming here from Europe and substituting their customs for ours in any way, shape, or form. At what per cent. did this country advance before the war? What was the farmer with his log house, rail fence, imported furniture, and no carpets on his floor before the war? And what is the farmer to-day, and what has he been since the war, with his mansion to live in, furnished with American goods made by American workmen, and surrounded by stylish, improved fences, with a barn worth ten times as much as his old house? And he does not allow his children to do as he did in the olden time.

"It is not fashionable enough with good farms, stock, carriages, etc., and yet Mr. Cleveland says the poor farmer is imposed upon. At least they want us to have a change, but they do not cite us any favorable precedent. They do not give us any facts or figures. Remember I am speaking from a workingman's standpoint, and I believe I speak the sentiments of a great majority if not of all the workingmen in this country. They want us to change a sure thing for an uncertainty. They say that our expenses will be reduced in proportion to our receipts, but they do not tell us that we shall have as much work then as now. We know just exactly how much we have paid for everything we are and have been using since we have had a tariff. We know just exactly what to expect if the tariff is kept on. They do not tell us what the cost will be if we have Mr. MILLS's new way.

"He does not agree to put down sugar trusts, grain trusts, and, worst of all, newspaper trusts, such as the New York World and other papers, which in this city have raised their price 25 per cent. on some of the papers and reduced the profits of the dealers 25 per cent.; and yet the World is always howling about monopolies and trusts. People who live in glass houses ought not to throw stones. I haven't the least idea that the profits of any iron or steel works, glass works, or pottery works are as profitable for the amount of money invested as the clear gains of some of the New York newspapers; yet the editor of the World wants low tariff and goods that are manufactured in Europe, although he does not tell us that he would be satisfied if his receipts were reduced 50 per cent. On the contrary he has raised the price of his paper. Will Standard oil be any cheaper?

"Will Western Union rates be any cheaper? Will New York papers lower their price? Will all of the members of Congress that vote for the Mills bill be willing to reduce their own salaries, possibly 50 per cent.? No, sir! They are not that kind of people. If I can save enough money out of my earnings I will take the stump this fall against Cleveland, Mills & Co., and talk to the working classes. The building interest in this city is almost dead, and in Brooklyn the same, compared with last year, and from what I can hear it is so all over the country. I am satisfied Mr. MILLS's new tariff bill is the cause of most all of it, for no one wants to build a house at the American price and sell it at an English, French, or German price. There is no merchant to-day who wants to buy iron, steel, glass, or pottery ware at the American price and perhaps sell it at a foreign or Mr. MILLS's price. One is as bad as the other.

"Very respectfully,

"J. W. McGRANAHAN,
"877 Eighth Avenue, New York City."

Mr. NUTTING (during the reading of the foregoing, when five minutes had expired) said: I ask for three minutes more, so that the reading of this letter may be concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can have the letter printed in the RECORD; it would take some time to finish the reading. Debate on the pending amendments is exhausted. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment submitted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will be withdrawn.

Mr. DINGLEY. I renew the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has sent to the Clerk's desk to be read what purports to be an interview with a manufacturer, who asserts that the cost of labor in manufacturing in this country, when compared by results accomplished, is no greater than in foreign countries. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the statistics which I presented the other day as to the cost of labor in the manufacture of lime, but which accord with those which may be presented in reference to every other industry of this country.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has frequently asserted on this floor that notwithstanding the weekly or daily wages of labor in manufacturing establishments in this country are from 38 to 100 per cent. more than in Great Britain—77 per cent. higher on the average—yet the labor cost of producing an article is no greater in this country than abroad, because our labor is more efficient.

Now, I obtained and had read to the House the other day statistics in the lime-manufacturing industry, obtained from manufacturing establishments in my own district, and statistics obtained in the same industry at St. Johns, in Canada, and they showed this fact, which every other industry will show, that precisely the same number of hours' labor are required to produce 100 casks of lime in the State of Maine as on the St. Johns, in Canada, and that this labor cost 10½ cents or 60 per cent. more per cask in the State of Maine than on the St. Johns.

In view of these facts—facts which may be demonstrated by reference to any other industry in this country—of what avail is it for gentlemen to rise on this floor and say that, notwithstanding the official statistics show that our labor costs on the average 60 per cent. more per day or per hour, yet the result obtained is 60 per cent. more, when the statistics show that not only in the lime manufacturing industry, but in most other industries, a given amount of labor costs 38 to 100 per cent. more in this country than in Great Britain? In this particular industry to which I have alluded, where the figures were given for each item and the number of hours' labor, it was shown conclusively that the labor-cost was 10 cents, or 60 per cent., per cask more in the State of Maine than in the Dominion of Canada.

Notwithstanding the presentation of these facts, and in the face of the protestations of gentlemen on the other side that they are willing to adopt a duty equivalent to the difference in the cost of labor, this House deliberately refused to increase a duty of only 3 cents per cask on lime so as to make it cover the difference in the cost of labor, to say nothing of the difference of cost of materials. Of what avail then, Mr. Chairman, are these protestations of willingness to cover the difference in the cost of labor if, whenever facts are presented, the majority on the other side of the House deliberately refuse to give a duty which covers that difference?

Of what avail are these protestations that a protective duty can not benefit the laborer, when it is shown in this particular industry, for example, that 10 cents more per cask is paid for labor in this country than in Canada, and that a failure to make the duty equivalent to this difference is gradually destroying this industry.

I am assured, Mr. Chairman, that whenever comparisons are made in any industry in this country, it will be found that labor receives, for effective results accomplished, at least 50 per cent. more than the same labor receives in Great Britain. And when protective duties are removed in all our industries, we must either give them up or reduce the wages of our labor to the foreign standard.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted, and the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

Mr. BAYNE. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I voted against the tariff act of 1883; I was one of ten or eleven Republicans in this House who so voted. I did so because I did not assent to the conclusion of the Tariff Commission that there should be any reduction of duties. I do not think there exists now any necessity for reduction of tariff duties. I frankly admit there is a necessity for a reduction of the revenues of the Government. The revenues of the Government, however, can be reduced without touching the tariff at all, by taking off a sufficient amount from the internal taxes, the tobacco taxes and other taxes, the taxation on alcohol used in the arts, etc. In this way a sufficient reduction can be made to bring down the surplus revenue of the Government forty or fifty million dollars.

Mr. BYNUM. What are those taxes which you would reduce besides the tobacco tax?

Mr. BAYNE. I would take the tax off domestic tobacco entirely; and I would also take off the tax on alcohol used in the arts. That would make a reduction of about $40,000,000.

Mr. BYNUM. Where would you get the other $40,000,000?

Mr. BAYNE. We do not want a reduction of $40,000,000 more. If this Government is true to its disabled soldiers and the dependent widows and children of its deceased soldiers, and if this Government will build such a navy as it should have, $40,000,000 will be a sufficient reduction.

I was opposed to the reduction of the tariff in 1883; and I then predicted that it would cause an increase in importations. It has done so. The importations for domestic use for the calendar year 1887 exceed the exportations. The reduction of the tariff has caused that condition. The reduction proposed in this bill, if it goes into effect, will cause a further increase of importations. What is the effect? To drain this country of its gold and silver, and to take away from that business man whose interview was read the currency wherewith to manage and conduct his business.

That is the result of it. But how any business man who understands single-entry book-keeping can be in favor of a system which will encourage importations in excess of our exports is a mystery to me. The usual imports are consumed and disappear in a year, while gold and silver are enduring wealth. Some of the gold we now have doubtless circulated in the time of Alexander the Great. It is folly to adopt a policy that will drain us of this.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The imports of gold exceeded the exports of gold over $29,000,000 during the eleven months of the fiscal year 1887–'88.

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has referred to the increased imports and decreased exports during the fiscal year which has just ended, it may not be out of place to call the attention of the committee more fully to the figures reported.

I hold in my hand the monthly statement of our foreign commerce issued by the Bureau of Statistics and corrected to June 20. It shows that—

Our merchandise imports in the first five months of 1888 amounted to $309,686,376, and our exports to $266,409,988. Here is an adverse balance in round numbers of forty-three millions, against an adverse balance of fourteen millions in 1886, an adverse balance of three millions in 1885, a favorable balance of fifty-six millions in 1884, a favorable balance of ten millions in 1883, and a favorable balance of fifty-six millions in 1882.

In the twelve months ended May 31 our merchandise exports amounted to $669,278,898 and our merchandise imports to $722,257,106. Here is an adverse balance of $23,000,000 against a favorable balance of $39,000,000 in 1886–'87, a favorable balance of $42,000,000 in 1885–'86, a favorable balance of $167,000,000 in 1884, a favorable balance of $61,000,000 in 1883, and a favorable balance of $99,000,000 in 1882.

In the first eleven months of the fiscal year, beginning with July, there was an adverse balance of $10,000,000 against a favorable balance of $37,000,000 in 1886–'87, a favorable balance of $42,000,000 in 1885–'86, a favorable balance of $65,000,000 in 1884–'85, a favorable balance of $72,000,000 in 1883–'84, and a favorable balance of $111,000,000 in 1882–'83.

It has been claimed on this floor that there was no causal relation whatever between our imports and exports, and yet it has also been claimed with equal confidence that the "balance of trade," the apparent difference between the appraised value of our exports and of our imports had been in our favor for years because of our protective tariff. I leave to gentlemen on the other side to reconcile these claims. Over 70 per cent. of our exports are cotton and breadstuffs, provisions and petroleum. It will be found on closer examination that the quantities of these exports have not thus decreased; it is their value which has decreased. We sell abroad as much produce, but we sell at lower prices.

Under the present tariff, whether because of it or not, the selling price, which is the purchasing power, of our agricultural exports has steadily declined. This system, it has been demonstrated, can not prevent, if it indeed does not cause this constant and steady decline. With these exports we must pay the bulk of our foreign purchases. Whatever is not paid by exports must be paid in money, or in the sale of securities on which we must pay interest. The true balance of trade is far different from the so-called "balance of trade" that our opponents prate of so much, as Bastiat has conclusively shown. Indeed, perhaps the very largest net profit resulting from "trade"—commerce—is to those who handle, in its broadest sense, merchandise—the merchant, the insurance company, the shipper, the warehouseman; nearly all of which profit our system has robbed us of and given to foreigners.

Yet it is true that he who annually pays out more than he makes must in the end become bankrupt; and it is the value, not the quantity, of what he makes that is of essence here. For years the value of the bulk of our products has under our system steadily declined. Under the same system we are compelled to import what our wage-workers ought to manufacture here. With free crude materials our manufacturers could drive from our markets much the larger part of the imported finished products which are imported. This would give that increased labor to our workmen and increased capacity to purchase here the produce of agriculture which now must seek a foreign market. It would also permit our manufacturers to sell in foreign markets, and to the extent to which they could do this that much more labor is furnished to the American workman and that much wider market to the American tiller of the soil. The true "home market" America must have is to be found in selling her finished products abroad. Whenever we so alter our laws as to be able to export our finished products instead of our raw cotton and unground wheat we will have conquered the true and profitable "home market." During these eleven months in which our imports of merchandise have exceeded our exports of merchandise our imports of gold exceeded our exports of gold by $29,937,830, while our exports of silver have exceeded our imports of silver $12,605,686, notwithstanding the constant predictions that we would be drained of all gold and become the dumping-ground for all the European silver.

With a sound revenue tariff and freer and fairer trade relations with those countries whose crude material we need, and who need our manufactures, our silver would be at par with gold, and we would become the commercial center of the world; New York would take the place of London as the great clearing-house of the world's balances, and on the shores of our ports would be the warehouses in which the products of all the world await the purchaser.

Mr. BAYNE. I am aware of that; but how long will that continue? How long did it continue under a low tariff? There was not a period when we had a low tariff that we were not drained of our precious metals; not one. History will sustain that proposition all the way through. There has not been a period of high tariff when precious metals have not greatly increased in volume.

No, sir; we want to adhere to that system which will keep with us our precious metals, develop our own industries, and preserve for ourselves our home markets. That is the meaning of the protective tariff. We want America for Americans. The two tickets now running for election in next November represent emphatically these two ideas—one, the American idea that America should be for Americans and American markets for Americans; and the other, the American market should be open to the whole world.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCOTT. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] a question in connection with the statement he has just made. I ask him whether the Republican party of to-day stands on the same platform they did in 1884 on the tariff question; whether the Republican party of 1888 have not deserted their platform of 1884, and now come before this people asking them for their suffrages on a principle in connection with the tariff which they have never heretofore advocated?

I ask further, sir, when he says the Republican party is in favor of a policy in connection with the tariff question of "American markets for Americans" and the protection of American industries and American labor, whether under that policy he proposes to so carry out the tariff system in this country that is to protect 1,500,000 wage-workers in this country as against 16,000,000? That is the question I want to have answered.

If the census of 1880 is reliable, the adult population in this country engaged in various pursuits amount to about 17,000,000 of our people, and under those census returns about 1,500,000 of our population were engaged in what you may call the manufacturing interests of this country. Does the gentleman get up here now and announce to the country that the policy of the Republican party to-day is to carry on this Government and inaugurate a system of taxation that under any circumstances, even if it were practicable and could be carried out, would be simply in the interest of 1,500,000 of the wage-workers of this country and ignore the remaining 16,000,000 which such a system can not possibly protect?

Sir, those are the questions I would like to ask my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to answer me. If we go back to 1884, in the Republican platform they pledged themselves to what? To a revision of the tariff. [Derisive cries on the Republican side of the House.] To-day, sir, they come out and announce to the American people they have but one policy in connection with the tariff issues now before this people, and that is protection to one class, a small portion of the American wage-workers, to the totally ignoring of the other sixteen millions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, it is very delightful to see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] come back from his other occupations to attend to his occasional business as member of Congress, because he gives us such a breezy air of outdoor life. [Laughter.] It really quite awakens us, and it does not trouble him any because he does not know these questions have all been discussed during his absence, and the House has a certain familiarity with them which he believes fit for the eloquence of the kind which he uses. [Great laughter.] He says that our platform was a declaration for revision. I say it was for the correction of the inequalities of the existing tariff. The gentleman is surely aware of that fact when he makes his assertion.

But, Mr. Chairman, that has been repeated so many times that I thought any gentleman who honors us with his presence for a sufficiently long time to have an opportunity to become acquainted with the subject would scarcely have reiterated it; and I should not, were it not that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is so valuable a member of the House, have felt it necessary to take up the time to instruct him as they do the belated scholars in the public schools. [Laughter on the Republican side.] He undertakes to say and to repeat again as if it were something entirely new, as if it had not been exhausted again and again upon the other side of the House, that this tariff is for the benefit of the manufacturing classes simply.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman comes back again with his old idea that the American nation is composed of consumers entirely instead of a certain class of people following a great and needed industry, and in his mode of arguing all industries not immediately under discussion are barred; that is, that they are consumers merely and non-producers. He proceeds upon that idea, gravely repeats the same old story that has been repeated here over and over again, that we are a nation of sixty million consumers, with two hundred producers in this industry reaping the benefit of the tariff, all the rest left out; sixty million consumers, with two hundred or five hundred or two thousand, as the case may be, employed as producers, and all of the rest of the sixty millions are consumers, and then says, "Oh, what a terrible average!"

Is it not time that men came to the conclusion that the American people are not a set of sluggards and drones who are eating up the productions of a certain set of people who are outsiders, who do not belong to the American people, but who live somewhere in the clouds, and whom the gentleman wants displaced for the sake of, I suppose, some country he knows, to wit, the Government of Great Britain and Ireland. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, the American people are producers. They make everything, and the question is, what is the benefit of protection? We have shown conclusively and repeatedly that it is for the interest of America, and for the interest of the consumers of America, who are the American people, and the producers of America, who are also the American people, to have a market for America. We have proved that it conduces to cheapness, and that it gives low prices. We have also shown, even with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, that it gives good wages to the workingmen, that it supports business, keeps up competition, and that it makes prosperous and rich this great country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I am sorry to have had to trouble the committee again with a repetition of this matter, but it really seemed necessary for the benefit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and for his special information.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first occasion that the gentleman from Maine, in referring to myself, has made it an opportunity to speak of my absence, sir, from this Hall. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

No, sir; I have not been absent from this Hall any longer or for a greater number of days from the day that the House met than the gentleman himself has been absent; and because, sir, I have not on this floor detained this committee in the progress of this bill by interjecting the objections that he has made, and making dilatory motions and speeches, and trying to delay the progress of the bill under consideration, the gentleman has (apparently and naturally) come to the conclusion that I have not been present. If he had taken the trouble to look upon this side of the House he could have found out or very easily ascertained that from the day the House met after the holidays I have not been absent for fifteen days all put together, and that although I may be ignorant of the question that has been discussed here, as he alleges, my ignorance does not arise from my being absent from the House. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Maine knows that in his manner of discussing this bill, when a fair and square proposition is put to him, he has adopted his usual method of endeavoring to turn it off as a joke, or as a matter which was being discussed with him by somebody who did not understand the question presented. I say, sir, that the statement that I have made here in regard to the position of the Republican party now and in connection with their tariff plank as compared with that presented in 1884 is substantially correct, and the gentleman from Maine can not deny that assertion. It is susceptible of proof. I say further, sir, to the gentleman from Maine that when he gets up in this House and makes the statement that the policy laid down by the Republican party upon this floor in connection with the revision of the tariff is in the interest of the consuming classes of this country, he knows he is making a statement that he can not sustain or substantiate. I ask him to go to the great Northwestern sections of our country, where the farmers are toiling in their fields plowing, sowing, and reaping.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman mean to refer to Oregon? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir; I refer to the great grain regions of the West. I ask the gentleman to go to the men who are furnishing the labor by which the great bulk of the commodities which we export are produced, that labor which makes the balance of trade so greatly in our favor, and ask him to show to those men wherein his system of protection in any wise conforms to the promises of the Republican party and affords any relief to that class of our people.

He can not do it; but it is robbery to this class. It adds to the cost of every possible commodity that he has to consume, that he has to purchase, or that he has to use by your system of taxation, by adding from 30 to 40, 50 and 60 per cent. to the cost of everything he consumes. And yet, sir, when he has raised his crop and seeks a market he has to look abroad to Europe to take from 25 to 30 per cent. of his produce; and there he comes in competition with the cheapest labor in the world. What he produces and what he has to sell in that market is sold, and the price that he gets for it is regulated by the competition he meets there. The gentleman's system of tariff reform and protection to home industries, as he puts it, is simply a robbery and extortion against sixty millions of the wage-workers and the farmers of this country as against less than one million five hundred thousand of the adult population.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, amid all his declamation as to promptness of attendance here, has furnished us with two plain proofs that he has not been present during the discussion. In the first place, he charges me with having made dilatory speeches. This House knows better. He also repeats here a great deal of the discourse about the impoverished farmer, which shows that he does not know or he would not be guilty of repeating what has been said here a dozen times already. It is very curious what a bouleversement having a seat in this House makes in the world.

It is astonishing how all the protectors of farmers that come before us are as a class like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], who has never before been recognized as a great protector of farmers, but who on the other hand has been recognized as belonging to the great industrial interests, which, in this House at least, have been deemed to be antagonistic to farmers. But whenever a gentleman on the other side finds himself under a stress of weather he goes off into the regular well-known course which enables him to have the wind full against the sails of the prosperous farmer that is to be under the manipulations that are going to take place in this tariff. He points out how terribly the farmer is taxed by this system. I venture to say that if he is one of the next batch of Democratic orators sent to New York he will explain that he is not in the least against the system; that he is in favor of almost all of it except a little which he will say there is in the Mills bill. Now, it is a hard thing for the country that they can not listen to some of the gentlemen on this floor where we know them. They go over to New York, where they are not very well known, and they tell the New York people that they are really just as much in favor of protection as anybody else, only incidentally they would like to do one or two things.

Then they come back here and denounce the whole system. They use language in favor of this bill which can only be used in favor of the utter abolition of the tariff. They declaim against protection day in and day out. But the moment they stray beyond the borders of this House and actually face the people they begin to hedge, they begin to insist that they would not harm our industries if they could not help them; in other words, they begin to behave just exactly like Democratic platforms, one side in one place and the other side in the other. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now the gentleman complains I did not answer him. He says I got off in my usual manner and trifled with the deep seriousness of what he was saying. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Whenever a gentleman commences that way I always recognize the actual position of mind he is in. He knows he has been saying something which has been said so often that everybody knows it by heart; everybody is tired to death of it, and everybody likes to be relieved by having it put in its real, proper light. I really think the gentleman from Pennsylvania had better accept the explanation I made to the country that his absence is the proper excuse for these things. Surely if he should search with all the industry he has and all the industry that he can buy [laughter on the Republican side] he would find no better excuse than that which I have presented for him. I beg of him to understand that it was not done in any personal unkindliness, but out of a tender regard for his fame in the House, which has sprung up so suddenly to such very large proportions [laughter on the Republican side], almost commensurate to his distinguished reputation outside, which is very great, and to which I am sure this country will be ready at all times to pay the tribute of respect. I sincerely hope he will accept that explanation so that he will not be misunderstood. [Renewed laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BAYNE. My colleague put what I thought were pertinent inquiries, and his effort was to show that the home market was not what I claim the home market to be. Now, sir, of the total production of all things in this country the American people consume over 90 per cent. Only about 8 per cent. of the total production of the farm, the workshop, the mine, and the mill goes abroad.

Ninety-two to 95 per cent. of the productions of this country are consumed at home, and leaving out the one item of cotton, 92 per cent. of the product of the farm is consumed at home. Now, the question is whether you are going to destroy that home market which consumes 92 per cent. of the product of the farm, and whether you are going to open up our market to the foreign manufacturer? He will take no greater percentage of our products than he takes now, because in any case he will take simply what he needs. If anybody is under the delusion that by having a reduction in our rates of duty, and thus increasing our imports, we shall increase our exports, he is fearfully mistaken, because the people of Europe will buy of us what they need, and they will buy nothing but what they do need. Their wants regulate their purchases, whether of farm products or anything else. There are some additional reasons now why the home market should be preserved that did not exist a few years ago. A few years ago the United States had substantially the control of the European market for her grain surplus.

Her rivals were few and insignificant as rivals—Russia to a limited extent, Australia to a limited extent, and that was all. But how is it now? The American producer of wheat now has to compete with a most formidable rival. India, Russia, Australia have increased their exports. The sale of wheat from India in the European markets runs up to 50,000,000 bushels a year, whereas a short time ago it was only two or three million bushels. And the cost of the production of wheat in India is absolutely trifling compared with its cost in the United States, because men work there for 10 and 15 cents a day.

A MEMBER. Six cents a day.

Mr. BAYNE. Six cents a day, a friend suggests; but whether it is 6, or 10, or 15, no one will work for such pay here; and the sale in Europe of wheat brought from India is increasing year by year, and none of us can tell how largely it may increase in a very few years. If, then, the American farmer is forced to compete with the Indian and the Australian and the Russian producers of wheat, is it not the part of good sense for us to save as far as possible our own home market and to encourage manufacturing, mining, railroad transportation, and all the other branches of business that furnish home consumers for our agricultural products? That is one of the great ideas underlying the system of protection; and it strikes me that it is as simple a proposition as single-entry book-keeping that our proper course is to sell more abroad than we buy, and the way to do that is to keep up a good stiff tariff.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word by way of explanation. My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], in giving certain statistics here, has spoken of the home market and of the exportation of our products, and has made statements that are misleading and that call for correction. Let us take, for instance, the hay crop of this country, which the gentleman undoubtedly includes in his statistics of production and of the home consumption. I presume, sir, that when the gentleman comes to estimate the exports of this country in comparison with the demands of the home market he includes the hay crop, and that balances up and very nearly equalizes the entire wheat crop of this country. But, sir, when you come down to the article of wheat, and look at the quantity produced in the United States and the quantity exported, you find that our exports are 27 per cent. of our entire production.

Mr. BAYNE. That is all right.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman talks about only 2 and 2½ and 3 per cent. of our products being sent abroad, which can possibly be and which is exported, is not correct, and he eliminates the cotton crop from his calculation. Of course the cotton-planter of the South is not entitled to any consideration here at all.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, yes, he is.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no, he is not; not on your theory.

Then when you come to the article of cheese in the great dairy industry of this country you find that the exports of cheese are nearly 10 per cent. of the amount produced in the United States; and when you come to butter, you find that the exports are from 5 to 7 per cent. of the entire product. Then, sir, it is a well-known fact that the products which are exported determine to a very great extent the home prices. But there is another question that I want to bring to the consideration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. To-day, in our State, there are fifty thousand men who have been thrown out of work within the last week.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. One minute, sir; I have the floor. To-day, sir, those men are out of employment, and in what class of industries in this country have those fifty thousand laboring men been thrown out of work? In the protected industries which the gentleman and the party on the other side of the House are now standing up for and defending. And those men have been driven out of employment, how? Simply by their employers insisting upon a reduction of 10 per cent. on their wages. Why should the manufacturers of our State demand to-day that these men should submit to a reduction of 10 per cent. in their wages?

Is the state of the country at all different to-day from what it was last year? Has any tariff bill yet passed this House looking to a reduction of duties such as could possibly affect these men's wages? Is there not, sir, a Republican Senate at the other end of the Capitol; and if any bill detrimental to the wage-workers, as gentlemen claim this bill is, should pass this House, will it not be in the power of that Republican Senate to pigeon-hole it or smother it in committee, so that it will never see daylight again?

Why, then, I ask, is this universal demand made upon the wage-workers of this country for a reduction of their wages? I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania to answer me that question. I wish to know why the manufacturers of Pennsylvania, especially those whose business is covered by the metal schedules of the tariff, where there is a protection of 50 to 80 and 100 per cent., must now demand of their employés a reduction of 10 per cent. and drive them out of their mills because they will not submit to it?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

Mr. KERR rose.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to reply to my colleague [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. COMPTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can reply to his colleague when I am through. I think I am entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] is recognized.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire very briefly to call back the attention of the House to the question propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the answer made by the gentleman from Maine. The gentleman from Pennsylvania charged distinctly and unequivocally that the present position of the Republican party on the tariff is inconsistent with the position maintained by that party in its platform of 1884 and previous platforms; and the answer which the gentleman from Pennsylvania gets is the quibble from the gentleman from Maine denying the proposition that the Republican party is inconsistent with itself, and asserting that it is in favor simply of correcting the "inequalities of the tariff." I say, sir, that is a suggestion unworthy to be presented by the gentleman from Maine or any other gentleman to the mind of any intelligent assembly.

With reference to the position of the Republican party on this question, will the gentleman from Maine, or any other gentleman on the Republican side, deny the fact that every President, from Grant down, in every message presented to Congress—and none so forcibly as President Arthur—has urged upon Congress the right and the duty of reducing the rate of tariff taxation?

Will gentlemen on the other side deny that in every platform up to the last they advocated not a correction of the "inequalities of the tariff," but a revision and reduction of the tariff? They can not deny it, for the language employed in their platforms is so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, may read as he runs.

Nor is this all. When the Republican party held possession of these halls, and when popular sentiment was demanding a revision of the tariff, what did they do toward correcting the "inequalities of the tariff?" Did they march up to their duty and obey the demand of the people by a proper revision of the tariff? No, sir; they appointed a commission composed almost exclusively of Republicans, there being only a single Democrat upon it so far as I remember. What did that Republican commission recommend? Did they recommend a correction of the "inequalities of the tariff?" No, sir. They recommended a reduction of 20 per cent. along the entire line. Yet that Republican Congress had not the courage and manhood to march up to the recommendation of their own commission. Shall it be said that the other side of the House, composed, as it is, of men prominent in the country—men like the gentleman from Maine, with his national reputation—had not the ability to make the revision which was demanded? The opportunity was there, and the duty was upon them, if they had recognized it, to present a proposition for the correction of "inequalities of taxation." Where is the bill that they presented? They cry out against the Mills bill that it is a free-trade measure. They know better. Will they dare to go before the intelligent people of this country and tell them that a reduction of about 7 per cent along the whole line is a free-trade measure? No, Mr. Chairman, they know better; the people know better, and can not be deceived with any such proposition.

In what sort of a position do gentlemen on the other side stand here? How inconsistent with the language which falls from their lips. They say that the Republican party is in favor of correcting the "inequalities of the tariff." What do they do in their conventions and on this floor? They say in words as plain as the English language will enable them to use that they are in favor of retaining the present tariff and striking off if need be, the entire tax from whisky and tobacco. Is that an equalization of the "inequalities of the tariff?" If it is, it is more than I can see.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KERR. Gentlemen on that side of the House are trying to establish the proposition that the Republican party is inconsistent in its present platform as compared with its former position, and they rely upon an expression in the former platform to establish that proposition, namely: "The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff." Let us read the old position of the Republican party on that question. Here is the tariff plank of four years ago:

It is the first duty of a good government to protect the rights and promote the interests of its own people. The largest diversity of industry is most productive of general prosperity and of the comfort and independence of the people. We therefore demand that the imposition of duties on foreign imports shall be made not "for revenue only," but that in raising the requisite revenues for the Government such duties shall be so levied as to afford security to our diversified industries and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer, to the end that active and intelligent labor as well as capital may have its just reward and the laboring man his full share in the national prosperity. Against the so-called economic system of the Democratic party, which would degrade our labor to the foreign standard, we enter our earnest protest.

That was the position of the Republican party in 1884.

A MEMBER. Is that all?

Mr. KERR. That is all the tariff part of our platform of 1884. There is another sentence in another plank which says: "We propose to correct the inequalities of the tariff." And that is all that is said on the subject. Any gentleman who states the contrary can produce the proof by referring to the platform, but he will not find it there. As to the position of the Democratic party on that question, did they dare four years ago to take issue with us on that question? No, sir. What did they say? They did not take issue with the Republican party; shirking the issue, they said:

All taxation should be limited to the requirements of economical government.

That is good sound doctrine.

They say further:

The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

Now, that was the position of the Democratic party four years ago, but they come into this Congress in favor of the Mills bill. They never considered a single item to determine whether American labor was to be protected as they had promised. They never received a single sentence of testimony from any source on that question, and they stand before the American people with a bill which had not been considered in any one of its features, and they would have indorsed it at St. Louis if they had not heard the news from Oregon. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. They did indorse it.

Mr. KERR. But they indorsed it with a qualification which went back and re-indorsed the contradictory platform of 1884, and another contradictory position assumed by the President opposing any change in the internal-revenue system. The Democratic platform of 1888 contains three contradictory propositions, but the Mills bill would have been fully indorsed had they not heard from Oregon.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. I would like to see some votes taken and some progress made in this bill. We have had debate now for three months, and it is about time it stopped. I would like the committee to get through this bill, so we may go home.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I have done so much talking and my colleague so little, I hope the committee will bear with me for once. I wish to pay attention particularly to the gentleman from Ohio. Now, when the doctrine of protection to American industries was first announced by Henry Clay it was put distinctly upon the ground that it was necessary that our infant manufactures should be protected in this country. But when we built them up it was supposed farming and all kindred industries would be made prosperous. But, sir, when we built them up, instead of removing the burdens from their shoulders we find that when these interests had been fostered and strengthened and grown great by the protection of the Government, and had become rich and powerful, they then caught the farming and other kindred interests by the throat. I had a letter from a farmer a short while ago in which he told me that three-quarters of the farms in his township were under mortgage to insurance and other loan agencies all over the country, and there was scarcely a farmer in the township who could pay, and that unless they could get extension there would be a foreclosure of all their titles.

Now, when the gentleman talks about the farmers who ship their grain and the product of their toil to foreign countries and to foreign nations—their surplus—that which absolutely settles the price in this country beyond question, where it comes into competition with the pauper labor of the globe, then, I say, it is time for us to begin to think that we have protected the manufacturers long enough, and that it is time for us to turn the legislative thought to the perfection of some system of legislation which will just a little benefit the farmers of this country.

Mr. Chairman, they number some 7,500,000 directly and those engaged with them in the industry, and every particle of protection given to the protected industries of this country must come in directly out of them.

Now, another fact. If we have protected our industries until they have grown and become wealthy; if, according to the statistics of the census as shown by a comparison between 1870 and 1880, the total increase in the number of manufacturing industries in the whole United States was only 1,704, whereas in Missouri, Illinois, and Iowa there were practically three times that amount, for we know that the manufacturing industries of the East are less in number but vaster in wealth and capital and in the capacity to employ labor—only 1,704 new establishments from 1870 to 1880, an average of less than four to every State in the United States per year for the whole decade; but when you come to see the result in dollars and in the number of laborers employed, you find that there was the cash capital in these manufacturing industries of $700,000,000, and an increase in round numbers of 700,000 men employed in connection with them.

They have prospered; they have grown wealthy, so much so indeed that I have heard it stated by gentlemen competent to know, but whether it is true or not I do not know, that Mr. Carnegie, who is riding around through England in greater state than a lord of the realm, and carrying the great champion of the doctrine of protection, Mr. Blaine, made his fortune principally during that period and under the operation of that system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the time of the gentleman will be extended by unanimous consent for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSUR. I repeat, sir, that I have heard it stated, although I do not of course know it to be true, that Mr. Carnegie, twenty or twenty-five years ago, was a poor man, and was a telegraph operator.

He is now worth many millions, and is living in grand style in a foreign country, as the outgrowth of our system of protection to manufacturers in this country. I ask in that connection, can any one of you point to any one farmer who, out of the 7,500,000, has made one-half of that amount of money in that length of time? There is not one. Will it be insisted that out of the 7,500,000 farmers there can not be found the same degree of intelligence, the same capacity, the same industry to enable them, or any one of them, to build up such a fortune? It can not be said with truth. Many of them are men of a very high order of intelligence and ability. It is evident, therefore, that it must have been done under the operation of law.

In this connection let me say that for the first time in forty years I passed through the State of Pennsylvania—not having passed through it before since my boyhood days—over the great Pennsylvania Railroad. As I came into Pittsburgh and went out of the city in daylight, I stood on the rear of the train and saw on every hilltop villa after villa, beautiful enough to attract the admiration of any person.

But I would turn my eyes instinctively to the hollows, where in my country you would scarce put a pig-pen, and found they were filled with cottages, no, not cottages, but the commonest excuse for a house you ever saw, the mere semblance of a human habitation. They were stuck in these hollows by the hundreds, two or three families apparently occupying each of them; and on the rocky hillsides, where a man had to be almost a goat or a sheep to climb, I saw cabins tenanted by these laborers, where at the sacrifice of health, comfort, and of wages they paid for the palaces that stood on the hills around them. I could not help being impressed with the idea, Mr. Chairman, that for every wealthy man living in one of these palaces on the hilltop it was at the discomfort, the inconvenience, and the hard-earned wages of a hundred other helpless families, who were being robbed under the operation of law made in the interest of wealth and for the purpose of affording protection to the industries which would enable the capitalists to live in these palatial residences.

Mr. BAYNE. I renew the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Missouri is so far mistaken about Pittsburgh workmen that he simply knows nothing at all about it. The property owned by the workingmen in Pittsburgh, by the operatives in the mills and the factories, is of more value than all the property in your Congressional district. I tell the gentleman that, and do not let him forget it. Do not you undertake to discount the Pittsburgh workmen. Do not undertake to say that they do not live well. They carry as big a market basket home every Saturday evening as the best living man in the State of Missouri; and they have an abundance of money in the savings banks.

Do not undertake therefore to disparage them. They live on the very fat of the land; and let me tell the gentleman that a great many of these men make from $2,000 to $3,000 a year, nearly as much as a member of Congress, and when his political assessments are taken out they make more at the end of the year.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to refer now for a few moments to the remarks of my colleague [Mr. SCOTT]. When my colleague came back from St. Louis he said that he wanted to go ahead with this bill and get it through and not delay its consideration in the House, because the mere discussion of the bill was disturbing the business and the industries of the country; and right he was. To-day my colleague cites the fact that a hundred thousand men are now out of employment, and if the mere discussion of the question has turned out a hundred thousand——

Mr. SCOTT. I did not say it.

Mr. BAYNE. I give the gentleman the benefit of his denial, but logic is logic, and you must couple the two propositions together. If the discussion of this bill has disturbed the business of the country, it would seem as if the discharge of 100,000 men from employment were the corollary.

A MEMBER (on the Republican side). What will the passage of the bill do?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, what will the passage of the bill do? My colleague may or may not have intended to say what he did. I am wont to treat him with perfect fairness, as he has always treated me. Some one in the progress of this debate has referred to the fact that one or two manufacturers of Pittsburgh wanted free trade, that one or two of them had prayed for the day when free trade would come. They wanted wages reduced. But why, if such is the fact, did they want wages reduced? Besause they said it would obviate strikes. Why would it obviate strikes? Because it would make their operatives so poor they could not maintain themselves during a strike.

That is what it meant. It meant that and nothing more. I think a letter was produced here by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] some time during this debate, from a manufacturer, to the effect that he would welcome free trade. Why? Because it will reduce the wages of workingmen to such a degree that they will not be able to hoard anything up against either a rainy day or a strike.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Was that in the letter?

Mr. BAYNE. I think it was not; but he advocated that proposition, and that was the real argument. That was fallacious. I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that in free-trade England the people live in hovels, and not only live in hovels, but they have strikes in England.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not catch the reference I understand the gentleman made to me.

Mr. BAYNE. I said I thought it was the gentleman from Kentucky who had produced a letter here some time during the progress of this debate from a manufacturer, in which he advocated free trade as an antidote or remedy for strikes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Oh, no.

Mr. BAYNE. It was some other gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. BAYNE. Then somebody else produced it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I propose to put in a word, if I can, for a long-suffering, down-trodden, and oppressed portion of the American people that seem to have had very little sympathy here or elsewhere. I refer to nine-tenths of the members of this House, who want to proceed to business and get through with this bill before the dog-days, who are tired of hearing this political discussion which has continued for over three months, and which has been repeated over and over again, day in and day out, until there is nothing new to be heard under the sun upon it.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question; only one question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, we did nothing yesterday. We met here this morning and agreed to adjourn over to-morrow, and on Thursday not to take up this bill; so that practically it will be near the middle of the month before we proceed to it again. Do gentlemen suppose that the members of the House on this side desire to remain in here to listen to a political discussion? For two months we have been hearing stories told over and over again until we are sick and tired of them. Let gentlemen go home upon the hustings. People there may be interested in these stories. That is the proper place to discuss them. Pittsburgh is notorious for gas. There gas is the natural product.

Mr. BAYNE. Will not the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. BLAND. I say, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of the down-trodden members suffering in this House, and that want to do business, that there are four or five members here who are keeping us, doing nothing but repeating over and over again old stories that we have heard so often. In the interest of those down-trodden and oppressed members, nine-tenths of the House, I say let us have a vote. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word.

It would have been fortunate, Mr. Chairman, for the members of this House, and for the country too, if the idea which seems to possess the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] had occurred to him earlier in the session. But I rise not to make a response to the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri, but to call attention to some of the remarks which were uttered by the gentleman from Maryland in regard to the position of the Republican party on the tariff question. Any person listening to his statement would suppose the Republican party to-day is in favor of a high protective tariff upon all the articles that were ingrafted upon the bill during the war and immediately following the close of the war, and would suppose from his statement, too, that the Republican party had insisted upon maintaining a high protective tariff upon these different articles.

Now if the gentleman had taken time to look over the history of the party, even if he had taken time to read the minority report of the Committee on Ways and Means, he would have found that since the close of the war the Republican party has reduced the taxes to the amount of three hundred and sixty-two million five hundred and some odd thousand dollars. That is the record the Republican party has made in the reduction of taxation in this country. It has done that during the eleven years which it has had control in this House since the close of the war.

Now, whenever these figures are presented, or whenever a member of the Republican party gets up to protest against the Mills bill you find a Democrat popping up somewhere to say "what have you to offer as a substitute?" At the time the Republicans were thus reducing the war taxes they met with opposition again and again from the Democratic party, but the Republicans did not answer the Democrats with this childish cry. They went sturdily forward in the interest of the people of this country and passed their laws, as the Democrats have the power here, if they are united, of passing the Mills bill. The Republican party is not opposing this bill because it reduces taxation, as our friends on the other side of the House claim, but because it is a bill which, as I stated in a speech a short time ago, "keeps the word of promise to the ear and breaks it to the hope."

It is because it puts certain articles upon the free-list that should be protected, and because it is sectional in character. As has been stated before by me upon this floor, no argument can be adduced by any gentleman showing why wool should be put upon the free-list, and yet rice be protected. There is no reason why the Southern planter should be protected in the cultivation of rice any more than the Northern farmer should be protected in the production of some of the articles of farm products which are here put upon the free-list. Take, for instance, potatoes, beans, pease, and fresh vegetables, meats, game, etc., which are put upon the free-list by the Mills bill. How does that affect the farmers along the Canadian border?

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Potatoes are not put on the free-list, and the potato crop of the North is larger than the rice crop of the South.

A MEMBER on the Democratic side. It would be well if they were.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Well, beans, pease, vegetables, etc., are put upon the free-list, while rice is protected. That is one of the reasons why we claim this bill is sectional. No reason can be given why rice should be protected any more than any one of the articles which I have enumerated. The statistics show——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I hope we shall now have a vote on the paragraph.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I dissent from the views expressed by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that we are not learning anything from this discussion. It is true I may be a little unsophisticated, but I have picked up a good deal of information as this debate has run along. I sat here the other day and heard the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] both ridicule the idea that a tariff was a tax. In my simplicity of mind, resulting from some early reading, I had supposed that a tariff was a tax, and when I heard those gentlemen ridicule that proposition I thought I would go back and look at the text-books a little and see what the writers had to say upon that subject. I introduce this now for the purpose of construing later the meaning of the Republican platform of 1884. Judge Story, in his work on the Constitution, which in the earlier and better days of the Republic, when the old Whig party opposed the Democratic party, was thought to be good authority against the doctrines held by the Democratic party then as now, says:

> The language of the Constitution is, "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," etc.; "but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." A distinction is here taken between taxes and duties, imposts, and excises; and, indeed, there are other parts of the Constitution respecting the taxing power (as will presently be more fully seen), such as the regulations respecting direct taxes, the prohibition of taxes or duties on exports by the United States, and the prohibition of imposts or duties by the States on imports or exports, which require an attention to this distinction.
> In a general sense all contributions imposed by the Government upon individuals for the service of the State are called taxes, by whatever name they may be known, whether by the name of tribute, tithe, tallage, impost, duty, gabel, custom, subsidy, aid, supply, excise, or other name. In this sense they are usually divided into two great classes—those which are direct and those which are indirect. Under the former denomination are included taxes on land or real property, and under the latter taxes on articles of consumption.

The Constitution by giving the power to lay and collect taxes in general terms doubtless meant to include all sorts of taxes, whether direct or indirect. But it may be asked, if such was the intention, why were the subsequent words "duties, imports, and excises," added in the clause? Two reasons may be suggested: the first, that it was done to avoid all possibility of doubt in the construction of the clause, since in common parlance the word "taxes" is sometimes applied in contradistinction to duties, imposts, and excises, and in the delegation of so vital a power it was desirable to avoid all possible misconception of this sort and accordingly we find in the very first draught of the Constitution these explanatory words are added. Another reason was, that the Constitution prescribed different rules of laying taxes in different cases, and therefore it was indispensable to make a discrimination between the classes to which each rule was meant to apply.

The second section of the first article, which has been already commented on for another purpose, declares that "direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States, which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers." The fourth clause of the ninth section (which would regularly be commented on in a future page) declares that "no capitation, or other direct tax, shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken," and the clause now under consideration that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." Here, then, two rules are prescribed—the rule of apportionment (as it is called) for direct taxes, and the rule of uniformity for duties, imposts, and excises. If there are any other kinds of taxes not embraced in one or the other of these two classes (and it is certainly difficult to give full effect to the words of the Constitution without supposing them to exist), it would seem that Congress is left at full liberty to levy the same by either rule, or by a mixture of both rules, or perhaps by any other rule not inconsistent with the general purposes of the Constitution.

It is evident that "duties, imposts, and excises" are indirect taxes in the sense of the Constitution. But the difficulty still remains to ascertain what taxes are comprehended under this description, and what under the description of direct taxes. It has been remarked by Adam Smith that the private revenue of individuals arises ultimately from three different sources—rent, profit, and wages—and that every public tax must be finally paid from some one or all of these different sorts of revenue. He treats all taxes upon land or the produce of land, or upon houses or parts or appendages thereof (such as hearth taxes and window taxes), under the head of taxes upon rent; all taxes upon stock and money at interest, upon other personal property yielding an income, and upon particular employments or branches of trade and business, under the head of taxes on profits; and taxes upon salaries under the head of wages. He treats capitation taxes and taxes on consumable articles as mixed taxes, falling upon all or any of the different species of revenue. A full consideration of these different classifications of taxes belongs more properly to a treatise upon political economy than upon constitutional law.

And I find my usually fair and lucid friend from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY], the leader on the other side of the House upon this subject at least, saying in his recent speech upon the floor of the House:

First, what is a revenue tariff? Upon what principle does it rest? It is a tariff or a tax placed upon such articles of foreign production imported here as will produce the largest revenue with the smallest tax.

That is the definition of the gentleman from Ohio, and I accept it as true. But, Mr. Chairman, the Republican party have reached a point where they deny what Story laid down as the law and as the meaning of this provision of the Constitution, and where they have repudiated also the definition of my friend from Ohio. They hold now that a tariff is not a tax, and construed by that principle the Chicago platform of 1884 is as clear as mud.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

On motion of Mr. MONTGOMERY, by unanimous consent, the time of Mr. ROGERS was extended for five minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. I am thankful to the gentleman from Kentucky, and as I have had nothing to say upon the tariff so far, I shall be glad to be indulged for a few minutes longer, perhaps even beyond the additional five minutes allotted to me. In view of the definition given us by the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I proceed to read the Republican platform of 1884. I read now the part of it which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] neglected to read, and following the paragraph which he read:

The Democratic party has failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus.

It can not be said that any complaint has ever been made of the Republican party of a failure to reduce the surplus. They have great talent in that particular direction and ample disposition to exercise it to its fullest capacity. But how hollow and disingenuous is this charge when it is remembered that it was they, with the assistance of a very few Democrats, that struck out the enacting clause of the Morrison bill and defeated thereby not only a wise reduction of the surplus, but that which, if possible, is of paramount importance—unwise and indefensible taxation, far in excess of the needs of the Government.

But let us read the next paragraph of the platform of 1884:

The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicious and indiscriminate process of horizontal reduction, but by such method as will relieve the tax-payers without injuring the laborer or the great productive interests in the country.

I am willing to admit, Mr. Chairman, that I really supposed that the party intended to have the country believe—not that they intended to do it—that their purpose was to correct the inequalities, so notorious in the present law, by reducing the tax on such articles as were too high. But the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] now says that is a mistake, and I accept his interpretation as being in accord with what I then thought was their intentions, but not what the platform was intended to proclaim. But let us look at this production analytically for a moment.

The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff—

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] says not to reduce it—and to reduce the surplus—

Why, Mr. Chairman, who will not recognize, in view of the history and practice of that party, the utter superfluousness of that pledge? Why, that is a part of their scheme to keep up taxation—"the reduction of the surplus"—not by reducing taxation, however. But to continue—not by the vicious and indiscriminate process of horizontal reduction—

Striking at the Morrison bill, which contemplated a horizontal reduction of taxation, as well as the reduction of the surplus—but by such method as will relieve the tax-payer without injuring the laborer or the great productive interests in the country.

Mr. Chairman, who is the tax-payer, if he is not the laborer? In my simplicity I thought they were the same man. I should like to see the laborer who is not a tax-payer. He does not exist in this country, unless he lives on air and water exclusively and goes naked. The only man in this country who does not pay his full share of the taxes under existing law is the capitalist, the millionaire, the bondholder, the corporations and trusts.

No laborer escapes; no laborer can escape. He is emphatically the tax-payer. But what is this last pledge? It is—to reduce the surplus * * * by such method as will relieve the tax-payer, etc.

"Relieve the tax-payer!" Mr. Chairman, that is just what the Republican party has been doing for the tax-payer for the last twenty-five years—relieving him of not less than 30 per cent. of all his earnings, and for several years past when there was no need for it. That is precisely what the tax-payer complains of now, that you do not stop relieving him after that method. But if he wants consolation let him read the late Chicago platform, and scan these debates, and find that that same method is not only to continue, but to continue on a higher scale, provided always the Republican party can have its way. Yes, they have kept their pledge "to reduce the surplus," so far as the Democratic party in the House of Representatives would permit; for if any appropriation has been proposed, from that day to this, unless perchance it was the payment of some war claim or something of that character at the South, that they have not been ready to sustain, it does not occur to me now.

No, their platform in 1884 and now means just what the gentleman from Maine says they do—that is, that they do not intend to reduce tariff taxation. If we have accomplished nothing else, we have at least arrived at this gratifying result: we know what they mean. These gentlemen representing the Republican party now proclaim, not only in their platform, but upon the floor of this House, their determination to maintain this system of tariff taxation just where it is now, or if they do anything at all, to increase the taxation and keep out any competition in foreign goods.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman tell us what the President in his message says the platform means?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman will pardon me; that is out of the line of my discussion.

It is and has been repeatedly said on the floor of this House that gentlemen who stand here advocating the Mills bill advocate free trade, but when they get outside of the House take some other position, and begin to hedge—that no gentleman has stood up here and denied that fact. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Speaker of this House, in his speech on this subject, said:

No, sir; we do not want another China here; nor do we want or expect absolute free trade. We all recognize the fact, which I suppose even the gentleman from Maine will concede, that the Government must have a revenue for its support, and that this revenue must be raised by taxation in some form or other.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me call attention for one moment to the Democratic platform of 1884, to which reference has been made:

From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue; such they must continue to be.

And the St. Louis platform indorsed that declaration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent for an extension of five minutes. I have not before occupied time in this discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me read further from this platform:

Moreover, many industries have come to rely on legislation for successful continuance.

I recently saw, in this connection, a document published by the manufacturers of Philadelphia, in which they announced, in advance of the Chicago platform, the principle that the tariff taxation must be increased or else some of these industries must perish. The uniform cry from all sources—"Tray, Blanch, Sweetheart," and all—is that they do not intend to reduce taxation at all; and that if we do it, every industry in the country affected by the Mills bill is to be destroyed.

Why, sir, these stereotyped letters from manufacturers have been read until one can almost repeat them from beginning to end, making only the necessary changes in order to conform to the particular industry interested. You go so far as to draw the line between manufacturing industries and the other industries of the country, as if farming were not an industry, as if every man who is a laborer in this country is not entitled to equality and justice under equal laws.

Moreover, many industries have come to rely on legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved.

The Democratic party, understanding this, knowing that those industries occupy under existing law an abnormal condition, and careful that they be not destroyed or swept away by any sudden legislative change, announced then, as it announces now, that it is not the purpose to break down or to destroy any industry, but to reduce taxation in such a way that all industries may adjust themselves to the changed condition of the law.

The process of reform must be subject in the execution to this plain dictate of justice. All taxation shall be limited to the requirements of an economical government. The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country. Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government economically administered, including pensions, interest, and principal of the public debt, can be got, under our present system of taxation, from custom-house taxes on fewer imported articles of luxury and bearing lightest on articles of necessity.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. No; I decline to yield.

We therefore denounce the abuses of the existing tariff; and subject to the preceding limitations, we demand that Federal taxation shall be exclusively for public purposes and shall not exceed the needs of the Government economically administered.

On this platform we went before the people in 1884; and the result is known to the country. We stand on this platform to-day, and we appeal to the country again that we shall be vindicated in all our efforts to maintain and uphold the principles laid down in this platform.

Mr. Chairman, we have three alternatives. We can violate these pledges to the people by refusing to reduce taxation. That is one way. Nothing would shed so much sunshine in the hearts of gentlemen on the opposite side of the House as to find us at the close of this Congress in that condition. We shall not gratify you. We can also raise taxes as gentlemen on the opposite side desire, so as, to use the figurative language in the speech of the gentleman from Maine to which I have already referred, "to build up a Chinese wall," and thereby further cripple and shackle the commerce of the country. It is to this suicidal and criminal policy you invite us. We decline your invitation, and this is the second alternative. The third alternative is to reduce taxation, and thereby reduce the surplus, affording, at one stroke, relief to the people by relieving them of the unjust burdens of taxation, and, at the same time, leaving their earnings in their pockets in the future, that it may go into the channels of business instead of being locked up in the vaults of the Treasury.

No charges that we are free-traders, will deter us in the discharge of this duty. We can not reduce taxation without traveling in the direction of free trade! Nor can you increase taxation without increasing the burdens of the people. No special pleading, no specious arguments, no fallacy, no sophistry, can avoid these results, or deceive the people. They know, as you know, as the world knows, that if the tariff did not enable the manufacturers to sell their goods higher than they could sell them without the tariff, they would not want it, but would be the first to clamor for its repeal. But you say the tariff has made goods cheaper. Do you need law to help you sell your goods cheap? the consumers of your goods will facilitate your efforts in that direction. They will buy just as cheap as you can afford to sell; you need no law for that, except the laws of nature. No, Mr. Chairman, nearly three-fourths of the cotton of the South, and perhaps 10 per cent. of the grain produced in this country, are sold in the free markets of the world, and those who produce them are told that they must buy in the home market, at greatly increased prices, almost every article they use. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the prices of all our surplus products are fixed in Liverpool, in a free market, while what our people consume is fixed in a very large degree by statutory laws, regardless of the cost of production or the necessities of the Government which enacted them. For this order of things no parallel can be found.

We choose to keep our pledges if we can. If we fail the responsibility must be with the other side. On this, we go to the country for the vindication of our course.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am sure if the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] had candidly listened to the utterances of gentlemen on this side of the House setting forth our views as to tariff duties they would not have perverted or at least misapprehended our position in reference to that question so much as their remarks indicate they have.

It has been said over and over again on this side of the House that a duty levied upon an imported article which can be produced here without climatic difficulties to the extent of our needs is not a tax which increases burdens on the consumer, but that on the contrary it has the effect to encourage home industry and labor, and in giving to our producers our home markets that ultimately the effect is to produce greater prosperity and lessen the burdens on the people; and that in the case of such articles the price is not the foreign cost plus the duty, but the lowest point to which it can be brought by home competition.

But it at the same time has been added on this side that revenue duties imposed on articles which can not be produced here, like coffee, tea, and spices, are taxes which increase the burdens on the consumer precisely to the extent of the duty, and that duties imposed on articles which we can produce here to only a limited extent, and which we must import in large part in order to meet the consumption, like sugar, where the price is determined, not by home competition, but by the cost abroad, the duty is a tax nearly to the extent that it is imposed.

A duty imposed, for example, on cotton goods which we can produce here to the extent of our wants is not a tax which increases the burdens of the people, as was shown in the remarks I made in the general debate in reference to standard sheeting and common prints. I exhibited on this floor two specimens of common prints, one of which was purchased in Manchester, England, and the other in the city of Washington, of the same quality, and both purchased at 5 cents a yard, notwithstanding there is a duty of 4½ per cent. a yard on imported prints. If I had purchased standard sheeting in London and in Washington I should have found the price identical in the two cities, notwithstanding the duty.

I imagine some one will say, "Why place a duty on articles which we are making here as low as abroad?" My reply is that if the protective duty had not been laid on these articles and kept there continuously since 1824 (for coarse cottons have been amply protected for sixty-four years), we should not have been able to manufacture them here as cheaply as in Great Britain, or at all. The absolute protection which our manufacturers of coarse cottons have had for sixty years has enabled them to perfect their mills and reduce the cost to the lowest limit. But if all duties on even coarse cottons should be removed to-day, foreign manufacturers would immediately go to work and glut our markets and break down our mills, hoping to recoup themselves for present losses by future control of our markets.

And in the case of articles which we can make here to the extent of our wants, in which the proportion of labor is so large that we can not make them at the same money cost that they can be made abroad, there is not one which can not be bought here for fewer days' work, less service, or less of other products than it can be in free-trade Great Britain, or than it could be here if we should imitate England's free-trade policy.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen on the other side who are insisting that in this Mills bill there shall be retained a duty of 68 per cent. on sugar, which we produce here to so small an extent that our domestic production has but little effect in determining the price, are practically taking the position that you will tax the people of this country 68 per cent. on the sugar they consume—an article of common necessity, like flour and other articles which enter into the food of the nation.

And you are concealing the imposition of so heavy a duty on an important article of food, where the duty is inevitably nearly all added to price and to the burdens on the people, by loud denunciations of protective duties imposed on articles which we can produce here to the extent of our wants, where the main effect of the duty will be to encourage our own industries, give better wages to labor, and higher prosperity to all our people.

It is claimed, Mr. Chairman, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] that the Mills bill is not a free-trade tariff. There are fifty-three industries which in this bill you have put on the free-list. Certainly as to those industries there can be no question that you have adopted free trade. Heretofore these industries have been encouraged and maintained by protective duties, but now in this bill you place every one of them upon the free-list. These industries, including the wool and other farm products placed on the free-list, enriched the country last year with products valued at $500,000,000 and gave employment to many thousands of workmen. This is a big slice of free trade for one bill, not taking into account the damage that will be done by reductions of duties that will invite injurious foreign competition to other industries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GEAR. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. BLAND. Can not we have a vote?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the gentleman's time?

Mr. KERR. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. BLAND. I hope then we may have some understanding when a vote may be taken.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish the gentleman had made that suggestion before. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], or the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] were criticising protection.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask that the gentleman be permitted to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the gentleman's time?

Mr. BLAND. We have heard this discussion for three months, and all of it. There is no need to go over it again. Why do gentlemen want to repeat it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine will proceed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I can appreciate the position of the gentleman from Missouri, for, if I remember correctly, he was the first member of the House who started political discussion in the direction of the tariff; and for months, when other measures were before the House, persisted in repeating his tariff speeches. To-day the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], on the other side of the House, started the discussion in the vein in which it has been proceeding, without any remark by the gentleman from Mirsouri, and it is rather late now for the gentleman to discover that replies coming from this side of the House are objectionable.

Mr. BLAND. I think gentlemen have all had their say on this question. We have been at it now for several months, and I think it is time that we should get to business.

Mr. DINGLEY. I was remarking, Mr. Chairman, that the bill before the House places on the free-list fifty-three industries in this country, industries of the utmost importance, too, and that you have inaugurated free trade with reference to them. You have inaugurated free trade as to industries that have far more labor in them in the Northern States, or in Republican States or districts, than in many industries in the South, or in Democratic districts or States, which you still retain on the dutiable list. And I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that there is a policy in this. I asked a gentleman, a member of this House, a day or two ago why he voted to place on the free-list an industry in the Northern States, or a Republican district, in which there was a very large proportion of labor, while in another industry, in a Democratic State or district, there was no attempt to put other industries, with a less proportion of labor in them, on a similar basis? "Oh," said he, "we will get to the other States and districts soon."

We have got to approach this thing by steps in whatever we can get the votes, and we will have those of you that we put on the free-trade list to-day to help us two years hence to place other articles on the free-list.

I call attention to the fact that the policy inaugurated in this bill, which puts 53 industries under the influence of free trade, will be used two years hence to help to put 53 other industries into the free-trade column. I warn gentlemen interested in industries which have been protected by this bill, and who are looking on quietly and coolly, or who are aiding in this legislation which places 53 industries on the free-list, to take warning, because their own industries in their own particular State or district will be the next ones to be marked for the slaughter if this bill succeeds. And especially do I warn gentlemen interested in the industries which have been cared for, because Democratic Representatives have assured Democratic caucuses that they could be returned with the aid of those industries if this should be done, that they are treading on dangerous ground when they propose to aid in electing men to destroy other industries, but to save their own. For protection can stand here or elsewhere only as a general policy.

If the majority of the people of this country, as I believe they do, favor the protective policy, if that is to be the system under which we are still to live, as I pray it may be, then it must apply to all industries without exception; it must cover all interests.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] has said that the farmers are not protected. Mr. Chairman, my district is largely composed of farmers. I knew that district when almost its sole industry was farming, and I know it to-day since manufacturing industries have come in. And I say that there is not a farmer in my district who does not appreciate that the building up of manufacturing industries there has obtained for him a better market—a home market—and highes rates for his products than he had before. I know that farmers forty years ago found it almost impossible to obtain cash for the products of their farms. They went out and bartered them at almost any price to obtain those things that they were compelled to have.

That condition of things has been altered. The farmer now has a ready market for all of his products at good prices near his home. The young men and young women who formerly found it impossible to obtain employment without going to other States, now find employment, to a great extent, near home. The trouble with the farmers of the far West, so far as they find themselves less prosperous than they could desire, is their remoteness from markets, and if you would make them more prosperous establish manufacturing enterprises in their midst.

The Mills bill, however, comes in to discourage domestic industries, to encourage importations, and to encourage Canadian farmers at the expense of our own by admitting wool, beans, pease, vegetables, meats, poultry, and many other farm products into our markets free of duty to compete with similar products of our own farmers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think the criticism that has been made by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is entirely fair, or that this discussion has not developed some points of interest to the people of this country. I believe that the discussion has brought out certain questions and certain facts that the country takes an interest in and wants to know about.

Now, sir, addressing my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] I put to him certain questions, and I want to get back to those questions again. Sir, I made the statement that to-day in the great States of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio from seventy-five thousand to one hundred thousand wage-earners have left their mills and their factories and are on a strike.

If protection protects the wage-workers of this country, as gentlemen on the other side of the House say it does, I ask my colleague [Mr. BAYNE] what has brought about the strike of one hundred thousand wage-workers in the protected industries of the country during the past week, with the chances that they will not return to work for months to come? And I desire, sir, to call the attention of this committee and the country to what I believe to be substantially correct: that the labor of this country in the unprotected industries was never more fully employed and better paid than to-day, and that the only class of wage-workers amongst which strikes exist to-day is, as I have said, among the protected industries of the country. I again ask what has brought about this strike? It is, sir, a demand on the part of the proprietors of these protected industries that the wages of the wage-workers engaged in the same shall be reduced 10 per cent. Sir, the one hundred and twenty-five thousand coal miners of my State are not only fully employed at fair wages, but I do not know of a single strike among them.

I say that all the other wage-workers in our State not protected by the theory of protection, engaged in the various industries of our State are fully employed and well paid. It is only in the protected industries of our State that we find sixty thousand of our wage-workers unemployed and thrown out of a job. Why is this so? From the fact that their employers have demanded a reduction of 10 per cent. in the wages of these wage-workers, to which they have refused to accede, and the employers in the various mills and factories have forced the men out of their mills and now propose to starve them into submission.

Mr. BAYNE. Coal is protected.

Mr. SCOTT. Protected how?

Mr. BAYNE. By 75 cents a ton.

Mr. SCOTT. The quantity of coal that is used in this country in the manufacturing industries (even if you could construe it in that way) is not more than 10 per cent. of the entire amount of coal produced; and the 75 cents a ton does not protect our coal. On the remaining 90 per cent. used in the United States, so far as I am interested, I do not ask you for any protection on coal.

Mr. BAYNE. It is just the price given the miners; it is fully equivalent to the wages you pay for mining the coal.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] to strike out this section.

The question being put, the Chair was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron or steel T-rails, weighing not over 25 pounds to the yard, $14 per ton; iron or steel flat rails, punched, $15 per ton.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in line 182 "$14," and insert in lieu thereof "$17.92;" and in line 183 I move to strike out "$15," and insert instead thereof "$20.16."

The Clerk reported the amendment.

[Mr. SOWDEN withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 48, noes 62.

The Clerk read as follows:

Round iron, in coils or rods, less than seven-sixteenths of 1 inch in diameter, and bars or shapes of rolled iron, not specially enumerated or provided for, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 186 insert: "Iron or steel, flat, with longitudinal ribs, for the manufacture of fences, four-tenths of a cent per pound."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the paragraph just read, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it does not in effect propose an increase, or at least a change of duty on one class of rods. By the present law round iron, in coils or rods less than seven-sixteenths of 1 inch in diameter, bear a duty of 1.2 cents per pound. The present bill puts the duty at 1 cent per pound. So far in ascertaining the meaning there would be plain sailing. But in the old law there is the following additional provision:

Iron or steel rivet, screw, rail, and fence-wire rods, round, in coils or loops, not lighter than No. 5 wire gauge, valued at 3½ cents or less per pound, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Now, I want to know whether the effect of the provision in the present bill would not be to advance the rate on those rods which are between seven-sixteenths of an inch in diameter and No. 5 wire gauge from six-tenths of a cent to 1 cent per pound. Do you not by this provision in this bill, which will supersede the old law so far as the two cover the same thing, take all rods between seven-sixteenths of an inch and No. 5 wire gauge out of the other provision, where they are at six-tenths of a cent per pound, and put them in this bill at 1 cent per pound? I ask for information.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I can only answer the gentleman by saying that that matter was very carefully considered by the committee, and that they do not believe the bill has that effect. It does not touch the classes of iron of which the gentleman has just spoken.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But how can it help having that effect? The words are there. However much it may have been the intention of the committee not to touch these sizes of rods, the words they have used do so, and we must read a law as it is written. The words are primarily considered, and if no ambiguity then appears the words are decisive, and intention can not be inquired into.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman is, I think, mistaken about that. The words of the present law bearing upon those items are not changed. The words are changed only with reference to the items which we enumerate; and as to that which we do not enumerate we do not change it at all. I do not see how I can make the case any plainer to my friend from New Jersey.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But I think these words do change the existing law to the extent I have indicated. I so understand them, at least. Being the latest legislative utterance, they would be held to embrace all sizes below seven-sixteenths of an inch diameter.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We do not understand them that way.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is easy enough to say that they do not; but if they do, they do. These sizes seem to be included.

Mr. ROGERS. And if they do not, they do not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But the gentleman from New Jersey will observe that the items inclusive of those which he has enumerated are not in the bill, and consequently they remain unchanged as in the present law.

Mr. HERBERT. If those words do have the effect to raise the duty, why does the gentleman from New Jersey object? Is it not a little out of character?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I have not objected. I was inquiring as to the effect of these words, because to-day there is a decision of the Treasury Department——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think the gentleman's inquiry was a perfectly legitimate and proper one.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I thought so. I thought it was an inquiry I had a right to make without having another inquiry interjected by the gentleman's colleague [Mr. HERBERT]. I made the inquiry now because the present law is the subject of a construction by the Treasury Department, which to some does not seem to be well founded, and because I wanted to get the construction of the committee upon this provision, i. e., as to whether it covered rivet, screw, nail, and fence-wire rods, as we passed along to-day without any reference whatever to the question whether there should be a higher or a lower rate of duty. Therefore the point of the gentleman from Alabama falls harmless. The words certainly include these rods, not by name, it is true, but by sizes, and would not the sizes govern in construing the latest legislative utterance?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 186 insert "iron or steel, flat, with longitudinal ribs, for the manufacture of fencing, four-tenths of a cent per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sheet-iron, common or black, thinner than 1 inch and not thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 20 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 25 wire gauge, one and one-tenth of 1 per cent. per pound; thinner than No. 25 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 29 wire gauge, one and one-fourth of 1 per cent. per pound; thinner than No. 29 wire gauge, and all iron commercially known as common or black taggers iron, whether put up in boxes or bundles or not, 30 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That on all such iron and steel sheets or plates aforesaid excepting on what are known commercially as tin-plates, terne-plates, and taggers tin, when galvanized or coated with zinc or spelter, or other metals, or any alloy of those metals, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound additional when not thinner than No. 20 wire gauge; thinner than No. 20 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 25 wire gauge, one-half cent per pound additional, and when thinner than 25 wire gauge, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound additional.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read.

The motion was rejected, there being—ayes 49, noes 63.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hoop, or band, or scroll, or other iron, 8 inches or less in width, and not thinner than No. 10 wire gauge, 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 10 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, 1.1 cents per pound; thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, 1.3 cents per pound: Provided, That all articles not specially enumerated or provided for, whether wholly or partly manufactured, made from sheet, plate, hoop, band, or scroll iron herein provided for, or of which such sheet, plate, hoop, band, or scroll iron shall be the material of chief value, shall pay one-fourth of 1 cent per pound more duty than that imposed on the iron from which they are made, or which shall be such material of chief value.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to strike out the entire paragraph last read.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of striking out this paragraph, of course; but I want to call attention to the fact that the farmers out in the Western country, when they buy hoop-iron to put on their barrels, or for any of the various purposes for which hoop-iron is used, if they should import that hoop-iron, would have to pay under this bill a duty of 1 cent per pound, or at the rate of $22.40 a ton, while those who buy hoop-iron in the Southern States, the cotton-growing States, for the purpose of baling their cotton, if they should import that hoop-iron, will get it free of duty.

Mr. WEBER. The same kind of iron?

Mr. BAYNE. Precisely the same kind of iron—the same quality, the same in every respect. In the one case the declaration that this hoop-iron is to go upon a cotton-bale admits the iron free to the farmer or agricultural producer of the South, while the declaration of the farmer in the West that he needs this hoop-iron for putting on a barrel or for the other purposes for which the farmer of the West may require it, subjects this iron, if it be imported, to the payment of a duty of 1 cent a pound.

Mr. HOVEY. He may want the iron to put on hay bales.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir; and if he wants it for hay bales, he must pay the duty in the same way.

One word more. When the Southern producer of cotton ships it to Providence, R. I., or sends it over to Liverpool, he gets the same price (10 cents a pound, or whatever the price of cotton may be) for his hoop-iron as for his cotton. But the farmer out West who puts his hoop-iron on a barrel may use that barrel, perhaps, for a number of years, or, if he sells the barrel, the hoop-iron goes with the barrel. The man who, if he imports his cotton-ties, gets them free of duty, sells them almost immediately for 8, or 9, or 10, or 11 cents per pound (whatever may be the price of cotton), while the Western farmer never gets anything back for his hoop-iron at all. If there is not considerable favoritism in this bill—if it is not very sectional in its operations—I would like to know what it is. This is all I have to say.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to reply to the remark made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], that the cotton-planter or farmer of the South buys his cotton-ties at 3 or 4 cents a pound——

Mr. BAYNE. I did not say what he pays for them.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And sells them at the price of cotton—10 or 12 cents a pound. That argument is old in this House. It was made here in the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, when the question of the duty upon cotton-ties was under consideration; and it was then and there exploded. It is true that when a bale of cotton is weighed and sold, no deduction is made for the weight of the bagging and the ties which surround the cotton; but I will remind my friend from Pennsylvania of a fact which he already knows, that the price of cotton is fixed in the great cotton marts of the world, Manchester and Liverpool; the price as fixed there is based upon the supposition of so many bales of cotton being raised each year throughout the world; and from that is deducted a tare of 22 pounds per bale, which includes the bagging and ties. So that the cotton-planter in the South gets nothing for the weight of the bagging or the ties which surround the bale of cotton that he sends to market.

Mr. BAYNE. Are you speaking now of the markets of Manchester and Liverpool?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am saying this: That the price of cotton is fixed in the great cotton marts of Manchester and Liverpool; and there, where the price is fixed, allowance is made for the weight of the bagging and the ties surrounding each bale.

Mr. BAYNE. No allowance of that kind is made at Providence, R. I.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, Mr. Chairman, the price of the cotton in Providence, R. I., is fixed in the cotton marts of Manchester and Liverpool, where such an allowance is made.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not think the price is fixed there. I think the American consumption has as much to do with fixing the price of cotton as anything occurring in Manchester or Liverpool.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Two-thirds of the cotton we raise goes abroad; and the price of the commodity abroad fixes the price at home.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. As debate is exhausted on this paragraph, I wish only to say that the question of cotton-ties will be reached in another paragraph of the bill.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MCKINLEY, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cut tacks, brads, or sprigs, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has offered an amendment to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I will address myself to the amendment of my friend from Pennsylvania.

To those who regard this bill as being mainly for a reduction of the surplus revenue, it may be interesting to note that according to the calculations of the committee this will reduce the surplus revenue $2.20.

But it is perfectly evident that if the reduction of the duty increases the importations the surplus would either be increased or else it will be reduced by a sum smaller than $2.20.

But, sir, I desire to ask some member of the Committee on Ways and Means why they saw fit to adopt here for the first time in the iron schedule an ad valorem rate? The existing tax is a specific one.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. To what item is the gentleman addressing himself?

Mr. ADAMS. I am talking now of the item "Cut tacks, brads, or sprigs." The existing law, taking into account the difference in sizes, provides as follows:

Cut tacks, brads, or sprigs, not exceeding 16 ounces to the thousand, 2½ cents per thousand; exceeding 16 ounces to the thousand, 3 cents per pound.

I do not now discuss the propriety of reducing the tax. I am not discussing the question of a revenue tariff. But if desirable to reduce the tax, why not, let me ask the gentlemen framing the bill, take the specific rate for which the equivalent ad valorem is inserted and fix that as the rate?

We heard from the gentleman from Maine the other day [Mr. DINGLEY] that the lime manufacturers of this country could not compete with the lime producers of Canada because of the fact that owing to certain undervaluations and to a ruling of the Treasury Department it has been rendered possible to bring this lime in at manifestly a much lower rate than was contemplated when the duty was fixed. Is it not altogether possible that the Committee on Ways and Means are affording the same facility to the producers of these articles?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what specific rate he would apply for the duty in this case, so as to make about the equivalent of 35 per cent. ad valorem fixed by the committee?

Mr. ADAMS. The question I wish to ask, and that is a point on which, I presume, the Committee on Ways and Means ought to be able to give information, is as to what is the difference between the 35 per cent. tax ad valorem which the committee have adopted and that specific duty which would be equivalent thereto?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman state the difference?

Mr. ADAMS. I think the committee ought to inform the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Two and a half cents per thousand is the specific rate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I know; but that does not tell the difference between what the gentleman from Illinois thinks should be the specific rate and 35 per cent. ad valorem, as fixed by the committee. The gentleman from Maine refers to the present duty. I think the gentleman will find that it is impossible to determine upon that particular item, the present tax being either prohibitory, if there be any manufacture of these articles abroad, or else there is no manufacture of the articles abroad to come in at any price, and hence it would be difficult, if not impossible, to fix the specific rate. The gentleman will ascertain and admit upon an examination that there are a great many inequalities in the metal schedule under existing law.

Mr. ADAMS. In what?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. In the metal schedule, all through it. If the gentleman will run his eye down the table of imports he will be struck with the almost startling inconsistencies that it contains. He will observe that, taking the average of these various items, 35 per cent. is a very fair rate here, as there is no guide and no record of any statistics which would give the specific equivalent of a fair ad valorem rate; and therefore there was nothing else for the committee to do than to give up entirely trying to find a specific rate, and upon this particular item to fix the ad valorem rate established by the bill, which is the ad valorem equivalent of the specifics of the various items to which I have referred.

Mr. ADAMS. But suppose it is assumed that you want to leave the tax equivalent to 35 per cent. ad valorem, can you not ascertain the actual cost of such tacks and brads as have been imported into this country, or their price in the foreign market, if none have come in?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Not unless we have the statistics of importation. If none are imported that is not attainable.

Mr. ADAMS. I presumed that the Committee on Ways and Means, with the assistance of the Treasury officials, who were at their disposal, might have been able to obtain the information.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But there was no information attainable other than I have stated.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few things in reference to specific and ad valorem rates of duty. I am certainly surprised to find that in many parts of this bill there is a tendency on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means to make a change from existing specific duties to ad valorem rates. Of course, the gentleman from Arkansas has read the report of Secretary Manning upon the subject of specific and ad valorem rates, and also Secretary Fairchild's approval of it. Mr. Manning states that the ad valorem system places it almost entirely within the power of the foreign manufacturer and exporter to determine what the rate of duty shall be by means of undervaluations in his invoices; and I send to the desk and ask to have read a portion of Secretary Manning's remarks upon that subject.

It seems to me, in view of the fact that the distinguished ex-Secretary of the Treasury, after examining our tariff system, has given such an emphatic indorsement of the specific as against the ad valorem system, that the committee can hardly find justification in making so many changes from ad valorem to specific duties.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, an English manufacturer said to me last autumn, during a conversation in reference to the tariff, that if we maintained the ad valorem system, he did not care how high we made our duties, as they would fix the duty for themselves in making their invoices.

Now, in view of the fact, I repeat, that the Secretary of the Treasury has advised against ad valorem and for the maintenance of specific duties, we do not want to fall into the hands of the foreign manufacturer and give him an opportunity to fix by undervaluation of his invoices what the duty shall be. I ask the Clerk to read the extract from Secretary Manning's report to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whatever successful contrivances are in operation to-day to evade the revenue by false invoices, or by undervaluations, or by any other means, under an ad valorem system, will not cease even if the ad valorem rates shall have been largely reduced. They are incontestably, they are even notoriously inherent in that system.

One advantage, and perhaps the chief advantage of a specific over an ad valorem system is in the fact that, under the former, duties are levied by a positive test, which can be applied by our officers while the merchandise is in possession of the Government, and according to a standard which is altogether national and domestic. That would be partially true of an ad valorem system levied upon "home value;" but there are constitutional impediments in the way of such a system, which appear to be insuperable. But under an ad valorem system, the facts to which the ad valorem rate is to be applied must be gathered in places many thousand miles away, and under circumstances most unfavorable to the administration of justice. One hears it often said that if our ad valorem rates did not exceed 25 or 30 per cent. undervaluation and temptation to undervaluation would disappear; but the records of this Department for the years 1817, 1840, and 1857 do not uphold that conclusion.

Mr. DINGLEY. I want to add that the same manufacturer to whom I referred said, with reference to woolens, that an ad valorem duty—bearing in mind that all ad valorem duties are imposed on the foreign invoice value and not on the value here—that an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent. would not operate upon them as unfavorably as a specific duty equivalent to 30 per cent., because they have the power of determining practically what the article should be invoiced at. In the case of textiles it is almost impossible for the appraisers in our custom-houses to determine the matter accurately.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will observe that two of these items are preceded and followed by specific duties. This is a case in the list where one is made ad valorem for special reasons which I gave in my remarks to the gentleman from Illinois: that the kind of data which is usually determinate in fixing the rates, namely the official reports, was wholly wanting in this case. But we have in other items very accurate data as to what is the ad valorem equivalent. I do not know that it is necessary to go into a general discussion of the ad valorem and specific systems. We found that nearly all consumers, nearly all the masses of the people, want an ad valorem system pure and simple.

The manufacturers, who are of course the beneficiaries and get whatever benefit arises out of tariff taxes, prefer specific duties because they make more certain the benefits contemplated by the law. The administrative part of the Government, in view of the many difficulties of properly administering an ad valorem system of taxation, nearly always concur in favor of specific duties. I believe that where specific duties can be laid in a manner not unjust to consumers it is best to lay them. And I am free to say that my opposition to specific duties so far as that is concerned is not as general and as comprehensive as it once was. I see certain very marked benefits from a specific duty; but I also see some evils that the administrators of the law and the manufacturers do not seem to attach much weight to. Therefore, for my part I occupy about a middle ground, believing more in it than I formerly believed, but not so much as do the officials of the Treasury Department and the manufacturers. In the Forty-eighth Congress the Committee on Ways and Means turned over the silk schedule to the Treasury Department, and told Mr. Manning if he could figure out a specific system that would apply to silk we would recommend it. The Treasury Department gave it up in absolute despair after putting all their experts upon it. They could not get a system that they thought would be a fair and workable system.

Now, take our specific system in the case of cotton goods. I do not mean of course to anticipate the cotton schedule. It is very defective. It is full of unjust and hurtful inequalities. To be at all just upon a specific basis it would have to be elaborated to a very great extent. The French have probably done better than we have on this feature.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word. If there is any dependence to be placed on the figures which are contained in this large book prepared by the Committee on Ways and Means, then there is not the slightest difficulty in ascertaining what the specific duty would be.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman state what it would be.

Mr. ADAMS. I can not give it exactly without going minutely into the matter; but I will show, as I say, what it is if dependence can be placed on these figures. It may be that I am wrong. If you know the value of the importation then you know how much the goods are worth on an average per pound.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That does not apply except to one branch.

Mr. ADAMS. I will admit that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not want to take up the gentleman's time, but I will say that a specific duty has this disadvantage: That it does not rise and fall with the cost of production of the article, although it of course affects its selling price. For instance, 2½ cents per pound on a certain form of metallic product is precisely the same in amount, but not the same in relation when by some new invention or by a cheapening of the cost of production the value of the article is decreased.

The ad valorem duty does adjust itself to the fluctuating cost of production. So that what happens as one of the results of the specific duty is that as discoveries in the industrial arts take place and new inventions reduce the cost of production the specific duty makes the American purchaser pay precisely the same for the article as he did for the higher-priced article and inures improperly to the benefit of the American manufacturer.

Mr. ADAMS. Then the remedy is to change the duty.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It may occur to the disadvantage of the manufacturer as well as to his advantage in a certain class of cases, as is particularly illustrated by the worsted schedule.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, I admit that for the woolen and worsted schedules specific duties are altogether inapplicable; but it seems to me they are not inapplicable to iron.

Mr. DINGLEY. Why inapplicable? We have always had them.

Mr. ADAMS. But now let me call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to the fact that prior to 1883 the duty on coal and iron was ad valorem. It was then made specific. Why? Because of undervaluation. For that express reason the change was made in 1883, and that change has been adhered to by the present Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Partly, and partly not. We have adhered to the specific duties in certain cases. In the iron schedules, as a rule, we have adhered to specific duties.

Mr. ADAMS. Iron ore is what I mean.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. You said the iron schedules.

Mr. ADAMS. Iron ore and coal.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Well, as to those we did not adhere at all.

Mr. ADAMS. I mean you retained it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, we did not retain it. We simply did not pass upon it at all. We have never made any recommendation upon that point. We have left it as it is in the existing law; we have taken no affirmative action about it at all.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, what is the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a formal amendment which, if there is no objection, will be regarded as withdrawn. The pending substantial amendment is a motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Although we have not reached the woolen schedule, yet I desire to put in the RECORD the following articles, known to be from Mr. Beach, of Hartford, Conn., a well-known and successful manufacturer. The statements and tables are valuable, and they can be relied upon:

WOOL DUTIES.

You will notice this list does not bear out the assertion of the wool-growers that a high duty on wool has by any means resulted in better prices. Upon the whole, so far as it has had any effect, it appears to be quite the contrary. But there are so many other elements which regulate market prices that it is difficult to make a very strong argument for either side out of the statistics, unless we take into consideration other matters affecting the business at the several periods. The remarks of Mr. Harris, reported by Old Carder, were made under very different conditions from those now ruling. Australian imports into Europe have increased 50 per cent. since 1878, an increase of 400,000 bales, about 160,000,000 pounds, in that short time from Australasia alone; also a very large increase from Cape of Good Hope and River Plate, mostly of fine merino wools. In fact, the quantity available is six or seven times as much as it was in 1860, 806,000,000 pounds in 1886 against 112,000,000 in 1860.

This enormous production has to be consumed. Of course, the number of consumers must be very greatly enlarged. In order to reach the ability of this increased number, prices must be reduced. You can see this in every article of merchandise. Prices abroad are reduced as much as they are here, even more in many articles, without regard to our tariff. In wool-growing countries the business has been constantly getting better systematized, and they are enabled to produce cheaper and cheaper. In this country, if wool-growing is to be made a business by itself, the same general principles must be adopted, but the probability is that in the older States our farmers will look more and more to the production of food lamb and mutton, with less and less regard for the wool. This will put the business upon the footing adapted to our circumstances. Old Carder wants to know why silks are so cheap here. It is because the free raw material has allowed our manufacturers to go into the business upon somewhere near an equal footing with foreign countries.

Steel rails are cheap because, in the first place, of the discovery of the Bessemer process and still later improvements; and then, the patents on these being now free to the world, there is more competition. Probably steel rails can be made for less than one-quarter the cost of a few years ago. It is the same with soda ash since the discovery of the ammonia process. This decreases the cost wonderfully, and of course all other makers, by whatever process they manufacture, must meet this competition. The price may or may not be lower if manufactured this side of the water. It should be, on account of the saving in freight, if for no other reason. But where there is competition to sell at the point of consumption, from whatever quarter it may come, prices are usually reduced to a point of only moderate profits. To illustrate this, take the article of tin-plates, where the competition is wholly that of the foreign manufacturers between themselves.

Still it has caused a constant reduction in price, nearly 25 per cent. since 1882; so that although the duty that year was 1.1 cents per pound, it was only 29 per cent., whereas the nominally reduced rate to 1 cent in 1887 was actually 33.80 per cent. Consumption of the United States increased from 439,746,895 pounds to 570,643,389 pounds in the five years. The duty was a tax on our industries of over $5,700,000 in each of the last two years, of which the canning business alone paid over $1,000,000 in 1887. We are making great progress in this country, as we certainly ought, for we have more advantages and stimulus than any other on the globe. We claim, too, that we are the smartest and most industrious people in the world. But we should not load our industries down with unnecessary burdens. There are other countries progressing also, and when we handicap ourselves we must expect them to take advantage of our folly.

Our efforts are mainly directed to the saving of labor and to inventions which will enable us to make it more productive, so that we can produce the largest quantity with the smallest number of operatives. In foreign countries the aim is to get their materials at the lowest possible cost, then to saving them and by improved processes getting the best quality of product, to get the most money from the materials used. They have a surplus of labor. If they should leave half the people unemployed by the use of machinery, they must still support them all; and it would cost as much to do this if half were idle as to have all at work, each earning his portion of the money that can be allotted to the labor cost of the productions. The price of labor is a matter of locality and, like everything else, based upon the supply and demand. Legislation can not govern this. In different localities in this country, under the same tariff laws, and in different towns in the same States there is often one-half difference paid for doing the same work.

All of us who have had much experience know this, but we have heard so much about what is called protection making the price of wages that we frequently accept the statements without much examination as to what is really protection and as to what are the actual effects of measures so named. It is easy enough to figure that except for the duty of 20 cents per bushel on wheat, the East Indian working at 3 cents per day would supply our markets; and to say this duty protects the farmer, when the fact remains that we can and do overcome this difference in the nominal price of labor, and meet the wheat markets of the whole world successfully. So on coarse undyed cottons and on many other goods the tariff does not give our mills a fraction of 1 per cent. better price. We can export these in competition with other countries, and could do so to even better advantage without the tariff. It is impossible that it can help us to better wages for making articles of export.

When we come to woolen goods, the state of the case changes. We have only a half supply of wool in this country, and we must procure it from elsewhere or we have to import the goods ready made. For a large portion of the deficit we can get a supply of cheap material from the cotton-fields and the crop of old clothes, rags, etc., but this would confine our manufacture to the lower grades of goods. To make the better grades that our people demand, we must have foreign wools. It would take more than a hundred million pounds above what we now import, if we would control our home market for fine woolens, in addition to every pound that we raise in this country. We have, however, cut ourselves off from getting this supply by a prohibitory tariff on nine-tenths of that which is available to our foreign competitors. What is the consequence? They supply our own markets, and of course have full control of the other markets of the world.

We protect the European manufacturer from our competition in the markets where they get their supply of raw material. This does not help our factory labor; it hurts it by transferring the work to other countries. We could only meet this competition by reducing the price of labor or taking off the tax on materials, so that we should be upon somewhere near the same footing with our competitors, the same as we are in the silk business, or else a much higher duty on fine fabrics. Which is the best course? The effort to overcome this difference by a high tariff on fabrics has proved a failure so far as the medium and finer grades are affected. It would need to be at least 100 per cent. to give us a fair show with the present duties on materials. Probably the consumers of fabrics would object to this. In our opinion it would be useless to ask for increased duties. It appears very much as if the only cure for the present trouble, if the present rates remain, must come through still lower prices for fine wools, nearly down to the import cost, free of duty. If not, what? B.

Duties on clothing wools by the several tariff acts in force from 1830 to 1885, with average price for fine merino wool on the 1st of July under the several rates.

Date of tariff	Rates of duty.	Remarks.	No. of years.	Market price per pound. Average for July 1.
				Year.	Cents.
1857, July 1	Above 20 cents per pound, 24 per cent.; under 20 cents per pound, free. Reduction in rates of duty.	Average prices slightly advanced	4	1857–'61	48
1861, Apr. 2	Under 18 cents per pound, 5 per cent. = increase on low grades; do. on 18 to 20 cents. Value 18 to 24 cents per pound, 3 cents per pound = reduction on 20 to 24 cents. Above 24 cents per pound, 9 cents per pound. Reduction on above 28 cents per pound; increase on 24 to 38.	An average decrease of the duty on fine wools, with a great advance in price, much of it being the premium on gold.	3	1861–'64	74½
1864, July 1	Value 12 cents and less per pound, 3 cents. Value 12 cents to 24 cents per pound, 6 cents. Value 24 to 32 cents per pound, compound duty and 10 cents per pound, 10 per cent. ad valorem. Value above 32 cents, compound duty and 12 cents per pound, 10 per cent. advalorem. This was a great increase in rate of duty.	This was an increase on all fine wools, and although prices advanced to 103 cents in October, 1864, they declined to 55 cents in July, 1867.	3	1864–'67	66½
1867, Mar. 2	Present classification. Class 1. Merino and clothing. Increased rates on fine clothing sorts: Value not above 32 cents, 10 cents per pound, and 11 per cent.; value above 32 cents, 12 cents per pound, and 10 per cent. Washed, double rates. Class 2. Combing. Increased rates on fine clothing sorts: Value 32 cents or less, 10 cents pound, and 11 per cent.; above 32 cents, 12 cents pound, and 10 per cent. Carpet. Value 12 cents or less, 3 cents pound; above 12 cents, 6 cents pound. Scoured, of all classes, three times above rates.	Prices declined in 1867 from 68 cents in January to 60 cents in April, 55 cents in July, and 48 cents in October. In 1868, 48 cents, 50 cents, 46 cents, and 48 cents, for the four quarters. 1869, average, 49 cents. 1870, declined to 46 cents in July; average, 47¾ cents. 1871, declined to 47 cents in January, advanced to 50 cents in April, 62 cents in July, and 63 cents in October. 1872, 70 cents in January, 89 cents in April, and 72 cents in July.	5	1867–'72	54½
1872, Aug. 1	Reduction of 10 per cent. on above rates	1872, in October price declined to 66 cents, advanced to 70 cents in January, 1873, declined to 56 cents in April, 50 cents in July, advanced in October to 54 cents, to 58 cents in January, 1874. Average, 55 cents for 12 months.	3	1872–'75	51½
1875, Mar. 3	10 per cent. restored; 1867 rates in force. These are the higest rates by any tariff since 1830.	Steady decline in price to 38 cents in July, 1876, advanced to 50 cents in July, 1877, then declined to 34 cents in January and April, 1879;* advanced in the "boom" years of 1879–'80, highest in April, 1880, 55 cents, declined to 40 cents in January, 1883.	8	1875–'83	41½
1883, July 1	Class 1. Not above 30 cents pound, 10 cents pound. Class 2. Above 30 cents pound, 12 cents pound. Class 3. Not over 12 cents, 5 cents pound; over 12 cents, 2½ cents pound.	Prices continued to decline, owing to lower prices in Europe than ever known and lower duty on woolen goods, and appear still to be above the ability of manufacturers to purchase.

* In 1879 prices of Australian wools in London were 25 to 30 per cent. higher than they have been for two years, 1886 to 1888, and we can see no good reason why the prices of domestic fine fleeces will not rule relatively as low in this country now, compared with Europe, as then.

"IT HAS SET US TO THINKING."

In Fiber and Fabric of April 14, page 56, Old Carder asks some questions, and thinks there should be more study of the tariff. The inclosed, on the other side of the question from the one on which most manufacturers appear disposed to do their thinking, may at least serve to throw light, and we hope bring out the truth. These figures are not theories, but actual facts, to which a theory, to be good for anything, must be fitted. The proposed tariff would reduce revenue by taking off the duty on wool. That is clear. There is no doubt it would reduce revenue now obtained by duties on woolen goods, because there would be made here a large quantity of such as are now imported.

That is theory in part; but it is based so strongly on the actual workings of the business that it can not help being pretty nearly correct. The proposed bill now before Congress we consider more really protective to the manufacturing interests than any tariff we have ever had. Certainly New England should be the last section of the country to oppose it. Friends of the present tariff claim that compound duties on woolen goods, and the specific rates in particular, are the only safeguards upon which we can rely to prevent importations from undervaluation. This claim has been made so persistently that manufacturers have pretty generally accepted it as being correct, with little or no examination as to its merits.

This compound principle has been held to be something sacred. Its friends would not allow there were two sides to the question. Dissenters have been consigned to purgatory, or to still lower depths, to have their place with "free-traders." Those who have complained that the finer and most expensive all-wool fabrics were not fairly treated in the deal, having from only half to no protection, when, if there was to be any discrimination, they really needed and were entitled to double, have not been listened to, or have been told that to ask for their fair share would endanger the whole system. It has been in vain that they have pointed out that after a time the trouble must reach beyond their own particular specialties, and that the next grades must take their turn in depression.

They were sneered at for supposing that there was any danger to be apprehended from a worsted cloth valued at not exceeding 80 cents per pound, or even that fine worsted yarns could be imported at so low cost as to seriously interfere with the home manufacture. Their numbers were insignificant, and they were not listened to when they showed that the legitimate effect of the schedule was to discourage the manufacture and improvement of fine fabrics, and to drive all the mills into the increased use of cotton, shoddy, and other substitutes for making goods sold as woolens. Neither were they given any more attention when they pointed out the fact that so far from being a preventive of fraud on the part of importers, the specific duty, more than all else, made it an object to undervalue, as it gave them from six to eight times as much profit on the operation as it would if the duties were only ad valorem.

For example, take a piece of worsted cloth, for which the true value is 85 cents. Under the present duty if invoiced honestly the duty would be 69 cents per pound, but if undervalued only 5 cents and invoiced at 80 cents the duty will be only 52 cents, a saving to the importer of 17 cents per pound, or 20 per cent. on the business, a handsome profit in itself. Under the proposed bill, which is stated by the opposition to open the door to fraudulent importations, the saving to the importer for the same undervaluation would be only 2 cents per pound; not enough to pay him for running the risk.

The actual working of this tariff for the past six years is shown by the inclosed figures of imports of worsted yarns and cloths. If there has been any such undervaluation going on, as has been asserted by some of our manufacturers, who have been trying to explain what is the matter with the woolen business, a study of these figures will show the reason and the temptation. Is it not time for a reform?

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word of the pending paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment has already been submitted, and debate upon it is exhausted.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, I move to strike out the last two words. Now, as to cut tacks, brads, or sprigs exceeding 16 ounces to the thousand, the equivalent to the per cent. duty, as shown by this book, is 80.20 per cent., but you propose by this bill to put the duty at 35 per cent. ad valorem, which is a good deal less than one-half.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes; and the gentleman will find, if he will turn to the wire schedule, that a good many of them are not over 10 per cent. now. They run from 7, 8, 10, 12, and 15 per cent., and some as high as 150 per cent. The gentleman will find that the rate which he cites is one of those "mountain peaks" which General Garfield spoke of when he told how he would revise the tariff by striking them off so as to equalize the duties.

Mr. BAYNE. Then this book is evidently misleading?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No, I think not.

Mr. BAYNE. Then 80 per cent. ad valorem is not the equivalent of the present duty?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think it is.

Mr. BAYNE. And you propose to make the duty 35 per cent., which is less than one-half the present rate?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BAYNE. And you make it ad valorem in place of specific?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, on those two items.

Mr. BAYNE. And thus you bring down the duty even lower than 35 per cent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. These rates are fixed by way of equalizing the duties; and we make them just 35 per cent.

Mr. DALZELL rose.

Mr. BAYNE. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I renew it if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] desires to be heard.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise not for the purpose of discussing this particular paragraph, but in order to get an opportunity to say what I would like to have said a few moments ago, when the the paragraph relating to hoop-iron was under discussion, and would have said if I had not mislaid my memoranda. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] says that the argument that the seller of cotton makes money by the sale of the cotton-ties has been long since exploded——

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment I wish to remind him that the subject of cotton-ties has been passed over for the convenience of another gentleman on his side of the House, and I suggest that the whole subject be postponed until a later day.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I hope that will be done.

Mr. DALZELL. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the formal amendment will be regarded as withdrawn, and the question is on striking out the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron or steel railway fish-plates or splice-bars, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 228 and 229 strike out "eight-tenths of."

Mr. BUCHANAN. The present rate upon iron and steel railway fish-plates or splice-bars is 1¼ cents per pound. The bill proposes to reduce that duty to eight-tenths of 1 cent. By turning to a previous part of the bill it will be found that bar-iron, rolled or hammered, is put at from seven-tenths to 1 cent per pound, and it is further provided—

That all iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig-iron, except castings, shall be rated as iron in bars, and pay a duty accordingly.

The result of these clauses taken together is that the rate upon the material from which fish-plates or splice-bars are to be made is seven-tenths of a cent per pound up to 1 cent per pound; and the rate proposed in this bill for these bars and plates is eight-tenths of a cent per pound after manufacture. There will be almost or quite that much loss in the material in manufacturing, so that the cost of the raw material to the maker of the fish-plates or splice-bars will be equivalent to the value of the product, leaving nothing for labor, nothing for plant, and nothing for coal. Now, if the Committee on Ways and Means desire to do anything approaching the fair thing in this matter, I think they will not hesitate to accept my amendment, which still makes a very material reduction in the rate, but leaves a slightly higher rate on these bars or plates than upon the material of which they are composed.

My proposition, as I have said, is to strike out "eight-tenths," leaving the duty at 1 cent per pound, which will be a reduction of one-fourth of a cent upon the present rate, but will raise the duty a little above the rate on the material out of which these bars and plates are made. Certainly no one will seriously contend that the rate on the product should be as low as the rate on the material. My amendment would leave the duty far too low upon the product, but it would be a little better than the bill as it now stands.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the rapidly augmenting revenues in the public Treasury and the consequent necessity for a speedy reduction of the surplus, the demand for immediate action is so urgent that I will not trespass at any length upon the time of the committee at this hour. I am in hearty sympathy with the eminent Chairman of this committee [Mr. SPRINGER] and the members on this side of the House who desire to press this bill to a conclusion and reach a final vote upon its passage.

When Congress assembled in December last it was confronted with a surplus in the National Treasury (including subsidiary coin) of $79,466,695.30. That surplus, notwithstanding the purchases of Government bonds made since the 23d of April last and the payment of the ordinary expenses of the Government, has increased until it aggregated, at the close of business last Saturday (June 30, 1888), the appalling sum of $129,272,205.90. In other words, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the purchase of $32,386,800.40 worth of Government bonds, the people's money in the Treasury has increased since the 1st day of December last to the extent of $49,805,510.60. The purchase of bonds as a means of reducing the surplus began under the circular of the Secretary of the Treasury on the 23d of April last, and since that date the Secretary has purchased 4 per cent. bonds, maturing July 1, 1907, to the amount of $18,383,800, and has paid upon them in premiums $4,963,944.20.

During the same period he has also purchased 4½ per cent. bonds maturing September 1, 1891, in the sum of $8,393,050; and on this last class of bonds he paid premiums aggregating $646,006.20. To state the case plainly, Mr. Chairman, because of this surplus in the public Treasury, which the other side of the House has steadily refused to reduce, the Secretary has been compelled to purchase Government bonds, paying therefor an average premium of 27 per cent. on the 4 percents and 7 per cent. on the 4½ percents, the result being that for $26,776,850 of bonds purchased he has paid $32,386,800.40, or premiums amounting in all to $5,609,950.40, while the surplus, which amounted to $135,320,592.37 when the purchase of bonds began, had only been reduced $6,048,386.47; and but for the exceptionally large payment for pensions there would have been no reduction at all, but, on the contrary, an actual increase.

It is therefore manifest that under the present unjust system we are taxing the people of the United States to purchase an indebtedness not yet due, and in so doing we are paying on that indebtedness a very large premium. This policy is unbusiness-like and unjust both to capital and labor; and so long as it continues, the practical remedies are but in two directions—one is the purchase of indebtedness not yet matured at a high rate of premium, and the other is the distribution of a part of the surplus among the national banks of the country. The Secretary of the Treasury, to prevent a stringency in the money market, and consequent financial disaster, has been forced to distribute sixty millions of this surplus among the national banks. Sir, I appeal to the other side of the House to know whether they intend to compel the Administration to continue this policy Speaking for myself, and I believe voicing the conviction of the Democratic party, I say that I am unalterably opposed to the continuance of the present system, which requires bond purchases and the distribution of the people's money among the national banks; believing that the highest interests of the whole people imperatively demand that money not needed by the Government for its legitimate expenses should be left in the pockets of the tax-payers, and not piled up in the coffers of the Federal Treasury and the vaults of the national banks.

Sir, this constantly augmenting surplus in the public Treasury is one of the unrelenting "conditions which confronts" the business interests of the country; and yet, with this situation of fiscal affairs, we have occupied in general debate on this bill twenty-three days and eight evening sessions. There were consumed in the day debate one hundred and eleven hours and fifty-four minutes, fifty-six hours eighteen minutes by Democrats, and fifty-five hours thirty-six minutes by Republicans, in all one hundred and fifty-one speeches being made. The debate upon the bill by paragraphs began May 31, since which time there have been consumed sixteen days, or in all exactly seventy-three hours, with only twelve out of the sixty-seven pages of the bill passed over. At this rate of progress it will yet require seventy-seven days to complete the full consideration of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I do not charge our friends on the other side of the Chamber with having up to this moment indulged to any considerable extent in dilatory tactics, but I do insist that no one upon the other side has exhibited any fervid desire to reach the conclusion of this debate. They stand here day after day discussing and rediscussing the items of this bill, while the money of the people is piling up in the Treasury at an average daily rate of $1,215,128.63, whilst the average daily bond purchases have been only $453,844.91.

Sir, I begin to understand the significance of the observation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] when he declared a few days since on this floor that—

Fair play requires that this issue shall go to the people next November, and if the people then elect a Democratic President and a Democratic House of Representatives, and they come in here and choose to revise the tariff, I will offer no objection or obstruction to their managing that matter in their own way.

Sir, I quite agree that there ought to be a full discussion of the essential items of this bill, but day after day, and hour after hour, the gentleman from Pennsylvania who has announced his opposition to any tariff revision has occupied the floor in the dissection of almost every non-essential item presented in the measure.

Sir, I say that "fair play" to the business interests of the country requires that we reach a speedy conclusion and send this bill to the Senate, and if a conference be necessary that we should make an honest effort to reconcile all differences between the two Houses. The Democratic party in convention at St. Louis has formally approved this measure and our efforts to secure its passage. The Republican party has in national convention opposed the propositions contained in the bill. The issue is thus joined by the two great parties. Then, sir, why the necessity for further discussion of trivial and unimportant items and the delay necessarily occasioned thereby. Mr. Chairman, more than four hours of the time occupied in debate have been consumed by the Republican side in demanding a prohibitory duty on tin-plate, and yet they conceded that there was to-day not one tin-plate manufactory in the United States, and therefore not a single American laborer employed in that industry.

The proposition was thus boldly presented to use the taxing power of the Government for the purpose, not of protecting an industry already in existence, but for the avowed purpose of creating one. This position is in harmony with the recent Republican platform adopted at Chicago and is a departure from the position heretofore taken by the leaders of the Republican party. This fact is so clearly and ably set forth in a recent editorial utterance of the St. Louis Republic that I shall ask the Clerk to read it, as expressive of my views upon this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUMPTUARY TAXATION.

The tariff section of the Chicago platform is the most significant and aggressive platform utterance of the Republican party since it has had a party existence. It is a bold and open departure from the theory hitherto held by all parties alike that government taxation is for revenue. It plainly sets forth the doctrine that tariff taxation should be for prohibition of imports.

This is unmistakable. Not one who reads the platform can fail to see it and understand that the Republican party holds now what it never held before—what no party of Americans ever held before—that the Federal Government has the unqualified right to say what style and make of clothing the citizens shall and shall not wear; what kind and make of tools he shall and shall not use in his trade; what furniture he shall and shall not put in his house; what food he shall and shall not eat.

Judged by any American standard, even by the standards of the old Republican party, it is revolution. The party of 1888 was too cowardly to apply the sumptuary principle to the purchase and use of intoxicants manufactured within the custom-house lines, but it showed the courage of desperate lunacy in applying the same sumptuary principle to all articles except intoxicants. Never before has it dared so much. The doctrine of all its previous platforms has been that tariff taxation is levied to raise revenue for the Government. It declared so plainly in its tariff plank of 1876:

"The revenue necessary for current expenditures and the obligations of the public debt must be largely derived from duties upon importations, which so far as possible should be adjusted to promote the interests of American labor and advance the prosperity of the whole country."

This doctrine of tariff for revenue, it reiterated in 1880, in even more explicit terms:

"We reaffirm the belief expressed in 1876 that the duties levied for the purpose of revenue should so discriminate as to favor American labor."

Again in 1884 it declared its continued adherence to the same principle:

"The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicious and indiscriminate method of horizontal reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the tax-payer without injuring the labor or the great productive interests of the country."

Here the declarations of 1876 and 1880 in favor of the revenue principle of taxation are reinforced by the declaration of 1884 that tariff taxes were so high that there was necessity of immediate relief for the "tax-payer." The position of the party now is that tariff duties are not taxes on the people, but are paid by the "foreign manufacturer," and if it were consistent it would have to admit that the foreign manufacturer is the "tax-payer" to whom it pledged relief in 1884.

But it is not consistent. It is openly, boldly, and radically inconsistent. It has cut loose from all its own traditions. It has dared to change front under fire. Its old ground has been abandoned. It is no more the party of the platforms of 1876 and 1880 than it is of 1856 and 1860.

Where it stood in 1876 the Democratic party stands now with its policy of free raw material and gradual reduction of the taxes on the necessaries of life. This ground of vantage; this sure key to the situation; this guaranty of victory, the Republican party with incredible folly has surrendered. It declares for free luxuries—for free whisky, free tobacco, free anything and everything, rather than abate a jot or tittle of the import taxes. Read its monstrous declaration:

"If [after prohibiting imports of all such articles as are made in the United States] there shall still remain a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the Government, we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes rather than surrender any part of our protective system."

Coupled with this is the declaration that duties should be raised above the possibility of import, so as to "check imports of such articles as are produced by our people," and on all these articles—99 per cent. of the list of taxables—to do away entirely with the revenue feature of taxation.

The issue here presented has never before been presented in American politics. True, the prohibitory principle of taxation has been advocated by a few extremists, but no party has been insane enough to adopt it as a party tenet and to boldly declare that it is not only the right but the duty of government to use its taxing power and revenue machinery, not to collect revenue, but for the sumptuary regulation of the citizen.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I will also ask to incorporate in my remarks an editorial from the Chicago Tribune of June 23, 1888, demanding that the committee on resolutions report an amendment to the platform (kepublican national convention being still in session) "striking out the plank in favor of free whisky." The Tribune is the leading Republican organ of the Northwest; but the convention lacked the courage to thus concede its own folly, and the "frightful blunder," in the opinion of the Tribune, "will cost the Republican party tens and possibly hundreds of thousands of votes." The editorial is in the following terms:

A GRAVE BLUNDER IN THE PLATFORM.

* * * * * * *

The Tribune does not propose at this time to enter into any discussion of the Republican tariff plank; but desires before it is too late to ask the attention of the delegates to the extraordinary demand for the repeal of the whisky tax. The platform first declares in favor of repealing the tax on alcohol used in the arts and for mechanical purposes—a policy which has always been met with the objection that it would be impossible of enforcement on account of frauds, and would amount virtually to free whisky. However that may be, the platform goes on to declare further:

"If there should still remain a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the Government, we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes [whisky and tobacco] rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system at the joint behest of the whisky trust and the agents of foreign manufacturers."

Four years ago the Republican party pledged itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and reduce the surplus. Now it is made to demand the placing of whisky and tobacco on the free-list in order to prevent any reduction of the surplus by correcting the inequalities of the tariff or by reducing the sugar tax. The Republican tariff platform of 1884 in substance declared:

"The Democratic party has failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus. The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus."

Is putting whisky on the free-list an honest redemption of this pledge?

It is hard to believe that the convention intended to repudiate the pledge in the platform of 1884 and to substitute a demand for free whisky. It is still more difficult to believe that Republican voters favor such an extraordinary flop, or will under any circumstances approve the policy of cheapening intoxicating drink as a method of getting rid of the surplus when there are so many other and better ways. Can the party leaders venture to go before the people with such a platform and hope that the fearful blunder committed by the framers of the platform will be overlooked or excused? Certainly the Democrats will not ignore it. If the blunder in the platform is not corrected before adjournment every Democratic procession this fall will carry banners stigmatizing the Republican party as a free-whisky organization committed to the doctrine of cheap rum and dear sugar. There is no precedent for recalling and amending a platform after its adoption and promulgation, but it ought to be done in this instance.

A precedent should be made. The committee on resolutions ought to report an amendment striking out the plank in favor of free whisky, and declaring instead that the tax on liquor and tobacco shall be retained to meet the increasing expenditures for pensions and for the defrayment of service pensions.

Correction can be made and adopted by the convention in a few minutes. If the frightful blunder into which the convention was misled is not corrected, it will cost the Republican party tens and possibly hundreds of thousands of votes.

The Tribune desires to go on record as insisting with the utmost emphasis that before final adjournment the convention shall recall and correct the blunder in question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I will not attempt to emphasize the "new departure" of the Republican party as it is presented in the Chicago platform further than to quote the views of Mr. Blaine in his Paris interview, December 7, 1887, in which, in response to the direct question whether he would advise the repeal of the whisky tax, he said:

No, I would not. Other considerations than those of financial administration are to be taken into account with regard to whisky. There is a moral side to it. To cheapen the price of whisky is to increase its consumption enormously. There would be no sense in urging the reform wrought by high license in many States if the National Government neutralizes the good effect by making whisky within reach of every one at 20 cents a gallon. Whisky would be everywhere distilled if the surveillance of the Government were withdrawn by the remission of the tax, and illicit sales could not then be prevented, even by a policy as rigorous and searching as that with which Russia pursues the Nihilists. It would destroy high license at once in all the States. * * * So long as there is whisky to tax I would tax it. * * * The tax on whisky by the Federal Government, with its suppression of all illicit distillation and consequent enhancement of price, has been a powerful agent in the temperance reform by putting it beyond the reach of so many.

Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that he says—

So long as there is whisky to tax, I would tax it.

The Chicago platform declares the opposite view and says:

The Republican party would effect all needed reduction of the national revenue by repealing the taxes upon tobacco, which are an annoyance and burden to agriculture, and the tax upon spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes; and by such revision of the tariff laws as will tend to check imports of such articles as are produced by our people, the production of which gives employment to our labor and releases from import duties those articles of foreign production (except luxuries) the like of which can not be produced at home. If there shall still remain a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the Government, we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes—rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system at the joint behest of the whisky trusts and the agents of foreign manufacturers.

Internal taxes are the taxes levied on whisky, tobacco, and oleomargarine.

Sir, so much has already been said upon this question of tariff taxation that I am unwilling to pursue it further at this time. The issue between the two great political parties is squarely joined. The Republican party is in favor of reducing the surplus by repealing all taxes upon tobacco, the taxes upon spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes, and by probibitory duties upon foreign importations. Failing to reduce the surplus by these methods, they courageously pronounce in favor of striking the tax from whisky. The Democratic party is unalterably opposed to "free whisky;" is willing to strike the tax from tobacco (except its manufactures of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes); is in favor of repealing all taxes upon the actual necessaries of life, and as far as possible the duties upon raw materials used by our manufacturers. We favor cheap food, cheap clothing, and cheap shelter, rather than cheap whisky.

APPENDIX.

[Extract from the speech of Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE at the Academy of Music, New York, Thursday evening, June 28, 1888.]

THE DEMOCRACY NOT FOR FREE TRADE.

Upon the one great question which now attracts the almost undivided attention of the country—the question of revenue reduction—the Republican party has clearly and explicitly committed itself in favor of free tobacco and free whisky, and increased taxation upon food and clothing and the medicines of the people, and upon the raw material used in their manufacturing industries. Upon this issue it appeals to the people for their judgment at the ensuing election, but it confesses its want of confidence in the justice of its own cause by grossly misrepresenting the position of its opponent at the very beginning of the contest. While we cheerfully admit the right of the Republican party to define its own position, we utterly deny its right to define ours.

Whoever asserts that the Democratic party is in favor of free trade in this country, or that the present Administration has adopted or recommended a free-trade policy, or that the bill now pending in the House of Representatives is a free-trade measure, is either ignorant of the terms he uses or he is so blinded by partisan prejudice as to be incapable of doing justice to his political opponents. Ever since the organization of this Government the larger part of its revenue has been raised by the imposition of duties upon imported goods, mainly manufactured goods, and no political party has ever advocated an abandonment of that policy. It is not probable that it will ever be abandoned. From this source and from the taxes imposed by the internal-revenue laws the Government is now and for several years has been collecting a much larger amount of money than is required to defray its ordinary expenses and discharge its matured obligations; and consequently, in order to relieve the people from unnecessary taxation and prevent the accumulation of large sums in the Treasury, to the great injury of the public and private interests, it became the duty of Congress to repeal or modify some of the laws under which these collections were made.

After a careful investigation of the whole subject, it was thought best to propose the abolition of the internal-revenue taxes upon manufactured chewing and smoking tobaccos, not including cigars, cigarettes, and cheroots, and the repeal of the tariff taxes on certain articles of necessity, with moderate reductions in the rates of duty upon others where the existing rates were unusually high; and accordingly the measure now so widely known as the Mills bill was prepared and reported.

I think it is safe to say that nine-tenths of the people who are daily denouncing the bill in the public press and otherwise as a free-trade measure have never read a single line of it, and perhaps they would not understand it if they had. There has been such misunderstanding and misrepresentation concerning the provisions and purposes of this bill that I may be excused for referring to it a moment. It does not propose a general revision of the tariff. It affects comparatively a very few of the many articles now subject to taxation under our customs laws. It places a number of articles, principally the materials used in our manufactures, on the free-list, and it reduces the rates of duty, as I have said, on some others. For instance, it places all raw wool on the free-list, and makes a corresponding reduction in the rates of duty upon woolen goods, for, strange as it may appear to our Republican friends, the Democrats in Congress are of the opinion that cheap woolen clothing would be more beneficial to the people than cheap whisky.

THE MEASURE OF REDUCTION.

The present average rate of duty upon articles which the bill proposes to reduce is nearly 66 per cent., and if the measure should become a law the average rate upon these articles would still be over 48 per cent., while the average rate upon all dutiable importations would be 40 per cent. Therefore, notwithstanding the passage of this bill, the average tariff rates of duty upon dutiable goods imported into this country will still remain higher than they ever were previous to 1864, when the rates were greatly increased, not for protection, but for revenue to carry on the war. They will still be five times as high as they were under the first tariff law enacted in 1789, when our industries were really in their infancy. Notwithstanding the passage of this bill the average rate of duty upon dutiable goods will remain higher than the rates under the protective tariff of 1816; higher than the protective tariff of 1824; higher than the protective tariff of 1828; higher than the protective tariff of 1842; and higher than the protective tariff of 1861, known as the Morrill tariff.

We have been told over and over again in the most glowing and extravagant terms of the wonderful prosperity of our manufacturing industries under the various tariffs to which I have referred, and unless, therefore, it can be shown that these industries are growing weaker as they grow older, that they become more dependent under high tariffs than under low tariffs, it is difficult to see how they can now be injured by the passage of a measure which still leaves them a greater degree of protection than they ever had before the great civil war. The average rate of duty upon dutiable goods under the tariff of 1824 was not less than 38 per cent.; under the act of 1828 it was not less than 40 per cent.; under the act of 1842 it was only a little over 32 per cent., and under the Morrill tariff act of 1861 it was not less than 35½ per cent.

If the authors of the bill now pending in the House of Representatives are free-traders, then Mr. Clay and his associates were still more radical free-traders, because they never at any time proposed to fix the duties upon imported goods as high as this bill will leave them. If the Democratic party and the President of the United States are the enemies of American industry and the allies of British merchants and British manufactures, then the statesmen who framed the protective tariffs of 1816, 1824, 1828, 1842, and 1861 were much greater enemies of those industries and much more valuable allies of British interests.

THE DEMOCRATIC POLICY.

The Democratic party does not advocate free trade, but it believes that the interests of all our manufacturing and other industries would be advanced, that the wages of all our laborers would be increased, and the general welfare of the whole country would be greatly promoted by repealing as far as possible the taxes upon raw materials, and reducing or repealing the taxes upon the actual necessaries of life; and upon these simple propositions it proposes to stand or fall in the great contest now before it.

We believe that such a policy would so reduce the cost of production in this country as to enable our manufacturers to compete successfully with their rivals, not only in our home market but in the markets abroad, and especially in the markets of the great and growing States and republics of South America and Mexico, which, although they lie at our very doors, now make their largest purchases in Europe; that it would secure for our laboring people in every branch of industry more steady employment, better wages, and greater opportunities for the improvement of their condition; and that it would do more to encourage the building of ships and the restoration of the American carrying trade on the high seas than all the subsidies and bounties the most extravagant Congress could grant. Whatever may be said to the contrary, we know that all labor is paid for in the market where its products are sold, and that the more these markets are restricted the less demand there will be for labor and the less wages it will receive.

The following interesting circular, with the editorial comments thereon, appears in the St. Louis Republic of recent date:

"BOODLE."

[Confidential—dictated.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE REPUBLICAN LEAGUE OF THE UNITED STATES,
New York, May 24, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: The Republican League of the United States desire to bring you face to face with the startling fact that the coming Presidential election is not to be fought on the old party lines which have heretofore divided Democrats and Republicans, but upon the direct issue of free trade versus protection.

It may not be of your personal knowledge, but it is a fact nevertheless that the manufacturers of the United States who are most benefited by our tariff laws have been the least willing to contribute to the success of the party which gave them protection and which is about to engage in a life and death struggle with free trade.

A Republican United States Senator from a State which never had a Democratic representative in either House of Congress or a Democratic State officer, in speaking of the well-known disposition of the manufacturing interests to lock up its money, fold its hands, and look on while somebody else fights for its success, says:

"The campaign which we are about to enter will concern more than anybody else the manufacturers of this country. They have heretofore been laggard in their contributions to the Republican cause. Indeed, if I could punish them without punishing the cause of protection itself I would consign them to the hottest place I could think of on account of their cravenal parsimony. If this class of people do not care to contribute to the success of the Republican party they are welcome to try their chances under a Democratic administration. I can stand it as long as they can. I was solicited to contribute to a protective tariff league, and I replied that if the manufacturers of the United States in their associated capacity were an eleemosynary institution I would vote to give them a pension, but that I did not propose myself to contribute money to advance the interests of men who were getting practically the sole benefit, or at least the most directly important benefits, of the tariff laws. I am in favor of protection; not precisely the kind we are having, but I might be willing to keep that rather than not to have any, but I am sure I can get along without any of it fully as well as the manufacturers can, and if they think the Republican party is going to maintain a high protective corps for their benefit, and the men who do the work in that party are going to keep up the expenses of a campaign out of their own pockets, leaving them to reap the fruits of the tariff policy without any deduction for political expenses, they are greatly mistaken. I understand that in a general way the manufacturers of New England have been more liberal in their contribution than those of Pennsylvania.

"In fact, I have it from the best possible source that the manufacturers of Pennsylvania, who are more highly protected than anybody else, and who make large fortunes every year when times are prosperous, practically give nothing towards the maintenance of the ascendency of the Republican party. Of course I shall not violate what I consider to be a proper principle of action; but, if I had my way about it, I would put the manufacturers of Pennsylvania under the fire and fry all the fat out of them. If the Mills tariff bill comes to the Senate there will be some votes cast there which will open the eyes of some of these people who have, while gathering their millions, treated the Republican party as their humble servant."

These are strong words, and bitter, but they are true; and it now remains with you and your associates to determine whether they are reiterated after the campaign is over and protection has, through your apathy, been struck its death-blow. If you give us the means to win the victory we will do it. Are you willing?

Yours truly,

JAMES P. FOSTER, President.

This circular, sent everywhere to manufacturers "in confidence," was made public by one of them by way of protest against the blackmailing spirit of the Republican party. While many manufacturers will be manly enough to refuse to submit to blackmail, others will be held under the fire until the fat fries out in sufficient quantities to grease the Republican machine.

* * * * * * *

In this desperate strait, the party hopes to win by buying votes with money contributed by the rings, pools, and trusts represented by the Thurstons, Depews, and Haymonds, who dictated the nominations at Chicago.

"Boodle" can do much. There are votes for sale and boodle can buy them, but there are not enough boodle-givers or boodle-takers in the United States to elect a President.

MANUFACTURERS FURNISH THE MONEY.

The Tariff League Bulletin, of New York, a protection organ, of date June 8, 1888, indignantly denies the statement of James P. Foster, President of the Republican League, charging that the manufacturers have been laggard in their contributions to the Republican cause, and says: "We affirm that more than three-fourths of all the money used in support of Republicanism and protection has come from men directly or indirectly engaged in manufactures. The records of the Republican party prove it."

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, was recognized.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope there will be a vote upon my amendment before it is forgotten.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to submit a few observations if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] does not wish to proceed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to move that the committee rise, as there are some things that must be attended to.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I desire to occupy my five minutes in making reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. I have not been heard in this debate so far.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is now near the hour of adjournment, and there are some things that must be attended to in the House. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a motion that the committee rise? He will be entitled to the floor when the committee resumes its session.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the amendments of the Senate to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 9050) be taken from the Speaker's table and non-concurred in, and the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House be agreed to.

Mr. HOVEY. I object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOVEY. I have not been in favor of the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is material the bill should pass, as all the works are stopped.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask unanimous consent that Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal——

Mr. HOVEY. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. KERR. I renew it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again put the request of the gentleman from Louisiana to the House. Is there objection to the taking the amendments of the Senate to the river and harbor appropriation bill from the table and sending them to a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses?

Mr. KERR. I wish to say that I do not make objection simply for delay, but because I am opposed to the bill; and if the only effect of my objection will be to postpone action then I will withdraw it.

The amendments of the Senate were taken from the table, non-concurred in, and the request of the Senate for a conference was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. BLANCHARD, Mr. CATCHINGS, and Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARDY. I move, by unanimous consent, that Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Commerce. I will state that one of the bills I desire to have considered at that time is the bill to incorporate the Maritime Company of Nicaragua.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I ask, by unanimous consent, that Thursday next, for two hours, be given for the consideration of the bill for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. BARNES. I object.

And then, on motion of Mr. SPRINGER (at 4 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, the 5th of July.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in response to a resolution of April 11, 1888, requesting that officer to furnish the Senate with the amount paid to retired officers of the Navy to the present time; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Alabama, praying for an amendment of the interstate-commerce law; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of James Harlan and 21 others, citizens of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, praying for the passage of a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah E. Bradley, only surviving daughter of John Hollingsworth, an officer in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William Sheldon, late a private in Company A, Thirtieth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, praying for the removal of the charge of desertion against his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Newburgh, N. Y.; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

> The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Newburgh, N. Y., having pledged itself to use all lawful means for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and believing that the internal-revenue tax is a protection to the manufacture of intoxicating beverages, and not a restraint upon it, do earnestly beg you to vote for the entire repeal of the internal-revenue tax on liquor.
>
> Signed for the Union,
>
> ANNA M. RAMSAY, > Corresponding Secretary.
> JUNE, 1888.

Mr. QUAY presented resolutions adopted by the Junior Order of United American Mechanics of the State of Pennsylvania, as follows: Duquesne Council, No. 110, of Pittsburgh; Fidelity Council, No. 21, of Bristol; Resolute Council, No. 27, of Reading; Shawnee Council, No. 34, of Hazleton; Black Creek Council, No. 51, of Weatherly; Harmony Council, No. 53, of Philadelphia; Star Lodge Council, No. 68, of Slatington; Dawson Council, No. 75, of Dawson; Chosen Friends' Council, No. 86, of Philadelphia; Coopersdale Council, No. 97, of Coopersdale; McKeesport Council, No. 109, of McKeesport; Dravosburgh Council, No. 141, of Dravosburgh; Mountaineer Council, No. 111, of Mahanoy City; Bridesburgh Council, No. 135, of Philadelphia; McLellan Council, No. 150, of Verona; General Marion Council, No. 154, of Pittsburgh; Bethany Council, No. 155, of Ruff's Dale; J. B. Clark Council, No. 186, of Allegheny; Climax Council, No. 195, of Smithton; New Tripoli Grand Council, No. 204, of New Tripoli; and Howell Council, No. 210, of Stauffer, praying for the passage of Senate bill 553, to restrict foreign immigration.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PUGH presented a petition of officers and privates of the Montgomery (Ala.) Field Artillery, praying for the passage of an act to increase the efficiency of the artillery of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of the Milton trustees of the Indiana State Grange and other citizens of Indiana, praying for the passage of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce act which shall protect the public from the gross violations of that act by the railway companies of the country and prevent any further encroachments on the rights of the people by them; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PASCO presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of St. Augustine, Fla., remonstrating against the proposed consolidation of the internal-revenue districts of Georgia and Florida on the ground that it would be detrimental to the tobacco interests of Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FARWELL presented the petition of Dr. Alexander Dunbar, of Washington City, praying for the purchase by the Government of certain remedies discovered by him for dangerous diseases, in order that they may become the property of the Government to all intents and purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of Leander Ferguson, of Brandon, Wis., praying for the passage of amendments to the act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of William A. Roath, James H. Harris, and other citizens of St. Clair County, Missouri, praying Congress to enact additional amendments to the interstate-commerce law, providing that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of that act to carry or transport any commodity for any shipper in a car or vehicle owned, leased, or in any way controlled by such shipper; and that it shall be unlawful for any shipper to make any contract with any carrier to convey the property of such shipper in cars or vehicles owned or controlled by such shipper; and that in all prosecutions under the act the complainant may receive a part of the amount that may be imposed as a fine. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

DUTY ON LEAD ORE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to make a report in obedience to a resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and adopted June 11, 1888, directing an inquiry into the state of the law on the subject of the customs duties imposable upon ores containing lead and also gold and silver. I present in answer to that resolution a written report, which I ask may be placed on file. It needs no action of the Senate that I am aware of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be placed on file and printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

A bill (S. 2050) granting a pension to Mrs. Bridget Hackett.

VETOED PENSION BILLS.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask leave at this time to file the views of the minority of the Committee on Pensions on the subject of certain private pension bills vetoed by the President of the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions. The report of the majority was submitted to the Senate and printed in the RECORD and ordered to be printed as a separate document. I ask that the same order may be made in connection with the views of the minority also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority of the committee will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Printing, taking the same course as the report of the majority of the committee on the same subject. The two reports will be printed together as one document, if there be no objection.

The views of the minority are as follows:

The undersigned dissent from that part of the report of the majority of said committee which treats generally of the veto power. We regard that power as a qualified negative upon that of Congress, not derogatory to their rights or action. Neither the power or its exercise can be regarded as an encroachment upon the province of Congress since both are provided for in the Constitution. Mr. Story, in his justly celebrated commentary upon that instrument, says respecting it: "The power is important, as an additional security against the enactment of rash, immature, and improper laws." Speaking of the action of the Executive therein the same author remarks: "His view, if not more wise or more elevated, will at least be independent and under an entirely different responsibility to the nation from what belongs to Congress. He is the representative of the whole nation in the aggregate; they are the representatives only of distinct parts."

We do not think the frequency of the exercise of this power upon the subject of private bills, even if it were a legitimate objection thereto, is at all made out as charged. Out of the large numbers of such bills a very small percentage have been returned with objections. The frequency bears a very inconsiderable proportion to the number of the applications. As to the means of information made use of by the Executive as a basis for his objections, the President has certainly the same right to make use of the records, files, reports, and opinions of the Pension Bureau as members of Congress. The money of the people in the Treasury, the fund out of which pensions are paid, is a fund of such quality as that it can not be guarded too carefully against immature legislation. The President, equally with any member of the legislative bodies, has the right and duty imposed upon him to form and express his opinion with respect to the justice of a pecuniary claim against this fund, being answerable under his oath and conscience only to the constituency of the nation for his action therein. As to the merits of the particular bills recited in the committee's report, we deem it here unnecessary for us to express an opinion at this time, being willing to do so at such time as the question properly arises upon the final passage thereof.

MARY M. BRIGGS.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Should not a motion be entered to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed?

Mr. SAWYER. When the bill is returned I shall move to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to amend the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also requested the Senate to furnish the House of Representatives with a copy of the Senate amendments to House bill 3300, as passed by the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. 5096) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Flint River, in the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 9816) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark.; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 184) to amend the joint resolution approved May 14, 1888, relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the fifth and non-concurred in the other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia, Mr. DOCKERY, of Missouri, and Mr. BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania, managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Mr. BLANCHARD, Mr. CATCHINGS, and Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 96) authorizing the District commissioners to designate a site for a statue of Benjamin Franklin.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 191) relating to the pages of the House; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 251) to increase the pension of Edmund Asworth;
A bill (H. R. 362) to increase the pension of Charles W. Sanborn;

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer certain amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I ask may be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the sundry civil appropriation bill by inserting:

That the Architect of the Capitol be directed to erect at some suitable and convenient place in the Capitol building a drinking fountain for public use, and for this purpose the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

For the repair of the road leading to the national cemetery near Fort Scott, Kans., $5,000.

For the purpose of erecting a suitable monument at the national cemetery located at Mound City, Kans., under the direction of the Secretary of War, $3,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendments will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CALL, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. STOCKBRIDGE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BATE and Mr. QUAY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I give notice that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887. I shall ask the Senate at that time to proceed to the consideration of the bill and to continue its consideration until it is disposed of by the Senate.

DISTRICT STEAM-RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] July 2, 1888, in relation to the routes of steam-railroads in the District of Columbia. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar, if there be no objection.

MARY ANN DOUGHERTY—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1547, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary Ann Dougherty."

A large share of the report of the Senate committee to which this bill was referred, and which report is adopted by the Committee of the House, as is usual in such cases, consists of a petition signed by Mary Ann Dougherty, addressed to the Congress, in which she states that she resides in Washington, having removed here with her husband in 1863 from New Jersey; that shortly after their arrival in this city her husband, Daniel Dougherty, returned to New Jersey and enlisted in the Thirty-fourth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers; that she obtained employment in the United States arsenal making cartridges, and that while so engaged she was injured by an explosion.

She also states that she had a young son killed by machinery in the navy-yard, and that at the grand review of the Army after the close of the war another son, six years old, was stolen by an officer of the Army, and has not been heard of since. She further says that her husband left his home in 1865 and has not been heard of since, and that she believes he deserted her on account of her infirmities.

It is alleged in the report that she received a pension as the widow of Daniel Dougherty until it was discovered that he was alive, when her name was dropped from the rolls.

The petition of this woman is indorsed by the Admiral and several other officers of the Navy and a distinguished clergyman of Washington, certifying that they know Mrs. Dougherty, and believe the facts stated to be true.

There is no pretense made now that this beneficiary is a widow, though she at one time claimed to be, and was allowed a pension on that allegation. Her present claim rests entirely upon injuries received by her when she was concededly not employed in the military service. If the pension now proposed is allowed her it will be a mere act of charity.

Her husband, Daniel Dougherty, is now living in Philadelphia, and is a pensioner in his own right for disability alleged to have been incurred while serving in the Thirty-fourth New Jersey Volunteers. Of this fact this beneficiary has been repeatedly informed. And yet she states in her petition that her husband deserted her in 1865, and has not been heard of since.

It is alleged in the Pension Bureau that, in 1878, she succeeded in securing a pension as the widow of Daniel Dougherty, through fraudulent testimony and much false swearing on her part.

The police records of the precinct in which she has lived for years show that she is a woman of very bad character, and that she has been under arrest nine times for drunkenness, larceny, creating disturbance, and misdemeanors of that sort.

It happens that this claimant, by reason of her residence here, has been easily traced, and her character and untruthfulness discovered. But there is much reason to fear that this case will find its parallel in many that have reached a successful conclusion.

I can not spell out any principle upon which the bounty of the Government is bestowed through the instrumentality of the flood of private pension bills that reach me. The theory seems to have been adopted that no man who served in the Army can be the subject of death or impaired health except they are chargeable to his service. Medical theories are set at naught and the most startling relation is claimed between alleged incidents of military service and disability or death. Fatal apoplexy is admitted as the result of quite insignificant wounds, heart disease is attributed to chronic diarrhea, consumption to hernia, and suicide is traced to army service in a wonderfully devious and curious way.

Adjudications of the Pension Bureau are overruled in the most peremptory fashion by these special acts of Congress, since nearly all the beneficiaries named in these bills have unsuccessfully applied to that bureau for relief.

This course of special legislation operates very unfairly.

Those with certain influence or friends to push their claims procure pensions, and those who have neither friends nor influence must be content with their fate under general laws. It operates unfairly by increasing in numerous instances the pensions of those already on the roll, while many other more deserving cases, from the lack of fortunate advocacy, are obliged to be content with the sum provided by general laws.

The apprehension may well be entertained that the freedom with which these private pension bills are passed furnishes an inducement to fraud and imposition, while it certainly teaches the vicious lesson to our people that the Treasury of the National Government invites the approach of private need.

None of us should be in the least wanting in regard for the veteran soldier, and I will yield to no man in a desire to see those who defended the Government when it needed defenders liberally treated. Unfriendliness to our veterans is a charge easily and sometimes dishonestly made.

I insist that the true soldier is a good citizen, and that he will be satisfied with generous, fair, and equal consideration for those who are worthily entitled to help.

I have considered the pension-list of the Republic a roll of honor bearing names inscribed by national gratitude and not by improvident and indiscriminate alms-giving.

I have conceived the prevention of the complete discredit which must ensue from the unreasonable, unfair, and reckless granting of pensions by special acts to be the best service I can render our veterans.

In the discharge of what has seemed to me my duty as related to legislation and in the interest of all the veterans of the Union Army, I have attempted to stem the tide of improvident pension enactments, though I confess to a full share of responsibility for some of these laws that should not have been passed.

I am far from denying that there are cases of merit which can not be reached except by special enactment; but I do not believe there is a member of either House of Congress who will not admit that this kind of legislation has been carried too far.

I have now before me more than one hundred special pension bills which can hardly be examined within the time allowed for that purpose.

My aim has been at all times, in dealing with bills of this character, to give the applicant for a pension the benefit of any doubt that might arise and which balanced the propriety of granting a pension, if there seemed any just foundation for the application; but when it seemed entirely outside of every rule, in its nature or the proof supporting it, I have supposed I only did my duty in interposing an objection.

It seems to me that it would be well if our general pensions laws should be revised with a view of meeting every meritorious case that can arise. Our experience and knowledge of any existing deficiencies ought to make the enactment of a complete pension code possible.

In the absence of such a revision, and if pensions are to be granted upon equitable grounds and without regard to general laws, the present methods would be greatly improved by the establishment of some tribunal to examine the facts in every case and determine upon the merits of the application.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 5, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall this bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

SIGNAL-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, to insert under the head of appropriations "In the Signal Office" the following: "Four copyists, at $600 each;" so that said paragraph may read as follows:

"In the Signal Office: For one professor of meteorology, at $4,000; three assistant professors of meteorology, at $1,800 each; two clerks of class 4; one bibliographer and librarian, at $1,600; one clerk of class 2; one lithographer, at $1,200; one clerk, at $1,000; four clerks of class 1; one translator and type-writer, at $840; four copyists, at $720 each; four copyists, at $600 each; four copyists, at $480 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; one watchman; one carpenter, at $660; one messenger, at $600; one messenger, at $480; two laborers, at $600; two laborers, at $450 each; two stitchers and folders, at $480 each; and for the services of such other messengers, mechanics, laborers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, in the office of the Chief Signal Officer, to carry into effect the appropriations made for the support of the Signal Service, $2,540; in all, $40,460."

The words directed to be inserted having been omitted by error when the bill was engrossed.

Mr. ALLISON. This is intended to cure a defect, it will be seen, in the engrossment of the House bill. That bill came to the Senate specifically appropriating for the clerks in the Signal Office. It omitted, however, to insert "four copyists, at $600 each," as passed by the House. The error was not discovered in the Senate, inasmuch as the Senate Committee on Appropriations sent this portion of the bill to the Secretary of War asking him if the arrangement by the House for clerical services in the Signal Office was satisfactory, and the committee received an answer saying that the arrangement for the office of the Signal Service was satisfactory to the War Department. The error was not discovered until the bill had passed the Senate and after its return to the House.

The conferees on the part of the House desired that provision for these four copyists should be inserted in the bill, but the Senate conferees insisted that the two Houses having concurred in the paragraph and there being no amendment to it, it was impossible for the conferees to take jurisdiction of it.

In order to correct the error the House sends to us this concurrent resolution. It is claimed by Senators on the floor, who have examined the resolution, that this provision never having been considered in the Senate, the resolution should be a joint resolution and not a concurrent one. In accordance with that view I move to strike out the words "Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein)," and to insert in lieu thereof the usual words of a joint resolution, namely, "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words will be inserted by the clerks, if there be no objection, changing the frame of the resolution from concurrent to joint.

Mr. ALLISON. With that amendment, I ask for the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Having been changed, it should be read three times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. The joint resolution will be read the first time by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. Res. —) directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to amend the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Having been read at length, the second reading will be considered as having been made by title, if there be no objection, and the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLLY H. SMITH—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 43, entitled "An act granting a pension to Polly H. Smith."

John H. Smith, the husband of the beneficiary named in this bill, enlisted in the regular Army in 1854 and served until the year 1870.

In 1868 a fistula developed, which was probably the result of quite continuous riding in the saddle. In 1870 he was placed upon the retired-list as first lieutenant on account of the incapacity arising from such fistula.

In September, 1885, fifteen years after his retirement, he died suddenly at Portland, Oregon, of heart disease, while attempting to raise a trunk to his shoulder.

I can not see how the cause of death can be connected with his service or with the incapacity for which he was placed upon the retired-list.

The application made by the widow for a pension is still pending before the Pension Bureau, and I understand that she or her friends prefer taking the chance of favorable consideration there to the approval of this bill.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 5, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

JOEL B. MORTON—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 432, entitled "An act for the relief of Joel B. Morton."

Calvin Morton, the son of the beneficiary named in this bill, enlisted in the Volunteer Infantry in 1861, and after his discharge again enlisted in the United States Cavalry, from which he was discharged in 1867.

It is alleged by his father that he was killed in the battle with the Indians at Little Big Horn, called the "Custer massacre," June 25, 1876.

His name does not appear in any record of the soldiers engaged in that battle. The casualty records of the affair are reported as very complete, but they contain no mention of any soldier of that name.

His father claims, in his application before the Pension Bureau, to have had a letter from his son in the fall of 1875, dated at some place in the Black Hills, stating that he was a lieutenant in the army under General Custer, but that the letter was lost. He also alleges that he read an account of the massacre in a newspaper, the name of which he has forgotten, and that his son was there mentioned as among the slain.

The report of the House committee states that the only evidence of the death of this soldier is found in a letter of Anderson G. Shaw, who writes that he was present on the field of the battle mentioned when the killed were buried, and that one of the burial party called a corpse found there Morton's. It is further claimed that the description of this body agreed with that given by the father of his son.

Considering the complete list of the casualties attending this battle now in the War Department, it must be conceded that the death of the son of the beneficiary is far from being satisfactorily established.

The claim of the father is still pending in the Pension Bureau, and perhaps with further effort more information on the subject can be obtained.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 5, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE PAGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 191) relating to the pages of the House of Representatives was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That so much of the act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, as requires that the pages of the House of Representatives shall not be under twelve years of age shall not apply to pages in the employment of the House on the 1st day of July, 1888.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be put upon its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in respect to this joint resolution that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill provides that House pages could not be appointed under twelve years of age. It turns out on examination that some of the pages now in the service of the House of Representatives are under twelve years of age. This provision met the same fate as the one which was just under consideration respecting clerks in the Signal Office. The paragraph having passed both Houses, the Senate conferees refused to consider the question of making this exception, so that the joint resolution is necessary in order to retain the pages now in service in the House.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN DENVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 5, 1888.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish this House with a copy of the Senate amendments to House bill 3300 as passed the Senate, the said bill and Senate amendments having been lost since its reception by this body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What bill is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The number of the bill only is given.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it lie on the table until we can find what the bill is.

MARY M. BRIGGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate adopted an order this morning requesting the House of Representatives to return the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs. The bill having been passed by the House of Representatives, signed by the Speaker, and returned to the Senate, the order requesting its return will be rescinded, if there be no objection, and further action will be taken upon the bill as may be indicated by the Committee on Pensions. The bill will lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. I was going to suggest that the bill lie on the table for the present until I see the party from Illinois interested, so that I can ascertain what the facts are in reference to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks, to enable the Senate to resume jurisdiction, a concurrent resolution should be passed directing the cancellation of the enrollment and of the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CULLOM. I so understand; but unless the facts seem to be very strong, I shall not ask the Senate, so far as I am concerned, to do anything with it.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 12, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, and 29, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "One clerk to disbursing officer, $1,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "One assistant botanist, $1,200;" and strike out, in line 13, page 2 of the bill, the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Of which $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be applied to the investigation of the disease in peach-trees known as yellows and remedies therefor;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: Strike out, in line 26, page 7 of the bill, the words "Joseph Neuman and associates" and insert in lieu thereof "Joseph Neumann;" strike out, in line 1, page 8 of the bill, the words "Joseph Neuman" and insert in lieu thereof "Joseph Neumann."

Strike out lines 14, 15, 16, and 17, on page 10 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Printing seed-pockets, labels, postal-cards, etc., labor, paper, ink, type, and other necessary material for printing, and for purchasing and repairing presses, $4,200; in all, $104,200;" and insert, after the word "thousand," in line 9, page 11 of the bill, the words "three hundred and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by the said amendment insert the following: "And of this sum an amount not exceeding $15,000 may be applied to the payment of expenses incurred during the fiscal year 1888;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$595,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the period (.) at the end of the amended paragraph and strike out the word "And" where it first occurs in said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof "and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendment numbered 30, the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
C. B. FARWELL,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. H. HATCH,
A. C. DAVIDSON,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator in charge explain the state of affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment numbered 1, as made by the Senate, was to strike out the provision for one assistant disbursing officer at $1,400. The Senate conferees receded from that with an amendment providing a clerk in place of an assistant disbursing officer.

The House increased the appropriation for compensation of the librarian from $1,400 to $1,800, that being the statutory compensation. The Senate amended by making the sum $1,600. The Senate conferees receded, leaving the compensation of the librarian exactly as fixed by law, but an increase of $400 beyond the amount heretofore received.

The salary of the superintendent of the folding-room was increased from $1,200 to $1,400 by the House. The Senate struck out the increase, and the Senate conferees yielded on an investigation which seemed to determine that the salary as proposed by the House was not too large.

The House inserted under the head of the "Botanical Division" an assistant botanist at $1,400. As there was already an assistant botanist in that division receiving a salary of $1,200 the Senate thought it wise to strike out the new one, so as to make an inquiry and ascertain whether this was to be simply a place provided for some special person, a new person to be carried into the Department at a larger salary than persons now in service there. In conference the order of things was changed in such a way that the assistant botanist now in the Department receives $1,400 and the new assistant botanist is to receive $1,200.

In the pomological division the Senate struck out the provision for an artist and for an assistant pomologist. The House conferees agreed to that amendment.

The Senate amended in the chemical division by increasing the salary of one assistant chemist from $1,600 to $1,800 and of another assistant chemist from $1,400 to $1,600, and the House conferees receded.

The House fixed the compensation of the chief of the seeds division at $2,000. The Senate reduced it to $1,800, and the Senate conferees yielded to the House upon that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that fixed by law?

Mr. PLUMB. It is fixed by law, I think. That is my recollection; but at all events, after a little more thorough investigation than we were able to give it while the bill was in the Committee on Appropriations, on account of the haste we were under to try and get the bill through before the 1st day of July, as much attention was not given to this matter as was given subsequently, and the conferees were satisfied that the compensation was not an unreasonable one, but that it was rather a more responsible office than we had supposed.

Under the head of the "Forestry Division" the House inserted "one assistant at $1,200; one clerk at $900;" which the Senate struck out, and the House recede.

Under the head of "Miscellaneous," sub-title "Botanical investigations and experiments," the Senate inserted "including the establishment and maintenance of experimental grass stations," and increased the appropriation to $25,000 in order to establish and maintain these grass stations. The House receded from that amendment with an amendment naming the sum of $20,000 in place of $25,000, making a net increase of $17,500 for this purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many grass stations are there now?

Mr. PLUMB. None.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is experimental?

Mr. PLUMB. The experiments have been carried on in a way, and they have demonstrated to the head of that division, and, I think, also to the judgment of a great many people who have observed the question, that grass stations can be established with profit, and while the Senate committee did not believe that the amount now named in the bill was enough to in any way insure a thoroughly successful result, at the same time they thought it was enough to make a start, and we should be better advised after the operations of a year as to what further would be necessary.

Under the "Section of vegetable pathology" the Senate inserted an amendment increasing the appropriation for "practical work of the investigation" from $5,000 to $15,000, and providing that $10,000 "might be applied to the investigation of the disease and its remedy in peach trees known as yellows," and in the conference that was agreed to, with a verbal amendment.

Under the clause in relation to the "pomological division" the Senate amended the bill by striking out—

For artists' materials and other apparatus necessary in the work of the division; for preparation of papers upon subjects of a pomological nature, and expenses incurred in making investigations for the same; and for colored illustrations of fruits to be used in the special publications of the division—and the House has agreed to this action.

The House inserted a provision directing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to allow credit to the present Commissioner of Agriculture for $1,800.16 for certain accounts disallowed by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, and the Senate inserted a similar provision in regard to the former Commissioner of Agriculture, only the sum was $20,807.80; and the House has agreed to it.

Under the "entomological division," and in that part of the appropriation bill providing for the collection and dissemination of information in regard to silk-culture, the Senate inserted a provision "and for expenses of stations in connection therewith," and increased the sum from $15,000 to $20,000; and the House recede.

I ought to state that in two portions of this report the conferees agreed to insert in the bill something which was not actually in controversy between the two Houses, and that I do for the purpose of asking unanimous consent of the Senate that the amendments which the conferees themselves agreed to may be agreed to by the Senate.

We found on investigation that it had been the practice heretofore, and a necessary practice, for the Department to print its own seed pockets and seed labels. For that purpose it has had a press for a number of years in the Department of Agriculture. It is not possible to have this work done in the Government Printing Office, because it must be done at a certain time of the year, and if it is done over there it is liable to be crowded out for the benefit of the current work of Congress or other work for the Departments. The Commissioner had estimated for an expenditure for this press, which became necessary if the printing is to be done at the Department as heretofore. The Senate conferees, on the information they had, felt obliged to insert the appropriation, and on investigation and after protracted conference with the House on the subject and some inquiry at the Department the conferees were satisfied that it was a necessary amendment, and it was agreed to and should be inserted, and the attention of both Houses specially called to it and unanimous consent asked.

Under the head of "salaries and expenses Bureau of Animal Industry" the House inserted a provision to the effect that $100,000 of the half million dollars appropriated for the extermination of pleuropneumonia might be immediately available. That provision was stricken out by the Senate because it became apparent that so much money could not be used prior to the 1st day of July even if the bill had passed at the time it was expected it would pass. The bill not yet having become a law of course no expenditure could have been made under this provision if it had been retained, but in the mean time the bureau has contracted a debt; that is, it has employed persons and purchased supplies to the amount of $15,000 in excess of the appropriation for last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In violation of law?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will make the question much more comprehensive if he will apply it generally; but the fact is that this expense, in common with other expenses of Departments of the Government, is represented by a contract made and which was necessary to be made, as I think, and it was made in anticipation of the insertion by the House of the appropriation of $100,000 to be immediately available. It was stated to us by the head of the bureau that on account of the progress the work had made in New York and in other places, it could not be cut off wholly without great damage.

In addition to that the head of the bureau stated that the exact result in the way of expenditure could not always be determined at the time the work was entered upon. It was sometimes overrun and sometimes underrun, and something had to be left to chance on that point. The Senate conferees agreed to insert in the place where the provision occurs which the Senate had stricken out, making $100,000 immediately available, these words:

> And of this amount not exceeding $15,000 may be applied to the payment of expenses incurred during the fiscal year 1888.

Under the head of "Division of Forestry" the House inserted a provision——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did the Commissioner of Agriculture direct this expenditure to be made?

Mr. PLUMB. The Commissioner of Agriculture did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Without authority of the President?

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose all he does is practically as the adjutant of the President of the United States. But it is fair to say that in matters of this kind, where the subjects of expenditure are variant and can not be fixed, and the appropriation is a lump sum, the liability to expend more than was at first contemplated is very great, and, to some extent, can not be prevented. The amount was not large enough to induce any special inquiry, although we had the tables showing the places where the money was expended, the number of persons employed, and the number of cattle purchased and killed, and so on, under the law.

While I do not know that the work is beyond reproach, while these expenditures are not out of the line that is common, and which I do not mean to say is wholly defensible except as to the matter of precedent, I anticipated long ago such an objection in the consideration of the deficiency bill. I believe myself that there has grown up a laxity which is discreditable and which ought to be in some way stopped, if it can be.

Under the head of "Division of Forestry" the House inserted a very comprehensive provision to this effect:

> For investigations into the structural differences of important timbers and the factors that influence their quality, their biology; miscellaneous reports; expense of experimental grounds; collection, purchase, and distribution of forest-tree seeds and seedlings in aid of forest culture; and for ascertaining the area, amount, and condition of the remaining white-pine supplies in the Northwestern States; and for working collection and apparatus, traveling and other expenses, $10,000.

The Senate struck that provision out and substituted the old provision to the effect that the money should be used to continue investigations and reports on the subject of forestry. The census of 1880 contains all that has been available in the way of knowledge in regard to the white-pine supply in the Northwestern States, and we shall have another census in a very short period of time, and the amount of money appropriated was totally inadequate to obtain the information called for, which could not probably be obtained before similar information will be had as the result of the census of 1890; and so the House agreed to our action.

The Senate inserted a provision appropriating $100,000 "to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to continue experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum cane, including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies." The House did not agree to that, and that is the only point of irreconcilable difference between the House and the Senate conferees.

Under the head of "Experimental Stations" the House inserted $15,000 to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the act of March 2, 1887, providing for the establishment of experimental stations in connection with the agricultural colleges. Section 3 is to the effect that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall furnish forms for the tabulation of results, and that he shall give to the agricultural experimental stations the benefit of suggestions as to their work. The House inserted $15,000 for that purpose. The Senate did not think so much money was necessary and limited the amount to $5,000, and added a provision requiring the Commissioner of Agriculture to compare, edit, and publish such of the results of the experiments made at these stations as appeared to him to be valuable. In the conference a compromise was reached whereby the sum was fixed at $10,000 instead of $5,000.

As I have said, the only difference that remains between the two Houses on this bill if the conference report should be agreed to, is the appropriation of $100,000 for continuing the experiments as to the manufacture of sugar from sorghum. In my belief that is worth as much, I was going to say, as all the remaining portions of the bill. Perhaps that would be too strong a statement, but I will say that the work heretofore carried on, although carried on extravagantly, improvidently, and with some unnecessary delay, has been of the greatest possible value. It would have warranted the expenditure of a million dollars in place of $150,000 that they spent if so much had been necessary for that purpose. Very great progress has been made, so great, in fact, that there are to-day erected and in process of erection four large sugar factories having a capacity among them of about 5,000,000 pounds of sugar, and it is confidently believed that the results of their work will still further establish the fact that from sorghum can in a very short period be produced all the sugar the people can consume, from this very common and very valuable plant, that is to say valuable in other directions, valuable as a forage plant as well as for sugar. There is much experimental work yet to be done. There is a large portion of what is now the refuse of cane known to contain quantities of sugar, no process for the extraction of which is yet available. The experiment of last year, while in its nature conclusive, still left some points to be determined, and there is much in the way of instruction to persons who are operating these factories if they are to be erected hereafter which ought to be done at once; and inasmuch as the Government has given the first stimulus to this industry the committee thought, as I believe the Senate thought, it advisable to continue it for this year at least.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this report is irregular in changing the text of a clause that had already been agreed upon by the two Houses. It has been stated by the chairman of our conference with great candor that the conferees have changed the text of the bill in points and in respects that both Houses had already agreed upon and where nothing was left open for action by the committees of conference. I merely make the point of order against the report.

Mr. PLUMB. It ought to be stated that according to an authority which is often appealed to by the Committee on Appropriations, which I will not here name, the conference committee had jurisdiction of the paragraph in which this appropriation occurs, although there had been no recorded difference between the two Houses upon the particular item under consideration. That authority has been recognized to the extent of doing, I think, substantially what has been done in this conference report without attention being called to it.

I want to say that for myself I disagree with the authority; and when it was done in this conference it was done with the distinct understanding that it was in violation of the proper rule to be observed in conference committees, and that the attention of both Houses would be called to it, in order that it might not go unnoticed and that unanimous consent might be invited to an agreement of the two Houses to what the conference had agreed upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad to hear what the Senator from Kansas says not only as to reporting it to this body but also his own opinion, for the rule is clear and nothing is more dangerous in legislation than—I say it without any imputation on the gentlemen who are appointed members of the committee—the great danger in the haste of legislation of allowing committees of conference on disagreeing votes of the two Houses to go to changing those parts of the bill where the Houses did not disagree, but did agree; and therefore, without a disposition to complain of what the committee wish to accomplish in this respect, I feel it a duty, as a matter of order and precedent, to make the point; and then if it be sustained afterwards the question of unanimous consent will come up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt upon the question of order, arising not under the rules of the Senate but under general parliamentary law, that committees of conference can not alter a part of the bill to which both Houses have agreed. So if the report shows that upon a proposition or amendment to which both Houses had agreed, and which therefore was not left open, the conferees added words, it would not be according to the general parliamentary practice. The Chair thinks, however, that it is for the Senate to decide whether they will or will not agree to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Chair would take the time to consider that point. I am going to withdraw the point of order, but I think it has been held——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will indulge the Chair one moment. The Chair will state his position in order that it may not be misunderstood.

The practice of the Senate has been to decide points of order in accordance with the desire of the majority. A proposition that at one time would be held out of order is at another time, by vote of the Senate, held to be in order, and while the Chair expresses this opinion and thinks the question is not an open one, it is the purpose of the Chair to submit the question to the Senate for its decision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair submits the question whether the report is in order. Then I do not need to go into any discussion with the Chair, because that is a right the Chair has and the Chair's views are clear and perfectly correct; but I wish to take the judgment of the Senate upon it as a precedent, and if the judgment of the Senate corresponds with the clear parliamentary law and the clear safety that we ought to guard in respect to these bills, I shall then, if I may, waive my point of order. I do not like to have this pass, now that it is called to our attention, as a mere vote of the Senate agreeing to this report, as if it were not a question of fundamental order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question submitted to the Senate is, Is the point of order made by the Senator from Vermont well taken?

Mr. CALL. I do not think this point of order has any merit. The committee of conference certainly have no power to alter the text of the bill agreed upon by the two Houses; but the committee of each House can make a recommendation to the House, not claiming any right on the part of the conference to take jurisdiction of the matter, but it can bring a matter to the attention of either House and ask unanimous consent for what is not a material change of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The answer to that is that it does appear distinctly on the face of the bill as engrossed and the amendments as engrossed that the two Houses agreed to the clause and upon the whole subject that the committee has changed, and I am only making the point of order now, because I care nothing about the particular instance, in order that the Journal of the Senate shall show that the Senate understands that it was contrary to order, and having decided it to be contrary to order, as I hope it may, and it must, of course, because there is no doubt about it, I shall then, as I say, withdraw any objection in this particular instance; but I do not wish instances of this kind to multiply into precedents which will always plague us.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont whether he believes it the right thing for the Senate to do after having decided by a formal vote that the point of order is well taken, to go on and legislate by sanctioning the action of the committee on conference in violation of order? Can we do it properly? Can he by withdrawing his point of order make that in order which the Senate has decided to be out of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a thing that the Senate in its practice for a hundred years has done a good many times each session. The point of order is raised and the President of the Senate either decides it himself or leaves it to the Senate, and sustains the point of order. Then the person who makes the point of order is appealed to for one reason or another to waive it, and he does waive it, and if nobody else renews it it goes on.

Mr. CALL. The point of order the Senator from Vermont makes in this case is not that the committee of conference have or have not the right to change the text of a bill where the two Houses have agreed, for they have not done that; but the point of order is that they have no right to report to the Houses and ask unanimous consent of the Houses to an immaterial change in the bill. That is the point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken. The committee of conference has made no report asking unanimous consent. It has only stated in its report, when you take the report and read the bill with it, that it has changed a part of the bill that both Houses had already agreed upon. Then the Senator making the report asked unanimous consent, stating with the candor which characterizes him that they had transgressed the rule, and therefore unanimous consent was necessary. I made the point of order in order to test the sense of the Senate, the first time it has been called to such a question for five or six years. It was then called to it, and the report was declined to be received, and the conferees left that part out in order that the Senate might not in the Journal appear to have recognized this irregularity, and then, as far as I am concerned, it will be waived.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the point of order raised by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] upon the report of the committee of conference, whether having changed an amendment that had been agreed to by both Houses the report of the committee is in order. Senators in the affirmative will say "ay," the negative "no." [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent now to waive the point of order and let it go for this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the point of order may be waived and that the question may be taken now upon agreeing to the report of the conference committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment, which is in disagreement between the two Houses, amendment No. 30, and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. FARWELL, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

SWAMP-LAND SELECTIONS.

Mr. CALL. I ask leave, out of order, to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior report to the Senate such information as he has showing improper and unlawful selections under the swamp and overflowed grant of 1850 and subsequent years; also a statement of the amount that will be necessary to pay the States indemnity for swamp and overflowed lands claimed to have been sold by the United States.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House relating to the enrollment of the legislative, etc., appropriation bill.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5932) providing for the holding of terms of United States courts in the district of Minnesota; asked for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, and Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, managers at the conference on its part.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, concurring in the fifth and non-concurring in the other amendments of the Senate to the bill and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill disagreed to by the House, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

Order of Business 1414, being the bill (H. R. 5870) to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape, was announced as first in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw that motion. It is important that the joint resolutions which we passed relating to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill should be signed by the presiding officers before we adjourn to-day, so that they may go to the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, then, that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I am told by the Clerk of the House that those two resolutions will be ready for the signature of the Presiding Officer within an hour. Perhaps it would be better to say 3 o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Say half past 2.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate take a recess until half past 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until half past 2 o'clock, at which hour it reassembled.

COURTS AT DULUTH, MINN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5932) providing for the holding of the terms of the United States courts in the district of Minnesota, and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the House bill and agree to the conference asked by that body.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the managers at the conference on the part of the Senate, and Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. PUGH were appointed

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BATE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Mrs. E. A. Brownlow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 9, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 5, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday was read and approved.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1580) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Street Railway Company;" which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PLUMB, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'DONNELL, for one week from to-day, on account of sickness in his family.

STATUE OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Mr. O NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by the Joint Committee on the Library, and also by the House Library Committee, to ask unanimous consent this morning to put on its passage the joint resolution (S. R. 96) accepting, as a gift from Mr. Stilson Hutchins, an Italian marble statue, of colossal size, of Benjamin Franklin.

I will say that it requires an act of Congress to enable the acceptance of this generous gift on the part of Mr. Hutchins, a liberal-minded and public-spirited citizen, who not only proposes to donate the statue, but at his own expense to have constructed a suitable base or pedestal on which to place it.

I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WEAVER. I presume this will not take up any considerable time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It will not take up any time.

I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that it requires an authorization on the part of Congress to accept this gift.

It is a very liberal donation, and I have no doubt will be a valuable addition to the statuary now adorning the city. I hope there will be no objection to passing the joint resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I withdraw the objection.

The report of the committee (by Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Library reports favorably Senate resolution No. 96 to accept from Mr. Stilson Hutchins his gift of the colossal statue of Benjamin Franklin, and recommends its passage by the House. This well-known citizen of Washington is entitled to the thanks of all lovers of art for his noble and costly contribution to the statuary already ornamenting so many prominent public locations in this the capital city of our country. His selection of the statue of Benjamin Franklin shows a refinement of taste and culture, and his gift commemorates in marble for all time to come the citizen who was distinguished in so many of the "walks of life." Visitors to Philadelphia go to look upon the plain marble slabs over the separate but adjoining graves in an ancient burial ground in that city, bearing upon each of them, respectively, the inscription "Benjamin Franklin," "Deborah Franklin," where have rested their remains since the burial of each of them; but in the early future in Washington the countless numbers of sight-seers will pause to look upon the statue of Benjamin Franklin, a most skillful work of a skilled and successful sculptor, and while impressed with his creation will in their hearts thank the generous donor, Mr. Stilson Hutchins, for his gift to his countrymen.

There being no further objection, the joint resolution was considered ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

It is as follows:

Whereas Stilson Hutchins has offered to donate to the United States a colossal statue of Benjamin Franklin in white Italian marble and erect a pedestal therefor of Massachusetts granite at his own expense, after plans which have been submitted to the Joint Committee on the Library: Therefore,

It is resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That authority is given to erect the statue, under the supervision and direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon such part of the streets or public spaces in the city of Washington, D. C., as the said commissioners may designate.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as managers on the part of the House at the conference on the bill (H. R. 5932) providing for the holding of the terms of the United States courts in the district of Minnesota, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. STEWART, and the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. HENDERSON, in lieu of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. COLLINS, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. GLOVER, both of whom are absent from the city and are unable to serve.

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

LOSS OF A HOUSE BILL.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged motion.

I send to the desk and ask to have read a resolution asking the Senate to furnish a copy of certain amendments to a House bill, and a resolution asking the Clerk to furnish the conference committee with the copy of a bill which has been lost.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House with a copy of the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 3300 as it passed the Senate; said bill (and Senate amendments) having been lost since its reception by this body.

Resolved, That the Clerk furnish the conference committee appointed on the bill H. R. 3300 with a copy of said bill as engrossed, the said bill having been lost.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the call of committees be dispensed with, and that gentlemen having reports to file may be permitted to hand them in at the desk.

Mr. MATSON. I shall object, Mr. Speaker, unless only favorable reports are submitted. The adverse reports are otherwise referred to the Calendar and simply cumber it.

Mr. RANDALL. But any one member can take an adverse report to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk would not, of course, take the responsibility of laying a bill adversely reported upon the table, nor would the Chair do so without consent of the House. But any member has a right to demand that an adverse report shall be placed upon the Calendar. If these reports are placed upon the Calendar they can be removed afterwards.

Mr. MATSON. If it is understood that only the favorable reports shall go to the Calendar I will not object.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not understood. That would place in the hands of the clerks absolutely the determination of the question.

Mr. MATSON. I have no objection to the reports going upon the Calendar if any member requests that course should be taken.

Mr. RANDALL. Let them all go on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk of course would not know what course to pursue or how to discriminate between reports that should go on the Calendar and those that should not go.

The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the motion to dispense with the morning hour requires a two-thirds vote?

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, and two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the morning hour was dispensed with.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HERBERT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10453) to authorize the appointment of an assistant secretary of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAND OFFICE FOLSOM, N. MEX.

Mr. JACKSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2040) to establish a land office at Folsom, in the Territory of New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GRADE OF COMMANDER IN THE NAVY.

Mr. ABBOTT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (S. 1226) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the adverse report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUNN. If these matters are to come in by unanimous consent I think it would facilitate things to allow members to present their reports from committees at the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has objected to filing reports at the desk.

WESLEY MONTGOMERY.

Mr. DORSEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3829) for the relief of Wesley Montgomery; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER NEAR CUMMINGS'S LANDING.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 10609, a bill (H. R. 10721) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cummings's Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 10609) was laid on the table.

QUARANTINE SERVICE.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2493) to perfect the quarantine service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

E. D. EASTON.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution to pay Edward D. Easton, as reporter, etc., out of the contingent fund of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN FLORIDA, LOUISIANA, AND MISSOURI.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10722) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri," and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House and bills of the Senate of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 184) to amend the joint resolution approved May 14, 1888, relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States;

A bill (H. R. 231) to increase the pension of Edmund Asworth;

A bill (H. R. 2641) granting a pension to Emily W. Ogden;

A bill (H. R. 3537) granting a pension to Cullen W. Green;

A bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of Jennie R. Rice;

A bill (H. R. 3772) granting a pension to Perry D. Martin;

A bill (H. R. 3836) granting a pension to Hiram Bateman;

A bill (H. R. 4762) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Howard;

A bill (H. R. 4788) granting an increase of pension to William Winans;

A bill (H. R. 5913) granting a pension to Thomas Shannon;

A bill (H. R. 6057) to increase the pension of Edward Healy;

A bill (H. R. 6273) for the relief of Hiram Chilson;

A bill (H. R. 6434) granting a pension to John F. G. Mittag;

A bill (H. R. 6603) granting a pension to the minor children of Levi M. Hunter, deceased;

A bill (S. 2674) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Nebraska City, Nebr., and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the hour be dispensed with.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it require unanimous consent to dispense with this hour?

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent. There is no provision in the rules for dispensing with the hour by a vote. The call rests with the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 3255.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be done, as it was understood that to-day was to be set apart for the consideration of the general forfeiture bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5932) providing for holding terms of the United States courts in the district of Minnesota; agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. PUGH.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, and insisted on its thirtieth amendment to said bill.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that so far as the Committee on Claims is concerned it is not particular about going on with this bill at this time; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] objects to giving unanimous consent to passing this hour over, so the committee has no other alternative. It must go on with the bill.

The SPEAKER. There may be unanimous consent given to pass over the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my colleague will allow the general forfeiture bill to come up.

Mr. STEELE. If my colleague will allow me to call up and pass a bill which will save $100,000 to the Government, I will cheerfully grant his request. There will be no debate on it whatever. It is a bill providing for the sale of the Omaha reservation of 80 acres and the purchase of 600 acres. The 80 acres will sell for enough to purchase all the other land and will save $100,000 to the Government.

Mr. CANNON. That is a very proper bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to call up and pass the bill, with the understanding that the hour will then be given up.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know if this committee shall be passed over we will not go to some other committee; and is not the hour to be consumed anyhow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated, unless the hour is dispensed with.

Mr. BLOUNT. I so understood; and therefore I do not see what my friend from Indiana is to make in the way of time.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 3255) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The hour begins at 20 minutes past 11. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] will please take the chair.

EXPENDITURES IN SUPPRESSING INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3255) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes.

Mr. KERR. I have some objections to the passage of that bill, which I wish to state at the proper time.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The proper time to state the objections is now. I ask that the bill be read for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be reported.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas under the joint resolution of Congress approved March 3, 1881, directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claim of the State of Florida against the United States for the suppression of Indian hostilities, between the years 1855 and 1860, the said Secretary of War did investigate said claim and ascertain the amount due to the said State to be $224,648.09, as returned to Congress in the letter of the Secretary of War, dated May 22, 1882, in Executive Document No. 203; and

Whereas there were certain items in said State claim which the Judge-Advocate of the United States Army deemed best to "be passed upon by the accounting officers of the Treasury under proper equitable rules, provided by legislation in that behalf;" and

Whereas there is now held by the Treasury of the United States, in trust for the Indian trust fund, certain bonds of the State of Florida aggregating the sum of $132,000; and

Whereas there has been credited upon the account of said bonds of the State of Florida certain moneys due said State under the act approved March 3, 1845, entitled "An act supplemental to the act for the admission of Florida and Iowa into the Union, and for other purposes;" and

Whereas certain other moneys are due said State under the act approved March 2, 1855, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers of swamp and overflowed lands:" Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the said State of Florida as found and reported in said letter of the Secretary of War, dated March 22, 1882, and under the acts above cited, and to pay to the said State such sum of money as he may find to be due the said State (under the aforesaid letter and acts, and also any further sum that may be found to be due the said State on any other account), and in making such settlement he shall retain the whole, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of said allowance or settlement and apply the same to the payment of the principal and interest, or either, of said bonds of the State of Florida, held as aforesaid, or to the reimbursement of the United States of moneys advanced by the United States on account of interest due on such bonds, and shall demand of said State, and allow to it, upon said claim or claims for the purpose of such settlement, the rate of interest stipulated in said bonds.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall allow said State to file such further evidence as the State may have; to establish the right of the State to demand of the United States the payment of the items of said claim disallowed or suspended by the Secretary of War in the said report of the Judge-Advocate of the United States Army, and to include in such evidence all other payments made by said State for services, and shall settle and adjust the claim of the State therefor, and shall pay such sum as may be ascertained to be due the State thereon; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That the balance remaining due of the direct-tax act of August 5, 1861, be held and treated as a proper set-off against the claims of the State of Florida, in the adjustment herein required, unless Congress shall otherwise provide by general law, releasing all claims for said direct tax, or for refunding all payments of such tax heretofore paid.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect immediately upon its passage.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] has said that he has some objections to this bill. I am willing now to yield the floor to him in order that he may state his objections, and I will ask the gentleman how much time he desires.

Mr. KERR. I think there are some other gentlemen on this side who also desire to present objections to the bill, and I have an amendment that I wish to propose.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Will fifteen minutes be sufficient for the gentleman? I am willing to yield him that time if it is satisfactory.

Mr. KERR. I would like to be recognized in my own right, because, as I have said, there are some other gentlemen on this side who desire to present objections.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Then I yield to my colleague [Mr. DOUGHERTY], who had the floor when the bill was last under consideration.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, when the last hour during which this bill was under consideration expired I was proceeding to make a plain statement of the facts in the case as found by the committee. This bill is somewhat different from most bills of its nature that come before this House. It is not a bill to settle any claim between an individual and the Government of the United States, but its purpose is to bring about a settlement between a State and this Government. Fortunately for the State of Florida, every question that can possibly be raised with reference to the passage of this bill is a matter of record. Connected with the whole subject there is not one single word of oral testimony. Most claims which come before the House of Representatives or before Congress for settlement have attached to them some little suspicion, but if the records of the State of Florida be true, if the records of the Government of the United States be records of facts, then there is no denial which can be successfully made anywhere that the Government owes the State of Florida this money. The only question which has ever been raised in opposition to the passage of this bill is the question of emergency, the question whether or not there existed a necessity for the use of the troops which were called out by the governor of the State of Florida.

As conclusive of the existence of that necessity, if gentlemen upon both sides of the House will read the report they will find that those troops were called out by the Secretary of War under the orders of the President of the United States. The decision of this question of emergency has been upon two occasions (which are cited in the report) submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court, by a unanimous opinion, has decided that the governor of the State, being on the ground, was the proper judge as to the emergency. It is fair to state to the House that this bill, though it passed the House at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress without a division, met with an adverse report in the Senate, solely upon the ground that the Senate committee took the view that the emergency did not exist. Now, it is a question which can be properly submitted to this House whether or not a Senate committee sitting here years after this emergency was said to have arisen is a better judge as to the necessity of the use of the troops than the governor who was on the ground at the time. The United States Government, by its properly constituted authorities, not only called out those troops, but it subsequently approved of their employment, and orders were sent to the commanding officer in the State of Florida to muster the troops into the service in order that they might be paid as the other United States troops with whom they served were paid. What action, therefore, could this Government take which would settle more conclusively than the action it did take settled the question of emergency? Congress in submitting this matter to the Secretary of War for a report did so in a carefully-worded resolution.

The Secretary of War followed out the terms of that resolution to the letter, and he reported that according to the records of his Department there was due to the State of Florida the sum of $224,000. Against that the United States Government holds $132,000 of the bonds of the State of Florida bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. The State has never defaulted upon that interest. She has stood ready to pay her debt, principal and interest, whenever the Government would settle with her the debt which its own authorities admit is due her. That is the whole case. This question of emergency is merely a quibble. The United States garrison, or a portion of it, in the State of Florida had been massacred by the Indians, and yet this Senate committee say in their report that there was no emergency! The settlers had been driven from their homes; the United States governmental authorities admitted that they had not the troops in the field with which to keep the Indians in check, and in view of these circumstances the governor issued his call. The State of Florida is not before this House in the attitude of a beggar. She is not here supplicating anything at the hands of this Government. All that she does ask is that the Government of the United States now, after this lapse of time, shall deal with her in the same manner in which, by virtue of its position, it has forced her to deal with it. Gentlemen upon the other side during the last Congress examined minutely into this bill, and one distinguished member, who has occupied a high position in his State, in this House, and in this country, and who is admittedly a good lawyer, said, after a careful examination of the matter, that it was a disgrace that the Government had not sooner liquidated this debt. It seems to me useless, Mr. Chairman, to take up further time in talking about this measure. Like my colleague [Mr. DAVIDSON] I am willing to yield to gentlemen who object to the bill, in order that they may state their objections. It is true that I may look at this bill from the standpoint of partiality. I hope I do not. Most assuredly as a member of the Committee on Claims I examined it as impartially as I would any other claim against this Government, and upon making that examination I, too, like the distinguished gentleman to whom I have just alluded, was astonished that the Government should have been so tardy in dealing out justice to one of the members of this Union.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I now yield five minutes, or so much time as he may find necessary, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE].

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, it was my fortune at one time to examine into the merits of this claim. Whilst a member of another branch of the legislative department of the Government it became my duty to do so. Without now undertaking to recall the details of the case with any method or exactness, I express the impression I then formed that the Government of the United States had recognized its liability in various ways to the State of Florida for the amount, and even more than the amount, of the claim mentioned in this bill. According to my recollection, the whole matter in controversy turned upon this question—whether the governor of the State of Florida acted in the discharge of his legitimate official duty in calling into service the militia or volunteer forces of the State for the defense and protection of the property and lives of its citizens. As I remember, the facts and circumstances existing at that time made it the imperative duty of that executive officer to thus call into service the militia; and he having done so in pursuance of his official authority and in the exercise of a sound discretion, and the authorities of the United States having recognized the performance of that duty, the liability of the United States Government is complete.

Shall it be said that the governor of a State or Territory of this Union, in case of imminent danger of an attack by hostile foes, must deliberate and go through all the formal steps which might be proper in reference to a duty devolving upon him in time of peace? Shall he sacrifice the property and lives of those whose protection is committed to his hands, in order that he may wait to see every matter of detail executed in exact form? Mr. Chairman, I conceive that such would not be a proper and patriotic exercise of official duty. When an officer charged with these high functions undertakes to perform his duty in the exercise of a sound and patriotic discretion, and the circumstances in all their force are recognized by the authorities of the General Government, no clearer legal liability, in my view, can be created on the part of that Government. These, Mr. Chairman, are the impressions which I formed in the examination of the merits of this claim; and hence I am now, as I was then, in favor of its payment.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Mr. Chairman, this bill is not a stranger to gentlemen here who were members of this House in the Forty-ninth Congress. A bill exactly similar in its provisions to this passed the House in that Congress, but was lost in the Senate. Florida is here again asking of Congress the payment of this claim, which is justly due her for expenses incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the years 1855, 1856, and 1857. There was at that time an outbreak of Indians in that State. The United States troops were not sufficient in number to suppress that outbreak. It was necessary to call into service the Florida troops. This was done with the approval of the Secretary of War and the President of the United States. The service was rendered by the State troops. The hostilities were suppressed. The State paid her troops. But the United States Government has never yet settled with the State.

There can be no question about the liability. Every member of this House knows that it is the duty of the United States, under the Constitution, to protect the States from invasion. Here was an Indian invasion. The expenses of repelling that invasion have been, I repeat, paid by the State, which now calls upon Congress for reimbursement.

There are numerous precedents for this bill. Many States have been paid under similar circumstances. Not long since, as the House will remember, a million dollars, or nearly that amount, was appropriated to reimburse the State of Texas for expenses incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities. Shall we be so unjust toward the State I have the honor in part to represent as to refuse similar redress to her?

Gentlemen now here who were members of the last House have approved this bill, which was then passed and sent to the Senate. We present the same bill here to-day. I do not wish to consume time, for we have but an hour in which to dispose of this measure, and I am particularly anxious that we shall reach a vote. This claim of the State of Florida has been investigated by the War Department and a report made thereon. That investigation was made under a joint resolution of Congress, approved March 3, 1881, providing—

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, ascertain, and report to Congress, as soon as practicable, the amount of the claims of the State of Florida for expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities in that State between the 1st day of December, 1855, and the 1st day of January, 1860. In making such investigation the said Secretary is directed to receive and consider such testimony as he may deem necessary or proper for or against claims, including the muster-rolls of the State troops, and such other official data as may be on file in the War Department.

In accordance with that resolution, the Secretary of War made an investigation, and has long since reported that there was due to the State at least $224,648.09. One of the Departments of the Government having thus investigated this claim and made a favorable report upon it, and the House having heretofore passed the bill, I deem it unnecessary to consume any more time than may be required to read the conclusions reached by the House committee, as forcibly stated in their report:

1. That the services were rendered by the troops of the State of Florida in connection with the Army of the United States.
2. These services were recognized and approved by the President and Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War issued orders that the troops be mustered in and out of the service of the United States, for the purpose of paying for such service in the usual and regular way.
3. That before the orders for mustering in and out of service reached Florida the State troops had been disbanded, and they could not be actually mustered, and the officers of the Army decided that there could not be a constructive muster, which was right and proper, and which brought the claim to Congress.
4. The report of the Secretary of War excludes all claims and charges except those usually allowed to the regular Army under similar circumstances.
5. The amendments recommended continue to shut out these claims and claims heretofore allowed or disallowed under other appropriations.
6. The law has been decided to be that where a State pays interest on disbursements for the United States, that in allowing the claim interest shall be allowed.

And just there I say the books are full of cases where Congress has paid interest, and particularly where the State had not the money in its treasury and had to borrow it, as was the case with the State of Florida, which had to borrow $132,000 from the Indian trust funds, on which it has been paying 7 per cent. interest. We ask that amount be set off against the State of Florida, and that Congress shall pay the balance.

Mr. Chairman, this is a just claim, and I hope this House will agree to pass it. I hope, too, my friends on the other side will not consume the entire hour if they can state their objections and allow us to have action within that time.

Mr. RYAN. What is the amount of the claim on the part of the State of Florida?

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Between $200,000 and $300,000.

Mr. COBB. All told?

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. All told.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that the last section ought to be struck out. It is entirely unnecessary. It provides that this act shall take effect from its passage. That will be the effect at any rate.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Yes, sir; I do not know why it was put in.

Mr. BUCKALEW. With the gentleman's permission, I will move to strike out that section.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The chairman of the committee is in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. KERR obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Have I the right to this hour? I do not wish to take up the whole hour. Have I the right to the hour, and can I yield the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor for this hour.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Then I will reserve my hour.

Mr. KERR. There are others who are opposed to this bill that wish to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. KERR. When this bill was being considered, and was reported from the committee, I was unavoidably absent, or I should then have asked consent to file a minority report. The bill is very peculiar in its provisions. It seems the Government of the United States loaned the State of Florida certain sums of money, and it has never yet been paid by the State of Florida. The claim against Florida amounts to $92,000, with interest on that sum until the present day.

In 1856 the State of Florida called out certain militia to suppress some Indian hostilities, but the troops were never needed and were never actually mustered into the service of the United States.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KERR. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa he is inaccurate in his statement. If he will read the report of the committee of which he was a member he will find they were employed and served with the United States troops.

Mr. KERR. I will say the gentleman is more familiar with the facts than I am in this case. I was not present in the committee when the case was considered. However that may be, the gentleman will not dispute the proposition that they were never mustered into the service of the United States, and under the law at that time the Government was under no legal obligation to pay for the services of these troops. The claim, however, has been submitted to a commission which was appointed to investigate it, and they reported the claim of Florida for services amounts to $224,684. The services were performed in 1855, 1856, and 1857. They claim the State of Florida had to borrow the sum of $232,000.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. No, $132,000.

Mr. KERR. That is correct. They have ever since been paying interest on that money at 7 per cent. They ask the Government of the United States to allow them upon this $132,000 interest at 7 per cent. from the year 1856.

What I wish to say is this, that in no claim I know of has the Government of the United States allowed the States interest on expenditures they made to assist in the execution of the United States laws and to protect the integrity of the United States territory. I know in the case of the State of Iowa we still have a claim pending in this Congress for interest we actually paid in Iowa on money borrowed for the purpose of aiding in the equipment of United States troops.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Do you think the Government should pay that claim of the State of Iowa?

Mr. KERR. I think whenever the Government of the United States adopts a certain policy it ought to be made applicable to all the States, and whenever a general rule is adopted which will be applicable to all the States and will allow to every one the same remedy provided here for the State of Florida, I am willing to act upon it.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that the Government of the United States has uniformly paid interest where States have borrowed money on which they paid interest. I cite you here a dozen acts of Congress.

Mr. KERR. In the State of Iowa it has not been the case.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. It has not been determined; but there is pending a bill to settle it.

Mr. KERR. There are bills by a number of States making the same claim, but I think before we pay this claim we ought to settle upon some general law applicable to all the States.

I do not think the Government of the United States ought to be made to suffer for the want of credit on the part of a State. I say a State has not the right to depreciate its own credit in the face of the world by paying exorbitant interest for a loan which it has negotiated and then ask the Government of the United States to pay that high interest rendered necessary by the State's want of credit.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The gentleman must bear in mind that this indebtedness was incurred long before the war, and I hope that the gentleman will not reflect upon the State that I have the honor to represent in part in this House.

Mr. KERR. I thank the gentleman from Florida for the suggestion. That is just what I want to call the attention of the House to. The Government of the United States does not pay 7 per cent. upon its own indebtedness. This bill, however, provides that 7 per cent. shall be computed on the indebtedness from 1856, that is, upon the balance remaining due. Now, I say that this is neither just nor fair, if the State of Florida had no right to make the Government of the United States pay such a large rate of interest; and if the State had credit and had borrowed the money at a proper rate of interest the indebtedness would have been much less.

I repeat, the Government of the United States ought not to pay 7 per cent. interest to the State of Florida, when it has been borrowing money at 4 per cent. Why the Government should pay this amount to the State, an amount of interest which has been accumulating, and will with the principal reach two or three hundred thousand dollars or more by this time, is not clear to me.

The bill, although it appears to bear upon its face only the sum of $92,000, yet considering the method of computation herein provided, will much exceed that sum, and probably reach $300,000.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Do you mean in addition to the amount provided by the bill?

Mr. KERR. No, sir; but by computing the interest in the method here provided and attaching that to the principal, you will make a sum in the neighborhood of $400,000, I take it.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The gentleman is entirely mistaken according to the method of calculation that I have followed.

Mr. KERR. Well, I can not say that I have made a very careful examination, but in a general way have computed it, and I know something about arithmetic. I know that 7 per cent. upon $92,000 computed for a period of thirty years will amount to a very considerable sum of money, in fact it will about double the principal twice over.

I have stated that I did not think the Government of the United States ought to be required or ought to be expected to pay to the State of Florida as large an indebtedness as this on interest account, by reason of a failure on the part of the State to borrow money and pay the debt at a lower rate. While it may not be wrong to pay interest, an unsettled interest claim should not be allowed to run against the Government only for a few years.

But besides that, the bill itself calls attention particularly to the remainder of the direct tax due by the State of Florida, which is to be used as an offset against this claim.

Now, in regard to this bill I wish to say this: That we have on the part of the Northern States called attention to claims which they have against the Government for moneys advanced by them in arming and equipping troops. We have large claims in almost all of the Northern States, amounting in the aggregate to something like $17,000,000, perhaps more; and it was proposed to be refunded to them in a bill which was pending before this House on an occasion which gentlemen will not soon forget, because by obstructive tactics on the part of our friends on the other side its consideration was prevented.

These claims ought to have been paid, and I do not know of any other method by which we can get an opportunity to induce gentlemen on that side of the House to do the fair thing in regard to these matters but to present our claims and say that when the settlement is made with these other States it shall be made all around. We insist that equal justice shall be done to the Northern States as to these Southern States. We on this side have not resorted to obstructive tactics to prevent the passage of any of these bills. That has been the peculiar privilege of men on the other side. I know when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] some time ago argued that a bill for the reimbursement of the State of Texas should be referred to the committee and be properly considered, with a view to investigating the expenditure, it was rushed through the House before it could be considered as such a bill ought to be considered. It was rushed through with the greatest haste, and I think we understand now better than we did then the reasons for that haste, because if that bill had not passed at that time perhaps the State of Texas and the Representatives of the State of Texas might have had additional reasons for not resorting to obstructive tactics to prevent the direct-tax bill from being considered. If Florida is to be allowed 1, or 2, or 3, or 4 per cent. interest, or any interest at all, upon sums expended upon an adjudicated claim alleged to be justly due by a disbursing officer of the Government, then the same principle ought to apply equally and at the same time in regard to the other States which have expended similar sums for similar purposes.

But, sir, there is another thing I wish to say in this connection. The Government of the United States should scrutinize with more care the bills contracted on the part of these States and presented by them for the suppression of Indian hostilities or for resisting invasion. I do not know why Texas spent millions of dollars to resist Indian raids, or why Florida should have expended $132,000 in 1856 for resisting a small band of outlaws which is generally understood to have amounted to only twenty or thirty men.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman had been familiar with the condition of affairs in Texas during the time that this expenditure was made, he would not have found it necessary to submit such an inquiry.

Mr. KERR. Well, perhaps the gentleman is right; but I repeat it is a matter that ought to be more carefully scrutinized, and if a few men engaged in an enterprise in a swamp in some of the Southern States can create a condition of apprehension in the minds of the people that will involve the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars, then I think it becomes a matter into which the Government of the United States, if it is finally to pay the debt, ought to have a sufficient interest to inquire whether there was any reason for the scare or not.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Let me remind the gentleman that they were called out by the approval of the President of the United States and the Secretary of War.

Mr. KERR. The troops of the State were not called out by the Secretary of War.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KERR. I will yield to the gentleman for a minute for a statement.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Less than a minute.

Mr. KERR. Very well.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The gentleman states—I can not quote him exactly—something about some to-do by persons in the swamps in Florida. I will say to the gentleman again what I said in the few remarks I made, that the emergency which, in the opinion of the governor, called for the use of these troops was the massacre of a portion of the garrison of the United States Army there; the massacre of troops of the United States Government.

Mr. KERR. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. Has the gentleman from Iowa any right to further time? I reserved my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to his time; but the gentleman from Iowa having taken the floor is entitled to an hour under the rule.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Before commencing the debate I asked whether or not I was entitled to an hour and the Chair decided that I was. I yielded, reserving the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is correct in stating that the Chair said he was entitled to an hour; but the gentleman from Florida yielded the floor to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I reserved the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor for an hour under the rule. He now yields to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I did not understand the ruling of the Chair to be that way.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, there are certain general features of this bill that I do not expect to discuss, as my attention has only recently been called to it. It contains a number of provisions that I consider very objectionable, and on some points I desire to be heard. I do not consider it a question of abstract right, but at most a question of equity that the General Government should settle with this State for moneys it voluntarily expended without authority. So far as the claim expressly enumerated in the title is concerned it may be that the United States ought to settle with Florida. But it is a principle well recognized that those who invoke the equity powers of a court or of a government ought to come with clean hands ready to do equity. I regret very much that the representatives of the State of Florida on this floor—the advocates of this bill—have within the present term of Congress joined with a few others, and by dilatory motions, and by what is called filibustering, obstructed legislation in this House and prevented the consideration and passage of a general law for the settlement and adjustment of claims between the Government of the United States and the different States. I refer, as the gentlemen well know, to the dead-lock on the direct-tax bill. And it comes now in bad grace for them to ask a special act in their favor. Upon its merits, Mr. Chairman, the State of Florida in its claim for suppressing Indian hostilities, as alleged in this bill, had no real question of right. There was no authority to call out the troops for the suppression of this insurrection or disturbance, no matter how necessary or reasonable it may have been to call them out. But the policy of the Government is to deal equitably and fairly with the several States in such matters, and I raise no question upon that point. But I do complain that the State of Florida, by its representatives here, if I do not charge them wrongfully, this session have taken part in obstructive measures to prevent legislation for the settlement of accounts between the Government of the United States and the different States; that it is largely their fault that we do not now have, so far as this House is concerned, a general law covering such cases. This general law would have done justice to many of the States.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Does he not know this bill provides for the settlement of the matter? Florida is so anxious to have a settlement that it is provided in this bill the direct tax shall be paid out of the amount due the State.

Mr. JACKSON. Perhaps that is true so far as Florida is concerned; although I must say that the wording of the bill on that point is so indefinite that it can not be said to be certain. But, Mr. Chairman, that does not relieve the gentleman of the charge of having been a party here to proceedings to prevent the Government from obtaining just settlement with a large number of States. He, himself, by obstructive measures—if he took part in the opposition I have referred to, and I am assuming he did—is responsible for this state of affairs.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. That was not a settlement. There was no claim.

Mr. JACKSON. That does not answer my question nor my point. The gentleman has not been acting in such a way as to entitle him to equity here. His State, with others, by a general law, might have had a settlement with the Government, but the gentleman did not want it. The reason is apparent. If all matters were taken into account his State, or the people in it subject to the direct tax, would have been found indebted to the General Government. Still more, many of the Northern States would have been entitled to have money refunded to them by the General Government—moneys justly due them, moneys advanced the Government to enable it to suppress rebellion. Until Congress is ready by general law to settle fairly with loyal States, I think other States have no good claim for special legislation in their favor.

But, Mr. Chairman, I would like to pass by that subject and go to the objections I have to the bill itself. This legislation is bad legislation, and the bill is, in my judgment, a very objectionable one. I want to call the attention of the House to some of the provisions of this bill, for I think I can show that it is loosely framed, and that instead of being, as it apparently purports on its face, an appropriation to cover $224,000 of audited claims, it is a bill under which millions may be, and, in my judgment, should it become law, probably will be, taken out of the Treasury. It is worded in such a way as to cover a great many things besides the claim referred to in its title. I will call attention to a few of them.

First. It purports at one place to authorize an appropriation to be made based upon the theory that the Secretary of War and other officials of the Government have investigated the claims of Florida and the expense incurred by that State in calling out these troops. And the impression is given that this amount alone is appropriated and to be disbursed, being a fixed amount of $224,648. But I turn to the second section and I find—

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall allow said State to file such further evidence as the State may have to establish the right of the State to demand of the United States the payment of the items of said claim, disallowed or suspended, by the Secretary of War.

That is, having had an investigation of these claims to the amount of $224,000, they want that amount paid with interest, as I understand it, and then they are to have a second trial to prove other and additional amounts.

They want further to have the power of a court given to the Secretary of the Treasury to hear testimony and to allow and settle without appeal these other claims. Who knows or can estimate to what size these claims may be swelled? But I take it that these additional claims growing out of the Indian insurrection is only a small part of the large amount of money which may be taken out of the Treasury of the United States under this bill. On reading the preamble of the bill I find, besides the Indian insurrection claim named in the title, that there are sundry acts recited as a foundation for other claims under the bill. One of these reads in this way:

Whereas certain other moneys are due said State under the act approved March 2, 1855, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers of swamp and overflowed lands," etc.

That is one of the acts that the Secretary of the Treasury is allowed to inquire about. I will not now enter at length into the discussion of the question of the payment by the Government under these swamp-land-grant acts. I do say that if there ever shall be a settlement of those claims, which is perhaps doubtful, it should be made by a general bill. So far as I am concerned I am opposed to any payments under the swamp-grant acts. Great injustice has already been done the General Government by grants of good lands under the claim of being swamp and overflowed lands, and the payment of indemnity is unjust and uncalled for. The amount of these claims is indefinite and almost unlimited.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I can save him all that part of his speech. The committee recommend an amendment striking out, in lines 10 and 11 of the bill, the words "and also any further sum that may be found to be due the said State on any other account." Therefore, the gentleman will see that the part of the bill which he is criticising is all done away with.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. That amendment does not remove my objection. That is a striking out that is more likely to mislead the casual reader than to effect any substantial object.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I am not a member of the Committee on Claims, but I have no idea that that committee, which is composed of respectable gentlemen, would come in here with any measure calculated to deceive the House, and I am told that the purpose of that amendment was to do away with the objection which the gentleman urges.

Mr. JACKSON. I have no intention of charging the committee with any purpose of deception, nor does it make any difference in the effect of the bill what the purpose of the committee was in striking out these words. The bill is to be judged as it stands.

I am free to say that the Committee on Claims have not made any attempt to deceive the House. On the contrary, they have given us due notice, by the very wording of this bill, that it covers a large number of subjects. That it is capable of great expansion, and is a most dangerous piece of legislation. All I ask is that members read the bill as it is recommended by the committee. We are easily deceived if we let the bill pass upon any other theory than that it covers very much more than the $224,648. If the House does not mean it to cover more this measure should be defeated.

The words to which the gentleman has called attention, and which the committee propose to strike out, are mere surplusage. Before those words in the bill there are words sufficient to carry claims under every act recited in the preamble to the bill. The first section of the bill reads this way:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the said State of Florida as found and reported in said letter of the Secretary of War, dated March 22, 1882, and under the acts above cited, and to pay to the said State such sum of money as he may find to be due the said State (under the aforesaid letter and acts).

The words which the gentleman says are to be stricken out do not lessen the scope of the provisions of the bill at all. The bill authorizes the payment of claims "under the acts above cited," and "the acts above cited" are "An act for the relief of purchasers of swamp and overflowed lands," and "An act supplemental to the act for the admission of Florida and Iowa into the Union, and for other purposes."

These are in addition to the claim for expenses in suppressing the Indian insurrection.

There is no question in my mind of the scope of the bill, and I do not see how there can be any question in the mind of any one who reads it attentively.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. What section is the gentleman reading?

Mr. JACKSON. I have been reading the first section in connection with the preamble. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied ten minutes.

Mr. JACKSON. I will ask the Chair to stop me when I shall have occupied three minutes more, as I desire to reserve two minutes. I see that I shall not have time to call attention to all the faulty provisions of this bill so I hasten to conclude, and in conclusion I call attention to lines 20, 21, and 22 of the second section, which contain a most extraordinary provision.

I have never yet heard of an equitable and just settlement of any claim between parties but what it was understood that all payments that had been made upon the claim or subject-matter should be taken into consideration in the settlement.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, how much time have we occupied on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-nine minutes.

Mr. KERR. Then I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. I thank the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] for his kindness in giving me additional time. To resume, then, I call attention to lines 20, 21, and 22 of section 2 of this bill, which provide that "no portion of any claim heretofore paid said State under any appropriation by Congress shall be considered in said settlement." Now, why should that provision be made? If this is to be an equitable settlement which is to do justice between the Government and the State of Florida, why should not appropriations heretofore made to the State upon the very matters under consideration be considered in the settlement?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I will answer the question of the gentleman. It is because the purpose of this act was to regard every settlement that had been made with the State of Florida under any former act final, not to be reopened or considered in making this settlement.

Mr. JACKSON. But that is a very inequitable way of making a settlement. Everything is to be final as against the Government; but everything is to be entirely open in favor of the State. Quite likely I may suppose that heretofore Congress has made appropriations that were then supposed to be in full of some if not all of these claims. I am certainly justified in calling this a most extraordinary bill.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Not at all.

Mr. JACKSON. I do not know what settlements have been made nor what appropriations may be referred to. But this bill at least opens the door for injustice to the Government. That is why I object to this legislation. I object to it because it appears to me to be entirely one-sided, even if you concede there may be justice in the bill for expenses for suppressing the Indian insurrection.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. JACKSON. I assure the gentleman that I dislike very much to have to oppose this legislation, because I know how much the Representatives of the State of Florida feel interested in it.

I have no doubt that the transfer of money from the national Treasury to that of Florida would be popular in that State. It is almost a thankless job on my part to oppose this bill. Nothing but a clear sense of duty would induce me to do it.

I know very well how glad the gentleman representing that State would feel to have this bill pass, and if the payment proposed had been limited to something like a quarter of a million dollars for the claim named in the title, possibly with a favorable report from the Committee on Claims I would have been willing, so far as I am concerned, to have appropriated that much for the sake of the era of peace, good will, and fraternity. But I do not wish to be understood as agreeing even to that. To the bill as it stands I am entirely opposed.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. As the time allowed for the consideration of this bill has nearly expired, and of course I understand the object of the gentleman, I want to ask him in the utmost kindness one question, which I hope he will answer fairly. Would he not probably have supported this bill if we had not opposed the bill for refunding the direct tax?

Mr. JACKSON. I do not think I would. I will say this, however, to my friend from Florida [Mr. DAVIDSON], that, in my opinion, the country would have felt that you had a much better claim for asking the passage of a private or special bill like this if you had shown a willingness to pass a general law to have all matters settled fairly between the General Government and the different States. I am opposed to this bill on its merits.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman from Florida will allow me to say that I am opposed to the principle of this bill, and would have opposed its passage in any event. I do not believe that the Government of the United States ought to pay interest on an unsettled account which has been running for thirty years. It ought never to allow an account to run at interest for more than a few years—four or five at the outside.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The gentleman will allow me to ask him whether he is not a member of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KERR. I am.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Did the gentleman present any minority report against this bill?

Mr. KERR. I was not present, as I presume the gentleman knows, when the bill was reported. I made that explanation in the opening of my remarks.

Mr. JACKSON. To sum up my objections to this bill: It proposes payment to an indefinite amount, about which we can now make only the wildest guess. It proposes the settlement of claims of different sorts, some of which have received no discussion, and, so far as I can find in the report of the committee, no consideration. The amount to be paid must necessarily be large.

Those arising under the swamp-land act and some others, I am utterly opposed to paying under any circumstances. I am not satisfied that there is justice in any item covered by it. This bill allows these whole matters to be opened up, large sums to be passed on by officers of the Government without trial in the courts and without appeal. It is dangerous legislation, and in my judgment the bill ought not under any consideration whatever to pass.

I reserve the remainder of my twenty-five minutes. The Chair will recollect that I had ten minutes additional. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Only three minutes of the hour remain for the discussion of this measure.

Mr. KERR. I wish to occupy the three minutes of the hour remaining by saying in regard to this question of interest, that while a number of cases are cited in which interest has been allowed, the authorities have not been brought to our attention. I understand it is a settled policy of this Government not to allow interest on claims; and such allowances have very rarely been made. In respect to claims made by other States for money advanced by them in equipping United States troops during the war, we have never been allowed anything more than the bare sum of money paid out, without any interest. There are now pending on the part of a number of States claims for interest which they actually paid and which has not been refunded to them; and the interest in those cases runs over only a few years, and they only ask the interest they actually paid. By the phraseology of this bill, we are required to pay interest for over thirty years on an unsettled balance in favor of the State of Florida, and this interest is at a high rate—7 per cent. I say there is no precedent for anything of this kind in the whole history of our Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees has expired, and the Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the rule, will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3255) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled the joint resolution (H. Res. 184) to amend the joint resolution approved May 14, 1888, relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States; when the Speaker signed the same.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call up for present consideration Senate bill 1430, with the amendments of the Committee on Public Lands thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes.

Mr. WEAVER. I share the anxiety of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. HOLMAN] that this bill shall pass promptly, if it is what I understand it to be. I would like him to designate some time within which the debate on the question shall close and the House come to a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] that it is best to postpone fixing a limitation upon debate until certain amendments have been read. I ask that the bill itself be read with the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well. I understand, then, the gentleman from Indiana will endeavor to secure a proper limitation of time?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to have read an amendment which I propose to offer?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will withhold that for the present.

The SPEAKER. The bill must be read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby forfeited to the United States, and the United States hereby resumes the title thereto, all lands heretofore granted to any State or to any corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not now completed and in operation, for the construction or benefit of which lands have heretofore been granted; and all such lands are declared to be a part of the public domain: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as forfeiting the right of way or depot grounds of any railroad company heretofore granted: And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting the rights granted to purchasers or settlers by "An act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1887, or as repealing, altering, or amending said act, nor as in any manner affecting any cause of action existing in favor of any purchaser against his grantor for breach of any covenants of title: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to except from forfeiture that portion of the grant made by "An act making a grant of alternate sections of the public lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1856, or acts amendatory thereof, conferred by the State of Michigan on the Marquette and Ontonagon Railroad Company, lying west of L'Anse, in said State.

SEC. 2. That in all cases where persons are in possession of any of the lands affected by any such grant and hereby resumed by and restored to the United States under deed, written contract with, or license from, the State or corporation to which such grant was made, or its assignees, executed in good faith prior to January 1, 1886, they shall be entitled to purchase the same from the United States, in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to any one such person, at the rate of $2.50 per acre, at any time within two years from the passage of this act, and on making requsite proofs and payment to receive patents therefor: Provided, That in all cases where parties, persons, or corporations, with the permission of such State or corporation, or its assignees, are in the possession of, and have made improvements upon any of the lands hereby resumed and restored and are not entitled to enter the same under the provisions of this act, such parties, persons, or corporations shall have six months in which to remove any growing crop, and within which time they shall also be entitled to remove all buildings and other movable improvements from said lands: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any lands situate in the State of Iowa, on which any person, in good faith, has made, or asserted the right to make, a pre-emption or homestead settlement.

SEC. 3. That if it shall be found that any lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and so resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain lie north of the line known as the "Harrison line," being a line drawn from Wallula, Wash. Ter., easterly to the southeast corner of the northeast one-fourth of the southeast quarter of section 27, in township 7 north, of range 37 east of the Willamette meridian; all persons who had acquired in good faith the title of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to any portion of said lands prior to July 1, 1885, or who at said date were in possession of any portion of said lands or had improved the same, claiming the same under written contract with said company, executed in good faith, or their heirs or assigns, as the case may be, shall be entitled to purchase the lands so acquired, possessed, or improved, from the United States, at any time prior to the expiration of one year after it shall be finally determined that such lands are restored to the public domain by the provisions of this act, at the rate of $2.50 per acre, and to receive patents therefor upon proof before the proper land office of the fact of such acquistion, possession, or improvement, and payment therefor, without limitation as to quantity: Provided, That the rights of way and riparian rights heretofore attempted to be conveyed to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Trust Company of New York, by deed of conveyance dated August 8, 1886, and which are described as follows: A strip of land 50 feet in width, being 25 feet on each side of the center line of a water-pipe line, as the same is staked out and located, or as it shall be hereafter finally located according to the provisions of an act of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon approved November 25, 1885, providing for the means to supply the city of Portland with an abundance of good, pure, and wholesome water over and across the following-described tracts of land: Sections 19 and 31, in township 1 south, of range 6 east; sections 25, 31, 33, and 35, in township 1 south, of range 5 east; sections 3 and 5, in township 2 south, of range 5 east; section 1, in township 2 south, of range 4 east; sections 23, 25, and 35, in township 1 south, of range 4 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, forfeited by this act, are hereby granted and confirmed unto the said city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, its successors and assigns forever, with the right to enter on the hereinbefore-described strip of land, over and across the above-described sections, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and repairing a water-pipe line as aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them, as recited in the first section, forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant, or as forfeiting any lands that have been heretofore earned by the construction of any portion of a railroad under any act of Congress making a grant of public lands: Provided, That this act shall not be constructed to prejudice any right of the Portage Lake Canal Company, or the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company, or any person claiming under them, to apply hereafter to the courts or to Congress for any legal or equitable relief to which they may be now entitled, nor to prejudice any right of forfeiture or recovery of the United States in respect of any of the lands claimed by said companies, nor to the prejudice of the rtght of any person claiming adversely to said companies or their assigns, under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 5. That this act shall not take effect except as to lands which were entered under the homestead and pre-emption laws and at private entry while the same were held by the Interior Department to be subject to such entry until January 1, 1889, as to a grant of land to the State of Mississippi for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, nor as to a grant of land to the State of Alabama for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from the Tennessee River at or near Gunter's Landing to Gadsden, on the Coosa River, and in all cases where any of the lands excepted as aforesaid in this section have been sold by the proper officers of the United States for cash, or with the allowance and approval of such officer have been entered in good faith under the homestead or pre-emption laws, the right and title of the persons holding or claiming any such lands under such sales or entries are hereby confirmed.

SEC. 6. The price of the even sections of the public lands not reserved within the limits of the portions of the several grants hereby forfeited, and within the limits of all grants or portions of grants heretofore forfeited, and of all lands hereby and heretofore forfeited, is hereby fixed at $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 7. That section 5 of an act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Iowa in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State," approved May 12, 1864, and section 7 of an act entitled "An act extending the time for the completion of certain land-grant railroads in the States of Minnesota and Iowa, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1865; and also section 5 of an act entitled "An act making an additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of railroads in said State," approved July 4, 1866, so far as said sections are applicable to lands embraced within the indemnity limits of said grants, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and so much of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 2, 1864, and entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act making a grant of lands to the State of Iowa, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State,' approved May 15, 1856," be, and the same are hereby, repealed so far as they require the Secretary of the Interior to reserve any lands but the odd sections within the primary or 6 miles granted limits of the roads mentioned in said act of June 2, 1864, or the act to which the same is amendatory.

SEC. 8. That all actual settlers on any of the public lands in the State of Florida affected by the grants, who made actual settlement on any of said lands, after the time limited in the granting act for the construction of the said road, and before May 1, 1888, shall have the right to perfect their entries respectively under the homestead or pre-emption laws: Provided, That the title to the land described in the act entitled "An act granting lands to the States of Alabama and Florida to aid in the construction of certain lines of railway in said States," approved the 17th of May, 1856, which lies adjacent to the part of the lines of railroad built under and in pursuance of the act of the State of Florida entitled "An act to encourage a liberal system of internal improvements in the State of Florida," approved January 5, 1855, within the time limited by Congress in the granting act, and which were granted to any of the said companies by the Legislature of the State of Florida in accordance with said act of Congress, and are held by purchase in good faith from said companies, made before the year 1866, are hereby confirmed to such purchasers: Provided, That a mortgage or pledge of said lands by any of said companies shall not be considered as a sale for the purpose of this act.

SEC. 9. That in all cases when any of the lands forfeited by the first section of this act, or when any lands relinquished to or for any cause resumed by the United States from grants for railroad purposes heretofore made to the State of Michigan, have heretofore been disposed of by the proper officers of the United States, under color of the public-land laws, or under State selections in Michigan confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, where the consideration received therefor is still retained by the Government, the right and title of all persons holding or claiming under such disposals shall be, and is hereby, confirmed: Provided, however, That where the original cash purchasers are the present owners this act shall be operative to confirm the title only of such said cash purchasers as the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied have purchased without fraud and in the belief that they were thereby obtaining valid title from the United States. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to confirm any sales or entries of lands, or any tract in any such State selection, upon which there were bona fide pre-emption or homestead claims on the 1st day of May, 1888, arising or asserted under color of the laws of the United States, and all such pre-emption and homestead claims are hereby confirmed.

During the reading of the foregoing bill,

Mr. HOLMAN said: The real substance of the bill is in the first section, the balance being remedial, and I ask by unanimous consent the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope that may be done. The gentleman from Indiana has stated the position accurately.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I object.

The reading of the bill was then concluded.

The substitute of the committee was read, as follows:

That all lands heretofore granted by Congress to any State or to any corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad or a railroad and telegraph line opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not constructed and contemplated within the time specified in the act making the grant for the construction and completion of the whole of such railroad are hereby declared forfeited to the United States, and the United States resumes title thereto, and all such lands so granted lying opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not constructed and completed within the time prescribed by the act of Congress making such grant for the construction and completion of the whole railroad as provided for by such act is hereby restored to the public domain and declared to be a portion thereof: Provided, however, That the forfeiture hereby declared shall not extend to the right of way of any such railroad through the remainder of the route, including the necessary grounds for depots, switches, side-tracks, machine-shops, and turn-tables, or to lands included in any village, town, or city within the limits of the lands hereby declared forfeited.

SEC. 2. That the forfeiture hereby declared shall not extend to lands adjacent to and coterminous with any portion of any such railroad which is now completed which were sold by the State or corporation to which any such grant was made, or by the corporation controlling or owning such railroad prior to January 1, 1888, to bona fide purchasers for a good and valuable consideration, but the title to such lands are hereby confirmed to such purchasers, their heirs or assigns, upon condition that all persons claiming the benefit of this section shall, within one year from the passage of this act, make and file before the register and receiver of the proper land office, subject to an appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, proof of the good faith, consideration, date, and extent of his or her purchase; and after hearing such proofs and investigating each case the register and receiver shall determine whether any alleged purchase was in fact made in good faith, for a good and valuable consideration, prior to January 1, 1888, and shall note the finding in each case on the records of the local land office, and shall thereafter certify the same to the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to confirm any such purchases of land upon which there were prior bona fide pre-emption or homestead claims, valid and subsisting on the 1st day of January, 1888, arising or asserted under color of the laws of the United States, and all such pre-emption and homestead claims are hereby confirmed: Provided, That a mortgage or pledge of any of said lands shall not be considered a sale for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. That all bona fide settlers upon any of the land forfeited by this act are hereby permitted and authorized to acquire title to not exceeding 160 acres in each case, as a homestead, under and pursuant to the laws relating thereto, and in making final proof of such homestead, the settler shall be allowed for the time he has already resided upon and cultivated the same, and if such settler is not entitled to the benefits of the homestead law he or she shall have the prior right to enter the tract settled on not exceeding 160 acres at $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 4. That no lands declared forfeited to the United States by this act shall inure to the benefit of any State or corporation to which lands may have been granted by Congress; nor shall this act be construed to enlarge the area of land originally covered by any such grant, or to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have other lands granted by them as recited in the first section forfeited for any failure past or future to comply with the conditions of the grant.

SEC. 5. That all lists of lands heretofore certified and all patents issued to any State, or to any corporation, for lands embraced in any grant beyond the portion thereof coterminous with the railroad actually completed within the time prescribed by law for its entire completion are hereby declared inoperative and void except as to bona fide purchasers as provided for by the second section of this act, and excepting land included in any village, town, or city, and the proper proceedings shall be instituted by the Attorney-General to annul the same.

SEC. 6. That all acts in conflict with this act are repealed.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. According to the understanding of the Committee on Public Lands I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair). Is the amendment to the substitute, or is it to the original bill?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. It is an amendment to the substitute which has just been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the committee amendment the following words in lines 5 and 6 of section 1:

"Opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad."

And the following words in lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 of said section:

"Lying opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not constructed and completed within the time prescribed by the act of Congress making such grant for the construction and completion of the whole railroad as provided for by such act."

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that no other amendment can now be offered, according to the course of parliamentary proceedings; but I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE], and also the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] be now considered as pending in the order in which they were offered, that of the gentleman from Illinois first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ROGERS. I am willing they shall be read subject to objection. I do not know what they are.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I do not consent to that.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. As I understand the situation, the majority of the committee recommend a substitute bill. My inquiry is whether two amendments are not in order to that substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that only one is in order, that offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PAYSON. My impression was two were in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The substitute and an amendment to the substitute are in order.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I ask to have my proposition read, and at the proper time I will move its adoption.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The proposition read by the Clerk as coming from the majority of the Committee on Public Lands I understand is not a substitute, but is an amendment to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The Speaker of the House held differently when it was offered.

Mr. OATES. As I understand it the proposition offered by the gentleman from Missouri is not in the nature of a substitute, but an amendment of the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana from the committee; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] offers a proposition which I understand to be a substitute for the report made by the committee. The point I wish to make is that the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is now in order, because it is a substitute for the original proposition, and also the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is recognized for the purpose of having his amendment read. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] reserves the right to object or to raise the question of the propriety of its introduction.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. As I understand, the Committee on Public Lands present a substitute for the Senate bill. To that substitute one amendment has been offered. The gentleman from Illinois now offers a substitute. The parliamentary inquiry is, is not that substitute now in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that there can not be two substitutes pending at the same time.

Mr. ROGERS. Then I reserve the point of order when the substitute is read.

Mr. OATES. I think the Chair has fallen into an error; that the proposition offered by the gentleman from Missouri is not a substitute, but only amendment of the original proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is correct. This is an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and is in order.

Mr. OATES. If the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is offered as a substitute the Chair is right. I was regarding it as an original proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time the bill was taken up for consideration; but was informed by the Speaker as to the status of the bill; that the bill was pending and that a substitute for the bill had been offered.

Mr. PAYSON. Before this matter is finally disposed of I desire to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. The matter which has been reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, while technically, perhaps, a substitute for the Senate bill, comes here as an original proposition from that committee, does it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It comes as a substitute proposition. The Chair thinks it is an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. PAYSON. In that view only two amendments are in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois to introduce his proposition, to be read subject to the point of order and objection. The Clerk will report the substitute. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent that this proposition be considered as pending.

Mr. OATES. As this is being done out of order, I ask that the amendment of my colleague [Mr. HERBERT] be also read and considered as pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us take one at a time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the Chair recognized the gentleman from Indiana to make the request that these amendments be considered as pending, the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] was included in the request. The amendments will be read, after which objection will be called for.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby forfeited to the United States, and the United States hereby resumes the title thereto, all lands heretofore granted to any State or to any corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not now completed and in operation, for the construction or benefit of which lands have heretofore been granted; and all such lands are declared to be a part of the public domain: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as forfeiting the right of way or depot grounds of any railroad company heretofore granted, or lands included in any city, town, or village site.

SEC. 2. That all persons who, at the date of the passage of this act, are actual settlers in good faith on any of the lands hereby forfeited and are otherwise qualified, on making due claim on said lands under the homestead law, within six months after the passage of this act, shall be entitled to a preference right to enter the same under the provisions of the homestead law and this act, and shall be regarded as such actual settlers from the date of actual settlement or occupation; and any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the homestead or pre-emption law, or who has failed from any cause to perfect the title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under either of said laws, may make a second homestead entry under the provisions of this act.

The Secretary of the Interior will make such rules as will secure to such actual settlers these rights.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them, as recited in the first section, forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering the amendment as pending?

Mr. ROGERS. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois will be considered then as pending.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I now offer this amendment, in reference to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes the same request.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 22, page 11, add the following:

"Provided, That this act shall not take effect, except as to lands which were entered under the homestead and pre-emption laws, and at private entry, while the same were held by the Interior Department to be subject to such entry, until January 1, 1889; as to the grant of land made to the State of Mississippi, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railway from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship-Island Railroad."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering this amendment as pending?

Mr. ROGERS. Before withdrawing my point of order I desire to know in view of the fact that these several amendments are not presented in conformity to any parliamentary rule, what will be the order in voting upon them?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the rule the vote would first be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, because it is an amendment to the substitute offered by the committee, and then on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that of the amendments submitted up to this time the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri would have priority over those of the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi that this amendment be considered as pending?

Mr. ROGERS. I withdraw my objection.

There was no further objection.

Mr. HERBERT. Now I offer this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana makes the same request in reference to the amendment which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 1 of the committee's substitute:

"Provided, That all sales or leases of any lands granted to the State of Alabama by the act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, to aid in the construction of the Girard and Mobile Railroad, which, after the said lands were certified to the State of Alabama for the benefit of said railroad, were sold by the Mobile and Girard, or the Girard and Mobile Railroad Company, or by, through, or under either of them, and all purchases of any of said lands under tax sales held by the county tax collector are hereby validated and confirmed."

Mr. HERBERT. Now I ask the Clerk to read the next amendment, to be offered in lieu of this one in the event of the failure of the first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1 of the committee's substitute:

"Provided, however, That all of the lands granted to the State of Alabama by the act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, to aid in the construction of the Girard and Mobile Railroad, and which have been sold by the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company or by the Girard and Mobile Railroad Company, or which have been sold as the property of said railroad company for State and county taxes thereon, and purchased by actual settlers, are hereby excepted from said forfeiture to the extent of 320 acres, and the titles to said lands, to the extent so excepted, are hereby confirmed and made valid to such purchasers, their heirs or assigns; and if any such purchaser shall have purchased more than 320 acres for the uses of actual settlement, he shall select said 320 acres herein excepted from forfeiture within one year from the approval of this act, and file notice of such selection with the register of the land office at Montgomery, Ala.; and any such purchaser who shall fail to make such selection and file said notice shall not thereafter have the benefit of the exception herein made: Provided further, That when any such purchaser shall have purchased in excess of 320 acres for the purpose of actual settlement, or in cases where any of the lands hereinbefore forfeited have been sold and conveyed by said railroad company, or sold and conveyed, as the property of said railroad company, for State and county taxes thereon, and purchased by other than actual settlers, all such purchasers shall have a prior right to purchase said lands from the United States at the price and sum of $1.25 per acre, which prior right of purchase shall continue for one year after the approval of this act, and not longer: Provided further, That all such purchasers, or their assigns, shall each, within one year after the approval of this act, make proof, before the register of the land office at Montgomery, Ala., of the amount of land purchased, from whom, the title received, and the amount paid therefor, and when: Provided also, That such proof may also be made before a judge of probate or clerk of the circuit court, under the seal of office, and forwarded by mail to said register: And provided further, That the above-named privileges to purchasers are granted only on condition that no claim shall ever be made by them or any of them against the State of Alabama, or any county, school district, or municipality thereof, for taxes erroneously assessed and collected on any of said lands, whether the same were paid voluntarily or not."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering this amendment also as pending?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope also, Mr. Speaker, that an amendment to be submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] may be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add before the word "but" in line 5 of section 2 of the committee's substitute:

"And which lands, so sold, were not at the time of such sale in the actual possession of or had improvements made thereon by a person other than such purchaser."

There being no objection, the amendment was considered as pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in making a statement as to the effect of the proposition pending now before the House I will not refer to the several amendments in detail. I will state, however, the effect of the various propositions substantially as they stand before the House; but before doing so I would like to have some understanding in advance as to the amount of time to be occupied in debate; and I ask unanimous consent that the debate shall terminate upon the bill and amendments at 3 o'clock, and that the previous question be regarded as ordered at that hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. PAYSON. Before that is done I wish to make a suggestion to my colleague on the committee. The request the gentleman makes allows only two hours here for debate on this bill, and there are three substantial propositions coming from the committee: The report made by the chairman of the committee, which is made by a bare majority; the substitute which I have had the honor of submitting on behalf of the minority of the committee, and the further proposition of the gentleman from Missouri, signed by two members of the committee. There are, therefore, three substantial propositions to be discussed in this debate, and it does seem to me that two hours' debate is not adequate in view of the fact that this involves some $200,000,000 worth of property.

Mr. HOLMAN. What time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. PAYSON. I would suggest not later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that coupled with that will be a request that the time of the session to-day shall be extended beyond 5 o'clock, until the bill and amendments shall be disposed of.

Mr. PAYSON. I am willing that that shall be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that all debate on the bill and amendments shall be considered as closed at 4 o'clock, that the previous question shall be ordered, that the order for the adjournment of the House at 5 o'clock shall be revoked, and the session extended long enough to complete the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BIGGS. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at half past 3.

Mr. PAYSON. It should be at 4 o'clock, with the further understanding that the intervening time shall be controlled equally by the friends of the three propositions.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is very manifest that this bill will not pass if we continue debate as late as 4 o'clock. It is obvious that there will be two or three votes taken in the House—probably two or three yea-and-nay votes—and if we extend the time for debate to 4 o'clock the effect will be that the bill will fail. I therefore ask unanimous consent that debate shall come to an end at half past 3 o'clock, and that the time shall be divided equally between the advocates of the three propositions.

Mr. PAYSON. Before that question is put, let me suggest to the gentleman that if the previous question shall be ordered at any time before adjournment to-day the bill will come up here hereafter as unfinished business.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; because the previous question will not have been ordered on the passage, but only on the amendments and the engrossment of the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. If the previous question should be ordered at 4 o'clock, or by unanimous consent should be regarded as ordered on the bill and pending amendments, and the vote should not be taken to-day, would not the bill come up as unfinished business on the next legislative day? That has been the practice of the House ever since I have been in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that if the previous question were ordered upon the final passage of the bill it would come up as unfinished business; otherwise it would not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make one other effort to come to an understanding. I ask consent that the debate be continued until 4 o'clock, that the previous question be regarded as ordered upon the bill and amendments and upon the final passage of the bill, and that the time intervening between now and 4 o'clock be divided between the advocates of the different propositions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. PAYSON. I am content with that.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen desiring to print remarks upon these several propositions shall have leave to do so.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I further ask that if the consideration of this bill be not completed at 5 o'clock the session be extended, but not beyond 6 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object for a moment. I suggest that unanimous consent be given that the House remain in session to-day until it adjourn. That is a matter that can always be controlled, and it has been the rule until this session, and it ought to be the rule now. Here is an important bill that we desire to consider, and let us remain in session until we adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is substantially the same as that indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. No; it is so confused with other matters that we can not understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the House remains in session anyway until it adjourns. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. No, it does not. It stays in session until 5 o'clock, and then the rules adjourn it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that the order for the adjournment of the House this afternoon at 5 o'clock be revoked, and that the House continue in session until the consideration of this bill is completed.

Mr. RANDALL. The session to be extended for this bill only.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the division of the time which was last mentioned by the Chair refers of course to the request which I made that the time should be equally divided among the advocates respectively of the three propositions coming from the Committee on Public Lands. Of course the members of the committee will yield to other gentlemen as far as they can.

Mr. HERBERT. I did not so understand the proposition or I should have objected. The proposition, as it was stated, was that the time was to be divided among the advocates of the different amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no, not amendments.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not care to occupy of course as much time as the chairman of the committee; I do not ask that, but do ask to be heard for a reasonable time upon my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that my request was, inasmuch as there were three substantial propositions from the Committee on Public Lands, these other amendments being all incidental, that the time be divided between those three propositions. That was the request I made; and I think the Chair so understood.

Mr. HERBERT. The request was not granted at the time; and sometime afterward it was stated in different form by the Chair, as will be found by reference to the stenographer's notes. The proposition then stated was that the time should be divided among the different propositions. If that language had not been used, I should have objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was, as indicated by him, that the time be divided between the three substantial propositions offered; but in stating the request subsequently the Chair did not embrace the full statement of the gentleman from Indiana, it having been covered by the previous statement. The Chair simply asked whether there was objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HERBERT. I shall not object further, upon the understanding that the gentleman from Indiana will give me time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will try to do so. I will do the best I can.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I want to be heard also.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are three hours to be divided among us; I have no doubt that these different gentlemen will have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. HERBERT. I have no idea that there is any intention on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to deprive us of the right of debate. That right I shall certainly insist upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to control one-third of the time upon the substitute offered by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill of the Senate declares the forfeiture of all lands heretofore granted by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads which are coterminous with portions of the railroads not now completed. That is the proposition of the Senate. The amendment submitted to the House by the Committee on Public Lands proposes to declare the forfeiture of all such lands coterminous with the portions of the railroads not completed at the expiration of the period within which the entire road was required to be completed by the law making the grant. The propositions submitted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], members of the committee, propose to amend the substitute reported by the committee, by providing in effect that as to all roads not completed within the time prescribed by law the forfeiture shall cover the entire grant. The amendment submitted by Messrs. PAYSON, MCKENNA, TURNER, of Kansas, and HERMANN, members of the committee, is in effect the same as the Senate bill. That is the substance of the Senate bill and propositions submitted by the House Committee and by members of the Committee on Public Lands. The effect of all these propositions, however, is to confirm all bona fide sales of land lying opposite to the portions of the railroads now completed made for a good and valuable consideration by the State or corporation to which the grant was made prior to the 1st of January, 1888. This provision is embraced in all the measures pending before the House.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana what is the effect of the proposition in this respect; where patents to lands have been issued by the Government to these corporations, does this bill propose to forfeit those patents?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir, where the railroad was not constructed in conformity with the law making the grant, except as to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. Then it makes no difference between lands patented and those not patented?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; the lands have not generally been patented, but only certified, but no difference is made. Lands whether patented or not are declared forfeited unless the corporation had fulfilled its engagements. All these propositions of the Senate and House propose that all bona fide sales to purchasers for value of lands opposite to and coterminous with portions of the roads which are now completed, made prior to the 1st of January last, shall be held valid. The effect will be to make the question of forfeiture simply one between the railroad corporation and the United States. The House measures all eliminate from consideration all questions as to bona fide sales made prior to January 1, 1888, of land lying opposite to portions of the roads which are now completed. Eliminating all questions affecting bona fide purchases, the question of forfeiture is made one pure and simple between the United States and the railroad corporations to whom these various grants have been made. The rights of all other persons are protected.

The result of these several measures is fairly stated in a communication from the General Land Office, to which I invite the attention of the House for a moment. The Senate bill forfeits 5,627,436 acres. The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the House, in the nature of a substitute, would declare the forfeiture of 54,323,996 acres, while the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] would result in the declaration of the forfeiture of 78,503,088 acres, as will appear from the following table:

*Lands certified to State for this road prior to May 23, 1872, amounting to 440,700.16 acres, were confirmed to State by act of that date (17 Stat. L., 159) for sole use and benefit of the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad Company. The lands so confirmed may not be subject to forfeiture.

The aggregates of the lands named are all to be qualified by the fact that in all the measures there is recognized the validity of bona fide sales made for value prior to January 1, 1888, opposite portions of the roads now completed.

I shall esteem myself fortunate if the propositions I have mentioned, complicated as they are, are sufficiently clear. The objection to the amendments of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] is found in this, that in most of grants made by the Government to railroad corporations, except to the Pacific roads, the railroad corporations took one hundred and twenty sections at once, being the alternate sections of land for the first 20 miles of the road. The title, I think, vested under this legislation at once, and it became the property of the State or corporation manifestly, whether subsequently the obligations of the charter were complied with or not. Of course you can not declare these lands forfeited, however unjust and unreasonable the grants were. I wish we could forfeit them to that extent.

Further, most of these grants provide that as each successive 20 miles of road were completed, if completed in time, patents should issue and the title shall vest in the State or corporation. Manifestly it would be inequitable to declare them forfeited, even if Congress had the power to do so. It is the opinion of the majority of the Committee on Public Lands that the forfeiture should not be carried to that extent, but should be limited to the extent of lands opposite to and coterminous with those portions of the road not completed within the time prescribed by the several statutes making the grants.

Mr. CASWELL. If the road is now completed or any portion of it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. As to the Senate bill, however, that apparently applies to portions of land where no railroad has been completed up to the present hour. The proposition of the Committee on the Public Lands in declaring these forfeitures is not complicated in any degree with questions growing out of bona fide sales. That is unfortunate, however, especially as to lands of the North Pacific Railroad, which were sold to foreign capitalists who came to this country, it is said, on the invitation of the railroad corporations, and sold, too, in large tracts at a less price than the actual settlers were compelled to pay. It is to be regretted that such sales should be confirmed. The committee have reached the conclusion, however, that as to all these sales which were made bona fide and for valuable consideration of land lying opposite completed portion of a railroad prior to January 1, 1888, the title should be confirmed.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman whether after any grant title passed to the company before the completion of the road?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yet it is true that in many instances patents or certified lists were issued before the railroads were constructed, and in some instances before they were commenced.

Mr. SPRINGER. When 20 miles of the road were completed?

Mr. COBB. But beyond that?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are many instances.

Mr. COBB. Not under authority of law?

Mr. WEAVER. But in such cases it passed no title.

Mr. COBB. If no title was passed, why then should we legislate that they shall be exempted from forfeiture?

Mr. HOLMAN. Simply because they are coterminous with the portion of the railroad which has been completed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does the gentleman mean portions of the road which have been completed at the time the charter required them to be completed?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; to portions of the railroad now completed. A large portion of these grants were under the provisions of law which I will read.

Mr. RYAN. I think my friend from Indiana did not understand the question. It is whether the gentleman proposes to forfeit the lands only which are opposite the uncompleted roads, or opposite the roads completed out of the time prescribed by their charters?

Mr. HOLMAN. I stated that the House proposition confirms bona fide sales for value opposite completed portions of the several railroads now completed. As to the corporation the House proposition does not confirm any grant.

Mr. RYAN. I understand that, but——

Mr. HOLMAN. If the road was completed in time, as prescribed by law, then no confirmation is necessary. But as to bona fide purchases of land opposite roads which have been completed, their titles are not disturbed.

Mr. COBB. But as I understand it, in some instances there is a forfeiture where roads have been completed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, certainly; if not completed in conformity with law, but completed without reference to law.

Mr. COBB. Now completed, but not completed within the time?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes. The House proposition is substantially a declaration of forfeiture against the delinquent corporations, but not against the purchasers. We save the rights of all bona fide purchasers.

Now I shall seek to read the section of law to which I have referred during the course of this discussion. This will be found to be embodied in substance in the larger portion of the grants made by Congress in aid of railroads, especially the grants to States, but not generally to the Pacific railroads.

That the lands hereby granted to said State shall be disposed by said State only in manner following, that is to say: That a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections for each of said roads, and included within a continuous length of 20 miles of each of said roads, may be sold; and when the governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that any continuous 20 miles of either of said roads is completed then another like quantity of land hereby granted, not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections for such road, may be sold, and so from time to time until said roads are completed; and if said roads are not completed within ten years no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

It will be seen that there ought to be no embarrassment here in the forfeiture which the House proposition contemplates; because, whether the title vested or not, according to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Schulenberg case, whether the title vested or not or whether the condition was precedent or subsequent as to the completion of the road within the time prescribed there is in common honesty and fairness no difficulty in the way as to this class of grants, because there was an absolute absence of power on the part of the corporation to sell. So that if the clause declaring that "the lands unsold shall revert to the United States" was incorporated or not, or operative or not, there is an absolute absence of power on the part of the corporation to sell, that power being expressly withheld.

I repeat, therefore, that there can be no reasonable question as to the power of Congress to declare the forfeiture, inasmuch as any sale would have been null and void. But, as I have said, the House proposition to avoid any possible injustice confirms all bona fide sales of land lying opposite completed portions of the railroads.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. Does not the Supreme Court, in the very case to which the gentleman refers, Schulenberg vs. Harriman, announce just precisely the other doctrine; that is to say, that until Congress shall affirmatively act to reassert its power over this property and formally declare a forfeiture of the lands, the power to sell does continue in the company, and that the power is limited only by the object of the grant, to wit, the building of the railroad?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not so understand the decision and will not; it would seem impossible that the United States Supreme Court or any other judicial tribunal, with the law before it, should have taken any such ground.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman desires to be absolutely correct, I will be very glad to furnish him the language of the decision. I have it here before me in brief.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will have ample time and I will be cramped for time, and though I dislike very much to decline to yield to the gentleman now, I must refuse for the present. I only state my view of the case. I ask how it is possible that court could have decided as the gentleman has suggested, when Congress had declared, in words which can not admit of misconstruction, that if the railroad was not completed in time "no further sales shall be made;" and in view of this explicit language how could the Supreme Court intend to declare that the sales made in defiance of this express provision were valid and would pass title to the purchaser? Why, Congress might as well abandon all legislative power whatever if the "art of definition" is to make the law. It may as well give up the idea of seeking to frame legislation to restrict a granted power or to protect any public interest. If its guarded language and clear reservation of power here employed is capable of such a construction as the gentleman alleges the Supreme Court gives that law—a construction so manifestly incompatible with the intent of Congress as this—no legislation can express the public will. If Congress can not enact a provision that will effect its object in restraining the disposition of an unearned land grant, as is here done, then it had better abandon its legislative function. But as all the propositions recognize the sales made in good faith of lands lying opposite completed portions of the railroads up to the 1st day of last January, the question raised is of little practical importance.

But I do not understand that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that a sale of land where there was an express prohibition to sell would pass a valid title.

Mr. MCKENNA rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me read again this section of law.

Mr. MCKENNA. Will the gentleman permit me to propound a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me complete my sentence.

And if said roads are not completed within ten years no other sale shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

Is it possible that there can be any question as to the meaning of that language?

Now I admit that the last clause, according to the decision of the Supreme Court, would not be operative until Congress exercised its power to declare a forfeiture, or there was a judicial forfeiture; but as to the power to sell and pass title, I undertake to say that the decision of the Supreme Court could not and should not be construed as declaring that a sale made in defiance of the law was operative and valid.

Mr. MCKENNA. Then, if your construction be correct, what avail is that provision of the bill saving the rights of bona fide purchasers?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will certainly agree that Congress may, even in declaring the forfeiture of the land, protect those persons who in good faith have purchased it even if they have no title, much less confirm an invalid sale. We have been daily engaged in giving validity to claims of a similar character. We confirm titles that are questionable or invalid if justice requires it.

Mr. MCKENNA. Did you not say that you only confirmed those titles where the road was completed and the face of the country was notice to a party that the title was in the road?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, in effect.

Mr. MCKENNA. Now you construe the granting act itself to forbid power of sale.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly. My friend may see inconsistency there, but I am not able to see it. To protect even an equitable right or one colorably so is certainly within the power of Congress.

The House proposition covers all of the remaining grants. It would have the effect in the case of the Northern Pacific road and all the others to restore to the people a large body of land, an aggregate of lands double the area of the great State of Ohio, subject, however, to bona fide sales. Is there an absence of power in Congress to do this? Is it inequitable? This House has decided more than once that it was within its power to declare these forfeitures. The most important of these grants, that of the Northern Pacific Railroad, has been under the consideration of Congress before. The House has heretofore passed a bill declaring that the lands not earned within the time prescribed by law should be forfeited and restored to the public domain. Why not? Take the case of the Northern Pacific. What is in brief the history of that road? I shall refer to it, although it will be more elaborately discussed hereafter. That grant, involving 42,500,000 acres of land, a large portion of it land of great value, with vast coal fields and magnificent forests, the very heart of that fertile region of country stretching westward from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, 2,400 miles in length, was made on the 2d of July, 1864. The grant is 12,800 acres per mile in the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; 25,600 acres per mile in Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and Washington Territories. That road, according to the terms of the law, was to be completed entire on the 4th of July, 1876, yet 225 miles of that railroad are uncompleted twenty-four years after the grant was made. In 1866 you extended the time two years for the commencement of the work. In 1868 you extended the time two years for commencement, when not a shovel of earth had been moved. The law extending the time, on the 1st of July, 1868, four years after the original grant, is as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 8 of an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast," is hereby so amended as to read as follows: "That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to, and accepted by, said Northern and Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from and after the 2nd day of July, 1863, and shall complete not less than 100 miles per year after the second year thereafter, and shall construct, equip, furnish and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1877."

In the construction of the several statutes by the Secretary of the Interior the time for the completion of the road was extended until the 4th of July, 1879. Yet after these successive extensions of time, a definite location of that railroad or any part of it was not even made until November 21, 1871; and when the time finally elapsed, after all these extensions, this extraordinary favoritism and forbearance on the part of Congress, on the 4th of July, 1879, when the whole railroad was to be completed by the terms of the law making the grant, but 530½ of 2,400 miles had been completed. Can any person say it is unjust to restore those lands to the public domain, subject, of course, to the equities that might arise on behalf of the purchasers of land opposite to completed railroad?

I speak of it as a naked question between that corporation and the people. Is there any possible injustice in declaring the land unearned under the law forfeited? Gentlemen say there is an estoppel here, because the Government did not interpose at once when the time expired. There can be no estoppel where the parties stand upon exactly the same footing and are equally informed of the facts. The laches of the Federal officers can not operate injuriously to the Government. The grantees of this imperial grant were fully informed of the nature of the grant and the conditions on which it was made. Time was expressly made as of the essence of the grant; that it was made on the idea of opening up the country; yet in defiance of the Government and in utter disregard of its obligations, apparently relying on its power to control Congress, it permitted the period to expire within which, by express terms of the law, the whole railroad should be completed.

How then does the case stand? This corporation applied time after time for an extension of its grant before a spadeful of earth had been thrown. Congress, unmindful of public interests, granted the extension from year to year. And yet, acting as if this imperial grant was its own private estate to enrich its stockholders, to be disposed of for its own private benefit, that corporation postponed even commencing its railroad until the country was swarming with a hardy and enterprising people; until a railroad starting from Portland, Oregon, had been constructed eastward 225 miles without a dollar of aid from the Government; until railroads running west from the Mississippi River were opening that magnificent country and industry was on every hand invading that region.

The country was teeming with people and the great land grant increasing in value under their enterprise and labor before this railroad corporation thought proper to even take the first step toward completing in good faith its part of the engagement, to construct this railroad. The facts were known to the corporation as to the nature of their grant and the object for which it was made, as well as to Congress or to the officers of the Government. No laches of Congress or of the Government officers can impair the rights of the people. They have a right to demand that if the contract was not carried out in good faith it should be declared void. I think the right and duty of Congress to declare this forfeiture is clear beyond question upon every consideration of law and justice, and I am confident it is sound upon the high consideration of public policy, for the grant was made without justification, to build up private fortunes, and not for the public good.

Indeed, sir, that grant can not be defended. Can any just man defend any of these grants?

I admit that so far as the Union Pacific road is concerned it stands solitary and alone. Its construction was authorized for a purely political reason, in the midst of great public disorders, and when it was deemed essential for high public reasons that there should be closer relations between the Atlantic and the Pacific States. I admit that at the beginning there was some uncertainty whether the bond subsidy which the Government provided for the construction of that road would be sufficient, but when the act of 1864 finally passed, under which the road was completed, then all men knew that the grant of 28,000,400 acres of land in addition to the enormous subsidy in bonds was without any possible justification, for it was well known at that time that the two series of bonds authorized were more than sufficient to complete the road. The land grant was a naked gift. That grant was opposed on this floor by Mr. E. B. Washburne with the great ability and marvelous energy of which he was the master. I was glad to follow his lead. He opposed these grants as earnestly as the distinguished gentleman from the same State [Mr. PAYSON] has favored their forfeiture.

This Union Pacific grant was passed on the very heels of the homestead law, and was the beginning of that extraordinary system of land grants to corporations which has so fearfully reduced in a few years your public domain. Grants followed in rapid succession. This Northern Pacific grant was one of them. Look at the time when these events occurred.

While your people were watching with patriotic solicitude the movements of your armies, while those the most interested of all men in the public domain were rushing into the ranks of your armies to steady and uphold the tottering pillars of the Union, at that very time ex-governors of States, ex-members of Congress, men of high social and political standing were here upon this floor lobbying for these grants and securing by the favor of Congress vast portions of your national wealth—your public lands—of especial and inestimable value to the men—the laboring men of the country—who were then imperiling their lives in the national defense. In that unpatriotic and mercenary spirit these grants were obtained by which the people were robbed of their rights and imperial fortunes were secured.

Congress was engaged in the work of parceling out among mercenary capitalists your public domain when the clash of arms could almost be heard in this Hall!

Are great grants of land obtained under such circumstances to be carefully guarded by Congress and the courts of justice? Will Congress refuse to declare their forfeiture when a just ground for forfeiture is presented? You have a right to declare the forfeiture of these millions of the public land wrongfully granted, and justice demands that it shall be done.

The extraordinary hold of the land-grant lobby on Congress was seen by a vote in this House on the 18th day of January, 1869. On that day I submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That grants of the public lands to corporations ought to be discontinued, and the whole of such lands ought to be held as a sacred trust to secure homesteads to actual settlers, and for no other purpose whatever.

Mr. H. D. Washburn moved that it be laid on the table. The question being put, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 110, nays 55. Among those voting in the affirmative were WILLIAM B. ALLISON, Oakes Ames, John Coburn, SHELBY M. CULLOM, James A. Garfield, W. D. KELLEY, CHARLES O'NEILL, Luke P. Poland, Green B. Raum, and William Windom. Of the gentlemen still in this House, Mr. KELLEY and Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, voted to lay on the table; Mr. RANDALL, Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, and myself against it.

I do not wish to enter into a political discussion over this matter of the public lands, but gentlemen in a recent debate here talked as though the Democratic party had no special reason for championing measures for the annulment of these grants. I think the Democratic party have a special interest in the subject; that party can look back with great satisfaction to the record of its representative men on the land question. When, by the patriotic act of Virginia and other States, the public domain was placed under the control of Congress, it extended from the original thirteen States westward to the Mississippi River. Its whole area, including the original States, was only 531,200,000 acres; while an empire of land extending from the mouth of the Mississippi to the Columbia River and Pacific Ocean, a region of country larger than the whole original thirteen States and their possessions by more than 200,000,000 acres, commanding the Mississippi River and covering our entire Western frontier was held by a foreign power.

Mr. Jefferson's foresight in acquiring that vast territory was one of the grandest acts of statesmanship in the history of nations. With that territory in the possession of Great Britain, or of any other great power, the peace, progress, and security of the United States would have been continually imperiled; standing armies, as in Europe, would have patroled the borders of hostile states. By the purchase of that magnificent region of country under the administration of Mr. Jefferson the future security and greatness of the United States were absolutely assured. An outlet to the Gulf, a grand frontage on the Pacific Ocean, and the most fertile portion of the globe was ours.

During the negotiations of Mr. Monroe, our then minister to France, with that power for this territory Bonaparte said that whatever nation controlled the Mississippi River and the Gulf would be the foremost of the great nations.

This being accomplished, it was only a question of time when the Floridas would become a part of the United States, and this was accomplished under Mr. Monroe's administration. By treaties and honest purchase under the administrations of Mr. Polk and Mr. Pierce we established the present boundary between the United States and Mexico, securing a vast extent of country, an enlarged frontage on the Pacific coast, and its magnificent Bay of San Francisco, one of the grandest harbors of the globe. These territorial acquisitions, now divided into fourteen States and eight great Territories, and the Indian Territory of 41,000,000 acres, were acquired under the policy of the party which is now asking that these land grants be declared forfeited and the lands restored to the people. Under the auspices of that party the great State of Texas was added to the Union.

Certainly, sir, a party so related to the public domain would feel an earnest interest in whatever concerned the public land.

The following table shows the auspices under which the public domain has been acquired (land controlled by the United States):

		Acres.
Ceded to the United States by Virginia and other States east of the Mississippi		259,171,787
Acquired under Democratic administrations:
The Louisiana purchase, April 30, 1803	756,961,280
East and West Florida, February 22, 1819	37,931,520
By treaty from Mexico, February 2, 1848	334,443,520
By treaty from Mexico, December 30, 1853	29,142,400
Total under Democratic administrations		1,158,478,720
Under Whig administration:
By purchase from Texas, November 25, 1850		61,892,480
Under Republican administration:
Alaska, March 30, 1867		369,529,600
Grand total		1,849,072,587

All this territory was acquired by the United States by fair treaty and honest purchase, at a final cost of $88,157,389.98.

This vast public domain, with the original thirteen States and Vermont, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Maine, never a part of the public domain proper, constitute the territory of the United States.

This public domain of virgin lands has been the pride and glory of the United States, and the source of their unexampled progress and greatness. It was guarded with vigilance by our fathers and by all of the old political parties into which the country had been divided for the future freeholds of our ever-growing population. Under the auspices of Jefferson, as expressed in the famous ordinance of 1787, the old feudal tenures, entailments, and rights of primogenture, which had fostered great landed estates and a nation of vassals in Europe, were swept away, and the public domain was dedicated forever to independent freehold estates. Land monopoly, the curse of the Old World, was abhorred. Never in all our former history, even when our fathers were sorely pressed for money to meet demands incident to the Revolution, were lands ever sold in large bodies, except in two instances—one to the Ohio Company, in 1785, of 822,000 acres, and the other to John Cleves Symmes, of 248,540 acres, in 1787. This policy of our fathers of hoarding the public lands for freeholds of the people substantially controlled the land system under all political parties down to the year 1862, and yet, as will be seen, liberal grants were made to the soldiers of the Republic and for education. In a few instances great military services were rewarded with grants of land. In 1803 General Lafayette was rewarded for his great services in behalf of American independence with 11,520 acres, and in 1824 with a township of land in Louisiana.

But going back for a moment to another phase of this question, the Republican party justly claims the honor of the final passage of the homestead law, which was approved by President Lincoln on the 20th of May, 1862, one of the noblest and most humane laws ever enacted. That measure had been introduced in the Senate by Andrew Johnson in 1857, but it was only reported back to the Senate and did not pass. It was passed, however, during Mr. Buchanan's administration, and met the veto of the President, partly upon the ground that, by a strange oversight, persons of foreign birth might enter lands without being the heads of families, while native-born citizens could not make entries unless they were heads of families. That was one of the grounds on which President Buchanan vetoed the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. But it was not the principal ground.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; it was not. The principal ground was the one to which my friend manifestly refers, that the President was opposed to the measure. The same bill, with the defect named corrected, was introduced into the next Congress and passed both Houses. It passed the House by 107 votes to 16. There are three members in this House who were members of that Congress—Mr. COX, Mr. KELLEY, and myself—all of whom voted for the bill. It passed the Senate by 33 votes to 7, and was approved by President Lincoln on the 20th of May, 1862. I voted for it as a member of this House with infinite satisfaction. All men hoped and expected that it dedicated the public lands forever to actual settlers. The prompt introduction of the homestead bill in the first Congress controlled by the Republican party seemed to give that promise. But such, unhappily, was not the result.

While the bill was pending in the House on the 18th day of December, 1861, I submitted a proposition that the act of March 3, 1855, which had secured allotments of public land to the soldiers of every successive war prior to that which was then waging, should be extended to the soldiers of the then existing war for the Union. That proposition was made in view of the uniform policy of our Government in all former wars, and because no act could be more becoming a Republic than to invest the soldiers who fought in its defense a freehold in the soil of their country. The argument against it was that its tendency would be to monopolize the public lands, that bounty-land warrants assignable would certainly produce that result. That was the only argument that could be urged against it, for the public lands were then ample for the purpose; but it was successful, and my provision failed by the action of the gentleman who controlled the bill in the House. The debate on my proposition to grant bounty lands to the soldiers of the war for the Union, in view of the results, was one of the most interesting debates that occurred during the war. Mr. Potter, of Wisconsin, who controlled the bill, indignantly declared, in his speech against my amendment, that "the issue of land warrants under previous acts has absorbed nearly 100,000,000 acres of our public lands and thrown nearly that amount into the hands of speculators." Mr. Windom, of Minnesota, was still more indignant, and declared, in substance, that it was mere demagogism. Hon. James A. Cravens, of Indiana, a gallant soldier of the Mexican war, was the only member who stood by me with a speech. This debate will be found in the Congressional Globe, second session Thirty-seventh Congress, volume 67.

But, Mr. Speaker, what an extraordinary result followed! Within ten years afterward grants of public lands to an extent unexampled in the history of any country were made to corporations, commencing with the same Congress. How does the account stand? I have before me a statement from the General Land Office. Let us consider all the grants of land made for military services, for education, and military wagon-roads, and to States for railroads from 1787 to 1861—a period of seventy-four years—and including all grants for education, down to the present time, and compare all these grants combined with the grants made during ten years after the Republican party came into power, on the 4th day of March, 1861, for railroads and military roads alone, and what is the result? The grants prior to March 4, 1861, are as follows. Let us see the result by comparison.

All grants made up to this time for military service and education are as follows:

	Acres.
Military services, Revolutionary war	2,165,000
Military services, war of 1812	4,930,192
Military services, war with Mexico, act of March 3, 1855	61,028,430
Total for military services	68,123,622
Granted to States and reserved for Territories for school purposes	67,893,919
Universities	1,165,520
Agricultural colleges, act of July 2, 1862	9,600,000
Total for education	78,659,439
In all for military services and education	146,783,061

GRANTS AFTER MARCH 4, 1861.

	Acres.
To States to aid in the construction of railroads	17,775,624
To corporations	163,643,944
Grand total since March 4, 1861	181,419,569

It appears, therefore, that while it was not thought proper on February 22, 1862, to grant bounty lands to the soldiers of the Union Army on account of its tendency to land monopoly, yet beginning with July 2, 1862, with a grant of 28,000,400 acres to the Union Pacific Railroad corporations, Congress within ten years gave directly to corporations and to States for corporations 181,419,569 acres of land, a territory eight times greater than the State of Indiana. All this in ten years! While from the year 1787 down to this day all the grants made by Congress for common schools, the foundation of the grandest system of education the world has ever seen, including the sixteenth section of every township of the public domain down to the formation of the Territory of Oregon, and the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in every township of every State and Territory organized since, including also all grants for universities and colleges, and all grants for military services in all the wars from the Revolution down to the war with Mexico, aggregate 146,678,061. This aggregate of 146,678,061 for education and military services covers the grants of our entire history.

As to grants prior to March 4, 1861, and subsequent to that date under all parties, Democratic, Whig, and Republican, to aid in the construction of railroads and military wagon-roads, I submit the following table, prepared at the General Land Office. A glance will show the extraordinary contrast between the policy of the Democratic party and the Whig party and all other parties on the one hand and the Republican party on the other in relation to the public land, the most valuable wealth a nation can possess. It will be seen that the largest grant ever made prior to March 4, 1861, was that to the State of Illinois for the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad of 2,595,053 acres.

But gentlemen suggest that time was not of the essence of the grants, and that the railroad corporations might hold the land until, by the industry and energy of the whole people, the country should be settled up and the lands increased in value. If this view be correct, then the infamy of these grants is the more apparent; instead of being grants to "aid" in the construction of railroads and open up the country, these grants should be designated as gifts of Congress to wealthy gentlemen to be enhanced in value by the labor of the American people. If time was not of the essence of these grants, why did the Northern Pacific and the others ask for an extension of time which Congress graciously granted? Let us look at this matter further. Take the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad. According to the last report of the Commissioner of Railroads, this company had received up to December 31, 1886, patents for 13,845,072 acres, and had sold 5,977,060.99 acres, for which there was received in cash $21,324,039.07; still due, $3,758,836.63, making in all for these 5,977,060.99 acres granted to that corporation the sum of $25,082,000. The words of the Commissioner are as follows:

The total number of acres of land received by this company from the Government by patent and certification, December 31, 1886, was 13,845,072.50, of which 5,977,060.99 acres have been sold. From these sales the company has received $21,324,039.07, and there are outstanding on time sales $3,758,836.63.

Assuming that the residue of the 13,845,072 acres patented to that road shows the same return, something more than $3.50 an acre, what will be realized from the lands for which that company has already obtained patents from the General Land Office? The enormous sum of $48,457,742, a sum within $27,000,000 of the cost of the entire road from Lake Superior to Portland, Oregon, with the branch across the Cascade range of mountains to Puget Sound, an imperial possession. The whole cost of the entire system is estimated by the Commissioner of Railroads at $75,000,000. The Commissioner tells us in his report that the corporation has reserved its coal and timber lands. Of course these public-spirited gentlemen who have obtained this grant of 42,500,000 acres of the people's land will withhold the valuable coal and timber land to enlarge the imperial wealth a benevolent Congress has given them out of the patrimony of the people. Yet gentlemen think the remainder of this imperial grant should not be forfeited back to the people.

Gentlemen think injustice would be done to this corporation if we declare the forfeiture here proposed. I think the injustice was in making the grant. The natural results of such a fostering of wealth by law made its appearance in due time. Instead of these grants ever operating for the benefit of the settler, the result was exactly the reverse. Before the homesteader was ready to move, before the landless citizen could gather his family around him and start on the journey for a home on your public domain, the prospectors, land-jobbers, and capitalists from Europe as well as America had invaded all that country within the reach of the railroad and appropriated in large estates the very cream of the fertile lands. Take Dakota. You could travel there years ago for weary miles and miles and see on every hand the virgin soil untouched. Yet every acre of that land had been entered years before, and that too by a well organized system of frauds humiliating to our people and dishonoring to our Government. Besides, was it not natural, when we undertook to imitate the policy of European nations, of great subsidies enarging the wealth of the favored few, that just such events should transpire as those which caused the people of this country a few years ago to blush in beholding the fruits of these imperial grants inuring to the benefit of the capitalists and nobility of Europe? And how natural it was when the celebration of the alleged completion of this railroad occurred that the favored class of Europe should be the guests of that corporation. You can not make such grants without reaping a harvest of misfortune, without producing the same disastrous results which have reduced Europe to a land of palaces and huts. The fruits of subsidy in all nations are the same—the wealth and luxury of the favored class, the poverty and wretchedness of the people.

The time for the completion of the last railroad under this extraordinary system of land grants was the 4th day of July, 1882, in the midst of the Forty-seventh Congress. It was the Texas Pacific, with a grant of 18,500,000. In anticipation of that event, on the 16th of January, 1862, I introduced House bill No. 2878 for a general forfeiture of unearned land grants, in substance the same as the pending amendment of the House Committee on Public Lands. On the 6th of February, 1862, Mr. Cobb, of Indiana, introduced a similar bill; both were referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Many bills declaring the forfeiture of particular grants were referred to the Judiciary Committee. On the latter committee Mr. Proctor Knott, Judge PAYSON, and other members demanded a hearing on these bills. Yet from the first day to the last of that House of Representatives, over which Speaker Keifer presided as Speaker, notwithstanding persistent effort, the more urgent as many thousand miles of these land-grant railroads were then subject to forfeiture without the least shadow of defense, not one single vote could be obtained on any bill declaring a forfeiture. The members of the House demanding these forfeitures were absolutely ignored by the Speaker and the controlling majority. It seems just to assert that this House in the Forty-seventh Congress was organized with express reference to the defeat of all attempts to declare the forfeiture of these lands.

As soon as the Forty-eighth Congress was fully organized, with Mr. CARLISLE Speaker, the policy of this House as to these grants was instantly reversed. The following resolutions, which I had the honor to submit to the House on the 21st day of January, 1884, were promptly adopted. I think they fully express the principles of the Democratic party in relation to the public lands:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of this House, all the public lands heretofore granted to States and corporations to aid in the construction of railroads, so far as the same are now subject to forfeiture by reason of the nonfulfillment of the conditions on which the grants were made, ought to be declared forfeited to the United States and restored to the public domain.

Resolved, That it is of the highest public interest that the laws touching the public lands should be so framed and administered as to ultimately secure freehold therein to the greatest number of citizens; and to that end all laws facilitating speculation in the public lands or authorizing or permitting the entry or purchase thereof in large bodies ought to be repealed and all of the public lands adapted to agriculture (subject to bounty grants and those in aid of education) ought to be reserved for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers, and disposed of under the provisions of the homestead laws only.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands is hereby instructed to report to the House bills to carry into effect the views expressed in the foregoing resolutions; that said committee shall be authorized to report such bills at any time, subject only to revenue and appropriation bills, and the same shall in like order be entitled to consideration.

No revolution was ever more complete than that witnessed in the organization of this House in the Forty-eighth Congress. The foregoing resolutions were adopted and became from thence to the present hour, the rule of the House of Repesentatives. Under this policy the following land-grants have been forfeited and the land restored to the people.

A careful inquiry will reveal the fact that the present Administration has absolutely reversed the land policy of the Republican administrations. Instead of a policy that favored the grants to railroad corporations, the Spanish and Mexican grants, and the enormous claims under entries made for speculation, every effort is now made consistent with justice to restore the public lands to the bona fide settler. General Sparks and his able successor, Col. A. M. Stockslager, pursuing the same line of policy under the earnest approval of the President, have restored by Executive order 52,437,373 acres to the public domain, as will be seen by the following table:

Land actually restored to the public domain.	Acreage.
Lands in granted railroad limits restored	2,108,417.38
Railroad indemnity lands restored	21,323,600.00
Private land claims; withdrawn lands restored	576,000.00
Entries under pre-emption, homestead, timber-culture, desert, mineral, and timber land laws canceled in regular course of examination and proceedings in General Land Office for abandonment, illegality, and other causes	27,460,608.74
Invalid State selections restored to United States	968,747.52
Total actually restored to the public domain and opened to entry and settlement	52,437,373.64

You have, gentlemen, at the present session of Congress passed a bill for the first time classifying the public lands and securing to actual settlers all the remaining public lands adapted to agriculture, protecting your remaining coal fields, and streams of water from monopoly, protecting your forest from destruction, and repealing all laws under which speculation in the public lands is possible. You have declared in that bill that the public lands shall be held to secure homes for our people, and for no other purpose. Had that bill been passed as a part of the homestead measure of May 20, 1862, how many generations would elapse before the peril would approach that comes to a nation from a homeless, hopeless, and discontented people! The promise of a home on your public lands has through generations past inspired with hope the hearts of millions of laboring men of the United States. Every laborer at the forge, in the shop, and every where has been buoyed up with the hope that after awhile by patient industry he might secure for his family an independent freehold upon the public domain. It has been not only the source of your greatness, but the ark of your safety. But, unfortunately, the spirit that inspired the homestead law died with its enactment; the vast body of your public lands were left exposed to speculation for the benefit of those for whom the homestead law was not intended.

In that bill you have passed a homestead measure which does not leave one acre of public land open to the speculator. By that bill you have set apart your public lands for homes for your people. If the Senate, yielding to just public sentiment, should pass that bill, and this measure now pending of public justice should become a law, much will have been done to retrieve the past.

Let this measure proposed by your Committee on Public Lands pass. Let it become a law. Restore the land to the people from whom it has been unjustly taken; restore to them these millions of acres which have been so unwisely and improvidently granted to favored parties; restore the land to its rightful owners and dedicate your remaining lands for homes for your people and then those whose praise is most to be desired, the unfortunate, the poor, the landless, will rise up and pronounce their blessings upon the Fiftieth Congress of the United States. [Great applause.]

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, from an early period in our national history, at least as far back as 1823, the Congress of the United States had been in the habit of making grants of the public lands to the various States of the Union, especially to the younger States just coming into the Union, to aid them in the struggles incident to the formative period, in the construction of works of internal improvement inaugurated with a view to their development. In the beginning of these grants they were intended to assist in, and were confined wholly to, the construction of wagon-roads and canals, and in improving the navigation of rivers. At a later period grants were also made to certain States with authority to use the lands in the construction of railroads. The first grant of this latter kind was made in 1850 to the State of Illinois, and the lands were subsequently granted by the Legislature of that State to the Illinois Central Railroad Company, to induce and assist that company to construct a railroad through the State from the city of Chicago to the southern boundary thereof.

After that a number of grants were made to the different States for similar purposes. Up to 1862 the policy of Congress had been to make grants, not directly to corporations, but to the States, conferring power and authority upon the States, as grantees, to use the lands for specific purposes and within certain limitations for the good of the entire State as a public community. The purpose was to benefit the States and the whole people thereof by putting into their own hands certain public properties, to be used by them in advancing enterprises of great local importance—enterprises inaugurated by authority of the States themselves and subject to their control. The policy of making grants, even of that character, was stubbornly resisted by many of the greatest and wisest men in our parliamentary history, and the wisdom of that resistance has been made manifest by the evil and disastrous consequences which have in later years grown out of it.

No serious objection, perhaps, could be urged to the mere act of granting a limited amount of land to new States struggling in their infancy against the difficulties, inconveniences, and poverty incident to communities upon the frontier in the formative period, and placing it in the hands of the community itself, to be used wisely and judiciously in the development of the country, if the policy of making such grants should stop there and go no further. But it was thought in the beginning of these grants that to make them, or that the right to make them, was doubtful under a proper construction of the constitutional powers of Congress, and that if even a seeming infraction of the Constitution in this regard was permitted, though for a purpose at that time apparently beneficent, it would be a breach in the wall through which future inroads upon a larger scale and far more dangerous in character would be made; and I repeat now that the wisdom of that opposition has been unfortunately verified by the events which have since occurred, for in 1861 a political party came into power and assumed control of public affairs in this country whose whole history before and since shows its utter disregard of constitutional restraint. The Constitution has never stood in the way of that party when it sought an end; and if it did it was so much the worse for the Constitution. Where the disposition and the power are combined it is always easy enough to evade the law. When a party, latitudinarian in its construction of constitutional limitations and powers, is pushing forward to the achievement of the purposes it has in view, every mistake made in the past is widened and widened in its scope and effect, until it is made not only a precedent, but the rule of action. So the Republican party, coming into power in 1861, looked back over the history of the past and saw that other parties, the Democratic party among them, had from time to time granted more or less lands to States, which the States had in turn used in divers ways, frequently by grants of their legislatures to private corporations, to aid in the prosecution of local enterprises, took a step in advance, and, putting the States aside, made enormous grants of the public lands directly to railroad corporations.

It may not be uninteresting, Mr. Speaker, in this connection to give a brief history of our public domain and the connection which the two great political parties of this day have had with it. At the outstart I make this statement, that without claiming aught of credit for the cession of the great Northwestern Territory and the cessions made to the Federal Government by Georgia and other States at the beginning of our national history, or without claiming ought on account of the purchase from the State of Texas, only a small part of which is embraced in the public domain, every acre of the public domain of the United States was acquired under Democratic administrations except Alaska, that terra incognito of the north, and even that was acquired under the administration of Andrew Johnson, who fled from the contaminations of his own party to seek fellowship and die forgiven in the arms of the old party of constitutional government. More than that, these public lands were not accidentally acquired while Democratic administrations happened to be in power, and as mere incidents of those administrations, but they were acquired as a part of the fixed and settled policy of the Democratic party, often in the face of turbulent opposition.

What was acquired in this way and by this party? First, the Louisiana purchase, made in 1803, during the administration of Mr. Jefferson, embracing 1,182,752 square miles, or 756,961,280 acres; second, the Florida purchase, made during the administration of Mr. Monroe, in 1819, embracing 52,268 square miles, or 37,931,560 acres; third, the lands acquired from Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, made in 1848, during the administration of Mr. Polk, and by the Gadsden purchase, made in 1853, during the administration of Mr. Pierce, embracing 568,103 square miles, or 363,585,920 acres. The total of all these acquisitions aggregate 1,810,123 square miles, or 1,158,478,720 acres. Out of this magnificent empire the following States and Territories have been created and organized, namely: Parts of the States of Alabama and Mississippi, and all of the States of Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, Colorado, Oregon, Nevada, and California; and the Territories of Washington, Wyoming, Montana, Dakota, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, and New Mexico.

This noble empire, unparalleled in fertility, picturesqueness, and beauty, as well as in the diversity and possibilities of its productions, is the gift of the Democratic party to the United States. If this were all the good this party had ever done, and though it could be truly said it had otherwise done much that was wrong, this one thing alone ought to embalm it in the grateful and affectionate memory of the country through all the generations who are to enjoy the rich fruits of this precious heritage. Where in all the history of all the empires, principalities, and powers that have risen and fallen in all the ages of the world has any public achievement been wrought so full of possible blessings to mankind? It gives us command of the South Atlantic, the Gulf, the Pacific, and the Great Lakes, and puts within our almost boundless territory the mightiest rivers of the earth. It gives to us mountains whose sublimity, plains whose extent and fertility, valleys whose beauty and fecundity are almost without rivals on the globe.

It gives to us the most extensive and marvelously productive mineral deposits, including the precious metals and minerals of all kinds, which have been yet discovered; and puts at our command, as a part of our national possessions, a coal area greater than that of all Europe. The glory of this splendid achievement belongs alone to the Democratic party, a glory in which no other political party is entitled to share. Nor is that all; for more than fifty years the Democratic party, which had acquired this princely estate of more than a thousand million acres, continued to manage it for the people. The hardy sons of our native land, and those of other lands coming to us from abroad, have swarmed over this territory, and State after State has sprung like magic into being.

There are homes in this Territory for 400,000,000 people. We could take the entire population of the United States according to the census of 1880, and put every living soul in the Territory of New Mexico, or in the Territory of Dakota, and the population would not then be as dense as it now is in some of the most enlightened countries of Europe. I say the Democratic party, after acquiring these lands, managed them for the people of the country for more than fifty years, and managed them well. During that eventful half century who ever heard of land rings, land syndicates, land corporations, or land steals? Who ever heard of the Interior Department being converted into a place of secret resort where thieves did congregate to devise and perfect schemes for public plunder? During all those years we heard no complaints, for there were no complaints, that the public land laws were being used for the purposes of wholesale theft. During all those years we heard of no grants of public lands to private corporations.

The only mistake made, if indeed that was a mistake, was in granting lands to the States, with authority to use them in the prosecution of local enterprises by regranting them to private individuals and local corporations. Though it is true that some grants of that description were made to the States during Democratic supremacy, the power to do it was doubted, and it was used with great prudence and in no instance abused; for during our whole national history from 1789 to 1861, all the administrations of all political parties in power in this country through that long and eventful period, granted of the public lands only 35,131,433.91 acres to the States, and not an acre to corporations. Of that amount about two-thirds were granted under Democratic administrations, and the remainder under Federal and Whig administrations. When the Republican party ascended into power and took control of public affairs in 1861, an entirely new policy concerning the disposition of our public lands was inaugurated. In 1862, while that party was yet on its first legs, when little more than one year of its administration had been completed, it granted 23,504,001.61 acres of our finest lands directly to railroad corporations.

In one year it granted nearly as much as had been granted by all other parties combined in the whole previous history of the Republic. From 1861 to 1874 the Republican party was the undisputed master of the situation. It controlled both branches of Congress, the executive, and the judiciary. Every department of the Government was in its hands. In eleven years during that interval a Republican Congress passed, and a Republican executive approved, bills granting directly and indirectly to private corporations 185,218,966.86 acres of the public lands. I have here a long table, prepared at my request by the accommodating Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is an epitome of the history of these land grants. It covers all the grants made by Congress to the States for the purposes of internal improvement, and all grants made to corporations. It shows the date and the purpose of each grant, the name of the grantee, the number of acres covered by the grant, and the number of acres which have been certified or patented.

The table is also compiled so as to show the extent of the grants made prior to March 4, 1861, and the extent of the grants made subsequent to that date. I have not time to read the whole table, but I will insert it in my remarks at this point. It will be observed that a large number of grants were made prior to 1861, but they were comparatively small in extent. The policy which then prevailed was to make small grants to the States to aid their local enterprises. After 1861, though the grants were not so numerous, they were all made in a short period of time, were increased vastly in extent, and made, in the greater part, for private use and benefit.

The great State of Missouri, one district of which I have the honor to represent in this House, is about 300 miles in length, east and west, and a similar distance north and south. In that great State there are 44,425,600 acres, or about one-fourth as much as was granted in eleven years to a dozen or more corporations. By the census of 1880 the population of the United States amounted to 50,155,783. That entire population could be given homes and domiciled upon these granted lands and the population would not be as dense as in any of the great powers of Europe.

Not only so, Mr. Speaker, but these enormous grants of land made by the Republican party to corporations were supplemented by what has turned out to be a gift of bonds to the amount of $64,623,512, bearing 6 per cent. interest.

Statement showing land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and wagon-roads and canals, and to aid in river improvement prior and subsequent to March 4, 1861.

Excess in acres of grants to States and corporations made subsequent to March 4, 1861, over those made prior thereto	149,189,292.29

That is to say, a Republican Congress, after donating over 185,000,000 of acres of the public lands to these corporations, went further and loaned them the credit of the Government, by guaranteeing the payment of the bonds of certain companies to the amount I have stated. These bonds, principal and interest, now amount to $122,482,106.32, which is an existing debt of the United States, for which the Government is now practically without security. Why without security? When these bonds were first issued the Government took a first mortgage lein on the roads to indemnify it against loss by reason of its guaranty, but afterwards the railroad managers came here to Washington and induced a Republican Congress to pass and a Republican President to sign a bill releasing the first mortgage which had been taken, and to take a second mortgage lien instead. That was done so that the companies might issue additional mortgage bonds, and be enabled to dispose of them at a better price. The companies did issue additional bonds, secured by a first mortgage, and sold them upon the markets of this country and Europe in amounts large enough practically to cover the entire value of the roads, thereby leaving the Government of the United States in the cold with an empty bag to hold.

Was ever such a proceeding, publicly done in the light of day—boldly and defiantly done before the very eyes of the country—ever heard of before or since in parliamentary history? Who would not give his good right arm if this foul blot could be effaced from the pages of American history? These shameful transactions sound like a revival of the olden times, when titled lords were sent out by the monarchs of Europe with royal charters in their hands, giving to them estates of vast extent and of immense value here in the New World. Against that abominable and accursed practice of the Crown our fathers rose in protest, and terminated it by a successful war.

The Republican party, forgetting or ignoring the history of the past, created corporations by Congressional enactment, invested them with great privileges and powers, and put charters into their hands which authorized them to go out upon the fairest domain on the earth—the property of the American people, acquired and until then held by the Democratic party as the future homes of our fast increasing population—and appropriate it by the tens of millions of acres; and not content with that, they must issue them more than half a hundred millions of bonds, bearing a high rate of interest, to be paid out of the earnings of honest labor. Instead of having landlords among the titled nobility of Europe, holding by authority of the Crown, we have corporation landlords, holding by authority of a Republican Congress—corporations whose stock is largely owned and held in Europe.

This system of corporation landlordism is, if anything, more dangerous than the one against which our fathers drew the sword. It is full of menace and danger to every man who looks into the future of our country. The very idea of a single corporation, especially one whose stock and bonds are principally owned abroad, like the Northern Pacific, holding as the free gift of the Government of the United States a territory as large as the fifth State in the Union and capable of sustaining twenty-five or thirty millions of people, can not but excite the gravest apprehensions in the minds of thoughtful men.

These grants, Mr. Speaker, were not only wasteful and extravagant but they are dangerous to the happiness of our people and the prosperity of the country, and are subversive of the true principles of a republican form of government.

There is another feature of our public-land history scarcely less important than the one to which I have alluded in connection with land grants. The general laws provide a great many ways for the disposition of the public lands. We have the homestead law, with a right to commute for cash; and we have the pre-emption, timber culture, mineral, and desert-land laws, and others besides. All of these laws have many excellent and meritorious features in them, and could be made the instruments of great good to the country if they were honestly observed and administered.

During the era of Democratic supremacy these various statutes were administered with such rigorous scrutiny and care as to reduce frauds committed under them to the minimum. But under the lax and collusive methods which obtained in the administration of the General Land Office and of the Interior Department by Republican officials, fraud became not only easy, but opportunity to commit it seems not unfrequently to have been offered.

All of these laws were enacted with a view to serving the needs of actual settlement. They were intended to facilitate actual occupation of the public lands, and to promote the interest of those who should venture to establish homes upon the frontier and lay the foundations of great commonwealths. It is undeniably true that these well-intended statutes have been a great blessing to many thousands of poor men who have found homes under their provisions; but in later years they have also been grossly abused by the grasping and the vicious in a way totally at variance with the public right, the public interest, and the public weal.

Rich men, syndicates, and corporations have employed thousands of people to make fraudulent entries for their benefit under the pre-emption, desert-land, and other laws, by means of bribery and perjury. The laws have been evaded and many millions of acres of the public domain have been literally stolen. Laws that were intended to protect the public lands from speculation and preserve them as free homes for the homeless, have been so administered under administrations previous to the present one as to enable a favored few to acquire lordly estates, amounting to tens of thousands of acres. I have not time to go into this phase of the question with anything like detail. It is sufficient to say that so startling and universal had fraud become, and such a storm of protest was rising from the people against loose and dishonest methods of administration, that President Cleveland, after having had a thorough and exhaustive examination made into the subject, in his first message to Congress asserted that the tide of fraud and corruption had risen so high and become so strong that the only remedy was to repeal the laws under which such things were made possible.

I think to-day hardly any man can be found who has read the President's message on this subject or the more recent reports of the Interior Department, or who has given himself any trouble to look into this question, who will not acknowledge the commanding necessity of legislation which will protect what is left of our public domain from the eager and almost irrepressible greed of the plunderer.

Only so much have I time to say on this occasion by way of comparing the management of our public domain by the Democratic party up to 1861 and its management by the Republican party from that date to 1874. In 1874, for the first time in many years, a Democratic House was elected, and from the hour that the Democratic party marched back with triumphant banners into this wing of the Capitol no grants of the public lands have been made; and since the inauguration of President Cleveland no conspiracy for fraudulent appropriations of the public lands by any means has been even attempted.

The business of granting lands to private corporations ceased in 1874 upon the reappearance of the Democratic party as a controlling power in this branch of the national assembly, and the land-thieves sought shelter the very day a Democratic President first crossed the threshold of the White House. This is not the statement of poetic license, but it is an indisputable fact. One of the very first acts of the first Democratic House after the war was the adoption of the following resolution, introduced by Mr. HOLMAN, then as now, a distinguished Democratic Representative from Indiana, with only three Democratic votes against it:

Resolved, That grants of the public lands to corporations ought to be discontinued, and the remainder of the lands ought to be held as a sacred trust to secure homesteads to actual settlers, and for no other purpose whatever.

That resolution was simply a reassertion of the policy of the Democratic party with reference to our public lands; and it has been steadily and stubbornly adhered to at all times. But we did not stop with the mere declaration of the policy outlined by that resolution. By the terms of many of the larger grants the corporations receiving them were given until 1878 or 1879 to construct their lines of road, and thereby acquire title to the land through a compliance with the terms of the grants. Many of the companies have never complied with the terms of the grants by building their roads in accordance with the requirements of the granting acts. In 1882 the first forfeiture bill was introduced in the House. It was intended to forfeit the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, because of its failure to complete its line of road within the time limited by the act granting the lands in aid of its construction.

The completion of the road was made a condition of the grant. If the road was not completed from one end to the other, within a certain time fixed by the granting act and acts supplementary thereto, the title of the lands did not pass to the corporation but remained in the Government. The road, as I have said, was not completed—it is not even yet completed—and so the bill forfeiting the granted lands and restoring them to the public domain was introduced in the House in 1882, and referred by the Speaker to the Committee on the Judiciary. That was in the Forty-seventh Congress, and the House was then in the control of the Republican party, and was presided over by Mr. Keifer, of Ohio. The Republican majority of the Judiciary Committee reported the bill back to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass. The report was made by Mr. REED, of Maine, then chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and now the acknowledged leader of the Republican minority of this House. He took the ground, in his report, that Congress had no right or power to forfeit the lands, and made a long argument to maintain his position.

The Democratic minority of that committee, with Judge PAYSON, a Republican Representative from Illinois, filed a minority report, and took the ground boldly, and clearly demonstrated its correctness by argument and authority, that Congress did have both the right and the power to declare the forfeiture. Nothing further, however, was done with the bill during that Congress. The House of the next or Forty-eighth Congress was Democratic. A number of forfeiture bills were again introduced, and the Democratic committee of that House reported them back with a favorable recommendation.

A number of them passed the House after a heated struggle, and went to the Senate, where the most of them died, though a part of them, with great difficulty, were forced through that body. Again, in the Forty-ninth Congress a large number of forfeiture bills were introduced, and again reported favorably by Democratic committees of the House and passed through that body and went to the Senate; and again, though some important measures succeeded in getting through the Senate, a large number of them were smothered. Here is a table showing in detail what portion of these granted lands have been recovered and restored by Congressional enactment.

Forfeiture bills passed by the Forty-eighth Congress.

Date.	Company.	Acres.
June 28, 1884	Iron Mountain of Missouri	300,000
Jan. 31, 1885	Oregon Central	810,880
Feb. 28, 1885	Texas Pacific	18,500,000
	Total	19,610,880

Forfeiture bills passed by the Forty-ninth Congress.

Date.	Company.	Acres.
July 6, 1886	Atlantic and Pacific	23,871,360
July 10, 1886	Tuscaloosa and Mobile	7,000,000
	Mobile and New Orleans
	Elyton and Beard's Bluff
	Memphis and Charleston
	Savannah and Albany
	New Orleans and State Line
	Iron Mountain of Arkansas
	Total	30,871,360

Grand total by both Congresses, 50,482,240 acres.

All of the forfeiture bills introduced were Democratic measures, originating in a Democratic House, reported by a Democratic committee, and urged as a part of the fixed legislative policy of that party. They were obstructed and hindered in the House, and most of them were literally buried in the Republican Senate. So much for what has been already accomplished in the way of recovering the lands granted to aid in the construction of railroads.

But that is not all. Following the lead of the President, and in the spirit of his message, the Democratic House of the Forty-ninth Congress passed a bill, reported from the Democratic Committee on the Public Lands, repealing the commutation clause of the homestead law, the pre-emption law, and other laws under which the public lands had been fraudulently appropriated during a long series of years, and holding whatever was left of the public domain exclusively for actual settlement.

That bill was sent over to the Senate, and that Republican house of lords refused to concur in the measure unless the House would agree to insert a provision confirming all entries, without regard to their character, which had been made up to that time. That the House refused to do, because it was a known fact, ascertained as the result of exhaustive investigations begun and prosecuted by the officers of the present Administration, that frauds upon a large scale had been committed. Many fraudulent entries, involving millions of acres, were then hanging up in the General Land Office, undergoing investigation, with a view to cancellation because of their fraudulent character. The House would not consent by an act of confirmation to sweep all of that work of the Department aside, and permit the thieves to walk off with the plunder, bearing the sanction of our approval; and hence the bill did not become a law.

None the less the President, through his subordinates, has been going steadily on with the work of investigation, canceling fraudulent entries, eradicating evils of various kinds, and perfecting the methods of administering the laws. Here is a table which shows the magnificent result of this great work. In addition to the forfeitures made by the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, the Interior Department, by executive action, during the present Administration has restored over 52,000,000 acres to settlement. Here is the table:

Land actually restored to the public domain.	Acreage.
Lands in granted railroad limits restored	2,108,417.38
Railroad indemnity lands restored	21,323,600.00
Private land claims; withdrawn lands restored	576,000.00
Entries under pre-emption, homestead, timber-culture, desert, mineral, and timber land laws canceled in regular course of examination and proceedings in General Land Office for abandonment, illegality, and other causes	27,460,608.74
Invalid State selections restored to United States	968,747.52
Total actually restored to the public domain and opened to entry and settlement	52,437,373.59

The land thieves had a harvest of twenty years, and they made hay while the sun shone. But the blizzard came with Cleveland. Under his administration the first staggering blow in twenty years was struck at this monstrous corruption. The wolves showed their teeth, snarled and snapped, but the "man of destiny" at the White House has been steadily beating them back. A distinguished representative of the Republican party in official life recently said of the President—

That the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland have made the pretensions of any American citizen respectable. There is no man in this country whose ignorance is so profound, whose antecedents are so degraded, and whose obscurity is so impenetrable that he may not aspire to a Presidential nomination by the Democratic party.

However that may be, this same Grover Cleveland is a "holy terror" to that army of thieves who grew round, sleek, and oily under the easy opportunities offered them during the heyday of Republican exaltation.

The President and his able subordinates in the Land Department have been misrepresented, maligned, and abused with great ingenuity and with unexampled maliciousness. Fighting for the settlers, he has been represented as fighting against them. Striving to protect the public lands against speculation and fraud, he has been charged with desiring to harass honest men and despoil them of their homes. Mud to the right, mud to the left, mud in front, mud everywhere, thrown by all sorts of men at this stalwart champion of the people and brave defender of the public right. But he has kept right on striking sturdy, sledge-hammer blows until his enemies are falling away before him; and this Democratic House, being equally vigilant and active, has gone with him, step by step, in all his efforts to correct these public abuses. The Democratic party has a glorious history in connection with the acquisition and control of the public domain of the Republic. It acquired that matchless domain and has fought many a heroic battle to preserve it for the people. Its achievements in this respect alone are more than sufficient to endear it to the hearts of patriotic and right-thinking men everywhere.

But how different is it with the Republican party in this respect. We might pass by the Credit Mobilier frauds, the whisky frauds, the Navy frauds, and frauds of all kinds great and small, that swept through Congress, hung upon the skirts of the Cabinet, and left a stain like the imprint of a bloody hand upon the inner wall of the White House; we might pass by the corruption of the judiciary and the theft of the Presidency; we might close our lips against the national banks, those insolent masters of the people's currency, and say naught more against the tariff, that plundering scheme smartly devised by cunning rogues to confer special privileges upon a few and enrich one class and one section, while in the name of labor it impoverishes another; we might pass by all things else, and the history which the Republican party has made, and is still making, in connection with our public lands, ought alone to condemn it before all enlightened men as an organization no longer worthy of public confidence, which has long outlived its usefulness, and lags superfluous upon the stage as a putrid reminiscence of an ancient event commemorated by the "bloody shirt." [Applause.]

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to consider briefly the bill immediately under consideration. At the beginning of this Congress a number of bills were introduced in the House to forfeit lands granted in aid of the construction of railroads, which have been favorably reported, and are now pending on the Calendar of the House. Some six weeks ago the Senate passed a bill entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes." That bill has been considered by the House Committee on the Public Lands, and, as it is general in its character, it has been made the basis of the pending measure.

The Public Lands Committee have reported it back to the House with amendments. Indeed, there are three reports from that committee. It may not be inappropriate to remark that a consideration of those reports will forcibly illustrate the position of the Democratic and Republican parties on the subject of forfeiting these railroad land grants.

The bill, as it came from the Senate, proposes to forfeit and restore to the public domain all that part, and only that part, of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads which lie along that portion of the routes over which no road has been built up to this date. That is the bill our committee have been considering. Out of it three propositions have grown and are brought here into the House by the various members of the Public Lands Committee.

First. Four distinguished Republican members of that committee, namely, Messrs. PAYSON, MCKENNA, TURNER of Kansas, and HERMANN, file a report in which they recommend the passage of the Senate bill.

Second. A majority of the committee, through Judge HOLMAN, file a report in which they recommend an amendment to the Senate bill extending its scope so as to embrace and forfeit not only the lands where no road has been yet built, but also all lands across which no road had been built at the expiration of the period limited in the granting acts for the completion of the whole road.

Third. My colleague on the committee, Mr. MCRAE, of Arkansas, and myself have filed a separate report, in which we recommend a forfeiture of the entire grant where there has been a failure of compliance by the corporations with the terms and conditions of the grant. We propose simply to go a little further than the majority recommend in the report filed by Judge HOLMAN.

Let me take one of the roads affected by the bill with which to illustrate the difference in the three propositions. I will take the Southern Pacific of California. On July 27, 1866, Congress granted to the Southern Pacific Company every alternate odd-numbered section, to the amount of ten alternate sections per mile on each side of its line of road, to aid the company in the construction of its road from San Francisco to a point on the Colorado River near the southeastern boundary of California. The grant was made and accepted on the express condition that the whole road, from one end to the other, should be "constructed, equipped, furnished, and completed" by the 4th day of July, 1878.

On July 4, 1878, the company had completed only about 232 miles of the road, which covered little more than one-third of the entire length. Since July 4, 1878, the company has constructed an additional 242 miles of the road, leaving still, at this time, about 150 miles unconstructed.

Now, the Senate bill, the passage of which, substantially without change, is recommended by the four Republican members of the committee who file a minority report, proposes to forfeit only that part of the granted lands lying along the 150 miles of the route where no road has been yet built.

The amendment reported by Judge HOLMAN, on behalf of the majority, proposes to forfeit the lands covered by the Senate bill, and also to go further and forfeit the lands lying along the 242 miles of road constructed since July 4, 1878—the date fixed for the completion of the whole road.

The amendment which I propose embraces all the lands covered by both of these propositions, and goes still farther and seeks to embrace as a part of the forfeiture the lands lying along the 232 miles of road constructed prior to July 4, 1878. In other words, I maintain that where there has been non-compliance with the conditions of the grant, as in the case I have been referring to, the entire grant should be forfeited, and not merely a part of it.

With a view to ascertaining the practical difference in the three propositions, I requested the Commissioner of the General Land Office to have the matter examined and report to me what roads, and the number of acres claimed by each, would be affected by each of the three propositions. In response to that request I received the following letter, accompanied by a table disclosing the information I desired. The letter and the table are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 13, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the statement showing:

1. The number of acres that would be restored to the public domain by an act declaring forfeited all lands opposite the uncompleted portions of land grant railroads at this date.

2. The number of acres which would be restored by an act declaring forfeited all granted lands opposite the portions of lines uncompleted at the expiration of the time limited by the granting act.

3. The number of acres that would be restored by an act declaring the entire grants forfeited of all roads which had failed to complete their lines within the time fixed by the granting acts.

Respectfully,

T. J. ANDERSON,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. WM. J. STONE, M. C., City.

*Lands certified to State for this road prior to May 23, 1872, amounting to 440,700.16 acres, were confirmed to State by act of that date (17 Statute Laws, 159) for sole use and benefit of the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad Company. The lands so confirmed may not be subject to forfeiture.

Thus it will be seen that if the Senate proposition should prevail, the forfeiture would amount to 5,627,436 acres. If the majority amendment should prevail, the forfeiture would amount to 54,323,996 acres—a difference of 49,696,560 acres. If my proposition should be adopted the forfeiture would amount to 78,503,088 acres, or 72,875,662 acres in excess of that covered by the Senate bill, and 24,179,092 acres in excess of that covered by the majority amendment.

As to most of the features of the bill proposed by the House committee we are all substantially agreed. We propose to except from the forfeiture the rights of way of the companies, and sufficient lands for depots, machine-shops, and so forth. We also except from the forfeiture all lands appropriated for town sites, lands in the possession of actual settlers, and all lands held by bona fide purchasers for value. I am in favor of all that. The committee is in accord as to that. I would freely give to the companies whatever lands are reasonably necessary to the convenient operation of their roads. I would not disturb titles and create confusion where towns and cities have been built; nor would I disturb or distress actual settlers, or persons who have in good faith purchased lands from any of the companies for a valuable consideration. Whatever defect there may be in such titles I would remove by an act of confirmation. The reasons for such a course, I assume, are too manifest to require elaboration.

If the companies are protected in their rights of way; if town sites are left undisturbed because excepted from the forfeiture; if honest actual settlers and bona fide purchasers for value are protected from harm by having their titles confirmed; if all equities and all questions of this character are eliminated from the legislation proposed, then there is nothing left but a naked and unincumbered issue between the Government of the United States, representing the people on the one hand, and the railroad companies on the other. It is a simple issue between the grantor and the grantee, with all intervening rights protected. And here arises the only disagreement I have with the majority of my colleagues on the committee, a disagreement predicated on the policy to be pursued with reference to the extent of the forfeitures.

I do not antagonize the amendment proposed by Judge HOLMAN on behalf of the majority. It is offered in good faith and in the spirit of compromise by gentlemen who believe it may prove to be a practical proposition, where a more extreme step might be unavailing. Without doubt it is infinitely better than the Senate bill, because it is far more comprehensive in its scope. My only objection is it does not go far enough, and I am in no mood to accept a compromise touching a question which I regard as involving so much that is momentous and vital to the well-being of the country. The Senate bill is a mere subterfuge. It amounts to nothing. It proposes to restore to the public only the depleted tail-ends of the vast grants made by Congress to railroad companies—the discarded remnants abandoned and thrown aside by the companies because they were esteemed worthless, or because they were not considered sufficiently valuable to justify the expense of "earning" them. That bill proposes graciously to give the roads all they claim and to take back what, as a rule, they do not want. It is a very accommodating measure from a very accommodating, albeit a very exalted, source.

I agree that the amendment reported by the majority is a beneficent and meritorious legislative proposition. It means something. If it should become a law it would be a measure upon which the country would have occasion to congratulate itself. But for all that I insist it does not go far enough. Take the Southern Pacific again as an example. What did this company do? Within the time limited for the construction of the road the company built its line for a distance of 50 miles through a magnificent country on the west side of the Coast Range of mountains, and then leaped clear across the mountains and built another section of 182 miles through a fertile region on the east side of the range.

Thus it endeavored to cover and secure the most valuable lands in the grant. Since 1878 it has extended its line to the Colorado River so as to form its eastern connections with the Atlantic and Pacific road. The Senate bill, if it should become a law, would forfeit only the rough mountain lands, across which no road has been constructed, and which are of little or no value. The majority amendment would cover the same lands, and also the lands lying along the 242 miles constructed since 1878; but the lands adjacent to the 242 miles are of little value as compared to those lying along the 232 miles constructed prior to 1878. The 232 miles cover the cream of the grant. The road will get the best end of the bargain under either the Senate bill or the majority amendment.

Now, if this company did not comply with the conditions of this grant—a grant which it was infamous to have made in the first place—if the title to the lands has not passed irrevocably to the company, if the Government has the legal right to reclaim these lands, then why not do so? Why give to the company all that is of real value and say to a justly outraged public opinion that it must be content to take the meaner share? Mark you, no innocent resident on any of these lands, no innocent purchaser of any of these lands, is in peril here. It is a question between the original parties to the transaction—the Government which made and the corporation which accepted the grant. No other person and no other interest is involved. If it be conceded that Congress has the legal right or power to reclaim these lands and restore them to the public, I can find no satisfactory excuse for failing to do so. If the corporations receiving the grants have any equities to urge in their own behalf, they have neglected their opportunities to do so, though they may expect to have it done for them upon the floors of the House and Senate. In the committee-room they have combated the forfeitures upon purely legal grounds. They claim the lands as a matter of legal right, and deny the power of Congress to disturb them. And it is purely a question of law. I claim that the grants were made upon such conditions as vest in the Government the right to re-enter and take possession after a breach thereof.

I shall not discuss the legal phases of the proposed forfeitures at this time. During the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress I had the honor to report a bill forfeiting the entire grant made to the Southern Pacific, and in that report I took occasion to discuss the legal aspects of the case at great length. Similar reports were made on similar measures during the Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, and Forth-ninth Congresses by Messrs. Cobb, Henley, PAYSON, and others. The RECORD is full of speeches made by the best lawyers in the House upon the same subject; and as all those reports and speeches are accessible to the members of the House, and as I have no doubt that this whole question has been attentively considered by every gentleman who hears me, I would esteem it an act of supererogation to venture into it again at this time. I shall quote but one authority, that of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], who wrote the minority report on the pending measure, in which he advises the House to adopt the Senate bill. During the Forty-seventh Congress that gentleman was a member of the Judiciary Committee. A bill had been introduced and referred to that committee forfeiting the lands granted to the Northern Pacific. That was the pioneer forfeiture bill. That company was required to complete its road in 1879. Its grant was made upon the condition that it should do so. It did not construct its entire road by 1879. At the expiration of the period limited for its completion only a comparatively small part had been constructed. The road is yet unconstructed, and so the question of forfeiture was fairly presented in the bill to which I have alluded. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] was then chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and, acting for the majority of that committee, made an adverse report upon the bill. I have already referred to that report in an earlier stage of my remarks. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], acting with the Democratic minority, prepared and presented a minority report advocating the passage of the bill. From that report, made July 24, 1882, I quote:

> Two questions are presented in the bill before us: First, is there the right of forfeiture as to all unpatented lands within the limits of the grant to this road, so that the United States may revest itself with the title thereto, as in its former estate, by declaration of forfeiture; and, second, if the right of such forfeiture is found to exist, is it policy to exercise it? * * *
> We assert that the power to declare an absolute forfeiture of this land grant is in Congress. * * *

Again:

> We conclude, then, on the legal question of power in Congress, that it has the right to declare the title to all unpatented lands in the grant forfeited and revest the United States with it, so that it can be restored to the public domain, open to sale and settlement under existing laws.

That is what the gentleman from Illinois had to say in 1882 about the power of Congress to make these forfeitures.

While a similar bill forfeiting the same lands was being discussed in the House in 1886, during the Forty-ninth Congress, he referred to his report from which I have quoted, and reaffirmed the position he had then taken. During that debate in 1886, in which that distinguished gentleman bore a part so conspicuous and honorable, he said:

> I am only now discussing the question of power, of strict legal right. We had the power to assert this (right of forfeiture) in 1879, and the authorities I have cited show that we have it now beyond question.

Again in the same speech:

> I have shown, sir, that under the law we have the power, the legal right, to assert this forfeiture.

Later on in the same debate and in the same speech, addressing himself to the policy of the forfeiture, and estimating the value of the lands involved in that measure at $100,000,000, the gentleman from Illinois gave vehement expression to this eloquent and forcible observation:

> I said, also, that if this land belongs to the people, nothing should constrain us to yield it to the company except the strongest equitable considerations; equities which are equal to legal obligations. With confidence I submit that with what the House bill proposes, the liberality of its provisions in what it permits the company to retain, the facts in the history of the building of the road, and the action of the company toward the people—monopolistic, exacting, and unyielding always—I earnestly insist that to make this additional donation of one hundred millions of property would be an act of stupendous folly.

With all these declarations of the gentleman from Illinois I agreed then, and I agree now. I hope, Mr. Speaker, I may say without offense, for I am sure no offense is intended, that it has been to me and to others a source of profound regret that the erudite, able, and distinguished gentleman from Illinois should apparently give up the fight, strike his colors, and surrender to the enemy against whom he has struck so many valiant blows in the past. In his minority report he says:

> The views of the Senate are now well understood.
> It has taken the ground that no power exists to declare such forfeitures as are proposed by the majority, and would not agree to the policy if the power existed.

But it agrees, by the bill sent us, to a forfeiture of all lands opposite unconstructed road.

But there is nothing new in that. We have all understood from time almost immemorial that that was the position of the Republican Senate; and that is the very position against which, until now, the gentleman from Illinois has waged open and aggressive war. Sir, I repeat, it is an occasion for grave regret to me that my distinguished friend has deemed it his duty to throw the great weight of his name and influence upon that side of this important contention which he has so often and so eloquently denounced. I have never parted company with any man with more reluctance or with greater regret. But if my friend hesitates and halts because he has lost heart and hope, I am consoled with the knowledge that there are many brave men in the ranks of the Democratic party who have sworn never to yield an inch, and who will go on with this fight until victory is won and right is triumphant. [Applause.] For myself I insist as a matter of law, as a matter of equity and good conscience, as well as of public right, that there should be no half-way measures of compromise in this business.

In the integrity and correctness of my position I feel the most unhesitating confidence. I believe we should go forward fearlessly and discharge our duty, and if this important legislation should fail again, as it has failed in the past, let the responsibility rest upon those who obstruct and prevent it. The Democratic party, against great odds, has already accomplished much. During the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses we originated and succeeded in passing bills forfeiting 50,482,240 acres, and since March 4, 1885, the Interor Department has by canceling fraudulent entries, opening railroad indemnity lands to settlement, and by other means, restored 52,437,373 acres to the public domain, making a total restoration in a little over three years of 102,929,613 acres.

We have also during this Congress passed through the House a bill, as we did in the last Congress, repealing all laws under which frauds have been committed against the public lands, and so remodeled and perfected our whole system of laws on this subject as to protect the remainder of our public lands from unlawful appropriation, and preserve them to the beneficent uses of actual settlement. That bill is now in the Senate.

This is a proud work we have accomplished, and now, my Democratic friends, let us complete it by passing this amendment which I propose, adding over 78,000,000 of acres more to the great total of lands restored. The people of the country expect us to do this. It is our duty to do it. The Democratic party is the anchor of hope to the common people of this Republic. They look to it and watch it as a wanderer watches the star which guides his way. There need be no fear. The struggle which this old party is making for the people against entrenched privilege, become arrogant and powerful by long indulgence, may be so prolonged and arduous as to test the endurance and courage of the bravest; but we are as sure to win as that God reigns and upholds the right with His omnipotent hand. The Democratic party needs only to be brave and faithful. And it will be. Olea bore the proud banner of his knightly chieftain down upon the red field of de la Espina, and yielding there to unequal combat, fighting step by step until all his wearied comrades had fled or fallen, stood at last alone against all Aragon, till

They hew'd the hauberk from his breast,
The helmet from his head

And then fell with his wild war-cry upon his bloody but defiant lips. Mr. Speaker, Candespina's intrepid standard-bearer was not more devoted, faithful, or steadfast than the Democratic party has been, and shall be, in the cause of guarding the free homes of our free people upon this noble empire in the West, acquired by the prowess of its arms and the genius of its statesmanship. [Great applause.]

Mr. RICE. I believe the substitute of the majority of the committee is bad in law and equity, and bad in morals, and can never be enforced in any court of christendom.

The Senate bill is a practical measure, legal and equitable and just to all interests, rendering no titles insecure nor disturbing securities in the hands of the innumerable investors of small means whose money was used in the construction of these railroads, and it will forever settle the vexed questions which have too long harassed the people settled along the lines of these great highways and perplexed Congress for so many years.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. Res. 192) relating to the pages of the House of Representatives.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the concurrent resolution (H. Res. 191) relating to the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House concur in the Senate amendment, which is simply to make the resolution joint instead of concurrent. This becomes necessary in order to send the resolution to the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message further announced that a bill of the following title had become a law without the approval of the President:

An act (H. R. 2656) to increase the pension of John Taylor.

The message further announced that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, namely:

An act (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 878) for the relief of John D. Maxted and Robert J. B. Newcombe;

An act (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan;

An act (H. R. 4691) for the relief of John P. Hageman;

An act (H. R. 8343) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Noxubee River at or near Gainesville, in the State of Alabama;

An act (H. R. 2097) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek, in the city of Michigan City, Ind.;

An act (H. R. 2528) authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Red River of the North by the North Dakota and Pacific Railroad Company;

An act (H. R. 2527) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North by the Duluth, Rainy Lake River and Southwestern Railway Company;

An act (H. R. 4320) to authorize the construction of a graveled or macadamized road from the city of New Berne, N. C., to the national cemetery near said city;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 187) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 188) authorizing the loan of tents and camp equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 178) granting leave of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States;

An act (H. R. 7665) granting a pension to John E. Lewis;

An act (H. R. 7577) granting a pension to Lewis C. Keck;

An act (H. R. 7025) granting a pension to Eva Lina;

An act (H. R. 6478) granting a pension to Elizabeth Smith;

An act (H. R. 6302) granting a pension to Benjamin Contel;

An act (H. R. 6300) granting a pension to Samson M. David;

An act (H. R. 9487) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia P. Hall;

An act (H. R. 9321) granting a pension to Ruth Ann Potter;

An act (H. R. 9200) granting a pension to John F. Huckaba;

An act (H. R. 7815) granting a pension to Mary A. West;

An act (H. R. 8779) granting a pension to Mary Dickinson;

An act (H. R. 6006) granting a pension to Mary Flora;

An act (H. R. 3868) granting a pension to Cynthia Wetherell;

An act (H. R. 5544) granting a pension to John Shine;

An act (H. R. 5789) granting a pension to Ellen M. Thiers;

An act (H. R. 5787) granting a pension to Charlotte E. Dilley;

An act (H. R. 5792) granting a pension to Mary E. Wells;

An act (H. R. 4744) granting a pension to Mathew H. Reynolds;

An act (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher; and

An act (H. R. 8372) authorizing the sale of a portion of the Winnebago reservation, in the State of Nebraska.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendment, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, to the bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. FARWELL, and Mr. CALL managers on the part of the Senate.

Also that the Senate insisted upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK managers on the part of the Senate.

FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN LAND GRANTS.

[Mr. PAYSON withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Whatever time I have remaining I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

[Mr. TOWNSHEND withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. McRAE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

[Mr. MONTGOMERY withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. MCRAE. I yield for twelve minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I have offered two amendments. One is an alternative proposition to the other, both relating to the grant of land to the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company, made on the 3d day of June, 1856; the purpose of each is—one going a little further than the other—not to prevent a forfeiture of the lands, but to protect in one case the purchaser, and in the other to protect those purchasers who are also settlers.

These lands are peculiarly circumstanced. The act, as I have said, was passed on the 3d day of June, 1856, granting alternate sections, six sections to the mile. Between April 26, 1860, and January 3, 1861, the Land Department of the Government certified to the State of Alabama, under the grant, all these lands as if they had been fully earned. These certificates, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court, had the effect really of patents, or such effect as patents would have had.

Now, the first 84 miles, beginning at Girard and running southwest as far as Troy, were completed by 1870. Then there is a gap of uncompleted road. These 84 miles to Troy were completed by the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company under its charter and in compliance with the terms of the act; but there were 63 miles completed from the Mobile end in the direction of Troy that were not built by the Girard Railroad Company, but by another company, the Mobile and Great Northern, under a contract and agreement with the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company that the Mobile and Great Northern should be entitled to the land grant if it should complete that portion of the road extending from Mobile to Pollard. The Mobile and Girard was to meet the Mobile and Great Northern at Pollard.

That is one peculiarity of this case; that part of the completed road was not built by the company to which the grant was made, but by another company. In equity and justice it amounts to the same thing. Congress granted the land in order to secure the construction of the road, but legally the Mobile and Great Northern was not the company to which the grant had been made, and so it could not in law claim any portion of the lands. The company to which the lands had been granted sold many of them, many of which were coterminous with the line of uncompleted road, that is, along the lines where the road had not been completed, but all along the line it had been laid down and definitely located. The purchasers of these lands had a right to rely on the titles they purchased, for according to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Railroad Land Company vs. Courtright, in 21 Wallace, the right of the railroad company to sell was not confined to those lands lying contiguous to and coterminous with the completed portion of its line. I read from the syllabus:

It was held under a statute exactly similar to that making the grant in this case:

First. That the act of Congress authorized the sale of one hundred and twenty sections in advance of the construction of any part of the road, and that it was only as to the sale of the remaining sections that the provision requiring a previous completion of 20 miles applied.

Second. That there was no restriction upon the State as to the place where the 120 sections should be selected along the line of the road, except that they should be included within a continuous length of 20 miles on each side, and that they might be selected from lands adjoining the eastern end of the road or the western end, or along the central portion.

Now, if gentlemen have followed me, this case fits the circumstances exactly. The Mobile and Girard Railroad Company had the right to sell land not only along the completed portion of the road, but also between Troy and Pollard, and between Pollard and Mobile.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the first amendment which I sent up provides for the protection and confirmation of the titles of those who bought that land. The grant had been made by Congress embracing these lands. According to the granting act the Commissioner of the General Land Office was to certify the lands to the State when they had been earned. The Commissioner made that certificate. The State of Alabama was to cede them when the railroad company was entitled to them. The State had ceded them. What more could a purchaser ask? What better guaranty of title could he demand? Here was pledged the good faith of the State. Here was pledged the good faith of the Federal Government by the action of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I insist, sir, that in equity and good conscience these purchasers had a full and complete right to rely on these acts of the State government and of the Federal Government, and when they paid their money for these lands this Government ought to protect them. I ought to have more than twelve minutes to argue these two amendments, but the facts are so plain I do not see how the House can mistake them. But if this amendment should be voted down my alternative proposition is to protect all actual settlers who have color of title, either by purchase from the railroad company or at tax sale. In the Forty-ninth Congress I introduced a bill forfeiting these lands and protecting purchasers and settlers. The committee considered the whole question and finally reported a bill which protected the settlers on that land as fully and as completely as I now ask by the terms of this second amendment.

In fact I have simply taken the bill as reported by the Public Lands Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress and asked the House to vote upon and ratify what the Public Lands Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, when they considered this question particularly and fully, decided unanimously was right and proper. That is the second amendment—the alternative amendment I offer; and I desire the attention of the House particularly to that. Its only purpose is, to use the language frequently used in this debate, to save to free men free homes. The Public Lands Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress decided that under the circumstances Congress ought to ratify the title of every one of these settlers up to the extent of 320 acres each.

Now, a homestead, it is true, is only 160 acres. This amendment undertakes to protect settlers up to the extent of 320 acres; but the amendment is exactly in the words of the bill of the Forty-eighth Congress, reported unanimously by every member of the committee, Republican and Democrat. Why did that committee come to that conclusion after full consideration? Because those lands, though fit for agricultural purposes, are really poor lands. Their value as grazing lands would help them out as farming lands, but a settler would require more acres to make a farm than if the lands were rich. The committee heard testimony. They considered the case fully. They thought, under the circumstances, where parties had bought these lands and settled upon them, the Government could afford to allow them 320 acres each. It is nothing but simple justice, the plainest equity, I demand for these honest settlers. By honest toil they have built homes for themselves. In the sweat of their faces they are earning their bread. I appeal to this House not to turn them out shelterless on the world.

It is true, sir, that the bill if passed by the Senate will allow these parties to homestead this land. But why should they be compelled to pay again what they have already paid? Why should we force them to pay the fees required by law to the officers of the land office, to make all the proof and to reside there five years, when evidence has already been adduced completely satisfactory to every member of the Public Lands Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, who examined this question carefully, that they have bought and paid in good faith for that land?

Here then, Mr. Speaker, are the two amendments. I will not detain the House with further discussion; but in conclusion will simply repeat that the first of these amendments seeks to protect the purchaser, those who purchased in good faith, under the peculiar circumstances surrounding this grant. If that is voted down the second amendment asks simply that the titles of actual bona fide settlers up to the amount of 320 acres of that poor land shall be confirmed. I certainly think these amendments will commend themselves to the House.

I reserve the remaining two minutes of my time.

Mr. MCRAE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS].

[Mr. CLEMENTS withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. MCRAE. I believe I have ten minutes left. I will use five minutes now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has ten minutes left.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, in closing the debate on the amendment proposed by my friend from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and myself I shall deal with the bill and amendments and not undertake to discuss at length the legal questions involved. I discussd the question of the power to forfeit in my report upon the Northern Pacific grant and now refer to what I then said upan that subject There is such a variety of opinion as to what can be done and so little difference of opinion as to what ought to be done that I think Congress, the law-making power, should not hesitate to do what it thinks right and just rather than quibble over technical legal questions. It is the duty of Congress to make laws and the duty of the courts to construe them. Let us pass the bill and leave the construction to be placed on it to the courts. Under the leave to print I may hereafter have something more to say upon the legal phase of the case as well as the political features of the forfeitures.

Ten minutes is too short a time for me to undertake it to-day even if it were necessary.

We have heard and read much about the law bearing upon the question of power, and of conditions-precedent and conditions-subsequent. But the great central fact stands out in bold relief that the grants were upon the condition that the roads were to be constructed on or before a fixed time, and that this condition was not performed as the Government and the people had a right to expect.

If the positions were reversed the corporations would have no scruples about declaring a forfeiture. It is perfectly clear that nothing can be accomplished without a legislative forfeiture, and we are all agreed that some bill should be passed by this Congress. The important question to be settled to-day is the extent to which we will go. We have three propositions now pending:

1. The Senate proposition, which is concurred in by four Republican members of the House committee, to forfeit the lands where no road has been built, involving less than 6,000,000 acres as is shown by the Department table read by the gentleman from Missouri.

2. The substitute of the majority of the House committee to forfeit all lands except for road constructed within the time fixed in the granting acts, involving over 50,000,000 acres.

3. The proposition which my colleague and I insist upon, to forfeit the entire grant where there has been a failure to perform the conditions of the grant, involving about 70,000,000 acres.

As for myself, I insist that as a matter of law, as a matter of equity and good conscience, as well as of public right, there should be no compromise in this matter, and therefore feel it my duty to insist, as I did in the last Congress, upon a forfeiture of the entire grant where there was a failure to perform the conditions imposed. If it is not done I shall wash my hands of responsibility for such failure. I am for the third proposition as stated. If it is rejected then I want the second or committee proposition. These different propositions have each been fairly and ably presented by gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate; the first by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]; the second by the chairman of the committee [Mr. HOLMAN]; and the third by my eloquent and forcible friend from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I fully agree to all he has said. They all agree that Congress has the power under the law and the decisions to forfeit the whole of the grant where there was a failure to perform the conditions made and accepted.

The rights of purchasers and settlers have been carefully protected in the committee bill, and will not be affected by any of the amendments. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] does not claim that the roads are entitled to any equitable consideration, but rather confesses that none is due them. He thinks the Senate proposition is all that we will be able to pass; and is therefore willing to yield and take almost nothing when at the same time he asserts that nothing more can ever be done. He says that the Senate will never agree to forfeit any land for constructed road.

Mr. PAYSON. I did not say that. Quote me fairly.

Mr. McRAE. What did you say?

Mr. PAYSON. I said that none ever had been forfeited.

Mr. McRAE. And you said more than that. You will remember that when you made the statement I interrupted you and asked you why, with such views, you wanted the reservation that is contained in your third section? I will ask you the same question now.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not believe the Senate will vote such a forfeiture, but I think the House may. Quote me fairly.

Mr. McRAE. I quoted you just as you state your position and belief now. I did not represent you as saying that the House would not pass any bill forfeiting more than you now propose, because I know that you would make no such statement in the face of the record heretofore made by the House upon this question. The House has passed such bills, and I believe it will pass this one. Why should we fail to do our duty because the Senate does not agree to what we think is right.

Have we been trifling with the people upon this question for the last eight years? After the hard fight we have had, shall we give the country a valueless forfeiture of the odds and ends of such land as the roads do not want and some of them would like to be relieved of when those who present such a proposition say that nothing more can ever be done? Mr. Speaker, I trust a roll-call will give back an emphatic negative to this question. How comes the sudden change in my friend from Illinois? Since the Forty-seventh Congress he has stubbornly refused to yield to the demands of the Senate, but now surrenders without a contest. If the fight has been kept up that the companies might earn more land only to be abandoned when they get such as they desire, then it ought never to have been commenced. We ought to make the roads complete their lines over the mountains and deserts or forfeit the whole line for the failure to do so.

Is it right to let them take their own time in building, and to only build when and where it suits them, and thus take all the lands of any value and leave the people without either land or road? The Government expected continuous lines of road over which its mails could be carried at reduced rates, over which the commerce of the country could be transported across the deserts and over the mountains of the west. It has waited more than twenty years, and now we are told that a part of the country is too rough to build over and that so much may be forfeited and that the other is "earned." I deny that any is earned until the line is completed. We have no power to make them build, but can and should retake the whole estate when they have not. Nothing less will satisfy an outraged people whose lands have been withheld from them so long by such methods. I hope the Democrats will look this proposition squarely in the face, and meet it with an emphasis that will not be misunderstood by the country. There is nothing in it except a naked issue between the United States on the one hand and the defaulting, grasping corporations on the other.

There are no settlers and purchasers behind whom the roads can longer take shelter. We protect them fully. Answer by your votes whether you are for the people's rights or the roads. In the late Republican platform our friends on the other side take some credit for what has been done in the way of forfeitures. Your action here to-day will test the sincerity of that declaration. Let us have no evasion or dodging. The issue is joined, and if we can not win in this tribunal we will let the people know the reason why. If it be true that the Senate as it is now organized will not pass this bill, let us do our duty, and if we fail then appeal to the country and elect a Senate that will. I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYSON. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES.]

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed remarkable to my mind that a law-making body like this should on so many occasions have proven itself utterly regardless of existing law. It would not do to say that members of such a high and dignified body were ignorant, but they certainly have in many instances, in respect to this particular kind of legislation, been regardless of the law and legal rules of procedure. When this question of the forfeiture of railroad land grants first came up in the Forty-eighth Congress I declared in favor of the forfeiture of every acre of land granted to railroad corporations which could be legally forfeited, and I have never varied from that declaration.

But, sir, I did not mean to include in that declaration a proposition or intention to engage in a scheme to confiscate private property. The legal questions involved in this matter have not been discussed on this occasion, but they have been briefly and correctly stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], who is one of the best informed members of this House on the questions now in hand. All the grants to railroad corporations, directly or indirectly, have been made upon condition. Every lawyer who has not forgotten what he read in the hornbooks of the law remembers the definition of estates upon condition. They are of two kinds, one on condition-precedent and the other on condition-subsequent. Now, if any gentleman earnestly and honestly desires to arrive at a proper conclusion as to what lands he should vote to forfeit, if he will but observe and properly apply these principles he will easily ascertain.

Observe the well-defined distinction between the different kinds of conditions and he can not be mistaken as to what lands are forfeitable and what are non-forfeitable. A grant of an estate upon condition-subsequent vests the title in the grantee, subject to be defeated by the grantor only for a failure to perform some condition attached to it. No one but the grantor can claim the return of the estate for the failure of the grantee, and the estate remains in the grantee unimpaired until the grantor takes advantage of the failure to perform the condition.

The position of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] in their proposition to forfeit all lands granted to every railroad corporation where all the conditions have not been performed, is a logical position, if their premises are correct. They assume that these grants were upon conditions precedent; and it is a correct legal principle that wherever an estate is granted upon conditions precedent, the title does not and can not vest until all the conditions are performed. But, unfortunately for their position, the courts have held every time the question has come before them—and the question has been adjudged in more than one case by the Supreme Court—that these grants are made upon conditions subsequent. This disposes of the position of those two gentlemen and shows it to be utterly untenable.

Now, as to the position of the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I am constrained to remark that his is the most utterly illogical position that any lawyer in any proceeding ever assumed. I say in "any proceeding," because while this is partly a legislative it is partly a judicial proceeding. It is similar in many respects to the common-law proceeding of "office found;" as, for instance, in the case of forfeiture of lands claimed by an alien. At common law, where an estate was granted to a private individual on conditions subsequent, the grantor, if those conditions were not performed, had but to re-enter upon the land, whereby he was reinvested with his entire former estate. By a misapplication of this principle to these railroad land grants many gentlemen have been misled.

These grants are different from a grant at common law in this respect: Every one of them contains a section providing that when the railroad company performs the conditions by constructing a road to the extent of a section of 20, 30, or 50 miles, and the same is inspected and accepted as provided by law, the coterminous lands are earned and the company is entited to patents therefor. Only therein do these grants differ from a grant at common law. Such a provision in the grant severs or chops up the contract into sections, and in law is a separate grant, but on the same terms for each section.

Now, whenever the time expires within which the road is to be constructed, the right of the Government to declare a forfeiture as to all lands not coterminous with the portion of the road then constructed is perfect and complete, saving and excepting lieu lands within indemnity limits for those not found in place. The United States can not re-enter as an individual grantor could, but by judicial proceeding or legislative enactment can declare the forfeiture; that is to declare the resumption of title for conditions broken; and then the Government becomes repossessed of the title, not to all the lands, but all with which the contract permits the Government to reinvest itself.

To illustrate: A grant of land was made for a road to be constructed in four sections, of 25 miles each, within two years. At the expiration of the time, two sections or 50 miles only have been completed and accepted. Congress declares a forfeiture. Of what portion of the grant are the United States thereby reinvested? Only with the lands along the 50 miles where no road has been built.

The gentleman from Indiana in his report, speaking as the organ of a majority of his committee, asserts truly that nearly all the granting acts contain a provision substantially that "if said road is not com-plered within — years, no further sales shall be made and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

The language employed is in substance that if the road is not completed within a prescribed number of years no further sales shall be made, and the lands of the grant unsold shall revert to the United States; and then he proceeds to give a construction to that language which, if he has not forgotten all the law he ever knew, he must know is erroneous. He takes the words according to their literal and usual import, not according to their legal signification. He ignores the universal principle of construction that wherever words used in a statute or deed have a well-known technical signification or a well-defined statutory definition, they must receive that construction. The Supreme Court in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wallace, held that a grant of this character possesses the common-law attributes of a grant in presenti upon conditions-subsequent, and that the provision that no further sales should be made if the road should not be completed within the time limited, and the lands unsold should revert to the United States, did not reinvest them with the title, but that something more was necessary, an affirmative act, a legislative declaration of forfeiture or a judicial proceeding, was necessary to recover the title.

Yet in the face of that decision (reaffirmed in Van Wyck vs. Kneavels, 106 United States Reports) the gentleman from Indiana in his report quotes from all these different grants, and says it was manifestly the intention of Congress that if the condition was not performed by building the roads within the time named the Government should repossess itself of the titles to these lands. That is what I call sinning against light and knowledge. No one is so blind as those who refuse to see. We must be honest and law-abiding if we would command the respect and confidence of the intelligent, patriotic, and substantial people of this country. Nothing good is to be accomplished by demagoging for the votes of the commune and the tramps.

> This above all—To thine ownself be true;
> And it must follow, as the night the day,
> Thou canst not then be false to any man.

I ask only that we shall follow the law as it has been adjudged. The fact that a great many of these grants were improvident and ought not to have been made is of no consequence. The question is what shall we do with them as they now stand? In the Forty-eighth Congress I made the first report—a minority report of the Committee on Public Lands—against this proposition of wholesale forfeiture, in the case of the Louisiana "backbone" land grant. The legal questions raised in that case were referred to the Judiciary Committee and a report was made by the then chairman of that committee, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, Mr. J. Randolph Tucker, 13 members concurring with him in holding that under the circumstances the Government had no right to declare the forfeiture.

Mr. ROGERS. And no power.

Mr. OATES. When I say "no right" I mean no power. After an elaborate debate upon that proposition to forfeit that grant the House voted down the measure and refused to declare the forfeiture. Yet if you pass the substitute reported by the gentleman from Indiana, representing the majority of the Committee on Public Lands, you vote to forfeit every acre of that grant, as well as many others. In that case the road was all constructed five years after the time named in the granting act had expired; and the bill to declare a forfeiture was introduced more than a year after the cars were running from one end of the line to the other. The United States, by act of Congress, had fixed a lower allowance of compensation to the company for carrying the mails on it, in consequence of the land grant, and the House properly refused to declare a forfeiture. But the substitute for the Senate bill now under consideration goes behind that decision and forfeits every acre of that grant. It proposes the forfeiture of all the lands coterminous with 1,500 miles of completed road on the Northern Pacific, and also forfeits the grant in part to more than a dozen other completed roads.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has been in public life almost continuously for forty-five years, and during the earlier part of that period as the judge of a court and expounder of the law. All through his long and honorable service he has at all times exhibited a high order of intelligence, large and varied information, in view of which I am amazed at his assumed ignorance of the law touching these railroad land grants and their liability to forfeiture. He admits that they are grants upon conditions-subsequent. He knows that the title was vested in the grantees subject to be defeated only for non-performance of the conditions, and that no one but the grantor could take advantage of the breach of the condition, and that the title of the grantee is not impaired by the lapse of time until the grantor actually declares the forfeiture, which may never be done. (See Blackstone's Commentaries on Conditional Estates, and 4 Kent, 138.) The distinguished gentleman can not be ignorant of these fundamental legal principles. He is presumed to be familiar with them, and yet he contends that "time is of the essence of the grants." He deduces from his premise the conclusion that "even if title did vest in the railroad company, there was an absolute want of power to make sales beyond the lands earned within the specified periods," which is a complete travesty of the plainest provisions and principles of the law. In the case of Denny vs. Dodson, in 32 Federal Reporter, decided by the United States circuit court for the State of Oregon last November, the very question involved in the substitute by its provision for the forfeiture of lands coterminous with sections of road constructed and accepted after the expiration of the time named in the granting act for the completion of the road was decided, Justice Field delivering the opinion and Judge Deady concurring. The action was to recover a tract of land which the plaintiff acquired from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. It was of the grant made to that company by Congress and coterminous with a section of that road constructed, completed, inspected, and accepted after the time for the completion of the entire road had expired.

The court said:

> The contention of the defendant is that, upon failure of the company to complete the entire road within the period fixed by the act, or the supplementary act, the title to the land not then earned failed, and could be restored to the company only by affirmative action on the part of Congress; in other words, that the completion of the entire road within the time designated was a condition precedent to the vesting of title to all lands not previously earned by the construction of a road coterminous with them. For this position we find no warrant in any provision of the act. The conditions attached to the grant are conditions subsequent, and not precedent. * * * While a legal title to the sections described, as distinguished from a merely equitable or an inchoate interest, passed to the railroad company by the act of July 2, 1864, it was not a title which could be disposed of by the company without the consent of Congress, except as each 25-mile section of the road was completed and accepted by the President, so as to cut off the right of the United States to compel the application of the lands to the purposes for which they were granted, or to prevent their forfeiture in case of the company's failure to perform the conditions of the grant. The road opposite to the premises in controversy having been completed and accepted, the title, however imperfect whilst incumbered, if it may be so termed, by the uses to which the lands were to be applied, has become perfect and indefeasible.

It is contended by the advocates of the Holman substitute that there can be no such thing as a waiver or estoppel of the Government. That is true in the sense that it has the physical power to do as it pleases. It is true upon the doctrine of monarchical governments that the king can do no wrong. But that dogma has and ought to have but a very limited application to ours, which is the people's Government, and all the officers, legislative, judicial, and executive, from the President down, are but the trusted servants of the people. Nor is it the practice of our Government to seek shelter from responsibility to its citizens by the invocation of such undemocratic doctrine as that it is exempt from liability under legal principles which would make a citizen suitor liable. The United States allow suits to be brought against them in all matters of contract, and as defendant to a suit have no advantages in law over the humblest citizen. These railroad land grants are contracts, and are determinable by the same laws and rules of construction that are applicable to the cases of individuals, with one exception: the deed or grant of an individual is to be taken most strongly against the grantor.

A legislative grant is to be taken and constructed most strictly against the grantee. That is so, because a legislative grant to an individual or corporation is partial; it is supposed to be favoritism and against the interest of the body-politic. Hence the grantee must show affirmatively and clearly that what he claims to have passed to him by the grant actually did pass, and if there be doubt the court will solve it by deciding for the grantor. But this goes only to the construction of the deed or granting act; it is the rule by which to determine what passed by it, and furnishes no aid whatever in determining whether a condition-subsequent attached to the deed or grant has or has not been performed.

Mr. Speaker, I have maintained the same opinion I now hold in respect to these land-grant forfeitures ever since I investigated them for months in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress. I spoke and voted in that Congress and the Forty-ninth as I do now, to forfeit every acre of lands granted to any railroad company which is legally forfeitable.

But because many of the grants were improvidently and, it may be, corruptly made is not a good reason why I should now violate the law by voting to divest vested rights. The Supreme Court of the United States decided before I was born that it was wrong to undertake to do that. But the position of the gentleman from Indiana is explainable on his supposition of consistency. He was in Congress and voted against nearly every one of the grants twenty-five or thirty years ago, and he is continuing the fight he then made regardless of the changes that have taken place in the mean time. He is industriously and persistently trying to dig up yesterday, and from present indications he is likely to succeed, so far as this House is concerned, regardless of consequences.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] in his very able minority report presents a substitute which is in substance the bill which the Senate passed upon this subject and which proposes the forfeiture of all lands granted to railroad companies where they have not up to this time constructed any road. To illustrate: where lands were granted to build a road 100 miles long and the company has built only 50 miles, that bill proposes to allow the company to retain one-half the grant and to forfeit the other half. It gives them the lands they earned and takes away from them what they have not earned. I think that will strike the mind of the average citizen of old-fashioned honesty as a pretty fair proposition.

My friend from Illinois has been severely criticised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] for an alleged inconsistency in his course on this question. Judge PAYSON is quite able to take care of himself and does not need assistance from me. But I will say in this connection that he is the best informed member of this House touching land-grants to railroads and has been as zealous and able an advocate of forfeitures as any here, and I think has contributed more to that end than any present member of this House.

He may not always have been perfectly consistent. He differed with me in some cases where I thought he was in the wrong, and proposed to go too far; but it does not lie in the mouths of those who now criticise him to find fault with him, for if he has erred in the past it was on their side of the question.

He very forcibly presented in his minority report the waiver of the right of forfeiture as to sections of road constructed after the expiration of the time named in the grant for the completion of the whole road by Congress—the very organization now attempting to declare such forfeiture—requiring the railroad company to carry the mails at reduced rates on account of the land grant over the identical sections of the road which they now say were not built in time, and for that reason they will take the lands away from them.

I fully concur in the views of the gentleman from Illinois, who wants practical business legislation on this subject. I will cheerfully vote for his substitute, or the Senate bill. I spoke in advocacy of the Senate bill declaring a forfeiture of the unearned lands of the Northern Pacific two years ago, when just such a substitute as that now proposed was adopted by the House. The Senate refused to concur, and no forfeiture was made. It was as good to that company as a new grant, for they have gone on constructing their road and earning the lands.

The law requires the President to appoint inspectors to inspect it whenever any land-grant company reports the completion of a section of new road, and if they report favorably the section is accepted. Whenever Congress creates a tribunal or commission to determine any matter or controversy to which the Government is a party, the decision, being within the jurisdiction conferred, is conclusive and final, unless set aside by a court of equity for fraud. (Johnson vs. Townsley, 13 Wallace.)

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in the policy nor politics of making war upon railroad companies unnecessarily and illegally. I would hold them to a strict observance of the law, and for every breach of it I would make them pay the penalty according to the law of the land in its regular and orderly course of administration. That is the really wise, politic, and just thing to do. In the summary of the gentleman from Indiana of the forfeitures declared by Congress he has fallen into an error of 7,000,000 acres claimed to have been forfeited from the Memphis and Charleston Railroad Company. That company never accepted the grant, not an acre of it, and no lands were ever withdrawn from market on account of that grant. By an examination or inquiry at the General Land Office the gentleman will find what I say to be true.

The grant to another road in Alabama, which is now known as the Selma, Rome and Dalton, is in part proposed to be forfeited by the substitute reported by the gentleman from Indiana, notwithstanding the fact that Congress in 1872 passed an act, which I hold in my hand, confirming to said company all of the lands which had been certified to the State for its benefit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes longer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will that extend the time beyond 4 o'clock?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I must object.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman from Indiana will not object I will call his attention to some other features in this bill which I think he will be willing to amend.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not object to extending the time for ten minutes, five to be allotted to each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection to extending the time for ten minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the next objection I make to the substitute proposed by the majority of the Committee on Public Lands goes to the second section, which reads as follows:

That the forfeiture hereby declared shall not extend to lands adjacent to and coterminous with any portion of any such railroad which is now completed which were sold by the State or corporation to which any such grant was made, or by the corporation controlling or owning such railroad prior to January 1, 1888, to bona fide purchasers for a good and valuable consideration.

Now, to illustrate the operation of that provision, take the case of the railroad through my district, the road of which my colleague [Mr. HERBERT] spoke awhile ago—the Mobile and Girard. It extends 84 miles from Columbus, Ga., to Troy, Pike County, Alabama.

It was completed within the time named in the granting act to Union Springs, a distance of 54 miles. The war came on and prevented the company from doing more until after the peace, when they constructed 30 miles more. This substitute would forfeit all except the lands earned by the construction of the 54 miles. There were no public lands, or but a very small quantity, within the 6 miles on either side or the 15-mile indemnity limit, coterminous with the constructed portion of the road which the company could take. The grant was according to the construction of a similar act by the Supreme Court—a grant of a certain quantity of sections of land, and if they can not be found in place, may be selected the nearest that is practicable anywhere within the indemnity limits.

The company necessarily took these lands along the line beyond the point where the road had been completed, because there were no lands, or not sufficient lands, adjacent to the completed portions which were available. These lands they have sold to settlers, poor but honest farmers; and yet by the very provisions of the pending substitute which the gentleman from Indiana wants this House to adopt, every acre of the lands these people are living on will be forfeited.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are they not expressly authorized to take under the homestead law?

Mr. OATES. Oh, yes; the gentleman's substitute authorizes them to take under the homestead law, it is true; but these are men who have paid their money for these lands, good citizens, having lived there for years, and made their improvements thereon; and it would be an act of bad faith on the part of the Government to undertake now to deprive them of their property. Instead of securing them in their rights, the gentleman would deprive them altogether of their homes, and for what? To give them back under the homestead law.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; this bill secures the right of every settler. The question presented by the bill is between the railroad company and the Government, and not between the Government and the settlers.

Mr. OATES. If you gave the railroad company the lands which it has earned, then under the provisions of your bill you would not disturb the settlers because the company has not sold as much land as it earned.

But you do not propose to do that. Your bill says that—

The forfeitures hereby declared shall not extend to lands adjacent to and coterminous with any portion of any such railroad which is now completed.

These lands, although earned, are not adjacent to and coterminous with that road. Therefore your bill forfeits them, and with the forfeiture it deprives these settlers and purchasers of the rights to which they are entitled.

Mr. HOLMAN. How could that be done if the road has been constructed?

Mr. OATES. It has been constructed for some 84 miles.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, of course, it would not affect those lands.

Mr. OATES. Oh, but as I have said, these lands were not adjacent to the constructed portions. I have already stated that there were no lands or an insufficient quantity in place alongside of the road because they had been already taken up, and under the provisions of this grant the company had the right to take the lands earned anywhere along the line, and they took them beyond the point where the road was constructed, but within the limits of the grant. Your bill, therefore, does not protect the purchasers and settlers on those lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. But they had no right to go beyond the place where the road was constructed.

Mr. OATES. They had no right?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, not beyond the completed portions of the road.

Mr. OATES. Why, it has been decided that they could take lands earned anywhere within the indemnity limits when they can not be found in place. Van Wyck vs. Kneavals, 16 Otto, 365, and in other cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. They had no right to take any lands not coterminous with the constructed portion of the road. But out of abundant caution we have secured every acre to the present settlers upon them.

Mr. OATES. I deny that proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a naked proposition now between the Government and the corporation.

Mr. OATES. I deny that proposition. Your bill does not say anything of the kind. It forfeits the lands of purcharers unless they are coterminous with the completed portion of the road.

Mr. HOLMAN. Read the second section.

Mr. OATES. I have read it.

That the forfeiture hereby declared shall not extend to land adjacent to and coterminous with any portion of any such railroad which is now completed——

Mr. HOLMAN. And then go on further, where provision is made for bona fide settlers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OATES. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was unfortunately willing to allow the previous question to be ordered at a fixed hour, which cuts me off.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion allow me to say that I do hope that this House will adopt the amendment offered by my colleague, because if they do not, and this substitute should become a law, quite a number of men who have purchased and are living upon the lands which the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company has earned will be turned out of their homes and will have to resort to homesteading in order to get the land upon which they have lived for many years. They bought the land from the railroad company, and the company had the right to sell 120 sections in advance of and beyond the construction of the road under a decision made by the Department of Interior, on the opinion of Mr. Black, of Pennsylvania, when he was Attorney-General. All these lands granted to the railroad company were certified to the governor of the State of Alabama. The title passed from the United States to the trustee.

The company constructed 84 miles of the road. It has sold a less number of acres by 50,000 than it is entitled to for the road constructed. Now, is it right or just to forfeit this land and take it from those men who have bought it from the railroad company and paid their money for it and occupied it for years past? I think this House will say it is not, and, if so, will adopt the amendment which my colleague has offered. If the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana and his committee is to reclaim lands from railroad corporations for the purpose of giving them to homesteaders, the forfeiture of the lands sold by this company to present occupants would defeat its object in this case, and I have no doubt but that there are others, and would require of them to do an unnecessary and foolish thing—to homestead their own homes. I am in favor of the immediate forfeiture of all the unearned lands granted to this company. The people want them for homes, and I introduced a bill in the last and in this Congress for that purpose and urged its passage.

But my bill saved the rights of purchasers in good faith. Instead of giving me a favorable report as did the Committee on the Public Lands in this last Congress, the present committee treats the subject in a general omnibus bill, which in respect to this particular grant is worse than no bill.

Mr. MCRAE. I have one minute remaining, I believe. I will yield that to the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. HOLMAN. I also yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, I come to this House with a letter of authority from a constituency as widely cursed by the shameless villainy of railroad domination as any constituency represented upon this floor. I come from such a constituency instructed to labor, in season and out of season, to restore to the public domain every acre of land heretofore improvidently granted to the railroad corporations of this country, stopping only at the limit beyond which the law itself declares we may not go.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company, a freebooting combination organized in 1864 for rapine and spoils, and from that time to this a loyal adherent to this fundamental principle of its organization, long since impressed upon that constituency the unequaled atrocity of railroad dominion over vast landed estates, and they can well understand and sympathize with the ill-faring condition of all who are so unfortunate as to be groaning under a like despotism. It is not strange, therefore, that my letter of credit to this body should contain instructions so comprehensive and unequivocal.

Mr. Speaker, the time has not yet come when even a temporary retreat should be sounded at corporate dictation. Such an expedient should not even be considered until the Senate shall have been forced to emphasize its monopolistic tendencies by openly proclaiming its subservience to corporation interests. I rigidly adhere to the attitude which I assumed in the Forty-ninth Congress when I discussed this question somewhat in extenso. I am not in favor of taking any step backward thus early in the fight. The time will undoubtedly come when a Republican Senate will determine that we must yield to the railroad corporations of this country. Then, and not until then, will I be in favor of retreating a single step, as a temporary expedient, from the position which the Democratic party has always maintained upon this great question. In such an event I would be willing for the time-being to accept, in conference, the slight concession which could be obtained, and in the future I would vigorously prosecute the conflict until the last vestige of this most unrighteous legislation shall have been swept from the statute-books. Could I have my way, and the power to do so is undoubted, I would go to the full extent suggested by my friends, Messrs. STONE and MCRAE, of the Committee on Public Lands, and take from these corporations every acre of land which has not been earned by a completion of the roads in the precise time prescribed in the granting acts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYSON. I have eight minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was a loss of seven minutes by interruptions.

Mr. PAYSON. That ought not to be charged to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not be charged to the gentleman except in the proportion that the lost time bears to the whole time.

Mr. PAYSON. Then how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Seven minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, as a general proposition I believe it to be right and proper to forfeit every unearned land grant in the United States; but in making the report the committee uses this language:

The name of each railroad company and the number of miles of the respective railroads remaining unconstructed when the time expired within which, according to the terms of the grant, it should have been completed, are as follows: The Florida, Atlantic and Northern Central Railroad Company, 181 miles.

What are the facts in reference to that land grant? They are simply these, that under the laws of the State of Florida a company now known as the Pensacola and Atlantic Railroad Company was incorporated, the act of incorporation extending to that company all of the privileges of the Florida, Atlantic and Gulf Central Railroad Company. Now, while it might be true that the road to be constructed under the act here alluded to was not constructed within the limit of time specified in the grant, yet it is equally true that every mile of road contemplated under that original act has now been constructed; yet, according to the terms of this bill, it is proposed to step in after that railroad has been completed and has been in operation for several years and forfeit this land grant. The result of such action will be not only to put the lands that have been sold to settlers into the courts for adjudication, or into the land office—and they might just as well be in the courts—but the remaining portion of the grant, which under the law of the State of Florida this company has earned, will also be put into the courts, and settlers desiring to purchase or to settle upon those lands will never know when their titles are secure.

With reference to the second railroad grant proposed to be forfeited, that company was interrupted in the construction of its road by the unfortunate war between the States——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYSON. I will yield another minute to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That company, I say, was interrupted in the construction of its road by the civil war. The Confederate government took up off its line several miles of railroad iron, for which the company never received a single, solitary cent, because when the Confederate government collapsed there was nothing in existence from which they could obtain a settlement. Nevertheless, the company went on and constructed the line of railroad as fast as it was possible to do so, because the results of the war placed the lines formerly controlled by that company into the hands of the United States courts, and they have but recently gotten out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has three minutes remaining.

[Mr. PAYSON withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield one minute to the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I have uniformly, before my constituents and elsewhere throughout the Union, taken the position, which I believe to be sound in law and in good policy, that these railroad companies, by reason of their not having complied with the terms of the grants, have forfeited their right to the lands granted to them, and I hold that it is the duty of Congress to forfeit such grants and restore the lands to homestead settlement. I have heard nothing in the argument this afternoon that convinces me that I have been wrong; and having investigated the subject for myself, I wish to say, sir, that I shall vote first for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] to forfeit every acre of land granted to these railroad companies. If adopted, the bill thus amended will forfeit over 70,000,000 acres and restore that amount to the people for homestead settlement. It is the patriotic duty of Congress to do this. The corporations have never complied with the terms of the grants nor earned an acre of the land embraced in this substitute, and it is the equitable right of the people to reinvest themselves with the title to this land. If the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] should not prevail, I shall then vote for the committee's substitute for the Senate bill as the next best thing; but I want to say emphatically that I shall never vote for the Senate bill. It forfeits barely 5,000,000 acres that the corporations do not want—a mere contemptible remnant, which they now wish to throw into the faces of the people as they walk off triumphantly with their plunder. They want me as a Representative to give my assent to this crime. Sir, I will never do it, and I warn this House not to do it. Let the proposition be rejected with indignation.

If we can not forfeit the 70,000,000 acres, as proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE], then let us pass the proposition of the committee to forfeit 52,000,000 acres. The people will be satisfied with nothing less.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

[Mr. MCADOO withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE].

[Mr. STOCKDALE withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time agreed upon has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserved four minutes of my time, and with the permission of the House I will occupy that time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill amounts to nothing. It would be a fraud on the country to pass that bill in its present form. It virtually comprehends nothing. It will only affect lands which are worth nothing. You will deceive the country if you carry it through.

I have not time to devote to the legal hair-splitting of my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and my friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], but I appeal to the House; here at least, in the midst of a body representing the people of the country, the laboring masses—that in this body at least a great wrong shall not be perpetrated by refusing on the part of the House to reclaim for the people that which is justly their own.

One bill involving this same question, declaring this same forfeiture in the North Pacific case two years ago on the 27th day of this month, was passed by a majority of 187 votes to 47. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is consistent, for he was found voting for corporations then as he is found speaking for them now.

But the gentleman is committed, as I believe, by the solemn pledge, made after a struggle here in the Forty-seventh Congress to get a vote for the land-grant forfeitures. I think he is committed by the policy adopted on the 21st day of January, 1884, wherein the House by an overwhelming majority declared in favor of the principle of forfeiture of unearned grants.

Mr. OATES. I have been trying to make a suggestion to the gentleman, but his speech is all one sentence. He does not want, I presume, to do me an injustice?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. OATES. I voted in the case to which the gentleman refers for what I believed the law was.

Mr. HOLMAN. Nobody doubts that; but I want to say that the gentleman, if he will be consistent, should also vote against a forfeiture in every case presenting similar conditions, having voted against the forfeiture in that case.

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir, and spoke against it; and if the gentleman wants time to meet the legal argument to which he has referred I hope it will be granted to him.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the House voted that the forfeiture should be declared upon the basis of the majority report; and I am sure the constituency of no gentleman on this floor, Democrat or Republican, has ever condemned him for that vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time fixed for debate has expired, and by unanimous consent the previous question is considered as ordered. If there be no objection, the amendments offered to the substitute will be reported by the Clerk in the order in which they would be inserted in the substitute.

Mr. HERBERT. My amendment was to the substitute—that is to say, to either the majority or minority substitute, whichever it may be the will of the House to adopt; so it ought to come after the vote is taken upon the minority substitute for the report of the majority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to withhold it and offer it as an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HERBERT. I withhold it, then, for the purpose of offering it to the substitute, whichever one may be adopted, whether that of the gentleman from Illinois or the majority of the committee, for the Senate bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. Does not the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama come in as an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the majority? And if so, of course it must be voted upon before the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, which is in the nature of a substitute for the majority substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. HERBERT. My purpose is to offer it to whichever of these may prevail. It does not matter which; for my amendment is for the purpose of protecting the rights of these purchasers and settlers under either of the pending propositions

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that it will be pending to whatever it is properly applicable; but it could only be offered by the gentleman by unanimous consent after the substitute was adopted, because the adoption of the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] will be the last thing voted upon by the House so far as amendments are concerned. His object could only be accomplished by obtaining unanimous consent.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I ask unanimous consent to withhold the proposition, and offer it after the substitute is acted upon.

Mr. PAYSON. If I can have the attention of the gentleman from Alabama for a moment, I wish to make an inquiry as to whether it would not be in order for him to have his amendment pending as to both the substitute and the bill reported by the majority of the committee?

Mr. HERBERT. That is just what I want to do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I ask that unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: Whether any further amendments are allowable under the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are no amendments now allowable, the previous question having been ordered by unanimous consent of the House. The first question is on the amendment, which the Clerk will now report, proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the committee amendment the following words in lines 5 and 6 of section 1: "Opposite to or coterminous with the portion of any such railroad;" and the following words in lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 of said section: "Lying opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not constructed and completed within the time prescribed by the act of Congress making such grant for the construction and completion of the whole railroad provided for by such act."

Mr. McRAE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCREARY. I would like to ask the gentleman who offered the amendment, as I was not here to hear his explanation of it, what amount of land the amendment would forfeit? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. McRAE. Something over 70,000,000 of acres.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment just read, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 106, not voting 158; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BIGGS. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MORROW]. He would have voted "no" on this proposition, and I also voted "no." I wish to make an explanation of why I voted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT]. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. FISHER with Mr. CUTCHEON.
Mr. HUTTON with Mr. STRUBLE.
Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. COOPER.
Mr. WHITE, of New York, with Mr. COCKRAN.
Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. PHELAN with Mr. WEST.
Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. PETERS.
Mr. CARLTON with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.
Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. MCCULLOGH.
Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.
Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. MCCORMICK.
Mr. ENLOE with Mr. BUTLER.
Mr. BURNETT with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.
Mr. WILKINS with Mr. DE LANO.
Mr. NEAL with Mr. MORRILL.
Mr. PERRY with Mr. BRUMM.
Mr. BRYCE with Mr. LAIDLAW.
Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. OSBORNE.
Mr. HUDD with Mr. CLARK.
Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. GROSVENOR.
Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, with Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan.
Mr. STEELE with Mr. SHIVELY.
Mr. LANDES with Mr. O'DONNELL.
Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. FELTON.
Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, with Mr. WADE.
Mr. WISE with Mr. HAYDEN.
Mr. BYNUM with Mr. STEPHENSON.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. LODGE.
Mr. BURNES with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.
Mr. FORAN with Mr. DUNHAM.
Mr. LANE with Mr. WILBER.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. WOODBURN.
Mr. MCCLAMMY with Mr. NICHOLS.
Mr. MORGAN with Mr. ATKINSON.
Mr. COX with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.
Mr. BACON with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.
Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL with Mr. BELDEN.
Mr. TAULBEE with Mr. SHERMAN.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. PHELPS.
Mr. MCMILLIN with Mr. BURROWS.
Mr. LAWLER with Mr. FUNSTON.
Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. GUENTHER, for this bill.
Mr. DARGAN with Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois.
Mr. RANDALL with Mr. BOUTELLE, for this bill. Mr. RANDALL would vote for the bill and Mr. BOUTELLE against it.
Mr. SENEY with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, for this bill. Mr. SENEY would vote for the majority report and Mr. THOMPSON for the minority report.
Mr. HARE with Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. HARE would vote for the Holman bill and Mr. BAKER would vote for the Payson bill.
Mr. SCOTT and Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, on this bill.
Mr. MILLS with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. COWLES with Mr. SYMES.
Mr. WILKINSON with Mr. BOWDEN.
Mr. RUSK with Mr. DALZELL.
Mr. MERRIMAN with Mr. FITCH.
Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia, with Mr. DAVIS.
Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.
Mr. BARRY with Mr. GALLINGER.
Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. CHIPMAN with Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. WILKINSON. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. WHITING and myself were paired, but I supposed of course as he was present the pair was withdrawn. If he had not voted I would withdraw my vote; but as it is I will let it stand.

Mr. NORWOOD. I wish to withdraw my vote. I had forgotten I was paired.

Mr. WADE. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi.

Mr. HUDD. My pair ought not to have been declared, as it was withdrawn nearly a week ago.

Mr. HOLMES. I thought I heard my name announced as being paired. I do not find it on the list and was not aware of it. If I am paired I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted forgetting the fact that I was paired with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. HOWARD. I was paired, but I think the pair is off, as I understood it was to last only during the convention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the pair will be withdrawn and the gentleman's vote will stand.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired, and I desire to withdraw my vote. If I were not paired I would vote "no" on this proposition, and would vote for the substitute advocated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. STOCKDALE:
After line 12, page 11, add the following:
"Provided, That this act shall not take effect except as to lands which were entered under the homestead and pre-emption laws and at private entry while the same were held by the Interior Department to be subject to such entry, until January 1, 1889, as to a grant of land made to the State of Mississippi for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad."

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STOCKDALE demanded a division, but subsequently withdrew the demand.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. HERBERT:
Add at the end of section 1 of the substitute of the committee the following:
"Provided, That all sales or leases of any of the lands granted to the State of Alabama by the act of Congress approved June 3, A. D. 1856, to aid in the construction of the Girard and Mobile Railroad which, after the said lands were certified to the State of Alabama for the benefit of said railroad, were sold by the Mobile and Girard or the Girard and Mobile Railroad Company, or by, through, or under either of them, and all purchases of any of said lands under tax sales held by county tax collectors, are hereby validated and confirmed."

The amendment was rejected—ayes 53, noes 67.

Mr. HERBERT. Now let us have the alternative amendment, the one that was agreed upon by the committee unanimously in the last Congress.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to section 1 of the committee's substitute, at the conclusion thereof, the following:
"Provided, however, All of the lands granted to the State of Alabama by the act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, to aid in the construction of the Mobile and Girard Railroad, and which have been sold by the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company, or which have been sold as the property of said railroad company for State and county taxes thereon, and purchased by actual settlers, are hereby excepted from said forfeiture to the extent of 320 acres, and the titles to said lands, to the extent so excepted, are hereby confirmed and made valid to such purchasers, their heirs or assigns; and if any such purchaser shall have purchased more than 320 acres for the uses of actual settlement, he shall select said 320 acres herein excepted from forfeiture within one year from the approval of this act, and file notice of such selection with the register of the land office at Montgomery, Ala.; and any such purchaser who shall fail to make such selection and file said notice shall not thereafter have the benefit of the exception herein made: Provided further, That when any such purchaser shall have purchased in excess of 320 acres for the purpose of actual settlement, or in cases where any of the lands hereinbefore forfeited have been sold and conveyed by said railroad company, or sold and conveyed, as the property of said railroad company, for State and county taxes thereon, and purchased by other than actual settlers, all such purchasers shall have a prior right to purchase said lands from the United States at the price and sum of $1.25 per acre, which prior right of purchase shall continue for one year after the approval of this act, and not longer: Provided further, That all such purchasers, or their assigns, shall each, within one year after the approval of this act, make proof, before the register of the land office at Montgomery, Ala., of the amount of land purchased, from whom, the title received, and the amount paid therefor, and when: Provided also, That such proof may also be made before a judge of probate or clerk of the circuit court, under the seal of office, and forwarded by mail to said register: And provided further, That the above-named privileges to purchasers are granted only on condition that no claim shall ever be made by them or any of them against the State of Alabama, or any county, school district, or municipality thereof, for taxes erroneously assessed and collected on any of said lands, whether the same were paid voluntarily or not.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 53, noes 80.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. LIND:
"Add before the word 'but,' in line 8 of section 2 of the committee's substitute, 'and which lands so sold were not at the time of such sale in the actual possession of or had improvements made thereon by a person other than such purchaser.'"

Mr. LIND. I have had no opportunity to explain the import of that amendment, otherwise I should have done it cheerfully, of course.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment, which is the substitute proposed by the minority of the committee.

Mr. PAYSON. The House understands the substitute, and I ask that, in order to save time, the reading of it be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN and others. It is the Senate bill.

Mr. PAYSON. It is not the Senate bill. It is the substitute proposed by the minority of the committee.

Mr. BIGGS. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if this is not the Senate bill.

Mr. PAYSON. It is the substance of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the reading of the substitute be dispensed with?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The question was taken on the adoption of the substitute, and there were—ayes 72, noes 83.

Mr. PAYSON. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on this.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 92, not voting 161; as follows:

So the substitute submitted by Mr. PAYSON was rejected.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of the day:

Mr. LEE with Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR.

Before the result of the vote was announced the following proceedings took place:

Mr. HOUK. I am paired; but as I understand a quorum has not yet voted, I ask to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote of the gentleman from Tennessee will be recorded.

There was no objection.

Mr. NORWOOD. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], but as I understand that he, if present, would vote "ay," I ask to have my vote recorded in the affirmative.

There being no objection, Mr. NORWOOD'S vote was recorded.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I am paired, but my pair reserves the right to vote if necessary to make a quorum. Understanding that to be now the case, I desire to vote "no."

There being no objection, the vote of Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, was recorded.

Mr. DARGAN. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], but in order to make a quorum I vote "ay."

There being no objection, the vote of Mr. DARGAN was recorded.

Mr. WADE. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], but as I understand he would vote in the affirmative, I will, in order to make a quorum, vote the same way.

There being no objection, Mr. WADE'S vote was recorded.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague [Mr. GLASS], who voted on the last call, was afterward taken sick, and has gone home, desiring to be excused for the rest of the day.

Mr. STEELE. As I expected to leave for Cincinnati, as a member of the commission appointed by the Speaker, I asked my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] to pair with me until Monday next. So I presume he is at home attending to his correspondence, thinking I am absent.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the substitute reported by the majority of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as that substitute has been read several times, I ask that its reading at this time be dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, the committee's proposition is a substitute for the Senate bill, and the Senate bill is substantially the same as the amendment of my colleague [Mr. PAYSON].

Several MEMBERS. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reading of the substitute will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question on agreeing to the substitute reported by the majority of the Committee on the Public Lands) said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PAYSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered; and I desire to suggest to my colleague [Mr. PAYSON] that after the adoption of this substitute the vote will come directly upon the passage of the bill, on which the yeas and nays can be taken.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask the Chair to state the parliamentary position of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This question is simply upon the substitution of the report of the majority of the Committee on the Public Lands for the Senate bill. The adoption of this substitute would not be a final determination of the question, but there would afterward be a vote upon the passage of the Senate bill as amended.

Mr. PAYSON. With that understanding, I do not desire to insist on the call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, can not be dispensed with without the action of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I have made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurring on ordering the yeas and nays, the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The substitute reported by the majority of the Committee on the Public Lands was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 12, not voting 171; as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 6, 1888.

The House was called to order at 11 o'clock a. m. by Mr. CRISP, as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1888.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House to-day.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

VETO MESSAGE—JULIA WELCH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 8291, entitled "An act granting a pension to Julia Welch."

The husband of the beneficiary named in this bill served in the Army from December, 1863, to May, 1866.

He never filed an application for pension, and died February 24, 1880, of inflammation of the lungs.

The claim filed by his widow for pension alleged that her husband suffered from chronic diarrhea and disease of the heart and lungs, as results of his Army service.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the soldier died from an acute disease which bore no relation to any complaint contracted in the Army.

I think the action of the bureau was correct.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 5, 1888.

VETO MESSAGE—MARY ANN LANG.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 7907, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary Ann Lang."

The husband of this beneficiary was wounded in the nose on the 1st day of June, 1864, and was mustered out of the service July 8, 1865. He was pensioned on account of this wound and died February 21, 1881. Prior to his death he had executed a declaration claiming pension also for rheumatism, but the application was not filed before he died.

The cause of his death was dropsy. The widow filed her claim for pension in 1884, which was rejected on the ground that the soldier's fatal disease was not the result of his military service.

A physician of good repute, who appears to have attended him more than any other physician for a number of years prior to his death, gives an account of rheumatic ailments and other troubles, and states that about a year and a half before he died he had a liver trouble which resulted in dropsy which caused his death. He adds that the soldier was a man who drank beer and at times to excess, and that he drank harder towards the last of his life. He further states that he is unable to connect the liver trouble with his rheumatism, and could not give any other reason for it except his long use of beer and liquor, and if that was not the cause it greatly aggravated it; that he had cautioned him about drinking, and at times he heeded the advice.

An appeal was taken from the action rejecting the claim and the case was submitted to the medical referee of the Pension Bureau, who decided upon all the testimony that the soldier's fatal disease, dropsy, was due to disease of the liver, which was not a sequence of rheumatism, and was the result of excessive use of alcoholic stimulants.

It will be observed that no claim is made that death in any way resulted from the wound for which a pension had been allowed, and that even if rheumatism was connected with the death its incurrence in the Army had never been established.

I am satisfied that this case was properly disposed of by the Pension Bureau.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 5, 1888.

LIGHT-HOUSE APPROPRIATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Light-House Board relative to the inadequacy of the appropriation for the Light-House Service in the sundry civil bill for the fiscal year 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL V. O'LEARY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting papers relative to the claim of Daniel V. O'Leary, postmaster at Albany, N. Y., and recommending an appropriation for his relief; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10233) with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 5, 1888.

Resolved, That the Senate further insist on its thirtieth amendment to the bill of the House 10233, making appropriations for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Messrs. PLUMB, FARWELL, and CALL be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk the conference report, which I ask may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 12, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, and 29; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "One clerk to disbursing officer, $1,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "One assistant botanist, $1,200;" and strike out, in line 13, page 2 of the bill, the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Of which $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be applied to the investigation of the disease in peach-trees known as yellows and remedies therefor;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 26, page 7 of the bill, the words "Joseph Neuman and associates" and insert in lieu thereof "Joseph Neumann;" strike out, in line 1, page 8 of the bill, the words "Joseph Neuman" and insert in lieu thereof "Joseph Neumann."

Strike out lines 14, 15, 16, and 17, on page 10 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Printing seed-packets, labels, postal-cards, etc., labor, paper, ink, type, and other necessary material for printing, and for purchasing and repairing presses, $4,200; in all, $104,200;" and insert, after the word "thousand," in line 9, page 11 of the bill, the words "three hundred and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by the said amendment insert the following: "And of this sum an amount not exceeding $15,000 may be applied to the payment of expenses incurred during the fiscal year 1888;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$595,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the period (.) at the end of the amended paragraph and strike out the word "And" where it first occurs in said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof "and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendment numbered 30 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the House respectfully report that they have agreed to the accompanying conference report, and herewith submit their action to the House for its approval.

The only Senate amendments of importance agreed to by the House conferees are as follows:

Numbers 15 and 16, providing for the establishment and maintenance of experimental grass stations in connection with the Botanical Division, which is agreed to with an amendment reducing the amount from $25,000 to $20,000.

Numbers 17 and 18, increasing from five to fifteen thousand dollars the appropriation for the section of vegetable pathology, so as to include an investigation of the disease in peach-trees known as yellows and remedies therefor, is agreed to with an amendment changing the verbiage of the appropriation.

Number 21 amends the proviso relating to the accounts of the present Commissioner of Agriculture by including relief for the ex-Commissioner, George B. Loring, from a similar misapplication of funds. It makes no appropriation in either case, but authorizes an expenditure in one division to be charged to another, so as to correct the accounts as they appear in the First Comptroller's office of the Treasury.

To the amendment number 30, appropriating $100,000 to continue experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum cane, including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies, the conferees could not agree, and report their action to the House, asking that the House insist upon its disagreement to this amendment and agree to a conference thereon.

Amendments 31, 32, and 33 relate to an appropriation to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to carry into effect certain provisions of the act known as the experimental-station act, and are agreed to with an amendment increasing the amount fixed by the Senate from five to ten thousand dollars.

All of which is respectfully reported.

W. H. HATCH,
A. C. DAVIDSON,
E. H. CONGER,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report, and further, that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the conference thereon asked for by the Senate. Upon this motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. RYAN. What is the amendment numbered 30?

Mr. HATCH. It is the sugar amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, an order will be made that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked for.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House, Messrs. HATCH, DAVIDSON of Alabama, and CONGER.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OPELOUSAS, LA.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask, by unanimous consent, to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8183) for the erection of a public building at Opelousas, La., and that the same may be now considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of House bill 8183, and asks for its present consideration. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, internal-revenue office, and for other Government uses, at Opelousas, La. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $50,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum of $50,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Louisiana shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State, and the service of civil process therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will not the gentleman withdraw his objection to permit me to make an explanation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

COUNTY OF SAN JUAN, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to present a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 1983, to ratify an act entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan, in the Territory of New Mexico," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 and agree to the same.

C. B. KILGORE,
WM. M. SPRINGER,
WM. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

C. K. DAVIS,
WM. M. STEWART,
M. C. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Also the following statement:

The conferees on the part of the House on the bill H. R. 1983, entitled "An act to ratify an act entitled 'An act creating the county of San Juan, in the Territory of New Mexico,'" submit the following statement as to the effect of the report herewith submitted:

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 1, which located the county seat of the new county at Aztec until otherwise provided by law. The effect of this action will be to leave the matter of locating the county seat to the people of the proposed county by popular vote, as provided in the original bill.

The House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 2 and agrees to the same. The effect of this action will be to provide that the act of Congress mentioned in said amendment shall not be construed to deprive the Legislatures of the Territories of the power to create new counties and to provide for the location of the county seats. This power should remain in the Territories, and the effect of the bill, if passed as recommended, will be to so provide.

C. B. KILGORE,
WM. M. SPRINGER,
WM. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KILGORE. I move that the report of the committee of conference be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KILGORE moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OPELOUSAS, LA.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] withdraws his objection to the bill which I called up awhile ago. The report in the case is very short, and I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The report (by Mr. DIBBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7490) providing for the erection of a public building at Opelousas, La., submits the following report:

Opelousas is the parish seat of St. Landry, the largest and most populous parish in the State, except the one in which New Orleans is situated. The parish contains a population of over 40,000, and is rapidly growing. So large is the law business transacted at Opelousas that the State courts are in almost continual session there. The district court of the State rarely adjourns, except for a short time during the summer months, or for the sessions of the court of appeals and the supreme court, both of which are held at that place.

The United States district court and the State court of appeals are required by law to hold their terms at Opelousas at the same time. Thus at every term these two courts are put to a great deal of inconvenience and trouble in making such arrangements that the business of each may be carried on without interrupting the other. In this way a great deal of time is lost. This can not well be avoided, for there is no suitable building in the place which can be rented and used for a court-house. The disadvantages to which the Federal officers are thus driven is without excuse. The business in the court at Opelousas is large and constantly increasing, and there is no reason why a building should not be provided for its officers and records. The recent loss of the State court-house at that place by fire demonstrates the necessity of having a safe building for the records of the Federal courts.

A bill for a court-house at Opelousas passed both the Senate and the House during the Forty-eighth Congress, but too late to be enrolled before adjournment.

In the Forty-ninth Congress this measure passed the Senate, and was reported to the House by its committee on Public Buildings favorably. (House Report No. 1357, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on S. 324.)

Considering the foregoing facts, your committee respectfully report this bill favorably, by substitute, and recommend the passage of the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Federal courts are held at this point, and while I do not consider that it is necessary to have a public building at every place where Federal courts are held I think it probably is desirable in this case, and therefore I withdraw my objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, EMPORIA, KANS.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill which I send to the desk, providing for a public building at Emporia, Kans., and that the bill be now considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to the House that after this bill is disposed of I will call for the regular order.

The bill (S. 1913) was read.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Federal courts are held at this place.

Mr. RYAN. I will say to the gentleman that the Federal courts are not held there at the present time, but the population of the place is about 15,000, and the receipts of the office are over $15,000 a year.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. RYAN. I want to say to my friend from Missouri——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the taking of the vote on the bill which was pending when the House adjourned yesterday.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Who demands the regular order? I want to know where this one sided business comes from?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded by several gentlemen.

Mr. RYAN. On several occasions recognition has been permitted on that side of the House for similar bills, and when recognition has been sought on this side of the House objection has been made. It is time that that cease.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is out of order.

Mr. PAYSON. I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk. I desire to say that it is merely a supplement to the resolution which I offered yesterday with reference to the loss of a bill in its transmission between the Senate and the House. The resolution will explain itself.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to know who demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RYAN. It was the same gentleman who withdrew his objection to the other public building bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and that is the conclusion of that question unless the gentleman disputes the fact. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

DUPLICATE OF LOST BILL.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to prepare a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain lands for cemetery purposes, and deliver the same to the Senate and request that body to furnish the House with a duplicate copy of the amendments of the Senate to said bill, and indorse on the duplicate engrossed bill and amendments the action had in the Senate thereon, and return the same to the House; the original bill and amendments having been lost.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND GRANT FORFEITURES.

Mr. HOLMAN. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the taking of the vote upon the passage of the bill the title of which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1439) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas and nays were ordered, but upon taking the vote the fact was developed that no quorum was present. The roll will now be again called.

Mr. OATES. Before the roll is called I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OATES. On yesterday when this bill was under consideration general leave was granted to members to print remarks upon the bill. I desire to know whether that leave is broad enough to give permission to-day to explain the vote that I propose to cast. If not, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an explanation of my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that general leave has been given to print remarks upon the subject without limit, but if there be any doubt about it the Chair will submit the question again.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is no doubt about the permission already given being broad enough, but let the question be again taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that general leave be granted to print in the RECORD remarks upon the pending bill?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. OATES. If this was the final passage of the bill I would not vote for it, because it contains so many objectionable provisions, one of which is the forfeiture of lands granted to the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company, which have been sold to and are now being improved by honest purchasers. I am very desirous that the lands granted to that company and every other railroad company which have not been earned, shall be forfeited to the United States and held for homestead settlers. The Senate bill provides for such forfeiture, and hence I vote for that bill as amended, as it will go to a committee of conference, and I do not believe that the Senate will ever agree to the substitute of the House Committee on Public Lands which has been adopted.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 179, nays 8, not voting 137; as follows:

Mr. BIGGS. I voted, although I am paired with Judge MORROW. I am informed that if he were present he would have voted, and consequently I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WISE. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HAYDEN]. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am announced as being paired with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FISHER], but understanding that he would vote in the affirmative, I have voted on this question myself.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT]. If he were present, I would vote "ay" on this question.

Mr. ATKINSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I believe he would vote "ay," and considering this a non-political question, I have also voted in the affirmative.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHONEY], but understanding that he would so vote, I have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am announced as being paired with my colleague [Mr. OUTHWAITE]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "no;" I therefore uphold the pair, and would have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to say in behalf of my colleague [Mr. O'DONNELL] that he is absent by leave of the House. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. ENLOE. On the first call of the roll I answered in the affirmative. I am announced as being paired with Judge BUTLER, but informed him this morning that the pair was off.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. I am paired with the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON]. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I am announced as being paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELDEN]. If I had an opportunity I would vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I voted "no" on this bill, but being paired withdraw my vote.

Mr. WADE. I voted, but being paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], I withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ERECTION OF BARRACKS AND QUARTERS.

Mr. MAISH (by request), by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 194) providing for the erection of barracks and quarters at Forts Warren, Adams, Hamilton, and Monroe; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2823) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills raising revenue.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MILLS. I yield for the morning hour for the presentation of reports.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports; and this being Friday, only reports of a private nature are in order.

JAMES E. ANDREWS.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8847) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certain duplicate bonds to James E. Andrews in place of certain bonds destroyed by fire; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN CURTIN KENT.

Mr. BELMONT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably a resolution of inquiry in the case of John Curtin Kent; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET S. HEINTZELMAN.

Mr. LYNCH (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio), from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2726) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FANNIE A. KIMBALL.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2890) granting a pension to Fannie A. Kimball; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARGARET B. TODD.

Mr. SPOONER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 645) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret B. Todd; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WALTER N. SMITH.

Mr. SPOONER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2981) granting a pension to Walter N. Smith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COL. J. M. FOX.

Mr. SPOONER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (S. 1819) granting increase of pension to Col. J. M. Fox; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN T. BAKER.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 2825) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin T. Baker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM S. LATHAM.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10563) granting a pension to William S. Latham; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. H. C. M'KINSTER.

Mr. HUNTER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6751) for the relief of W. H. C. McKinster; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. B. STOKES.

Mr. HUNTER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 2908) to increase the pension of W. B. Stokes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. NANCY ANN PROFFITT FLIPPIN.

Mr. HUNTER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6225) granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy Ann Proffitt Flippin, of Monroe County, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN J. MITCHELL.

Mr. YODER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8460) to place the name of John J. Mitchell on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELNATHAN MEADE.

Mr. YODER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN D. ADAMS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 69) for the relief of John D. Adams; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported the bill (H. R. 10736) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROBERT DUDLEY FRAYSER AND OTHERS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 126) referring the claims of Robert Dudley Frayser, administrator of Fletcher Lane, deceased, C. S. Farrar, administrator of Gray W. Smith, deceased, Lucy E. Dowdy, and W. A. Galloway, to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS T. OWEN.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8612) for the relief of Thomas T. Owen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN FINN.

On motion of Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 489) for the relief of John Finn; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS.

Mr. ATKINSON. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back favorably the bill (H. R. 9769) to punish public drunkenness in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a public bill, and it can only be reported to-day by unanimous consent.

Mr. ATKINSON. I ask unanimous consent, then, for that purpose.

There was no objection.

Mr. ATKINSON. I am directed to report the bill back favorably and to move that it be placed upon the House Calendar.

The bill was referred accordingly, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCE.

Mr. HIESTAND. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably a resolution authorizing the printing of the report of the National Academy of Science for the years 1886 and 1887.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This does not seem to be a public matter and is not in order during this call.

Mr. HIESTAND. I ask unanimous consent to submit the report.

There was no objection, and the report was received and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I ask, by unanimous consent, to be allowed to present some reports which I have sent for to the committee-room.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman as soon as the reports are ready. The call of committees for reports has now been concluded, and the Chair will recognize gentlemen who were not in when their committees were called.

WYOMING MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10028) granting to the Wyoming Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Wind River or Shoshone Indian reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DENTAL SCIENCE.

Mr. OATES. I ask, by unanimous consent, to withdraw an adverse report from the Committee on the Judiciary, made this morning on the bill (S. 2941) to incorporate the National Academy of Dental Science, and to move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. This is done at the suggestion of a Senator who is interested in the subject.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

TO ANNUL TITLES ACQUIRED BY JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask, by unanimous consent, for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1887) to annul certain titles to land acquired by judicial proceedings in the courts of the United States in Texas, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order of business, and will object to everything until we get through with the tariff bill.

Mr. KILGORE. This bill will not take a minute, and it ought to be passed at once.

Mr. BLAND. I do insist on the regular order, and will do so until the tariff bill has been gotten out of the way.

TARIFF.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron or steel railway fish-plates or splice-bars, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The pending amendment is to strike out "eight-tenths;" so it will read "1 cent per pound."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out the paragraph. I do it because the Committee of the Whole having refused to increase the rate in this paragraph, the rate on these manufactures is put at just about the rate on the material of which they are made. The rate of the material is, at the lowest, seven-tenths of a cent per pound. The proposition here is to make it eight-tenths on the product. There will be that much wastage in the manufacture, and it seems to me there ought to be some difference in favor of the more advanced stages of the manufacture. I therefore move to strike out the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN declared the noes had it.

Mr. BUCHANAN demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 73.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wrought-iron or steel spikes, nuts and washers, and horse, mule, or ox shoes, 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAYNE. The object of this bill, Mr. Chairman, it is claimed by its friends, is to reduce the surplus revenues of the Government so they will not accumulate in the Treasury. According to the exhibit of imports of the articles embraced in this paragraph last year, there would be a reduction of duty, if they were made entirely free, of $10.63; namely, 82 cents on nuts, $3.92 on horseshoes, and $5.89 on spikes; and inasmuch as the reduction of the surplus is not likely to be facilitated to any great extent by embodying this proposition in the bill, I hope the committee will see its way clear to striking it out.

The motion of Mr. BAYNE, to strike out the paragraph, was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron or steel rivets, bolts, with or without threads or nuts, or bolt blanks, and finished hinges or hinge blanks, 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, after line 240, insert new paragraph, as follows:
"Iron or steel rivet, screw, nail, and fence wire rods, round, in coils and loops, not lighter than number 5 wire gauge, valued at 3½ cents or less per pound, 1 cent per pound."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer that amendment in order to make the two provisions in reference to the iron-rods clause of the law, wherein relation is had to certain sizes, harmonize. In the old law there is a discrepancy in this respect. In the Forty-ninth Congress I introduced a bill to rectify that discrepancy. The sizes of iron rods between number 5 wire gauge and seven-tenths of an inch in diameter are put in one part of the law at one rate of duty, and in another part at another rate. In the present bill but one of these provisions is copied, and in that provision there is a rate fixed of 1 cent per pound. I offer this amendment to make the rates uniform, to wit, that these rods falling between the two sizes named shall be put at the same rate in each provision. The amendment will rectify one of the inconsistencies of the present law, and will prevent this bill from perpetuating that inconsistency.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horseshoe nails, hob-nails, and wire nails, and all other wrought-iron or steel nails, not specially enumerated or provided for, 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boiler-tubes, or other tubes, or flues, or stays, of wrought-iron or steel, 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out lines 250 and 251.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chain or chains, of all kinds, made of iron or steel, less than three-fourths of 1 inch in diameter, 1½ cents per pound; less than three-fourths of 1 inch and not less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter, 1½ cents per pound; less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out that paragraph.

The present rate of duty on chains varies from 1½ cents up to 2 cents per pound, according to size. It will be seen, therefore, that this provision contemplates a material reduction.

When it is taken into account that the material of which chains are composed pays a duty of from seven-tenths to 1½ cents per pound, it will be seen that the rate of protection upon chains in the present law is not large. These chains are made by hand labor. There is a great deal of labor expended in the making of this product. Each man, at his own forge, works at his own anvil, and slowly and with continued labor adds link to link, welding each separately; and I undertake to say that the rate by this bill on the manufactured product over the rate on the material is not equal or anything like equal to what it should be to afford proper remuneration to that labor.

I ask that in this instance at least the Committee on Ways and Means will swerve from their predetermined ideas of allowing no amendment to this bill not previously sanctioned by the caucus and will permit this section to be stricken out in view of the importance of the matter to which I have called their attention. I ask it in the interest of the men who toil daily in my own city in the making of chains, who certainly deserve recognition, and whose interests deserve attention and consideration at the hands of the American Congress. I am here to ask this for them at your hands.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN, there were, on a division—ayes 53, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hand, back, and all other saws, not specially enumerated or provided for, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines 259 and 260.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, while the duty upon these importations is reduced by the proposed bill from the present rate, I see that by the table of rates and estimates furnished to us, but a small reduction is anticipated in the revenue that will be realized. Knowing that this item would not have been placed in the bill except upon the theory that it would reduce the revenue, I ask to have it stricken out, as it will be a very considerable disadvantage to the manufacturers of saws, a very important industry in our part of the country.

The Chair put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Files, file-blanks, rasps, and floats of all cuts and kinds, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to strike out the lines last read and to insert in lieu thereof the words I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Files, file-blanks, rasps, and floats of all cuts and kinds, 4 inches in length and under, 35 cents per dozen; over 4 inches in length and under 9 inches, 75 cents per dozen; 9 inches in length and under 14 inches, $1.50 per dozen; 14 inches in length and over, $2.50 per dozen.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to this paragraph, particularly from the fact that the committee have entirely abolished the specific duty, and in lieu thereof have provided 35 per cent. ad valorem for the four classifications of files. Without discussing the impropriety and injustice to American manufacturers and mechanics of striking out a specific duty, especially on a class of this kind, which naturally is fitted for specific and unfitted for ad valorem duties, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the average ad valorem of the four classes of files provided for by the committee at 35 per cent. stands in the present tariff law as 56.70; so that, independent of taking away the benefit of the specific duty, the change would amount to a cut of almost 40 per cent. Without further controversy as to the merits of the paragraph, and having a desire to go forward with the discussion, I desire to have the Clerk read in my time a few remarks of Mr. W. T. Nicholson, manager of the great Nicholson File Works of Providence, probably the best expert and more thoroughly conversant with this trade than any other man in the United States—perhaps the best file-maker in the world. I want to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the fact that the protective duty imposed by the Morrill tariff has wrought a most remarkable change in the price of files in this country. I grant that files are of universal use, and I know very well the arguments that can be made, that every poor man, every carpenter, every blacksmith uses them. That is all true; but I want the committee to listen to the words of a man who gives the exact data as to how the protective duty brought down the price of files from $6.50 a dozen to the present rate of $2.50.

The Clerk read as follows:

When I entered this business in 1865 there was the same import duty on the coarser classes of goods which now rules. At that time the English list price for these goods was $7 per dozen. The market then was $7, ten off, or $6.30 per dozen, and it was at that price I began selling. To-day I sell the same goods for $2.30 per dozen. The market price to-day is $7 (the old English list price), seventy off, or $2.10. I get a little more than some, perhaps, owing to the long-established reputation of my make. Now, this immense reduction is owing entirely to the heavy domestic competition stimulated by the protective system. Twenty-five years ago the Englishmen had control of our market, and could afford to pay our duty of $2.50. It all came out of the consumer. To-day we sell the goods at a lower figure than the tax itself. When that much-condoled-with farmer is told that he files his saw with a "highly-taxed file," I hope he will remember that it is only and precisely because a high duty is levied on it that he is able to buy it so cheap.

Of course the necessity for continuing the tariff lies in the fact that wage-workers demand and receive much higher wages in this country than abroad. And so we get back to the main question, whether it is for the best interest of the country to continue under the high-wage or to sink to the cheap-wage plan.

It is certain that if files were put on the free-list the price of labor must rapidly come down to a level with that paid in England or we must close our shops. In the latter event I wonder how long it would be before the price of files would react to the old English list price of $7 per dozen, where the Morrill tariff found it twenty-six years ago?

It may be that the price of labor would come down rapidly. Probably it would have to come down as rapidly as it could. But I can imagine no more dismal prospect for the American employer than to have to face his men and force them, step by step, down to the level of the foreign operative. I have noticed that people who have never been there are prone to the habit of talking about hell in a rather flippant fashion. Just so with a certain class of theoretical people in respect to this question. They speak of approaching free trade in much the same way as they would mention the coming of summer. But I can tell the college professors and professional men generally who talk so trippingly on this subject that the no-tariff summer which they hail will prove to them as well as to us manufacturers the bleakest winter of discontent we have ever experienced.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish merely to add that the rate of wages of file-makers in this country is from twelve to fifteen dollars per week, and in England it is from six to seven dollars and a half; so that the contrast as between the 35 per cent. ad valorem which the committee have put in this bill and the legitimate duty, which I should regard as 55 per cent., is too wide a cut in my opinion. I simply leave the matter with the committee.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have a vote.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, in the pending paragraph the committee have improperly, as I think, made a change not merely in the rate but in the character of the duty. The existing duty is specific. The committee have changed it into an ad valorem duty. If the existing specific duty is too high, why not replace it with a lower specific duty? To extend unnecessarily the scope of ad valorem duties is going a step in the wrong direction. It is going against the experience of other nations and against the repeated warnings of our own Treasury officials.

Consumers, American manufacturers, honest American importers, and honest Treasury officials are all interested on the side of specific duties. Dishonest custom-house officers and foreign manufacturers and their New York agents, who make perjury a part of their business, are the only persons interested in favor of the extension of the ad valorem system.

The objection to ad valorem duties is that they give rise to fraudulent undervaluations of imported goods. It is practically impossible to prevent these frauds so long as we adhere to the ad valorem system. So said Secretary Manning; so says Secretary Fairchild; so say the witnesses examined by the Senate Committee on Finance who investigated the whole subject of undervaluations last summer. The testimony taken by them is to be found in Senate Document No. 1990, Forty-ninth Congress, second session. Let me cite what some of these witnesses say. Bear in mind that the Senate committee had no jurisdiction to change the rate or the character of customs duties and that the witnesses examined by them were repeatedly reminded of the fact. Their testimony is all the more valuable on that account. They could not help testifying to what they regarded as, after all, the only adequate remedy for the evil which the Senate committee was investigating.

Collector Hedden, of the port of New York, says (page 2), speaking of undervaluations:

You will never have anything else so long as you retain the ad valorem system. We always have had it and always will have it until you reform human nature and have all men become honest.

Naval Officer Burt says (page 23):

A heavy customs tax can be collected with uniformity and ease only by specific rates.

P. H. Leonard, crockery importer and member of a special committee of the New York Chamber of Commerce, says (page 40):

Mr. Chairman, I was just going to say that having given the matter some consideration I can come to only one conclusion, that there is no change connected with the present law of appraising goods which will remedy the evil. I believe that we must adopt the specific system entirely in order to do justice to the Government and at the same time do justice to every citizen who desires to do right by the Government. There is no escape if that system is adopted, because it is then a question of weights alone—and we have the example of every continental government. France, Germany, Austria, and Italy, they weigh everything, even to the single cup and saucer, that enters their respective countries.

Mr. Woodhouse, resident partner in New York of Marshall, Field & Co., of Chicago, says (page 44), speaking of silks:

Q. Are you importers?
A. Not so particularly, as that business of undervaluations has become so well established as to have driven us out of the business. We can not import a dollar's worth, except a little in novelties. The goods are either bought in Chicago or here or of a Paris house, the agents of these manufacturers. We buy in dollars and cents and so much a yard. We can not import the goods. They will not sell them to us in foreign currency.

Subsequently (page 45)—

Q. What would you do, Mr. Woodhouse?
A. My only remedy is the specific duty.

Mr. Thurber says (page 46):

I believe in a specific duty, so far as it is applicable. I should advise the extension of the principle so far as progress can be made in that direction.

Mr. Henry S. Briggs, general appraiser, stationed at Boston, testified as follows (page 59):

Q. Why are the importations of silk in Boston limited?
A. Because they have found it impossible to purchase there and compete with the merchants in New York who get their goods on consignment. There was an organized effort of a few concerns—Field, Leiter & Co., of Chicago, and others—to see if they could not establish a standard of values by actual purchases and break up this system of purchases on consignment. They gave it up, having found that they could not purchase silk and compete with the trade there.

J. M. Fiske, deputy collector at the port of Boston, testified as follows (page 144):

Q. Consignments have become the rule in New York from what I hear?
A. I should suppose so, sir.
Q. How would you alter the present system so as to reduce that condition of things to the minimum?
A. If I was going to put the knife right in to the hilt I would make the duties as near specific rates as possible.

Mr. Chairman, there can be no question of the existence or of the magnitude of the evil of fraudulent undervaluations of goods consigned by European manufacturers to their own agents who reside in this country for the sole purpose of defrauding the United States Treasury. There is just as little question in my mind that the only adequate remedy for the evil is to adopt the system of specific duties wherever it is applicable.

I wish now to notice the remarks made the other day on the subject of ad valorem duties by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. He stated it as an advantage of this form of duty that the duty bears a uniform relation of value to the foreign price of the article upon which it is laid. When the foreign price of the article rises or falls the duty rises or falls to correspond. But why is this an advantage? What justice is done or injustice prevented by maintaining this constant relation between the amount of the duty and the price of the article? I believe it to be, on the whole, a serious disadvantage, whether we regard it from the protection or the revenue-tariff point of view.

First, let us suppose the duty to be a strictly revenue duty, levied upon an article the like of which is not produced in this country. In this case, to quote the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], "it may be truthfully said the tax is added to the foreign cost, and is paid by the consumer." For the sake of clearness let us leave out of view such items as freight, insurance, and commissions, and assume that the price of the article in the American market is the foreign price with the duty added. If the article is worth abroad $1 a pound and there is levied on it a specific duty of 50 cents a pound, the cost to the American consumer is $1.50 a pound. If the foreign price falls to 50 cents a pound, the specific duty remains as before, and the cost to the consumer is $1 a pound. If the foreign price rises from $1 to $1.50, the specific duty remains as before, and the cost to the consumer rises to $2 a pound. But if the duty, instead of being a specific duty of 50 cents per pound, were an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent., the same fluctuation in the foreign price of the article would cause the price to the American consumer to fluctuate from 75 cents at the lowest to $2.25 per pound at the highest.

When the article becomes scarce in Europe the effect of the scarcity is enhanced to the American consumer. But what happens when there is a temporary oversupply of the article in Europe? Does the American consumer immediately get the benefit of the fall in the foreign price and the corresponding fall in the ad valorem duty? Theoretically he does, but practically he does not. Professor Cairnes and John Stuart Mill have pointed out that retail prices paid by the consumer are so largely a matter of habit that the benefit of a fall in the cost does not reach the consumer till after a considerable interval. It simply enlarges the profits of the retail dealer. The effect, therefore, of adopting the ad valorem instead of the specific rate in the case of a strictly revenue duty is simply to exaggerate the fluctuations in the foreign price of the article on which it is laid. If the fluctuation is upward the consumer assumes the burden at once; the retail dealer knows enough to lay it on him. If the fluctuation is downward the consumer does not get the benefit at once; the retail dealer puts it in his own pocket. Fluctuations in price are therefore an evil to the consumer. Whatever exaggerates such fluctuations, as an ad valorem duty certainly does, is also an evil.

Mr. Chairman, I admit that there is one kind of change in the foreign cost, to which the gentleman from Kentucky referred, and which can not fairly be called a fluctuation—I mean a permanent reduction in the cost of producing the article, due, for instance, to the discovery of a new process of manufacture. Such a permanent reduction in the cost is of itself a benefit to the consumer. Is it a great hardship on him that having received this benefit by a reduction in the foreign cost of the article he does not at once receive a further and additional benefit by means of a reduction of the duty? What the consumer mainly cares for is the retail price which he has to pay. If that retail price is on the whole a reasonable one the consumer does not care how it is made up. If the price has fallen from a dollar and a half to a dollar by a reduction in the foreign cost, the duty remaining unchanged, the saving of fifty cents a pound in the price which the consumer pays is what chiefly interests him.

If he chooses to analyze the dollar price which he pays into its component parts; that is, into foreign cost and customs duty, is he likely to complain merely because he finds that while by means of the customs duty he contributes precisely the same amount of 50 cents per pound to the support of his own Government, he pays a good deal less than before to the foreign producer of the goods? I should suppose he would be gratified. I should suppose that as an American citizen he would be glad to know not only that the total price he pays is lower than before, but also that a larger proportion of that lower price goes into the Treasury, while a smaller proportion goes to the foreign producer. Yet it is the opposite assumption, the assumption that the consumer is outraged by a reduction in the price he pays for an imported article, unless that reduction is ratably borne by the United States Treasury and the foreign producer, which forms the basis of four-fifths of the arguments we hear against the existing tariff. I submit, further, that even if these arguments are sound, even if the duty ought to be reduced when the foreign cost of the article has permanently declined, it is far better to effect this reduction by revising the tariff from time to time, substituting a lower specific duty for the higher specific duty, than to submit to the inevitable and unquestionable evils incident to the ad valorem system.

Mr. Chairman, I have said that the specific duty is preferable to the ad valorem duty, whether regarded from the protection point of view or from the revenue tariff point of view. Now let us consider the differences between the two kinds of duty when applied to a protective duty. The need of a protective duty arises out of the difference between the cost of production in the United States and the selling price of the competing article in Europe. If the margin between the two is a wide one a higher protective duty is required. If the margin is narrow a lower duty will suffice. But this margin between the cost of production in this country and the selling price in Europe is likely to be widened or narrowed by fluctuations in the European market. As the ad valorem duty intensifies the effect of such fluctuations on the price at which the foreign article can be imported into this country, it follows that the ad valorem duty affords less protection against a downward fluctuation of the foreign price than would be afforded by a specific duty, which at the normal price in Europe would be exactly equivalent to it. Suppose the cost of producing the article in the United States is 13 cents a pound; suppose the normal selling price of the competing article in Europe is 10 cents a pound. Disregarding for the sake of clearness, such items as freight, insurance, and commissions, a duty of 3 cents a pound would just make good the difference. Suppose that in order to provide against fluctuations, we decide to impose a duty equal to 5 cents a pound. If the European price remains at 10 cents a pound, and if the ad valorem duty can be honestly collected, it makes no difference whether we adopt the specific or the ad valorem form. We can call it 5 cents a pound or 50 per cent. ad valorem. But how will it be if by reason of a war or panic the European article is thrown on the market at 8 cents a pound? There is now a difference of 5 cents a pound between the cost of production in the United States and the selling price in Europe. The specific duty of 5 cents a pound would just make good that difference. The ad valorem duty of 50 per cent. would not. As the price of the article falls from 10 to 8 cents, the ad valorem duty falls from 5 to 4 cents.

Now take the case of an upward fluctuation in the European price. Suppose it rises from 10 cents to 12 cents a pound by reason of an increase in the European demand. There is now a difference of only 1 cent a pound between the selling price in Europe and the cost of production in the United States. Less protection is needed than before. But the ad valorem duty of 50 per cent. affords more protection than before. It has risen from 5 cents to 6 cents a pound. It is evident, therefore, that the ad valorem duty has certain disadvantages when considered as a protective duty. When by reason of a downward fluctuation in the European price the American producer needs more protection the ad valorem duty protects less. When by reason of an upward fluctuation he needs less protection the ad valorem duty protects more.

A German author has recently said that the ideal protective duty would be one which would sink as the price of the foreign article rises and rise as the price sinks. The specific duty, remaining constant amid all fluctuations of the foreign price, at least comes nearer to this ideal than the ad valorem duty, which gives the American producer the least protection when the most is needed, and gives the most when no protection is needed at all. Like Shakespeare's braggart,

Ever strong upon the stronger side, it slinks to the rear when it is most needed at the front, and stalks gallantly to the front when little or no fighting is going on.

Finally, I wish to notice an objection frequently made against the specific duty, that it works a discrimination in favor of the rich and against the poor, by bearing most heavily upon the lower grades of goods. I admit that this is a valid objection if applied to a duty levied on an article the like of which is not produced in this country, when the article includes several grades, of which the lower grades are necessities of the poor, while the higher grades are luxuries of the rich. How many of such articles are there in our tariff-list? Very few, I think. If, however, the article be one the like of which is produced in this country, it is quite possible that the heavier duty on the lower grades simply results in the development of the American manufactures of these lower grades, by which they are cheapened to the consumer. I believe many illustrations of this could be found in the existing tariff.

But, after all, we can not escape discriminations against the poor and in favor of the rich merely by resorting to ad valorem duties. In fact, this odious discrimination is a necessary incident to the ad valorem system. The reason is that under the ad valorem system it is impossible to prevent undervaluation. Now, undervaluation is practiced usually and with the greatest effect upon the higher grades of goods. It is easier to persuade a customs officer that an article of the highest grade belongs to an intermediate grade than it is to persuade him that the lowest grade of all belongs to a grade lower than is known in the market.

For these reasons I believe that the ad valorem system of customs duties is inherently vicious. It defrauds the Treasury, increases the expense of collecting the revenue, and tends to corrupt the officers of the customs. It injures the American producer, the American importer, and the American consumer. It ought as far as possible to be abandoned.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the formal amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise to limit debate on this paragraph.

Mr. BURROWS. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that the gentleman from Rhode Island desires to speak on this subject, which concerns an industry in his own city.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. And the gentleman from Rhode Island has the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, as has been already said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], this manufacture admirably illustrates the advantage that has been gained in this country under the protection of the Morrill tariff and the laws in the same direction which have been subsequently enacted. Not many years ago all the finer classes of files which were used in this country were imported from abroad. It is only within the last seven years, I think, that the manufacture of the finer kinds of files in this country by the Nicholson File Company, of my own city, which has been referred to, has been successfully carried on, with the effect of very largely decreasing the cost of such files to the consumer, while giving employment to a large amount of American capital and labor.

I think the table which has been furnished by the Committee on Ways and Means, and which I have in my hand, giving, among other things, the amounts of duties collected upon various articles in these schedules during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, very well illustrates, with regard to this particular manufacture, the point that I attempted to make the other day while discussing another matter relating to this same bill. I then suggested that the amount of duty collected upon an article illustrated the operation of the law, and that where a considerable amount of duty was collected on the importation from abroad of any given article, the like of which was manufactured in this country, that fact indicated that the article was not highly protected by the tariff, because otherwise the importation would not be so large, and consequently the amount of duty collected thereon would not be so large.

Under the existing law the tariff duties upon the several classes of files have been regulated according to their length, which is believed by file manufacturers to be the proper method, and which, I think, all of us who believe that specific rather than ad valorem duties should be imposed, will agree is in the direction of preventing frauds upon the revenue. Now, the amount of duties collected during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, on the first two classes of files, those 4 inches in length and under, and those over 4 inches in length and under 9 inches, is an amount which tends to show very clearly, as it seems to me, that the duties imposed under existing law upon those classes of files are not excessively or improperly high, because the rate of duty (averaging about 58 per cent.) has not prevented a considerably large importation.

The reduction of this duty as proposed by the bill under consideration to 35 per cent. ad valorem can not but have the effect of increasing the importations, and necessarily assisting to that extent in increasing the surplus which it is claimed to be the purpose of this bill to reduce. Now gentlemen must not forget that in the manufacture of these files labor is the important interest concerned. This is illustrated by the recital of certain facts which I have from unquestionable authority. A pound of steel, from which the finest grades of these files are made, costs 40 cents, and when made into files its value is enhanced to $59.35, an increase of 14,740 per cent.! The great cost of this manufacture is in the labor employed; and it is principally for the protection of that labor that such protective duties as existing law provides are required. Upon 1 pound of steel used in the manufacture of medium grades of files, costing 38 cents, the value is increased by manufacture into such files to $18.20, an increase of 4,690 per cent.; and in the coarser grades of files a pound of steel costing 6 cents is enhanced in value by manufacture 1,640 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Rhode Island be permitted to conclude what he has to say.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. To state it briefly, Mr. Chairman, the "cut" in this proposed reduction is almost wholly upon the labor employed in this manufacture—a class of labor highly skilled; a class of labor which has been educated in this industry during the time it has been fostered and brought to its present prosperity under the provisions of existing law. I ask that the committee carefully and reasonably consider the claims which are here made in behalf of this industry, and in behalf of the labor employed in its successful prosecution. Gentlemen should also understand that, under the provisions of this incongruous bill, the steel out of which files are made is protected by a higher rate of duty than the finished files into which it is manufactured!

The cost of labor and wages in this industry in this country is more then double what it is in Europe, where articles of a similar kind are manufactured. The cost of the plant and machinery and the capital necessarily employed in the manufacture in this country is not less than double what it is in Europe. If it is the intention of the American Congress to protect American interests; if it is the intention of this Congress to protect American labor; if it is the purpose of this bill to provide reduction, if you please, in certain directions, but without injuring the labor employed, let gentlemen on the other side who are advocating the passage of this bill as it is explain to me why this reduction of duties upon this particular article of manufacture is attempted; or if they can not intelligently explain it, let them concede that the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], and which I indorse, should be adopted by this committee and by the House.

The question being taken on Mr. FARQUHAR'S amendment, there were—ayes 64, noes 61.

Mr. MILLS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MILLS and Mr. FARQUHAR were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron or steel beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts, or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that lines 226 and 227 in relation to "cut tacks, brads or sprigs," upon which this bill proposes a duty of "35 per cent. ad valorem," be read again, in order that I may submit a letter on the subject. I know it is hopeless to move any amendment, but I would like to have this letter read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may move a pro forma amendment to the pending paragraph, and have the letter read as a part of his remarks.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LONG. I now ask that the letter which I send to the desk be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PLYMOUTH, MASS., April 18, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Permit us to call your attention to the effect the Mills tariff bill would have on our business if it becomes a law. The present duty on tacks is 2½ cents per thousand on sizes 14-ounce and smaller, and 3 cents a pound on sizes 16-ounce and over. The Mills bill proposes 35 per cent. ad valorem duty. Iron tack-plate costs English tack manufacturers from 1½ to 1¾ cents a pound. Ours costs us 2 cents a pound, or about 33⅓ per cent. more. English tack manufacturers pay their tack-makers 1*s.* 3*d.*, or say 31 cents per 100,000, while we pay 50, 60, and 75 cents per 100,000; i. e., for the same quantity and grade of work we pay 100 per cent. for cutting. If the duty is reduced to 35 per cent. ad valorem we must reduce the wages of our help at least 33⅓ per cent. to compete.

We remain, very respectfully yours,

LORING & PARKS.
COBB & DREW,
THE PLYMOUTH MILLS,
By WM. STODDARD, Treasurer.

Hon. JOHN D. LONG, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out the words "six-tenths of;" so as to make the duty 1 cent per pound. I have no remarks to make.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out the pending paragraph, and I send to the desk a letter which I desire to have read. It is from an officer of the New Jersey Steel and Iron Company.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRENTON, N. J., June 7, 1888.

Hon. JAMES BUCHANAN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: I do not know whether there is any probability of the Mills bill becoming a law, but the cut in the duty on beams and structural iron is an outrage and strikes directly at Trenton. That a product like beams, expensive to manufacture and used only in buildings of the highest class, should be subject to a less duty than ordinary beam-iron used by everybody and easily manufactured, is directly contrary to any theory of tariff rates that I have ever heard of.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Clerk need not read any further. That is all that is germane to my present purpose. Bar-iron is put up seven-tenths to 1 cent per pound.

Mr. Chairman, this letter is from one of the officials of a company which employs about fifteen hundred men. The rate of duty proposed in this bill on bar-iron is, as I have said, from seven-tenths of a cent to 1 cent per pound; the rate proposed on these iron or steel beams, girders, joists, angles, and channels, which are far more difficult to roll, because of the varying sizes and shapes and lengths, is six-tenths of 1 cent per pound. That can not be fair. If this bill is to "correct inequalities" let it correct them, not make or perpetuate them. Either the proposed duty on bar-iron is too high, or that proposed on these shapes is too low. I have moved to strike out the paragraph because, as the Committee of the Whole has already refused to change the rate, that is the only course left me.

Mr. MILLS. I believe the existing duty is equivalent to 102 per cent.; and the gentleman says that this bill, which proposes to reduce it to 49 per cent., is an outrage. Let us vote.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pittsburgh [Mr. BAYNE] was a very material reduction upon present rates, and that was not accepted by the House. I stated that I moved to strike out the paragraph because that was the only course left me to pursue, the amendment of the gentleman from Pittsburgh having been voted down. Can the gentleman from Texas tell me where he obtains his information as to the present duty being 102 per cent.?

Mr. MILLS. Right here in the book before us, where it is run out—102 per cent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is the book which has been furnished to us, and which also tells us that the ad valorem rate on lead at 2 cents per pound is less than the ad valorem on orange mineral at 1½ cents per pound, although 100 pounds of orange mineral contains the product of 114 to 116 pounds of lead. Since seeing that statement I have ceased to regard this book as authority.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BUCHANAN to strike out the paragraph, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steel wheels and steel-tired wheels for railway purposes, whether wholly or partly finished, and iron or steel locomotive, car, and other railway tires, or parts thereof, wholly or partly manufactured, 2 cents per pound; iron or steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms or blanks for the same, without regard to the degree of manufacture, 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. BURROWS. I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Screws commonly called wood-screws, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

Mr. MILLS. We have no objection to that.

The motion of Mr. VANCE was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron and steel wire and iron and steel wire galvanized, and all manufactures of iron and steel wire and of iron and steel wire galvanized, shall pay the duties now provided by law: Provided, That no such duty shall be in excess of 60 per cent. ad valorem.

Clippings from new copper fit only for manufacture, 1 cent per pound.

Copper, in plates, bars, ingots, Chili or other pigs, and in other forms, not manufactured, 2 cents per pound; in rolled plates, called braziers' copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Lead ore and lead dross, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move to strike out lines 288 and 289, and in lieu thereof to insert what I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask, by unanimous consent, that that paragraph and the subsequent paragraph be passed over, to be recurred to hereafter.

The subsequent paragraph is as follows:

Lead, in pigs and bars, molten and old refuse lead run into blocks, and bars and old scrap lead fit only to be remanufactured, 1½ cents per pound. Lead in sheets, pipes, or shot, 2½ cents per pound.

I ask that both paragraphs be passed over to be recurred to hereafter.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DUBOIS. Let my amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Idaho will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 288, 289, as follows:

"Lead ore and lead dross, three-quarters of 1 cent per pound."

And in lieu thereof insert as follows:

"A combination of lead ore with silver or gold ore shall not exempt such lead ore from payment of said duty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the paragraph and the succeeding paragraph be passed over, to be recurred to hereafter.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will consent to that with the understanding that I am to be recognized as having the floor when the subject is again resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that if these paragraphs are to be passed over that we also pass over from line 295 to 303, which is as follows:

Zinc ore, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Zinc, spelter, or tutenegue, in blocks or pigs, and old worn-out zinc fit only to be remanufactured, 1¼ cents per pound; zinc, spelter, or tutenegue in sheets, 2 cents per pound.

Everything pertaining to zinc should be passed over until we consider the paragraphs in reference to lead ore.

Mr. WARNER. That should be done.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask these two paragraphs be passed over for the present.

Mr. MILLS. I can not consent to that.

Mr. WARNER. I ask that zinc be also passed over. It is taken out of the same mine from which we take lead ore. They are intimately connected. You can not discuss one without discussing the other. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MILLS. I object to passing these paragraphs over.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. MILLS. I do not object to passing over the paragraphs in relation to lead ore, but I do object to passing over the paragraph in reference to zinc.

Mr. OWEN. I object to passing any over unless both are passed over.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. If there be no objection to passing over the paragraphs in reference to zinc, there will be no objection to passing over the paragraphs in reference to lead ore.

Several MEMBERS. Who objected to passing over the paragraphs in relation to lead ore?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. OWEN. At the request of gentlemen who are interested I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object unless the paragraphs in reference to zinc can also be passed over.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us have the regular order, then.

Mr. CLARDY. Was there objection to the request I submitted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted it and it was objected to by the call for the regular order.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that my amendment be read again.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman add to the paragraph the words in his amendment?

Mr. DUBOIS. I move to strike out the paragraph and add the words in my amendment to the duty under the present law.

Mr. Chairman, I have already submitted some remarks in regard to the proposed reduction in this bill, and I would not take up the time of the committee did not the pending proposition vitally affect not only my own Territory, but every other Territory in the Union. I am surprised my colleagues from Montana, New Mexico, and Arizona do not rise in their places and protest against this proposed reduction.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They have not had a chance.

Mr. DUBOIS. They know it is as vital to their Territories as it is to mine. Of the lead ore produced in this country at least five-sixths comes from the Territories. We are so far from market we can scarcely compete with lead brought in from foreign countries. The cost of transportation is great and the price of labor is necessarily high. They are so high in our mountain districts it is hard indeed for us to compete with the foreign production.

In addition to this fact is the further one that all of our low-grade silver mines are dependent upon the price of lead for their successful working. It will be absolutely impossible to work our silver mines if this reduction of the tariff on lead as proposed here is made.

I wish now to submit, for the Clerk to read, a few letters, which will show that I do not exaggerate when I say that I represent everybody in the Territory on this particular question.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOHN M. BURKE HAS NOT WITHDRAWN—HE WILL BE A CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS.

Editor Evening Inter-Idaho:

In a recent issue of the Butte (Mont.) Inter-Mountain it was stated that Hon. John M. Burke had withdrawn from the Congressional canvass for the reason that he could not indorse certain party measures relating to tariff, hurtful to the interests of the Territory. This statement, which has been pretty generally copied and commented on by the Territorial press, and which showed up Mr. Burke in a most favorable light as a man to whom principle is dearer than personal ambition, no doubt correctly embodied Mr. Burke's views. From the following letter, however, which explains itself, it will be seen that Mr. Burke is still a candidate for the Delegateship, and it is to be hoped his many Democratic friends will not abate their efforts to secure so suitable and so strong a man for the head of the ticket.

ORLANDO B. BATTEN.

WARDNER, June 6, 1888.

O. B. BATTEN, Ketchum, Idaho:

DEAR SIR: I have just returned from Chicago, where I have been ever since I saw you, with a very sick wife, whom I have had to leave there in the hospital, and I may have to return any day, and I am trying to get my mining business in shape so as to give as much of my time as possible to the campaign after the 22d of August. Before that time I shall not be able to give politics any personal attention. Our court meets here on the 14th instant, and I have several mining cases before it. Now, taking all of these things into consideration, I have concluded to take this course: I will attend the Territorial convention; I will do my best to get the following plank in the Democratic platform:

1. Against the reduction of tariff on lead.

Mr. DUBOIS. I send to the desk now the following extract from the same paper, of the succeeding day, merely remarking that this is the leading Democratic paper of the Territory, a strong supporter of President Cleveland, and a rank free-trader when it does not interfere with the industry of its own people.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Inter-Idaho, Hailey, Idaho, June 18, 1888.]

HON. JOHN M. BURKE'S LETTER.

The letter of Hon. J. M. Burke, which we published yesterday, is a fair and frank expression of the general Democratic sentiment of this Territory. It is not merely the opinion of Mr. Burke as a Congressional candidate, on which he is desirous of taking his personal chances for an election; but it is justly representative of the ideas and interests of the great mass of the people, who, if they nominate him, or any other man for Congress, they propose to elect.

Mr. Burke is for the retention of the duty on foreign lead. We know of no Democrat who is not. With a Congress likely soon to be Democratic, and a Democratic Executive, one who sympathizes with the predominant political organization, much more than a partisan opponent, would have the power to influence the legislation requisite to retain that duty.

Mr. DUBOIS. Now, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, or some member on that side of the House, if that is a correct statement with reference to the political question involved in this tariff legislation, and whether it would affect the action of the committee on this question if the political complexion of the Delegate was different.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCKENNA. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Idaho be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. DUBOIS. I say, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if that is a correct statement, and whether the Democratic party is legislating upon this subject on principle, or whether, as I have said, it is a question of the political faith of the Delegate?

Mr. MILLS. I ask that we have a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask the gentleman first to answer my question.

Mr. MILLS. What has that got to do with the duty on lead?

Mr. DUBOIS. It has got a great deal to do with it in that Territory; and I ask the gentleman if the statement of the Inter-Idaho is correct?

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman and his associates on that side and myself can probably take occasion to talk this question of politics over after we get through with this bill. I want to pass the bill now.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask if it is not a fair question, whether this is the Democratic idea which prevails in the enactment of this tariff legislation?

I ask the gentleman if he will answer it.

Mr. MILLS. Make your own statement, and I will take my own time to answer it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Refusing to answer it, I am forced to assume that it is not a correct statement, for I would be loth to believe that the Democratic party is guided by merely personal and partisan motives in this legislation. I am not surprised to know that the Inter-Idaho's statement is not correct.

Mr. Chairman, there were 144,000 tons of lead produced in the United States last year. Twenty thousand tons of this came from my Territory. They are taking 3,000 tons a month now from the Cœur d'Alene district alone. But while the lead industry is one of vast importance to the people of that Territory, it is well known that nobody will be benefited by the reduction of duty as proposed in this bill. Not a single individual in this country is interested in that reduction except in so far as it injures him in his occupation; and, as I say, when you strike down the lead industry in my Territory and the others you also strike down the silver-mining industry.

We took out twenty-nine millions of silver last year in Arizona, New Mexico, Montana, Utah, and Idaho alone, and there is not a mining superintendent in any Territory of this Union or in any one of the States who will not tell you if you make this reduction on lead that you close the silver mines. There is a long list of them to which I could call attention, and I am a little surprised that we do not have all of the silver men on that side of the House coming forward to support the amendment. The substitute I offer is in the interest of this industry in the United States. It is for the purpose of protecting that industry. They bring the lead ores now from Mexico under a ruling of the Department which provides that if silver is a chief component of the importation, or rather if silver is the component of chief value, that the entry of the other ores combined with it shall be free. They down there in the custom-houses determine what is the component of chief value, and lead has no value at all in that country.

The consequence is that all the lead ore comes in free and we are compelled to compete with the peons of Mexico under this ruling of the Department. This is so in regard to lead coming from European countries also. If gold or silver is the component of chief value, the lead comes in free. You are making a double attack, therefore, upon the industry of the Pacific coast, and I ask you in fairness and in candor—and challenge any Democratic Delegate on this floor to controvert any word of what I have said—I ask you in fairness and candor to adopt the substitute and strike out these two lines.

Mr. MILLS. Now let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had supposed—perhaps they intend to do so yet—I had supposed that some gentleman representing some of the mining interests of Missouri would have spoken in favor of the amendment just submitted, because it not only concerns the Territories of the West, but some of our great interior States. In Missouri and the State of Kansas much lead is mined, and the amendment is not only important to the region spoken of by the gentleman from Idaho, but to the States I have named. In Southwest Missouri and in Southeast Kansas some 30,000,000 pounds of lead are mined annually, of the aggregate value of $800,000, giving employment to thousands of men.

This, it may be suggested upon the other side, is a raw material, and hence should be put upon the free-list, or else the duty now imposed upon it should be greatly reduced.

As raw material what is its value? As found in the ground it is comparatively worthless. It only becomes valuable after labor is expended upon it and it is dug from the bowels of the earth. When dug from the ground it represents labor, and the honest, industrious toil engaged in mining it should commend it to the thoughtful consideration of this House, and by our votes, it seems to me, we should do what we can to protect it.

As was suggested by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], under the rulings of the Department lead is admitted to-day free of duty all along the Mexican border, and also all along the Canadian line. Where there is silver or gold found in the ore of predominating value the ore is admitted free of duty notwithstanding the great quantity of lead in the ores. This is because gold and silver are upon the free-list, and under the construction given by the Treasury Department to the existing law the ore is admitted as gold or silver ore and no duty is collected upon the lead it contains, and thus our lead-miners are put in competition with free lead ore.

Let us look a little further. In 1870 there were introduced or imported into this country 85,897,720 pounds of lead. At that time lead was worth $6.30 per hundred pounds. Last year there were imported only 12,016,694 pounds of dutiable lead. Why? Because lead was of less value than in 1870. Lead was then worth only $4.50 per hundred pounds. Hence there was not as much imported as in 1870. But take the tariff off of lead or reduce it so that it can be profitably imported, and we will again find the figures that we found in 1870 representing the importations. Is there, as has been suggested, any excuse for this? Is there any reason for it addressed to the conscience of this House or to its judgment? As has been suggested, it must be apparent to every intelligent man that the reduction of the import duty results in increased imports. Reducing the import duty does not reduce the surplus realized from this metal, but instead of that would add to the surplus now accumulating in the Treasury. It will necessarily add to the imports, as is shown by the imports of 1870 and other years that I could name.

Now, if gentlemen are sincere in wanting to reduce this revenue, this surplus in the Treasury of which they complain, why is it that by their proposed legislation they strive to increase imports and thus increase the amount received upon the importations? That must be the effect of this proposed legislation. No gentleman upon the other side of the House who has given this subject thoughtful consideration can deny the proposition I make.

For the reasons suggested by the gentleman from Idaho, as well as for the reasons I have hastily given, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho can be accepted, as it should be. Why should we permit the lead that is mined by the peons and by the cheap labor of Mexico to be introduced into our country free of duty under this construction given to the law by the Treasury Department? Let us exclude it or make it pay the duty that it would pay if brought through the port of New York as lead ore. Let us retain the duty as as it is now, and correct this unfortunate construction, because no one can say that the miners engaged in mining lead get better compensation or realize more from their labor than they should realize.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have a vote. There has been no debate on this side. All the time has been taken on the other side. The gentleman can extend his remarks in the RECORD if he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I renew it. I want to ask a question of the gentleman from Idaho. Perhaps I did not understand him. I understood his amendment to be so framed as to prevent the free importation of lead in a particular combination with precious metals.

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes, sir; but also to retain the present duty on lead.

Mr. ADAMS. I want to ask him also whether in all the mining States and Territories a very large proportion of the silver ore is not what is called galena ore, containing a large proportion of lead?

Mr. DUBOIS. That is a fact. There is in my Territory an average of 70 per cent. of lead.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it not a fact, as has been repeatedly stated, that the price of lead has determined the question whether a silver mine could be run or could not be run?

Mr. DUBOIS. Absolutely.

Mr. PERKINS. That was what I was about to suggest if I had been given two minutes more.

Mr. ADAMS. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PERKINS. Many mines in Colorado, Idaho, and elsewhere, are to-day worked for gold and silver because the lead realized from the mines pays the operating expenses or nearly so. If the duty on lead is stricken off, so that lead ceases to be valuable, those mines can not be worked, the laborers will be thrown out of employment, and the capital invested will be entirely lost, and the yield of silver greatly lessened, and thus great harm wrought to the country. I have here some reports from superintendents of mines in the West which I will have incorporated as part of my remarks, and printed in the RECORD. In the name of the miners of the West, I ask this House to stand by American labor and American interests, and to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

The reports are as follows:

REMARKS FROM SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE PRINCIPAL MINES OF UTAH WITH REFERENCE TO THE EFFECT A REDUCTION OF THE TARIFF WOULD HAVE UPON THE MINING INDUSTRY.

R. C. Chambers, superintendent of the Ontario mine, Park City, Utah:

"If Congress should admit raw materials free of duty, or remove, or materially reduce the present rariff on foreign lead, the effect upon the mine above named would, in my opinion, reduce the product so that the profits would be inadequate to pay the operating expenses of our mine."

John J. Daly, superintendent of the Daly mine, Park City, Utah:

"If Congress should remove the present tariff on foreign lead it would so reduce the profits as to be totally insufficient for the risks run."

A. Hanauer, manager Lead mine:

"The removal or material reduction of present tariff on lead would shut down the mine and stop the concentrating works."

W. F. James, superintendent Maxfield mine, Big Cottonwood Cañon:

"A reduction of the tariff on lead would, in my opinion, compel us to close until such time as the wages of employés were reduced one-half, and the other operating expenses in the same proportion. Of $165,565 taken from the mine, $99,263 were paid for labor, and $21,077 for freights, etc."

L. U. Colbath, superintendent City of Rocks mine, Little Cottonwood Cañon, Utah:

"If Congress should admit lead free, it would close our mine."

Charles E. Mitchener, manager Honorine mine, Tooele County, Utah:

"To remove the present tariff on lead would close our mine and mill."

Alex. Niedringhaus, superintendent Calumet and Muscatine and Silver King mines, Tooele County, Utah:

"The value of the lead in our ores nearly equals that of the silver and gold. The profits are in the lead. If the tariff be reduced, the mine will be compelled to lie idle unless wages and freights are greatly reduced."

Charles W. Watson, superintendent of the Nast mine, Bingham Cañon, Utah:

"The removal of the present tariff on lead would stop production."

C. Lavajnino, superintendent Old Telegraph mine, Bingham Cañon, Utah:

"A reduction of the lead tariff would indefinitely suspend operations."

J. Q. Packard, superintendent Eureka mine, Tintic, Utah:

"In my opinion the reduction of the tariff, especially upon lead, would be disastrous to the mining industry."

Edward P. Ferry, vice-president and manager Anchor Mining Company:

"My judgment is clear that the reduction of the tariff on lead would be disastrous to the mining interests of the United States and of incalculable injury to that branch of industry."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. What is the amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

The question was put, and the Chair was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 289 the following:

"Provided that the combination of lead with silver in ores shall not exempt the lead therein from the duty."

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point that that is the amendment that we have just voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. No it is not the same amendment. The amendment voted upon was a motion to strike out these lines. This is an amendment proposing to add to the paragraph the words just read by the Clerk.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to hear an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. If this amendment should be voted down, a separate motion to strike out these two lines would be in order, I suppose?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the present law fixes a duty of 1½ cents per pound on lead ores, and 2 cents per pound on pig-lead. This bill reduces the duty on ores from 1½ cents to three-quarters of 1 cent, and on pig-lead from 2 cents to 1¼ cents per pound. There are six or seven smelting establishments in the district I represent. They are important establishments, and a large capital is required to operate them. They buy and smelt a great many tons of lead ore—just how many I am not prepared to say. What I seek to do by the amendment I propose is to correct an inequality which exists under the present law, and which would exist under this bill if it should pass in its present form.

I ask no advantage over anybody in this country engaged in smelting, or engaged in anything else; I ask no advantage over anybody on the globe; but I do insist that the people I represent, and the people of my State, who are largely interested in these enterprises shall be put upon terms of absolute equality under the law with the constituents of every other gentleman upon this floor. I shall protest, as it is my right and duty to do, against the continuance of an inequality in the law which gives an advantage to enterprises in one section of the country over similar enterprises in another. Now, the fact is, that these smelting establishments in Missouri are buying and reducing lead ores which are covered and protected by a duty. At present the duty is 1½ cents per pound, and if this bill shall become a law the duty would be three-quarters of 1 cent per pound. All I ask is that similar establishments situated anywhere else within the limits of this country shall be put upon terms of absolute equality with us, and not be given an undue advantage by the letter of the law, or by a departmental construction of the law. There is now coming into the United States, imported from Mexico, a large quantity of lead ores. I read from the Engineering and Mining Journal on this subject:

Our correspondent calls attention on another page to the large imports of Mexican lead, which come in free of duty as silver ore and are smelted in this country. While this unquestionably benefits the smelters who can compete for this ore, who are so situated as to take advantage of it, it will presently affect the market for the products of our own mines by adding to our supplies of the metal.

The writer estimates the amount of lead that has come into the United States in this way during the past year at over 10,000 tons, and there are other estimates putting the amount at from ten to fifteen thousand tons.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is 15,000, according to the official figures.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. This lead ore is brought in across the Rio Grande, associated and combined with a low grade of silver ore, and, under the construction of the law by the Treasury Department, if the preponderance of value in the combination is with the precious metal the whole mass is admitted free as silver ore. If the preponderance of value is with the base metal, then the whole mass is subject to duty. But we all understand that it takes very little silver to exceed in value a great deal of lead, and hence a great deal of lead can be brought in free under the cover of very little silver.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. STONE, of Missouri, was permitted to continue his remarks for five minutes longer.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. These low-grade silver ores are being brought in from Mexico in large quantities. They contain a large amount of lead mixed with them, and, in fact, the ores are really purchased and imported for the lead they contain. Now, how does that work?

Mr. REED. Does it not work for the benefit of the consumer?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes; I suppose it does. I presume it does work for the benefit of the consumer. I am not discussing that view of the case. Lead ores are not put upon the free-list, but unless the present law is amended it would be more logical to do so.

Mr. REED. Which are you for?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I am not discussing that view of the case.

Mr. REED. Evidently not.

I am in favor of reducing the burdens of taxation. I am for the Mills bill, but I am also in favor of equality and fair play. I think here is a defect that ought to be cured. The proposition I make is that the smelting establishments in my State shallbe put upon terms of equality with the smelting establishments elsewhere. That is what I am asking for.

Now, how does it operate? The present duty is 1½ cents per pound, or $30 per ton, upon lead ore. The smelting establishments in Missouri, Kansas, and Illinois are purchasing ores covered by that duty of $30 per ton. Under the construction of the law made by the Treasury Department, by which these low-grade ores from Mexico are admitted free of duty, a large number of smelting works have been built up along the Rio Grande River at various points in Texas for the purpose of utilizing these Mexican ores; and they are doing it. They are enabled to use these ores brought in free of duty, whilst the smelters in my district must purchase ores which are covered by the duty; they can not buy those ores which pay no duty, because of the difference in the cost of transportation.

Mr. BLAND. If my colleague will allow me——

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. My time is too limited to permit me to yield. I am not seeking a controversy with anybody. I am simply contending for what I believe to be right.

Mr. BLAND. I simply wanted to call attention to the fact that these ores come from Mexico to Missouri, and are manufactured there, so that Missouri suffers no disadvantage.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I very much doubt the correctness of the statement of my colleague. I am not aware that a pound of these Mexican ores goes to Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. In St. Louis there are large reduction works where both the silver and the lead coming from Mexico are reduced.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The provision which I offer, to come in at this part of the bill, will simply have the effect of placing a duty upon leads of the character I have mentioned. I can see no reason why lead ores lwhich are not combined with other ores should pay a duty when imported, whilst lead ores mixed with silver should come in without paying a duty. Import a mass of ore, 51 per cent. of which in value is silver and 49 per cent. lead, and the whole is admitted free. When this ore is sold in any market it is sold with reference to the relative value of every mineral in it; it has a lead value and a silver value, and it is purchased as much for the lead as for the silver. On the same train with such ores as I have described there may be a car-load of ore in which the relative value of the two metals is reversed. There may be a car-load where 49 per cent. is silver and 51 per cent. is lead, and another car where 49 per cent. is lead and 51 per cent. is silver. In the one instance a duty is paid; in the other it is not. I can see no reason for anything of that sort. Besides, it is absolutely a fraud upon the revenue. Somewhere between ten thousand and fifteen thousand tons of these ores were imported last year. At $30 a ton the duty collected on those ores should have been $300,000 to $450,000. I think that the provision I have submitted ought to be adopted as a matter of simple justice to all sections of the country, and as a protection against fraud upon the revenue.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the proposition involved in the pending amendment is to impose more tax than is now levied upon a raw material; for if anything be raw material, lead ore confessedly is. It may be well for us to consider the origin of this tax, as well as the need of it, when we are determining the merits of the pending proposition. The existing tax on lead ore was laid in 1861. There was no tax in 1846; there was no tax in 1857; there was no tax in the Morrill bill of 1861; but in a subsequent tax bill of that year—a bill which was introduced into this House as a "temporary increase" of the tariff, and which was confessedly and professedly at that time in excess of all the needs of protection; in that bill, which in its very title stated its purpose to lay only temporary taxation, this tax on lead ore was imposed. It was not needed for the protection or the production of lead ore in this country, for this was then an old industry; and it is not needed now. If the Democratic party be justly subject to any criticism in regard to lead ore it is that they have not put it upon the free-list, the existing tax upon it being, as I stated, a war tax and a temporary measure; and now, after nearly thirty years, the tax is still continued in part.

Our imports of lead ore and dross in the last fiscal year—I mean the dutiable part—were less than $1,500, a mere incident in the trade. Our exports of lead and manufactures of lead were nearly three-quarters of a million dollars. It is perfectly obvious that we do not need any tax on this article. It is perfectly obvious that the only effect a tax can have is to put prices up beyond what is proper with reference to consumption, thus limiting the consumption of the product in this country, and thus lowering wages. We sent over $44,000 worth of lead and the manufactures of lead to England alone, and there is no item in the whole tax-list which in reality is better fitted for the free-list than lead ore.

Gentlemen talk now of the slave or peon labor system of Mexico competing against the free labor of America. Mr. Chairman, it is late for anybody in this century, and especially in free America in this century, to contend that slave, peon, or any form of degraded or oppressed labor can compete economically and successfully with free labor anywhere. Is there a gentleman from Missouri or from any Southern State who does not know that we are more prosperous under free labor than we were with the same laborers when they worked for us for nothing but their victuals and clothes? You may call it paradoxical, if you please; but in the economy of God there is profit all around in liberty, and He conspires on the side of freedom.

If freedom were not profitable slavery would never have ceased in this or in any other country. Yet gentlemen say, protect our freemen from slaves, from peons, and from paupers. But, sir, by proofs we have of the North compared with the South under the two systems of free labor upon the one hand and of even slave labor upon the other, by all the proofs we have of the prosperity of the South in excess of what she enjoyed under a system of even worse than peon or pauper labor—by all these proofs, backed by the statistical facts I have adduced, I confidently affirm that we have nothing to fear, and that the proposed increase of this tax ought not to be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this paragraph.

Mr. REED. I would like to be heard.

Mr. MILLS. I will then withdraw my motion.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not propose to differ with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] in his statement of the superiority of free labor over slave labor, but I should think while he was enunciating that principle some other ideas properly connected with it would have occurred to his mind, that he would have remembered that he and his section battled as strenuously for slave labor and the products of it as he now stands for foreign labor and the products of it. [Laughter and applause.] Having been conspicuously convicted before the community and before himself of having entertained totally wrong ideas on that subject, I should think he would hesitate somewhat in this persistent imposing on the American nation of mistaken ideas which were correlative to those ideas which he has just condemned.

Now it is perfectly apparent there ought to be some system running through the legislation on this question, that they ought to take plain ground on the one side or the other, or else plainly admit they are proceeding one step at a time in the direction of free trade. [Applause.]

If all these arguments about our duty to the consumer are true, then the argument which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has addressed to his side of the House naturally falls upon deaf ears, and rightly, too, because if they can smuggle in one-half of the lead ore which is used in this country free of duty under Treasury decision or under the decision of his party in the House, they have accomplished one-half of their purpose. If they can not enjoy entire free trade they are going to get partial free trade and bide their time.

I hope the gentlemen on the other side will in the remainder of the bill adopt some plain principle in regard to it, and if these things are burdens on the people—if they are really tariff taxes, as they are so anxious to have us understand—they will make us all as free of them as they can and declare the purpose they entertain to make us free as to the rest. [Laughter and applause.]

I hope they may make some declaration so plain here on the floor of the House they will not be able to go over to New York and proclaim the contrary. [Laughter and applause.]

And I hope the chairman of the committee, when he was last in New York, plainly stated his views on the subject, and did not disguise them. He has been reaping in certain Democratic papers a great deal of praise for his manly boldness in resisting his constituents on the subject of wool, and I hope he was not afraid before strangers to declare what he believes to be the whole counsel of the Lord. [Laughter.] Or if he did falter, overcome by a strange climate, I hope that on coming back here and touching his native earth again he may have got strength enough to get up in his place now and frankly say what his position is. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I hope, Mr. Chairman, I will always have the courage to stand by my own convictions and be true to my own sentiments, and that when I believe a thing to be true I will not cowardly run away from it whenever the enemy delivers his first shot. [Applause.]

The gentleman has talked of what I said over at New York. I have said at New York what I have said to the people of my State. I hope my friends on the other side will have the same courage to stand by the whisky platform they made at the Chicago convention. [Laughter and applause.] I see some little intimation that the bill the gentlemen are preparing so cautiously and have been so carefully nursing for several weeks is to make a flank movement on that whisky platform—[laughter and applause]—that it is going to stop with alcohol in the arts and make the balance of the reduction by a cut on sugar of 50 per cent. [Laughter.]

I speak of that provision in their platform which declared that they intended to repeal the last particle of the internal-revenue taxes before they would reduce the taxation which afforded protection to any one article of domestic manufacture. Here is one of the favored articles which they have been standing by for years; and when it comes to the time that the Democratic battalions are getting on the march, and delivering their shots in the face of their advancing regiments they turn quickly about and say that they did not mean exactly so much whisky as they thought they did, but that they meant to take some sugar in it, and a good deal of sugar at that. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

They say if we are to sacrifice some of our products, we are going to sacrifice, not Carnegie's steel-rails, but we are going to take some of that little product of American labor down in Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, they want some courage on that side of the House, as well as on this side. Yes, sir; I said I would make wool free, and it is my intention to stand by my word; and this lead ought to be free also. I am not afraid of what the people of the country will do in connection with this matter. My people in State convention have indorsed me, and my constituents will send me back here again on that very platform. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am not afraid to stand by some of my Democratic friends in Tammany Hall, as I would stand by the Democrats on the prairies of Texas. It is as good in one place for a Democrat to stand on as in the other; and it will be a good enough platform to lay your side out in November, if you have the courage to stand by your whisky platform. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I am disappointed in the speech of the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I had really expected, after the challenge I made him, that he would not have contented himself with simply commenting upon the Republican platform, or comparing it with the Democratic platform, or at least, if he had done so, that he would have repeated the Republican platform aright, if he did not have the courage to repeat the Democratic one correctly. I supposed he would have made some such declaration as this:

God grant that the day may soon come when American ships, freighted with American commerce, shall again go to sea under the shield and protection of our own flag.

He meant the American flag then. [Laughter.]

But if that day is to come it must be preceded by a reversal of the policy of commercial restriction. We must remove both by legislation and diplomacy—

Not merely the House of Representatives, but by the American minister to England also—every hindering cause that prevents the free exchange of the products of our labor in all the markets of the world.

We must unfetter every arm and let every muscle strike for the highest remuneration for its toil.

Mr. ROGERS. That is sound. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman ought to read it every day.

Mr. REED:

We must let wealth, the creation of labor, grow up in all the homes of our people. Then every industry will spring forward at a bound, and wealth, prosperity, and power will bless the land that is dedicated to free men, free labor, and free trade. [Loud applause.]

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Now hear the applause on the Democratic side. I am glad to hear that [renewed laughter and applause on the Democratic side], because it shows that they recognize the courage which their leader had four years ago, and which he seems to be deprived of to-day. That was the speech I expected him to make. Instead of that, however, he treats us to declarations of how brave he is, and then shows how brave he is not. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Why should he not have stood up here to-day and reiterated the sentiments which awakened so much applause on his side of the House on that occasion? Why, it is because of his recent visit to New York. I do not know what he said there, but if I can judge by what other Democratic patriots are now busy saying to the country he went there for the purpose of denying that he is a free-trader. He went over there for the purpose of assuring the Democracy of that region that they need not be troubled with any idea of free trade from him.

Is it not strange what effect climate has upon gentlemen's courage and upon their terms of expression? Under the sweltering sun of New York, surrounded by importers, he recollected that he was in the largest manufacturing city of the United States; not a word of this bold, brave talk with which he says he always treats people was heard on that occasion, I venture to say. And when I challenge him here to repeat it he does not seem to have exhibited that alacrity which would correspond to the proclamation of courage he has been kind enough to make. He therefore imposes upon me the duty of repeating the courage which he exhibited in the long-gone days of four years ago.

Mr. MILLS. I will give my friend the last word. Let us have a vote upon this proposition.

Mr. BURROWS. One moment. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLS. I insist upon a vote. That is my speech. I suppose the gentleman wants to put in the rest.

Mr. REED. We had better have the whole of it, so that there will be no misunderstanding. I think it will come in well on whisky and sugar.

Mr. BURROWS. I think, with the gentleman from Maine, that it is high time the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, as the leader of the Democratic majority, should plant himself and his party on the real ground they occupy. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] a few years ago so clearly outlined the policy of his party, and so clearly foreshadowed the bill that he now champions, that I desire to read a few words from a speech delivered by him in this House, showing that it is the purpose of the Democratic party to land this country ultimately upon free trade. The gentleman said:

The committee could have imposed duties at 20 per cent., as a general rule, making a few exceptions above that standard and many below, and raised one hundred millions instead of one hundred and forty-one. The next year the same duties would bring one hundred and twenty millions, because the imports would be largely increased by the low duties.

Just what we have charged will be the effect of this bill if it should become a law.

Our policy should be to take the smallest amount of taxes that we can by customs—

Now mark this language—and we should gradually decrease the amount until our customs taxes come alone from non-competing articles entering our custom-houses.

There is the distinct declaration of free trade. First, by lowering the duties you will increase the importations, and year after year as the importations increase and the revenues grow, the policy is to strike the duties still lower, until, what? Until the time comes when there shall be no duty levied upon any article that comes in competition with an American product. That is the declaration of the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. It is upon that theory that this bill is framed, and the gentleman himself has confessed that the practical effect of the measure will be, first, to stimulate importations, increase the revenue, and drive the country to free trade.

Mr. REED. The definition shows the gentleman knew what free trade was when he saw it.

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Another thing. Speaking of whisky and tobacco, to which the gentleman has alluded to-day, falsely charging that the Republican party has committed itself to the doctrine of free whisky, the gentleman had something to say. It was this:

We now have over a hundred millions from whisky and tobacco and other internal taxes, but they are on the same principle as the tariff taxes on consumption, and fall on the poor, and should be largely decreased.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I want to yield two minutes to the gentleman to permit him to continue that reading a little further.

Mr. BURROWS. That covers all you said on this point.

Mr. MILLS. No; there are a few sentences following.

Mr. BURROWS. The balance is in the same line.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARNER and Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to offer an amendment, but I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLEY. I was called from the city on Tuesday by a case of extreme illness in my family, and had no idea that the iron schedule would be passed so quickly. I hastened back as soon as I could, and desire either now or at some time when more agreeable to the committee in the course of the debate to make a statement in connection with one point in this schedule which I alone, as an indifferent witness, am able to make. I shall not call for a vote nor attempt to provoke one. I ask not over ten minutes at the most.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk the speech delivered by my colleague from the Erie district, Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT, in this House on the 10th of May last, and ask that the Clerk read the marked passage. I hope that my colleague is in the House.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Erie [Mr. SCOTT] is not present.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I shall be obliged to avail myself of the leave given me, and proceed in his absence. If I make a misstatement he can correct it when he returns. The Clerk will please read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One of the members of the Edgar Thomson Steel Works, Limited, admitted to me within the past month, within 200 feet of where I now stand, that a statement, made by myself in the fall of 1886, was correct, namely, that he drew out of the company as dividends in one year the sum of $1,500,000, the equivalent of $5,000 per day for three hundred days in the year, and this was but one member of the firm, with no statement of profits undivided. No intelligent business man will put the profits of this company at less than $5,000,000 in prosperous years, and we will allow them to employ 7,500 wage-workers.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I came to Washington a day earlier than I otherwise would have done in order to contradict that statement, and hoping to get here before the question of the rate of duty on rails should be reached. The statement is not only not in accordance with the facts as they occurred in my presence and hearing, but absolutely falsifies them.

The truth is, the object of the interview was to contradict the very statements that my colleague renewed in the paragraph of his speech which I have caused to be read, though there was no allegation on his part in the course of the interview that they were not as false as Mr. Carnegie assured him they were. Thus my colleague represents Mr. Carnegie as affirming what he expressly denied, and to deny which, he, as I have already stated, sought the interview. I was the only official person present at the interview. It occurred in this way: Mr. Carnegie, with Hon. David Dudley Field and Mr. Charles A. Peabody, representing a committee appointed by the mayor of the city of New York, appeared before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on the 10th day of February last.

These gentlemen came here in the morning and left for New York in the afternoon. Meanwhile Mr. Carnegie had an appointment with me in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means. Observing that Mr. SCOTT and he did not recognize each other, I said to Mr. Carnegie, sotto voce, "There is Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT." "Indeed," said Mr. Carnegie; "introduce me to him, will you, that I may briefly correct some of his misrepresentations." I hastened to introduce them, and after the formal salutations consequent upon presentation, Mr. Carnegie said to Mr. SCOTT, "You made an address on such an occasion in which you did me the injustice to say that I was a Scotchman who refused American citizenship. My father brought me to this country when I was but a young child. He was naturalized as soon as he could be, and, the child following the citizenship of the father, I was naturalized by his act, and have ever since I came to manhood religiously exercised my political rights."

Mr. SCOTT having expressed regret that he should have misrepresented the facts, Mr. Carnegie proceeded to say, "And you represented me as having taken profits from our rail-mills to the amount of a million and a half dollars in a single year. I have never received any such profit as that from my investments in rail-mills. Most of my money has been made by fortunate investments. Our rail business, including that of all the concerns in which I am interested, has never yielded a million and a half of profits in a year." Mr. Carnegie then spoke of other sources of income, and added: "We make a great variety of work; we own our own ore mines and coal beds, but we have never derived in any year a profit of a million and a half from all our concerns together." He then proceeded to say, as if contrasting his conduct with that of a man who manages more miles of railroad than any other American citizen ever had done, and publishes himself as having been largely interested in the manufacture of iron and the mining of coal, but of whose liberal gifts he had not heard, "You should have remembered when thus exaggerating my profits to state that I gave in one year for the benefit of the people of Pittsburgh, the city in which I grew up, half a million dollars, and to its little sister of Allegheny nearly $300,000; and I reiterate the assertion that our concerns never made a million and a half on rails in any year, and that if we had done so it would have been less than 7 per cent. on the capital invested by the firms of which I am a member."

Mr. MILLS. I hope we shall now have a vote.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to offer an amendment to line 288.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "three-fourths of 1 cent per pound," in lines 288 and 289, and insert in lieu thereof "one and a half cents per pound."

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be to leave the present duty upon this article. I am not here, sir, to say that lead is entitled to protection over and above all other articles, but I am here to say a word for this lead industry, because it is one of the important industries of my State and of the Western Territories, and because, also, I was somewhat at a loss to understand, when my colleague from Missouri [Mr. STONE] was making his able argument upon this question a while ago, whether or not he tended to free trade or to protection. I recognize fully the great injustice done to the lead miners of Missouri and of the Territories by the unjust ruling of the Treasury Department.

But, sir, I think it will not remedy that injustice, but will only impose additional burdens upon them, burdens too grievous to be borne, should the proposition contained in this bill be carried out, striking off one-half of the existing duty upon lead ore. It is a fact well known to every man who is familiar with lead mines—and I happen to have been reared in their midst, in the State of Wisconsin; it is, I say, a fact well known to every man familiar with the lead-mining business that there are no men anywhere who work harder than these miners; there are no men who earn every cent they receive better than do those men who go down into the bowels of the earth and bring up the lead ore to the surface and to the market. And taking the position cited by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], as taken by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means only a few years since, namely, that to decrease the duty is to increase the importation, this change simply means that while this purports to be a bill to reduce the surplus, it is, in fact, in this respect, a bill to increase the revenue. Upon the articles mentioned the duties collected in the last year for which we have figures amounted to only $12,000.

The estimate given by the Committee on Ways and Means of the effect of the passage of this part of their bill is that if it becomes law it will decrease the revenue by the almost infinitesimal amount of $6,000; and I submit to every gentleman upon the other side of the House that should they reduce this duty three-fourths of a cent per pound they will throw down the barrier now set up against the importation of Spanish lead into this country; they will break down a great leading industry of Missouri; they will cripple the mines of Missouri and Kansas; they will close many of the silver mines of New Mexico and of the other Territories, and they will do all this for what purpose? Simply for the purpose of giving free entrance to a foreign material. Now, let me say to my Democratic friends from Missouri that I stand here as the distinguished Senator from their State stood in 1884, when he said that he was not here to help Massachusetts, Connecticut, or Pennsylvania, but that there was an infant industry in his State—the lead industry and zinc industry—and that if in the line of a tariff for revenue he could protect those interests he proposed to do so.

In the district represented by my colleague [Mr. STONE] there are cities whose prosperity, whose existence almost, depends upon this industry. Strike it down and you strike them down. Not one pound of this article is produced in my district; but, sir, the prosperity of every other district in that great State is inseparably interwoven with the prosperity of the great commercial city which I in part represent upon this floor, and our people simply demand fair treatment. Why strike down this industry when, even by your own figures, you save only $6,000? Why do it? Let me say further, that if you close the lead mines of the West and admit your foreign ore free of duty you will transfer the lead-pipe manufacture, the sheet-lead manufacture, the white-lead manufacture, the shot manufacture, all from the Mississippi Valley to the Atlantic seaboard, and I do trust that gentlemen representing this Western country will stand up here for its interests. While other industries are being protected why should we not stand up for the laboring man of Southwestern Missouri? Why should we not demand that the laborer there shall be protected, and that his industry shall not be stricken down?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. If I can be recognized, I will yield to the gentleman to complete his remarks.

Mr. WARNER. I do not care to take further time of the committee, but I wish to have read for the information of members a letter addressed to me in regard to this lead industry.

Mr. MILLS. Let it be printed in the RECORD, and let us go on.

Mr. WARNER. Well, Mr. Chairman, my objection to that is that I am simple enough, coming as I do from a rural community, to believe that evidence will change even the prejudices of some members of this body, and I wish to have the letter read for the sake of the information it conveys, and not merely for the purpose of getting it into the RECORD.

The letter was read, as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MO., February 4, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I sent you by mail yesterday a chart showing the price of pig-lead in England for the last century, and also prices for American pig. The tariff on lead, as you know, is 2 cents.

My observations during the time that I have been engaged in the lead business have convinced me that a protection is an absolute necessity. The price of pig-lead in the United States is not at the present time governed entirely by the European price, nor has that been the case, as a rule, since the United States produced about as much as our home consumption. Foreign lead, duty paid, can not as a rule be laid down in New York within ¼ a cent per pound of the domestic article. The statements which I have sent you show that the lead imported in pig into the United States during the years 1884, 1885, 1886, and 1887, is a very small proportion of the total consumption, and hence it is clear that the price of pig-lead is at least influenced by the relation between demand and supply at home. You will also have noticed a very decided decline in the price of lead since 1877, which decline has been of course in proportion to the decline of the world's price of pig-lead.

So far as manufacturers are concerned who use lead, they will not be affected of course by any reduction in the present duty, and the sufferers will be the men who dig the lead out of the ground, and I think I am stating the exact truth when I say that the Western States and Territories can not produce lead profitably at prices very much below those ruling at the present time. The only advantage to be gained by a reduction in the tariff on lead, in my opinion, would be in removing the lead-manufacturing establishments, which at the present time are located almost entirely in the West, to the East. At the present time the entire supply of lead consumed in the United States is produced in the State of Missouri and west of the Missouri River, and the manufacturers of the various products of lead, such as white lead, lead pipe, shot, etc., must buy their lead paying, for instance, the St. Louis price plus freight to New York. The consequence is that the Western users of lead are enabled, after supplying at profitable rates their home market, to dump their surplus goods in the East. A reduction of the tariff would probably change this in such a way as to give the Eastern users of lead the advantage which the Western users have now; that is to say, the imported foreign lead would fix the Eastern price and the price in the West would probably be New York plus the freight to St. Louis. The largest lead users, i. e., manufacturers of white lead, lead pipe, and shot, are located at St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Chicago.

The mining of lead gives employment to a great many people, and I wish to say in this connection that a very large percentage of ores mined are only profitable on account of their contents of both lead and silver at the same time. If either the silver or the lead was to be made unprofitable the ores could not be mined, so that a reduction in the duty on lead might possibly have a much more serious effect than merely a reduction in the production of lead ores.

There is one more feature which I think it would be well to mention, and that is, that the Spanish lead mines, which are the most extensive in the world, can be worked very cheaply on account of cheap labor and large bodies of ore, and in addition to this these mines are located so close to the coast that the cost of transportation to the United States would be a trifle as compared to the transportation charges which lead in our country pays from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic coast. This business of mining ores and carrying them has, within the last few years, assumed very large proportions, and is the basis of the prosperity of Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Idaho, and any change in the tariff affecting this industry, it seems to me, should be avoided.

I ask that the matter of the linseed-oil trust, and what I have said with reference to the Collier White Lead Company, of St. Louis, be considered confidential.

Yours, very truly,

A. R. MEYER, President.

Hon. WILLIAM WARNER,
Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 64. [Applause on the Republican side and laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. Let us have tellers.

Mr. REED. Oh, do not delay the passage of the bill. [Laughter.]

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. MILLS and Mr. WARNER to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lead, in pigs and bars, molten and old refuse lead run into blocks, and bars and old scrap lead, fit only to be remanufactured, 1½ cents per pound. Lead in sheet, pipes, or shot, 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend by striking out, in line 292, the words "one and one-quarter cent" and inserting "2 cents;" so as to leave the duty on lead in pigs and bars, etc., as it now is—2 cents per pound.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend by striking out, in line 293, "two and one-quarter" and inserting "three;" so as to make the duty on lead in sheets, pipes, or shot 3 cents per pound.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Zinc, spelter, or tutenegue, in blocks or pigs, and old worn-out zinc, fit only to be remanufactured, 1½ cents per pound; zinc, spelter, or tutepegue in sheets, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 301 and 302, the words "one and one-quarter" and inserting "one and one-half;" so as to make the duty 1½ cents per pound on zinc, spelter, or tutenegue in blocks or pigs, etc. Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not wish to enter into an argument on this question. I apprehend that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will accept this amendment.

Mr. MILLS. No, sir.

Mr. WARNER. The reduction proposed in the bill makes so small a decrease in the revenue as hardly to be perceptible; indeed, it will virtually make an increase; but according to the estimate of the committee there will be collected under the rate of duty proposed by them $92,906.13, while at present the amount of annual revenue is $111,000. This is an industry which has just sprung up within the last ten or eleven years. It is now prospering. Men have expended fortunes in the purchase of machinery and mechanical appliances for the development of this industry. It does seem to me, therefore, that in common fairness the duty should not be reduced as here proposed. It is not in fact a reduction of the revenue; it is simply striking down an industry. It is perhaps unfortunate for my State that we are too reliable on one side politically. If Missouri were among the doubtful States her industries would not thus be trampled under foot in this House, presumably the house of her friends.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means what is the object of the reduction here proposed.

Mr. MILLS. Just a reduction of the surplus.

Mr. PERKINS. It seems to me, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], that the only effect must be to encourage importation. The revenue derived under existing law is $111,000 a year. The estimate of the committee is that if the duty proposed in this bill should be adopted the revenue would be $92,906. That estimate does not take into consideration, however, the increase of importations; that is ignored entirely in the computation. The object, therefore, of making this reduction, it seems to me, must be to encourage importation.

In my own State there are more than 9,000 tons of spelter manufactured each year. This is with us a recent industry. Capital has gone into my State from the East and has constructed extensive zinc works, in which many operatives are being employed at good wages. They are engaged in reducing this ore and manufacturing it into spelter. In this way employment is given to thousands of men.

It is not even suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that the present duty is too high, or that the manufacturers are making too much upon the capital invested, or that the laborers are receiving too high wages, too much compensation for their toil. The only reason suggested for the reduction is that we may reduce the revenue. In other words, the position of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means appears to be that this industry should be prostrated, if by prostrating it the revenue can be reduced. That is the logic of the gentleman's position, and against such a position I protest.

This bill should be entitled an "An act to encourage foreign importations and to pauperize American labor." There is no demand anywhere for the reduction proposed in this paragraph of the bill, and in the name of the new enterprises now building in my State, as well as in the name of the old ones engaged in manufacturing zinc spelter, and in the name of the laboring men they give employment to, I ask that this reduction shall not occur. I withdraw the verbal amendment and hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] will prevail.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WARNER, it was rejected; there being—ayes 68, noes 73.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend by inserting after the word "two," in line 303, the words "and one-half;" so as to make the duty 2½ cents per pound on zinc, spelter, or tutenegue in sheets.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Needles for knitting and sewing machines, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "twenty" and inserting "thirty-five;" so as to make the duty 35 per cent. ad valorem. I present to the committee the arguments of a well-known New England Democrat, who, so far as I am concerned, will do all the talking for this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 22.

George H. Bleloch, of Springfield, Mass., well known as one of the most prominent Democrats in the State, has written a letter to Chairman MILLS, giving that worthy some information on the subject of the tariff on needles, which the committee does not seem to have had in its possession in preparing the tariff bill. He says:

"I beg leave to communicate some of the reasons why the duty on sewing-machine needles should not be reduced from the present one of 35 per cent. to 20 per cent. ad valorem, as proposed in your bill, while it leaves the duty on steel wire, the needle-makers' raw material, at the present rate.

"Fifteen years ago the average wholesale price of machine needles was $45 a thousand and the retail price was from 10 cents to 15 cents each. To-day, the wholesale price of the same kind of needles, but greatly improved in quality, averages $10 a thousand, and the retail price is from 1 to 3 cents each. This great reduction in the price of American-made machine needles has been brought about by the invention and application of automatic machinery.

"A finished machine needle, when ready for the market, represents in its cost 80 per cent. in skilled labor and 20 per cent. in materials and supplies. By unfair means, such as undervaluation, some machine needles are at the present time imported to this country from Germany and England, and unless the present duty on machine needles is maintained, or our raw materials are allowed to enter on a large reduction from present duties, German and English needle-makers will capture the American market and cripple American needle manufacturers to such an extent that they will be compelled to retire from the field.

"There are thirteen manufacturers of machine needles in the country, with about $800,000 invested capital, employing about 1,500 operatives, and the earnings will not exceed 7 per cent. on the investment. A reduction of the duty to the extent proposed will be a serious blow to the manufacturers and operatives who are engaged in the industry, and the duties realized from importation of foreign machine needles, which will follow the reduction, will aggravate the present congested condition of the Treasury by increasing the surplus, while the users of machine needles will receive no benefit whatever in the way of lower retail prices."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FARQUHAR, it was rejected, there being—ayes 53, noes 70.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pen-knives, pocket-knives of all kinds, and razors, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out the lines just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pens, metallic, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend the line just read by striking out "35 per cent. ad valorem" and inserting "10 cents per gross." The duty under the existing law is 12 cents per gross. The committee seem to think it necessary to make a reduction. I do not know why it is necessary, but I suppose a reduction will be insisted upon. If a reduction is to be made, it is more scientific tariff reform to substitute a lower specific duty rather than resort to the vicious and infamous ad valorem system without the slightest necessity therefor. I find the committee has estimated that the existing duty of 12 cents per gross is equivalent to 43.1 per cent. The committee want a 35 per cent. duty, which will be found to be about 9.8 cents per gross. The amendment which I have proposed accedes to the demand of the committee that there should be a reduction, but simply puts it in the form of a lower specific duty.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, the pending paragraph of this bill, if it should prevail, will simply destroy this industry. There are in the United States only three establishments making metallic pens, and there are not over a dozen such establishments in the world. The cost of making these pens in Birmingham is only 8 cents per gross, that being the aggregate of the material and labor.

It costs in the United States to make the same pen, by reason of the increased cost of labor, 20 cents a gross. By taking off the duty of 12 cents a gross upon the foreign pen the foreign pen comes into this country on an exact level with the domestic product. If we take the duty off, of 12 cents a gross, the foreign producer of the pen can put the product in this market at so low a figure, as it costs 20 cents here to produce it, as actually to destroy this industry.

Then the proposed duty of 35 per cent. is a little over 2.8, making under this bill the cost of the pen to the foreigner in this market only 10.8 cents.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me suggest that the duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem, because of the inevitable undervaluations which occur, will be equal to a duty, say, of 7 or 8 cents per gross.

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, but it is proposed to admit the foreign pen, which can be put in this market at 10 cents a gross, when it can not be produced in this country at less than 20 cents a gross, and are sold at 25 cents a gross, being a margin of 5 cents. It simply closes the industry.

I desire to have the Clerk read a communication I received from gentlemen familiar with this matter, and I hope the majority will listen to it, because it contains some information on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAMDEN, N. J., February 15, 1888.

ESTEEMED FRIEND: Replying to thy inquiry of the 10th instant, the manufacture of metallic pens in this country was started in 1853, at which time there was no protective duty. This effort was unsuccessful. Between the years 1853 and 1860 several attempts were made to establish this trade, but all were abandoned, it being impossible to compete with the cheap labor of Europe, without a duty to equalize the difference in wages.

The average price in 1860 to 1870, to the dealer, of pens known in the trade as "imprint pens," that is, pens with stationer's or dealer's names, as, for instance, "Eaton and Lyon's Owl Falcon," or "Richmond, Backus & Co.'s Falcon," was about 40 cents per gross; the price for same goods now would not average more than 25 cents per gross, showing that through the instrumentality of American manufacturers the price has been reduced on an average at least 30 per cent.

The wages paid our operatives here are from 100 to 150 per cent. higher than are paid for the same work in Birmingham, England.

Labor constitutes fully three-fifths of the cost of producing the pens.

It is a noticeable fact that upon every occasion when the subject of reducing the duty on pens has arisen the demand for it has come not from consumers, but from foreign manufacturers represented by their agents in this country. This is the whole secret of it, however presented.

For some time previous to 1883 the duty on metallic pens was 25 per cent. ad valorem and 10 cents per gross specific.

When the change was made in 1883 we urged that a specific duty should be retained, and it was fixed at 12 cents per gross specific, and the ad valorem portion removed. This change caused a reduction of duty of about 31 per cent. at that time.

What we need and earnestly urge is that the duty shall be continued specific (for obvious reasons), and at the same rate, namely, 12 cents per gross.

The pen trade is peculiar and may be classed under two heads, namely, pens bearing the name of the manufacturer, and those having the imprint of the dealer stamped upon them.

The cost of the average styles of pens does not vary more than about 10 cents per gross, while the selling price may differ 50 cents or more per gross. This is governed by the degree of popularity they may have attained through advertising or other means. Some foreign makers and their agents in this country have for years held the market of high-priced goods, and have succeeded in obtaining the trade of the schools through various means, at prices twice as high as the American-made pens, of equal quality, could be supplied at, the manufacturers here in the mean time having to struggle along with the lower priced "imprint" trade while making a name for their own stamp goods.

Now, the foreign interests having, as they think, the most profitable part of the trade of the country, they are endeavoring to get the duty removed, or reduced, hoping then to carry off the "imprint" trade, and thus destroy our industry here, when they could control the market and obtain their own prices.

The foreign interests argue that it is unfair to have a specific duty, so that "low-priced" pens shall pay the same duty as "high-priced."

This is a delusion, as shown by our statement as to the cost of the pens. We are quite satisfied to take all the risk of lack of proportionate duty on "high-priced" pens.

There are several metallic pen manufacturers in this country, and, as we have shown, they have been instrumental in reducing the cost of pens to the consumer at least 30 per cent. And while we are inconspicuous, we are, nevertheless, an important branch of American industry, and do not want that our protection shall be regulated by those whose interests are entirely on the other side of the ocean, and the country can not afford to turn us over to their tender mercies.

Very respectfully,

ESTERBROOK STEEL PEN MANUFACTURING CO.,
ALEX. C. WOOD, Treasurer.

Hon. J. C. BURROWS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred on Mr. ADAMS'S amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. BURROWS. I move to strike out the paragraph, and ask attention to the following statement:

STEEL PENS.

In considering the question of the duty on steel pens particular attention is called to the fact that no demand for a reduction of duty on these goods comes from consumers, and if there is any such demand it emanates from the agents of foreign manufacturers, and also that the bulk of the business of both foreign and American manufacturers is with large jobbing houses; thus makers in either case have nothing to do with the prices paid by the consumer. Large users of pens have no difficulty in making purchases at a very low price, while parties who buy a dozen pens at a time must pay not only for the pens, but also for the time consumed in making the sale, as differently estimated by each retailer throughout the country. While the protection of 12 cents per gross is of the greatest importance to American manufacturers, its entire removal would probably make no difference whatever in the prices charged by the thousands of retailers who deal them out in 5 and 10 cent quantities. There are a few numbers of widely-advertised pens which, as the result of such notoriety, command and must sell for a high price to cover the cost of such advertising, but the great volume of business in pens is based upon the figures given in the accompanying statement.

Steel-pen manufacturing is a comparatively small industry in this country.

Nine-tenths of the labor is performed by girls and women.

It is a light, pleasant employment, and while the total average wages of females is $4.50 per week, many, expert in the business, earn much more, and the slower and less experienced ones earn correspondingly less.

This statement is carefully compiled from the results of all the American makers, and they earnestly request that some method will be found of reducing the revenue in some other way than by insisting upon a reduction of 60 per cent. in the wages of industrious girls who are employed in this clean and healthful occupation, and that the duty on steel and metallic pens be continued at 12 cents per gross, specific.

Respectfully,

THE ESTERBROOK STEEL PEN COMPANY, Camden, N. J.
MILLER BROS., Meriden, Conn.
TURNER & HARRISON, Philadelphia, Pa.

The average cost of pens in Europe is 8 cents per gross, of which—

		Cents.
Labor is	per gross...	5

Incidental expenses	do.....	1
Total		8

Nine-tenths of the labor is done by females at an average of $1.75 per week; one-tenth by males at an average of $8 per week.

The average cost of American pens is 20 cents per gross, of which—

		Cents.

Total cost		20

There are 500 persons employed by the three American steel-pen manufacturers—

450 of whom are females at an average of	per week...	$4.50
50 of whom are males at an average of	do.....	15.00

The average price at which the great bulk of pens is sold to the jobbing trade is 25 cents per gross.

This allows the manufacturer a margin of 5 cents a gross for advertising, selling expenses, and profit.

Present duty and effect of proposed change:

		Cents.
Average cost of pens in Europe	per gross...	8
Present duty, specific	do.....	12
Present cost laid down here	do.....	20

They can now be sold in fair competition with American pens at 25 cents per gross.

The present duty is specific	do.....	12.0
The proposed duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem amounts to	do.....	2.8
Making a reduction of 76⅔ per cent. from present duty	do.....	9.2

To meet the reduction proposed, besides sacrificing the manufacturers' margin of 5 cents a gross, as shown above, it would be necessary for American makers to reduce female wages 60 per cent. per week, from $4.50 to $1.80; male wages 60 per cent. per week, from $15 to $6.

In connection with that I desire to state the difference of wages here and in Birmingham, England:

Occupation.	Prices paid in Birmingham.	Prices paid in Camden, N. J.
Cutting	$0.20	$0.50
Piercing	.32	$0.95 to 1.00
Marking	.30	.75 to .90
Raising	.53	1.20 to 1.40
S. grinding	.40	.95 to 1.00
Cross grinding	$0.80 to 1.00	2.00 to 2.50
Slitting	.35	.95 to 1.10
Examining	.48	.85 to 1.00

It will be readily observed that a reduction from 12 cents a gross to 2 cents a gross will utterly destroy this industry, in view of the difference of wages between the two countries.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 72.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Type metal, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 311.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 311, insert:
"New type for printing, 15 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend by making it 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard for a moment on the amendment.

Whether the provision inserted here by the committee is to be adopted as a part of the law, or whether some other provision shall be incorporated in relation to this subject, there is one thing certain, that the United States stands confessedly at the head of the type founders of the world.

This pre-eminence, Mr. Chairman, has been reached, to my own personal knowledge, at a very large expense of time and money on the part of the manufacturers of this country who are engaged in this industry. Our foundries are equipped with the very finest machines and materials of all kinds and the best and most expert workmen to be found anywhere in the world. I simply submit, therefore, as a part of a patriotic sentiment which I should hope would prevail in the Congress of the United States, that the committee will take into consideration this condition of things, and, with some degree of pride in this manufacture, endeavor by suitable legislation to keep it upon its present prosperous basis, and not by a provision upon a tariff bill jeopardize if not entirely destroy it.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring upon the amendment of Mr. MILLS, it was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President, in writing, was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message also announced the approval of House bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 10267) granting a pension to William P. Gordon;
An act (H. R. 8694) granting a pension to Isabella F. Dyke;
An act (H. R. 2690) granting a pension to Augustus Axmacher;
An act (H. R. 4100) granting a pension to Martha B. Perry;
An act (H. R. 5759) granting a pension to John H. Rountree.
An act (H. R. 215) granting a pension to James McCaffrey;
An act (H. R. 618) granting a pension to James W. Harriman;
An act (H. R. 891) granting a pension to Eliza Ann Shaver;
An act (H. R. 2475) granting a pension to Adelaide L. Jessup;
An act (H. R. 2529) granting a pension to Mary Monti;
An act (H. R. 2234) granting a pension to Henry P. Alexander;
An act (H. R. 2116) granting a pension to Johanna Eckhardt;
An act (H. R. 1069) granting a pension to Robert McClean;
An act (H. R. 962) granting a pension to Robert Lisle;
An act (H. R. 6761) for the relief of James H. Orr;
An act (H. R. 6976) for the relief of Anna M. Thiele;
An act (H. R. 9127) for the relief of Chloe Fraily;
An act (H. R. 927) for the relief of Friedericke Raff;
An act (H. R. 722) for the relief of Marquis D. Davis;
An act (H. R. 2478) for the relief of Samuel E. Wyman;
An act (H. R. 6907) granting an increase of pension to Elias Shafer;
An act (H. R. 6070) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Benson;
An act (H. R. 9877) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Cleveland;
An act (H. R. 8762) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Ordway;
An act (H. R. 8673) to increase the pension of John R. Stiles;
An act (H. R. 8607) to increase the pension of Lucius B. Varney;
An act (H. R. 4743) granting a pension to Ada Piatt, Leota Piatt, and Jessie Piatt; and An act (H. R. 4653) granting a pension to Joanna Barry.

THE TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Manufactures, articles, or wares, not specially enumerated or provided for, composed wholly or in part of copper, 35 per cent. ad valorem; manufactures, articles, or wares not specially enumerated or provided for, composed of iron, steel, lead, nickel, pewter, tin, zinc, gold, silver, platinum, or any other metal, or of which any of the foregoing metals may be the component material of chief value, and whether partly or wholly manufactured, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out the last word, and I do this for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to what I conceive must be the necessary effect of this provision if it be adopted; and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill particularly for a few moments, while I state what I believe will be its effect, an effect which I do not believe the committee intend or expect it to have.

This clause says that all manufactures, articles, or wares, not specially enumerated or provided for, composed of iron, steel, etc., shall pay a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem. "Not specially enumerated or provided for," are the words to which I wish to call attention. These words, of course, refer to the bill under consideration—not specially enumerated or provided for in this bill. That is to say, that manufactured articles not specially enumerated or provided for in this bill are to pay 40 per cent. ad valorem. As the bill now stands I have no doubt that would be the construction placed upon it by any court. Now, it is true that these words are taken largely from the old law; but, as I remarked the other day, the schedules of the old law are much fuller than are the schedules in this bill. For instance, in the schedules of the old law provision is made for "cast-iron vessels, plates, stove-plates, andirons, sad-irons, tailors' irons, hatters' irons," etc., all of which are specially enumerated and at particular rates, whereas in the schedules of the present bill these are not specifically named.

I find, further, that circular-saws are enumerated in the schedules of the old law and not in the present.

I find, further, that wood-screws are enumerated; and in connection with that I desire the attention of the gentleman from Connecticut, who is interested in this article. I find that wood-screws, I repeat, are enumerated in the schedules of the old law, whereas in the present bill as it stands after the adoption of his amendment wood-screws are not enumerated, and the result is that these words "not specially enumerated or provided for" would include these articles in the general provision at 40 per cent. ad valorem. True we have been told that the committee propose to add a proviso or limitation to their bill. I have considered the words of the provision as they have been printed in the RECORD very carefully, and it does seem to me that the words are not sufficient to cover the contingency that I have spoken of, and that the words here in this provision would necessarily put these articles of which I have spoken, notwithstanding the qualifying clause, on the dutiable list at the rate of 40 per cent. ad valorem, instead of at the old rates under the old law. I call attention to it in the hope that the committee will be enabled in some way to draught some provision which will prevent the consequences of which I have spoken, especially if they desire to protect the wood-screws of Connecticut.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color shall pay duty on their polariscopic test as follows, namely:

Mr. CANNON addressed the Chair.

Mr. WEBER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEBER. I desire to submit an amendment to the sugar schedule in the nature of a reclassification of the schedule, and wish to ask the Chair if it would be in order to offer it here or after the conclusion of the reading of the lines from 329 to 340, inclusive?

Mr. CANNON. I rose for the same purpose; and for the further purpose of stating that it would be manifestly proper, either by a ruling of the Chair, in my opinion, or by unanimous consent, that all of these provisions from line 329 to 361, inclusive, should be considered together, because they are necessarily interwoven one with the other, and I think perhaps treated as a single paragraph all could be discussed together, and the amendments which are to be offered can be presented to any part of the provision.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection——

Mr. BAYNE. Well, if that be read in that way, of course we can recur to the paragraphs for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course.

Mr. WEBER. Will the Chair indicate what time it will be proper for me to offer the amendment I have suggested?

The CHAIRMAN. When the paragraph is read the Chair will recognize gentlemen to offer amendments in proper order. The Clerk will read the paragraphs referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color shall pay duty on their polariscopic test as follows, namely:

All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above seventy-five degrees, shall pay a duty of 1.15 cents per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree shown by the polariscopic test they shall pay thirty-two thousandths of a cent per pound additional.

All sugars above No. 13 Dutch standard in color shall be classified by the Dutch standard of color, and pay duty as follows, namely:

All sugars above No. 13 and not above No. 16 Dutch standard, 2.20 cents per pound.

All sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20 Dutch standard, 2.40 cents per pound.

All sugars above No. 20 Dutch standard, 2.80 cents per pound.

Molasses testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, shall pay a duty of 4 cents per gallon; molasses testing above fifty-six degrees shall pay a duty of 6 cents per gallon: Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty as provided by law at the date of the passage of this act.

Sugar candy, not colored, 5 cents per pound.

All other confectionery, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 329 to 361, inclusive, of section 2 and insert as follows:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, and all molasses testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for in the act shall be exempt from duty: Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty at the rates provided by law at the date of the passage of this act."

All sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound. Molasses, testing above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 1½ cents per gallon.

Maple sugar, 2 cents per pound of crystallizable sugar contained therein as ascertained by polariscope.

Maple sirup or molasses, 4 cents per gallon.

Glucose or grape sugar, 1 cent per pound. Sugar candy, not colored, 5 cents per pound; all other confectionery, not specially enumerated or provided for, made wholly or in part of sugar, and on sugars after being refined when tinctured, colored, or in any other way adulterated, and on all chocolate confectionery, 10 cents per pound: Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty as provided by law at the date of the passage of this act: Provided further, That for the encouragement of the production of sugar and molasses there shall be paid a bounty to the producers thereof in the United States, when made from beets, sorghum, imphee, or other sugar-cane raised in the United States, as follows:

On sugar, 2 cents per each pound of crystallizable sugar contained therein as ascertained by the polariscope.

On molasses, testing above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 6 cents per gallon; testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 4 cents per gallon.

And the bounties provided for in this act shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible in five minutes to state the different propositions in connection with levying a duty upon sugar. I do not know whether the request would be received with favor by the House that a little more than five minutes be granted.

Mr. MILLS. This is a very important matter, and I have no objection to the extension. I would suggest that on this sugar schedule the debate be closed at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think that would be just to the House. For instance, I can not myself begin to state the different propositions touching this matter, dealing in facts all the while, in less than thirty minutes. A number of gentlemen on this side of the House I know are desirous of offering amendments and of being heard touching the matter. However, I will state there is no disposition to do anything else than talk to the merits of the question. I would rather not have the time limited just now. We will hurry along as fast as possible.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman suggest a time he will be willing to agree to.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the debate will be allowed to run along to-day without limit. I should be glad to have thirty minutes.

Mr. MILLS. My friend very well knows the difficulty of allowing a debate to run along. I have no desire to cut off the debate. I am willing to be liberal; but I think there ought to be a limit fixed and that it ought to be fixed now.

Mr. KELLEY. I was about to suggest that inasmuch as we run from line 329 to line 351, a good deal of time would be consumed if each paragraph were discussed. I do not want to speak at all that I know of. I am not therefore pleading for time for myself. But this is a very complicated question, coming up as it does now, and it would be very hard to say in advance how much time will be required.

Mr. BAYNE. I think if the gentleman from Texas will consent that the debate run along it will not occupy so much time as he imagines. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will explain fully the position of our friends on this side of the House, and then there will be some short speeches from others. I think the debate will not be so long as the gentleman anticipates.

Mr. MILLS. Some of our friends want to be absent attending to business elsewhere. It is hard to keep Representatives here all the time. I suggest that we agree not to vote on the matter this evening, but go on with the debate until the time of adjournment and take it up to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], if there be no objection, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for thirty minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest that gentlemen control their own time on the other side of the House, without reference to the five-minute rule. If they wish to take that course I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, even in thirty minutes I can not hope to do more than present in the briefest manner a small number of facts touching the production of sugar, its importation, refining, and consumption in connection with the present law, the amendment proposed in the Mills bill, and the amendment which I have submitted. Without further introduction I will say that there are two ways or tests fixed by law and by the Mills bill in levying and collecting the tariff upon sugar imported into the United States. One is by the Dutch standard and the other by the polariscope. The Dutch standard is a color test alone, and pays no attention to the amount of saccharine matter on the one hand or adulteration on the other hand in the sugar, while the polariscope pays no attention to the color of the sugar, but ascertains the amount of saccharine matter contained in the sugar imported.

I hold in my hand four small glass bottles filled with sugar of different colors prepared in Holland, and hence called the Dutch standard. The bottle containing the darkest colored sugar is labeled No. 13; the next is labeled No. 16; the next No. 18; the next No. 20. The law prior to 1883 provided that sugar of the color of No. 13 Dutch standard and below should pay a certain duty above No. 13, and below 16 a higher duty. That above No. 16 and below No. 20 a still higher duty, and that above No. 20 a still higher duty. The sugar when imported was to be compared in color with that contained in the bottles, and a duty levied upon it according to its color as tested by the Dutch standard.

This law worked very well as long as the sugar-planter and the importer were honest, for if no artificial means were used the color of the sugar fairly indicated the amount of saccharine matter in it; that is to say, the more saccharine matter and the less dirt there was in it the whiter it would be, so the color fairly indicated the saccharine strength of the sugar. But as the darkest sugar had the least saccharine strength in it and paid the lowest duty, dishonest men resorted to artificially coloring the sugar on the plantation so as to make a sugar with a very high per cent. of saccharine matter in it of the color of No. 13 or below, and it then paid the lowest duty; when, in fact, if they had not evaded the law they would have had to pay a higher rate of duty upon it.

They called it business; I call it fraud and deceit. After it was imported they would take it and put it through the cheap process of refining and have for a profit the difference between the duty on No. 13 and No. 20 and above, which profit amounted to largely over a cent a pound. This fraud led to the enactment of the present law, in 1883, by which it was enacted that all sugar imported not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, testing by the polariscope not above seventy-five degrees—that is, 75 per cent. of saccharine strength—should pay a duty of 1.4 cents a pound, and for each degree or fraction thereof in addition, as shown by the polariscope, four one-hundredths of a cent per pound. That would make a pound of sugar that was all saccharine matter—one hundred degrees—pay 2.4 cents a pound duty. But on sugars from No. 13 to No. 16 the duty was fixed at 2¾ cents a pound; from No. 16 to No. 20, 3 cents a pound, and all sugars above No. 20, at 3½ cents a pound; but the polariscope is not applied to any of these sugars above No. 13; so the law of 1883, which is the present law, does not correct the evil it was intended to correct.

Let me illustrate. I have here a pound of sugar known as "Cuba centrifugal," imported by one of the assistant secretaries of State. I ask members to look at it. In color you will observe it is No. 13 Dutch standard, but it is 96 per cent. saccharine strength. Now, by ordinary treatment on the plantation it would have been at least as high as No. 16 in color. It is called "centrifugal sugar," and was made by the vacuum-pan process and then whirled about the pan with great velocity, so as to throw off all sirup. See it is composed of pure sugar crystals. Great care was taken in making it, by the use of an extra amount of lime to get it as low as No. 13 in color, for with that color and strength it only had to pay a duty of 2.24 cents a pound; whereas if it had been above No. 13 it would have had to pay a duty of 2¾ cents a pound, and if over No. 20, 3½ cents a pound. What is the result? The result is that practically no sugar is imported into this country except sugar No. 13 Dutch standard and below.

A MEMBER. Not 1 per cent is above that.

Mr. KELLEY. Not a tenth of 1 per cent. The gentleman will permit me to state that of sugars below No. 13 there was imported last year $67,868,380 worth; of sugars above No. 13 there was imported $13,101 worth. Those are the proportions.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does not that simply show that all the refined sugars, which are the only sugars used in America, except for manufacturing purposes, are refined in this country?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. So that all the labor which is performed in making these unrefined sugars fit for use is performed in American establishments and by American workingmen. Is not that the fact?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes; so that the advantage accrues to the benefit of the "sugar trust"—not of the sugar consumers of the country.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then there is a "trust?"

Mr. KELLEY. So it is said on the other side.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then in making that statement we are not telling a lie to the people?

Mr. KELLEY. Not so far as sugar or whisky are concerned.

Mr. CANNON. I am glad the gentleman from Kentucky has asked this question. I have no hesitation in answering that all the sugar imported into the country passes through our refineries. I will go a step further in answering the gentleman's question. Under the law as it stands upon the statute-book and under the Mills bill a premium or bribe of 1 cent a pound is given to the sugar refiner in the United States and the producer abroad to make the sugar with much greater care than he otherwise would to give it this color, No. 13 Dutch standard (illustrating), so that it may come in at the low duty and be compelled to pass through our refineries before it is ready for market.

Mr. WILKINSON. The gentleman from Illinois says a premium is paid under the Mills bill to the refiners of about 1 cent a pound. Most of the sugar the refiners get is at a test of ninety-five degrees. That sugar at ninety-five degrees under the Mills bill is dutiable at 1.79 of a cent per pound. The highest duty under the Mills bill is 2.80. The total margin between these two grades is 1 cent and one-hundredth per pound. That is the total margin. Out of this margin of one and one-hundredth cents per pound between the grades named, that the tariff affords, how is he to pay all the expenses of refining and still derive a profit of 1 cent a pound from the tariff.

Mr. CANNON. If gentlemen will allow me to make my statement step by step, I think they will be answered touching the facts surrounding the law and the consumption of sugar.

Mr. WILKINSON. Answer my question.

Mr. CANNON. I will tell the gentleman exactly how it operates. Under the present law a cargo of sugar, "Cuba centrifugals" like this imported by the Assistant Secretary of State, 96 per cent. saccharine matter, costs when landed in New York, 3.13 cents a pound; the duty is 2.24 cents a pound; .40 cent is more than it costs to refine it. Total, 5.77 cents, then, is the cost to the American refiner of a pound of white granulated sugar, which he sells to the merchant at the present price of 6.9 cents a pound, leaving a clean profit after all expenses of refining and handling are paid of 1.13 cents a pound. The American refiners handle the whole amount imported, 3,000,000,000 pounds annually, which if you will take your pencils and figure it, you will find the profit amounts to over $33,000,000 annually.

Now let us inquire what it costs to import a pound of this same refined granulated sugar into the United States. This sugar, called "Cuba centrifugals," No. 13 in color, 96 per cent. saccharine matter, costs the foreign refiner the same as it costs the American refiner, Cents a pound.

That is	3.13
Cost of refining abroad	.35
Duty when imported	3.50
Total	6.98

In other words, by the artful arrangement of the tariff on sugars, the pound of white granulated sugar that costs the American refiner 5.77 cents a pound costs the American merchant or consumer 6.98 cents a pound to import. The result is that the American refiner can add 1.13 cents a pound to his sugar and then sell it in the American market eight one-hundredths of a cent a pound lower than it can be imported for. Of course he monopolizes the market, makes his enormous profits, and 68,000,000 of people pay not only the duties upon the raw sugar of $60,000,000 a year, but the annual profit of over $30,000,000 to the refiners.

This unjust monopoly is intrenched in the law; foreign competition can not break it down, and to prevent home competition the few sugar refiners in the United States meet, form their trust, and agree what the amount of their production and price shall be.

Mr. WILKINSON rose.

Mr. CANNON. I can not yield. Gentlemen will have time to say what they desire to on this subject when they get the floor.

Now, take the Mills bill. On this point what does it do? It perpetuates this outrage, injustice, and fraud.

Mr. MCKENNA. Answer this question. How is it in testing sugar that it is admitted at so low a duty?

Mr. CANNON. The law provides for that.

Mr. MCKENNA. Explain it.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will get a copy of the Mills bill he can study it out for himself. I have already explained it.

Mr. MCKENNA. Is the sole test the color?

Mr. CANNON. Both the color and the polariscope up to No. 13 Dutch standard, but beyond No. 13 the only test is the color.

Mr. WILKINSON. I think the gentleman ought to answer my question.

Mr. MCKENNA. Let me ask——

Mr. CANNON. I must decline to yield any further.

Mr. MCKENNA. Is it not that the defect is in the machinery provided by the law, instead of in the law itself?

Mr. CANNON. By no means. The defect is in the law, written either by accident or else without sufficient knowledge of the effect of the law.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Mills bill; let us see what it does in this connection. Take a pound of the same sugar, No. 13, costing 3.13 cents per pound to import; the duty under the Mills bill for 96 per cent. of saccharine matter is 1.82 cents instead of 2.40, as under the present law, refining forty one-hundredths of a cent, so that a pound of refined granulated sugar would cost the refiner 5.35 cents Now, take the foreign refiner, the same cost of sugar, 3.13 cents a pound, raw sugar, refining 3½ mills a pound, duty 2.80 cents, so that the foreign producer or the domestic importer would have to pay 6.28 cents a pound for each pound of refined granulated sugar imported into the United States.

This leaves a margin of ninety-three one-hundredths of a cent per pound profit for the American refiner, which on the total product of 3,000,000,000 pounds annually amounts to over $27,000,000.

So you see that the Mills bill instead of breaking up the monopoly perpetuates it.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I will call attention to a strange circumstance in connection with the preparation and presentation of the Mills bill. In that bill, as it was originally prepared for the consideration of the Ways and Means Committee, it provided that all sugars below No. 16 in color should be imported at the lowest rate of duty. The effect of this provision would have been to stop the artificial and fraudulent coloring of sugar on the plantation, and have given the mass of the people a marketable and far better sugar than they now buy for a much less price, a sugar that would not have to be refined.

This was fully understood by the Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee, for by interviews and through the papers they boasted of this feature of their bill. But when the bill was reported to the House it had been changed so as to fix the low duties on sugar below No. 13 in color as the present law provides, and rendering it necessary that all the sugar imported should pass through the refineries before it was fit for use, thereby prohibiting that monopoly.

The Mills bill, as originally drawn, also prohibited the allowance of drawbacks on the exportation of refined sugars, but I find in the bill reported to the House that that provision is stricken out.

I want to ask, with all respect and with all earnestness and candor, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the membership of that committee, what change came over the spirit of your dream that you struck these provisions out of your bill? What revelation came to you to warrant you in making these changes—changes which drive all these sugars through the refineries, increase their cost to the people nearly a cent a pound, and do not increase the revenues to the Government one cent? That is a fair question. It ought to demand a fair, frank answer. Your bill was right in that respect so far as it went. I hope it will be the pleasure of this House, if they do not adopt my amendment, to see to it that the low duty on sugar is made under No. 16 rather than under No. 13.

Now, one further query. Why did that committee strike from this bill the provision prohibiting the payment of drawbacks upon sugar exported? What is the fact about it? Why, sugar which has 100 per cent. of saccharine matter, instead of 96, brings a duty of 2 cents and 4 mills a pound; the law says that upon being exported they shall have the drawback of the duties paid less 1 per cent. Now, what is the drawback fixed at? Two cents and six mills. Two cents and four mills per pound pay the duty on 100 per cent. of saccharine matter when it comes in. Yet when it passes through the refinery and is exported they get a drawback of the duty paid and 2 mills a pound more. "Well," says somebody, "what is that for?" As I said before, I give it up. I do not know. I tell you what the Treasury experts say. They say that there is no loss of saccharine matter in the refining of this sugar. They reported that they were informed and so believe, and I have the report here.

Why is it that after you deduct the 1 per cent. of the money-duty paid they get 2 cents and 6 mills out of the Treasury, but they only paid 2 cents and 4 mills when it came into the country under the law?

Mr. WEBER. I simply want to suggest that the gentleman may make it clear by stating that it comes in originally fraudulently under the polariscope test and goes out under the color test.

Mr. CANNON. I will say as to that, if gentlemen will allow me, that I do not desire to stand in my place in public or private and charge public officials with fraud. But I do say from the Treasury reports transmitted to Congress by Hon. Daniel Manning, I have a right to believe and state my belief that in the matter of the imports of sugar from the time that they get to the dock in New York up to the time that they are re-exported there is, to say the least of it, a good chance for fraud at every step.

Why, gentlemen, let me read just one line from the testimony of one of the inspectors whose duty it was to inspect the refined sugar that was exported. He states that he has no knowledge of the contents of the packages at the time of lading, whether they are sugar or sand. Then if you will run through these reports you will find when sugars are imported that formerly and, as I understand it, now, low-priced customs officials at low salaries alone test them; that the lighter is run up to the dock of the sugar company and the sugar is dumped off without any sufficient knowledge on the part of anybody that it is properly tested. I am not charging the officials with fraud, except to state what this report states and to state my belief that in the manner of the import and the export of sugar for a great many years past fraud has existed at every step from the time it landed to the time it left our shores. I have not time to go into that matter further, and will close this branch of the case with the statement I have made.

Now, gentlemen, who is damaged by my amendment? I think the propriety of some legislation is apparent. My amendment is to let all sugar under No. 16 Dutch standard—not No. 13—come in free. This would let the people take it as it is turned out from the sugar plantations and let it go into consumption without first paying a toll of a cent a pound and over in addition to the cost of refining by passing through the refineries. My proposition is to stop this fraudulent and expensive coloring of the sugar and let it come in as it comes from the factory. Free sugar under No. 16 standard would do that exactly.

But I fancy I hear somebody saying, "Are you not going to take care of the refineries?" Yes; I will take care properly of every industry in this country so far as I can by legislation. But I will only take care of them. I will not go further than that. I will not by law put money in their pockets arbitrarily. So when I come to sugar above No. 16 in color, to the sugars that have to pass, either at home or abroad, through the refineries, my amendment provides that there shall be a tariff of 3 mills a pound. The Mills bill says 2 cents and 8 mills. My amendment says 3 mills a pound. "A dollar a barrel," says my friend from Iowa, "is that enough for protection?" Yes; more than enough. I have gone to the line and over the line in my desire to afford adequate protection to the refining interests of this country, for fear, amongst other things, that my prejudice against that interest might make me do an injustice to it.

What will 3 mills do? There are 6,000 laborers in the refineries of this country, most of them unskilled. Five hundred dollars a year is as much as they receive. That would amount to $3,000,000. How much protection does 3 mills a pound give? One mill a pound on the total product of 3,000,000,000 pounds would give $3,000,000. That would pay for all the labor, and I think more too. Under the amendment which I propose at least half of the sugar would come in and not go through the refineries. That would cut off half the labor. If half the sugar did not go through the refineries that would save $16,000,000 a year to the consumer, instead of letting the refiner have it. If the other half went through the refineries, 3 mills a pound duty would give protection to the refining interest of $4,500,000 per annum.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. If there be no objection he will be allowed to continue.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I will state my proposition again, as there is inquiry around me. According to my amendment all sugar under No. 16 comes in free, so that the refiner gets the raw product without any tariff at all, and at the same time the people thus get a sugar that does not have to pass through the refinery, at 1 cent a pound less than they now buy it for, and of better quality, with more saccharine matter in it than there is in the sugar they now buy.

It is far better sugar than they get now from the refiners; not quite so pretty, but with greater saccharine strength. Then, as to the sugar above 16, from 16 to 20, and above, to protect the refining interests, I would levy a duty upon the refined article above No. 16 that is imported of 3 mills per pound. That would amount to about four millions and a half dollars, on the supposition that one-half the sugar that was consumed would go through the refineries. That is protection enough. The true test in these matters is to levy enough duty to protect our labor, to protect for the difference in the cost of capital here and abroad, and if the industry is a new one to leave a little margin to protect it from powerful competition while it is being established and built up. Now, you may measure this by any scale you please, and the 3 mills a pound duty proposed by my amendment upon refined sugar is enough to give ample protection. It is true there will not be any $30,000,000 a year made by the refiners, but there will be a fair living profit to the refiner and good wages to the laborer, and that is as far as we ought to go.

Mr. FUNSTON. While you are protecting labor, why not protect the farmer who is producing sugar from sorghum?

Mr. CANNON. I am glad my friend asked me that question. I was coming to that point.

Mr. FUNSTON. That is all under 16, is it not; the kind of sugar that you propose to bring in free?

Mr. CANNON. For the sake of the argument let us say that it is all under No. 16.

Mr. FUNSTON. Then you do not give the producer of that sugar any protection?

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will bear with me, I will answer him on that point. Let us consider the case of the farmer. The total production of sugar in the United States is, in round numbers, 300,000,000 pounds. Nearly all of that is made in Louisiana, and for five years past the production in the United States has been far less than it was for the five years before 1860. So that the production of sugar in this country is decreasing instead of increasing. Now has it been properly protected? Listen to one statement, and then decide. The value of the sugar imported into the United States in seventeen years was twelve hundred million dollars. Keep that fact in mind, that in seventeen years the value of the sugar imported into this country amounted to twelve hundred million dollars. In that same seventeen years the duty paid upon that sugar was over $700,000,000. Protection! Never from the foundation of this Government to the present time did any article, or articles, receive as much continuous protection as sugar has received during the last one hundred years. It receives an equivalent of 82 per cent. ad valorem of protection under the present law.

Does that increase the production? No. Does it enhance the price of sugar? Yes; and for this reason: Less than one-tenth of the sugar we consume is produced in this country. The greater controls the less. The earth controls the moon, the sun controls the earth. The greater always controls the less, and as over nine-tenths of the sugar we consume are made abroad and less than one-tenth is produced at home, instead of that one-tenth pulling the price down the nine-tenths pull it up. That is the fact as to sugar. It has not been so with iron and steel and the textiles.

Those industries have been developed by the tariff, and now those products, the great bulk of what we consume, are produced in this country at a far less rate than they could have been bought for when the tariff was first levied. In those instances protection has protected, but in the case of sugar it has not. Let me give you another illustration. Under the treaty with the Sandwich Islands sugar comes in free. The importation of sugar in 1887 from the Sandwich Islands was $9,000,000 worth. How many pounds was that? Just enough at four cents and a half a pound to make the amount I have named. In other words, you could take the sugar that we imported from Cuba and from Germany and add to it the duty, and you would have the value of the sugar imported from the Sandwich Islands as set down in the commerce and navigation reports. That was the small quantity, and the large quantity controlled it and raised the price, and under the terms of the treaty the Sandwich Islands sugar-men (who, I am informed, are California capitalists) have a profit every year of over $4,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY. Why do not we abrogate that treaty?

Mr. CANNON. Why did the Senate and the President renew it? I wish I could get a lick at it, I would help to abrogate it. If I was in the Senate I would kick pretty lively on that. [Laughter.]

Now, let me go a step further and answer the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON]. Is it politic, is it right to levy a tax upon every man, woman, and child in the United States, rich and poor, and pretty evenly upon rich and poor because the poor use as much sugar as the rich—is it politic or proper, I ask, to levy tax on every man, woman, and child, rich and poor, on an average to the amount not only of the duty, $60,000,000 a year, but also to add to that the $30,000,000 of refiners' profit, making ninety millions in all? And what for? First, to protect the refiners and enable them to keep up the price, and, second, to do what? To protect the Louisiana sugar-planter and the man who grows beets and sorghum. I do not think it is right.

I do not mean to forsake the Louisiana planter; nor do I mean to forsake the farmer in my own State who raises sorghum or the farmers in different parts of the United States who raise the beet. What is your protection now? Taking the average rate upon sugar it is about 2 cents a pound. That is the duty that produces this enormous revenue, if you please, because it is almost strictly a revenue tax. You get $6,000,000 of protection; it costs the country $90,000,000 to pay it. Rather expensive protection! What is the sensible business proposition? Let sugar come in free; then pursue a policy which will give the Louisiana planter and the California beet grower, the Kansas and Illinois sorghum grower as much protection as they now have. My amendment does this. It provides that for each pound of crystallizable sugar produced in the United States from cane or sorghum or beets there shall be paid from the Treasury 2 cents a pound. Will that break us up? It will cost just $6,000,000 a year, in round numbers, and will save the people $90,000,000 a year; and you know we do not need the money in the Treasury, as we are told constantly on each side of the House.

But, says some one, "We do not want to pay a bounty. Why not pay the man who raises corn, or oats, or wheat a bounty?" Because those industries are established and do not need a bounty. Gentlemen, while I would throw off "this old man of the sea" that is about our necks—this sugar duty and sugar "trust"—yet I would not forget that Germany, which less than a generation ago did not produce a pound of sugar, produces now from the beet alone, by reason of a judicious system of bounties, over one-half of all the sugar that is used in the world.

Mr. GEAR. And raised on land worth $600 an acre.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, as the gentleman suggests, raised on land worth $600 an acre.

I am willing by this proposed legislation to save this money to the people, to break up this sugar "trust," to encourage and protect the Louisiana planter, the Kansas and Illinois sorghum grower, and the grower of the beet, wherever he is disposed to try to make sugar from it. My proposition gives just as high a grade of protection as this other system; and when gentlemen say that they do not want to vote for such a proposition it shows, in my judgment, one of two things: either they do not understand the proposition and are not willing to do the fair thing, or they have in fact more interest in the refiner than they have in the producer. I do not mean improperly so, for I think it proper and right for gentlemen to represent their constituents here; and they must do it as long as we have a republican form of Government. But I am stating how the matter appears to me.

Imperfectly and hurriedly I have now explained this matter. No doubt I have omitted to speak of many things which I should and would have mentioned if I had had time under the ordinary rules of debate. My colleague [Mr. HITT] asks me to state how the sugar "trust" is formed. I attempted to explain that before; if I did not make it sufficiently plain, I will go over it briefly again, and then I will take my seat.

What does the Mills bill say on this subject? The Mills bill says that a pound of sugar like that which I hold in my hand, No. 13 Dutch standard, having 96 per cent. of saccharine matter, shall pay a duty of 1.82 cents per pound. It costs 3.13 before the duty is paid; it costs say 4 mills to refine it; so that a pound of white granulated sugar costs the refiner 5.35 cents per pound. What does it cost to import it now? The raw sugar costs the foreign refiner 3.13 cents a pound; the refining costs him 3½ mills. When he ships the sugar to the United States it can not land and enter into consumption here until he pays 2.8 cents a pound duty on the refined product. That runs the price up to 6.28 cents. So that white sugar refined abroad and landed here costs 6.28 cents a pound, while to produce the white sugar in the United States costs 5.35 cents a pound, the difference arising from the low duty upon that sugar [illustrating] and the high duty upon the refined sugar. The difference is .93 of a cent a pound, amounting to nearly $30,000,000 a year on the amount handled. Do you not see that the American refiners can add that cent a pound to the cost of the sugar before the foreign refiner can bring in his sugar and sell it to our people?

That explains the "trust." The only thing to be looked after among those who constitute the "trust" is to control each other so as to prohibit any man who refines sugar in the United States from refining enough to glut the market. They get together and agree about that; and then (though the Committee on Manufactures, no doubt, can tell better about this matter than I can) they break down those people who will not come into the "trust." And there, ever present under the Mills bill, is that cent a pound, nearly $30,000,000 premium upon the formation and enforcement of that trust.

I thank the committee for its attention. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman takes his seat I wish to ask him a question for information. I read his amendment, or substitute for the lines mentioned, and I find that in it you have put molasses not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope test upon the free-list. You then state in a line afterwards that there shall be a bounty of 4 cents a gallon upon the molasses. I do not know why the gentleman proposes to put molasses upon the free-list and afterwards proposes to allow a bounty of 4 cents, or whether that will about equalize the matter when compared with the operation of the other features of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend had listened to my remarks I think perhaps he would have found the question answered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have listened to the remarks——

Mr. CANNON. For I have made the suggestion in reference to that amendment that is to put sugar and molasses upon the free-list of that grade, because if one comes both come. You can make sugar from the molasses, and I put them upon the free-list for the reason that I can save to the people of this country in sugar and molasses over $30,000,000 a year tax they now pay. Oh, yes, $60,000,000 tax they pay, and $30,000,000 of profit to the refiners, making $90,000,000 in all, and can pay a bounty on all the sugar and molasses that is produced in this country at the rate my amendment fixes, which is equal to all the protection they now get, for an expenditure of $6,000,000. That can be done, and yet save to the people of this country in round numbers the sum of $84,000,000 a year.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The object of my inquiry is this: I am seeking with reference to all of the clauses and lines in this bill relating to molasses, that there shall be a proper differential rate as compared with the duty on sugar proposed to be imposed in the Mills bill, or with the decreased duty that that bill now proposes over the present law.

Mr. CANNON. As far as I am concerned I do not want any differential rate touching sugar or molasses. I want to make sugar free below No. 16, which will allow everybody to get the sugar they want at the very smallest rate, unless their stomachs are particularly nice and they want perfectly white sugar, in which case, of course, they would have to pay the difference.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am only asking this information with a view to looking afterwards to a proper differential duty in case the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Of course if my amendment is not adopted, then we must do the next best thing we can.

Mr. GAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has occupied fifty-five minutes. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY].

Mr. GAY. I want to ask my friend from Illinois, for whose good judgment and kindly feelings I have a very great appreciation—I want to ask him, in carrying out this idea of securing the extended production of sugar in the United States, whether in foreign countries they have not built up that industry by legislation, and whether it has not always been connected with the idea of a very large import tax upon the article? For instance, Germany has recently built up a most tremendous production of sugar. Now, the beginning of that idea, I think, was founded upon a tax or import duty of 3½ cents on the sugar.

Mr. LONG. On foreign sugar.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman and state it is true that in relation to both Germany and France large import taxes have been placed upon sugar; but it is also true that the real protection and encouragement in Germany and in other countries for the production of sugar arose out of a bounty paid by the government for the sugar produced from the beet. She gave a bounty on the production and then accompanied it with a consumption tax to raise money to pay it. That bounty in Germany, after the consumption tax was paid, amounted in the palmiest days of the industry to less than a half a cent a pound to the producers.

Mr. GAY. I would like to ask whether Germany pays any bounty whatever?

Mr. CANNON. She pays a bounty now, and it is quite a small bounty, much smaller than that which was formerly paid. But in a convention held in London some time ago it was agreed between the treaty-making powers that this bounty should be abolished, and that treaty as soon as it has been ratified, for I presume it will be ratified, leaves the industry practically without any bounty at all.

Mr. GAY. What I ask is whether the production of sugar in Germany is not a matter of great revenue to the government by a tax upon the sugar raised of not less than 4 cents per pound? And when you speak of bounty, is it not only upon the exports? That all sugar exported (for they now make more than double the consumption of that country) shall have remitted the tax paid upon the manufacture; and in the estimate of the rebate allowed the manufacturer, is it not a liberal estimate based upon the estimated product from a ton of beets?

Now, owing to the great improvement in the manufacture of sugar by means of the science cultivated and built up in Germany, say that 1 ton of beets would make 150 pounds of sugar. Now, when science makes 200 pounds they get on every 150 pounds exported the price of a ton of beets. That is a tax that has been collected, but they export more sugar, and therefore get a bounty that way.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, he is not quite correct, as I understand the subject. I have taken great care to inquire, and believe my information is correct. The bounty on exports, as it is called, now paid by Germany is less than one-fifth of a cent a pound, and, everything considered, is less than the bounty the United States pays to the refiner on exports of refined sugar.

Mr. GAY. They do refund on all exports the taxes, therefore, collected on the beets.

Mr. CANNON. The matter is quite complicated. In connection with Mr. Adee, the most intelligent gentleman I have found anywhere touching this subject, I have run the matter down, and from official data have given substantially the conclusion of the investigation.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like my friend to yield to me for one moment. I think I can simplify this matter of the payment of bounties. Originally, bounties were paid for the production of sugar from the beet; two classes of bounty, a bounty to the farmer who produced the most sugar to the acre and a bounty to the chemist who produced the most available saccharine matter from the beet. It was only for a short period in the history of beet sugar that either France or Germany paid a bounty for the production of beets or of sugar.

In a few years after the industry was established came the system which prevails now, and to which my friend from Illinois referred, of paying bounty on sugar exported. In order to understand the argument properly the distinction should be borne in mind that bounty on the production of sugar has ceased long ago. It is now a bounty on the export of sugar.

Mr. GAY. Mr. Chairman, I am no apologists for trusts. I have no interest in them, nor have I ever had. But I now wish to make a statement. This sugar trust we understand went into operation in New York probably during the month of September last. I have a list of the wholesale prices of sugar from a reliable source, certified to by Mr. Spofford, the Librarian of Congress, showing the actual value of ninety-six tests of refining sugar in New York during every month of 1887, and also the actual value of granulated sugar, which is the highest grade of refined sugar common now in this country. I would like to read the table for the information of the House.

In January, 1887, in New York, the wholesale price for 96 tests centrifugal foreign sugar was $5\frac{3}{16}$ cents.

Mr. CANNON. That was duty-paid.

Mr. GAY. Duty-paid. I am not taking any position with regard to the duty. As an American citizen I take the law as it exists. It is under the present law. Whether the law is to be changed and there is to be a change of operation I do not say; but taking the actual state of things, the wholesale price of that sugar was $5\frac{3}{16}$ cents. Now, the price of granulated sugar during the same time ranged from $5\frac{7}{8}$ to $5\frac{7}{8}$, leaving a margin of nine-sixteenths, one-half a cent and one-sixteenth over.

Mr. CANNON. To what month does the gentleman refer?

Mr. GAY. The month of January, 1887. In February, 1887, the price of this imported sugar was $5\frac{1}{8}$ and the price of granulated sugar from $5\frac{5}{8}$ to $5\frac{13}{16}$, leaving a margin on an average of three-fourths of a cent. In March the wholesale price was $5\frac{1}{8}$ for imported sugar and from $5\frac{1}{16}$ to $5\frac{3}{4}$ for granulated, leaving a margin on an average of five-eighths of a cent between the actual cost of refining sugar and the selling price of the granulated sugar in the same market. In April the former was $5\frac{3}{16}$ and the granulated from $5\frac{11}{16}$ to $5\frac{3}{4}$, leaving a margin of five-eighths of a cent a pound. In May the imported was $5\frac{3}{16}$ and the granulated from $5\frac{11}{16}$ to $5\frac{7}{8}$, leaving an average margin of nine-sixteenths, one-sixteenth over half a cent. In June the price of imported sugar was $5\frac{3}{16}$; the price of granulated sugar was from $5\frac{3}{4}$ to $5\frac{15}{16}$, leaving a margin of three-fourths of a cent. In July there was a margin of three-fourths of a cent. In August there was a margin of five-eighths of a cent. In September, the month in which I have heard it stated here the price of granulated sugar was advanced $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound, making fabulous fortunes taken from the consumers of the country, the entire margin was three-fourths of a cent between the actual cost of refining sugar of that grade and the cost of granulated sugar.

Now, the price of refining sugar is fixed antagonistically to the refiner who buys. The refiner is anxious to get it as low as he can. The price is fixed on the cost in Cuba with the duty added. In October the price of the imported sugar was from $5\frac{3}{4}$ to 6, and the price of the granulated from 6 to $6\frac{1}{16}$. In November there was a margin of three-fourths of a cent between the actual price of refining sugar and the selling price of granulated sugar. In December the price of refining sugar was $5\frac{7}{8}$ and the price of granulated sugar from $6\frac{1}{4}$ to 7, giving an average margin of a cent a pound.

There has been an impression in this country and in this House that these refiners take advantage of the situation and advance the price of sugar. But I wish to say for the truth of history that it was discovered in the early fall of 1887 from statistics carefully gathered that the beet-root crop showed a falling off to an estimated amount of 350,000 tons.

Now, London is the great central sensitive point where they watch these things, and immediately the price of sugar was advanced in London from one-half to five-eighths of a cent., and that advance continued until December. Being interested in the price of sugar as a sugar-planter I watched the course of the market, and I can say that the advance which took place during last fall grew out of a supposed and actual shortage of the beet crop of Europe in 1887.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. It commends itself all the more strongly to me because a bounty of 2 cents a pound is proposed by it for home production, and I feel that the sugar-planters of Louisiana and the sorghum and sugar-beet growers of Kansas and of the Pacific coast will all meet with a protection equal to that now afforded by the existing tariff, in the event of the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois becoming a part of the law of the land. It is very evident to anybody who has given attention to the question that the sugar industry in this country does not fall legitimately within the theory of protection. It has been announced all along, ever since we began the protection of industries in the country, that protection would result in the development of those industries to such an extent that they would be able in time to supply, or nearly to supply, the wants of the people of this country, and if the protection afforded to the sugar industry had brought about that result nobody would have rejoiced more than myself at that consummation; but years and years of high protection have failed to develop that industry into anything like proportions commensurate with the wants of our people, and it must now be quite evident to everybody that there is little or no hope of securing that result, however high the duty may be made. We produce I believe about one-eleventh of the sugar that we consume.

Before the war we produced about one-half of what we consumed. The production is running in inverse proportion to the consumption, and when on the other side of the House they speak of these tariff duties as a tax they make no misapplication of the term "tax" when they apply it to the duty upon sugar, because the duty upon sugar is certainly a tax upon all the consumers of the country to almost its entire extent. Of course I believe that the duties put upon sugar have encouraged to a certain extent the production of sugar in this country. I believe that more sugar is produced in Louisiana than there would be if there were no duty, and I believe that the effort to produce sugar from sorghum and from the beet in Kansas and on the Pacific coast would not have been made at all if it had not been for the duty on sugar.

I do not wish to strike down this industry either in Louisiana or in Kansas or on the Pacific coast.

On the contrary, I wish to encourage them; but I do not wish to encourage them at so great a cost to the people of the country. If we paid a bounty of 2 cents a pound, as proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], it would amount to an outlay of probably five or six million dollars a year upon the sugar production of this country.

Mr. KELLEY. What would it amount to if we should develop cane and sorghum and beet and corn so that we could produce our own sugar supply? The five or six millions would be for what we now produce.

Mr. BAYNE. For what we now produce. As the amount increases of course the amount of the bounty increases. If we double the amount of our product we double the amount of the bounty. Now, to give to every producer of sugar in this country 2 cents a pound is to treat him fairly and encourage an infant industry, at least an industry which is "infant" so far as sorghum and beet sugar production are concerned.

Mr. WEBER. And it would cost no more than we pay now.

Mr. BAYNE. And it would cost us no more than we pay now. But to make the consumers of this country pay $58,000,000 a year by way of a tax upon the sugar they consume for the purpose of protecting the production of 300,000,000 pounds of sugar at home is absolutely inconsistent with the whole theory of protection, and is almost as bad as it would be to put a tax upon tea and coffee, not one ounce of which we produce or can produce.

Mr. FUNSTON. Why do you ignore entirely the production of sorghum sugar?

Mr. BAYNE. I think I do not. I do not want to.

Mr. FUNSTON. You have done it throughout your remarks. Now let me call your attention to some facts. I hold in my hand a report of the secretary of the agricultural department of the State of Kansas, setting forth the results of sugar production in Kansas, especially at Fort Scott, in which he shows that there are 750 pounds of good sugar produced from every acre of ground cultivated in sorghum. Now, if you multiply that by 640 acres, and multiply that by 200 miles north and south, and 400 miles east and west, the size of the State of Kansas, you get a product of 38,000,000,000 pounds of sugar. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. All the better for the United States, if that industry can be developed in Kansas or on the Pacific coast.

Mr. FUNSTON. It is developed.

Mr. BAYNE. If it can be developed to an extent to supply the wants of the consumers of this country, as I have already said, nobody will rejoice more over that fact than I will.

But will not a bounty of 2 cents a pound to the producers of sugar in Kansas and on the Pacific coast be better than even the present duty, because it would be a direct sum going into the pocket of the sugar producer, and he would have no fear of losing it by failure of his enterprise or anything of that kind.

Mr. FUNSTON. Would you be satisfied with a bounty on pig-iron?

Mr. BAYNE. If the pig-iron industry of this country were in the same position that the sugar industry of this country is now in, I for one should not advocate for a moment a protective tariff on pig-iron.

Mr. RYAN. It was in such a condition at one time.

Mr. BAYNE. It was at one time; yet the difference is this: the pig-iron industry began building up and growing stronger and stronger until now we can produce sufficient pig-iron to supply the needs of all the people of this country, while the sugar industry of the United States has been running in a contrary direction.

Mr. PETERS. But it is now starting in the other direction.

Mr. BAYNE. The amount of sugar now produced in this country is less than it was in 1860.

Mr. RYAN. But according to all the evidences we shall soon be able to produce enough sugar in this country for our own consumption.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope we shall.

Mr. RYAN. Then why strike down the tariff at this particular time?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not propose to strike down the tariff. I want to give a bounty of 2 cents a pound to the sugar producer. If that is not enough make it $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 cents a pound; I will join in making it that.

Mr. PETERS. If you had treated other industries, when they were infant industries, in the same way that you now propose to treat the sugar industry, they would not show the development which they do to-day.

Mr. BAYNE. It must be borne in mind that the sugar industry in this country is not an "infant industry," except so far as concerns beet sugar and sorghum sugar.

Mr. KELLEY. Will my colleague allow me to say a word? The agricultural interests of this country at the present time are undergoing an almost unparalleled depression. To raise a bushel of wheat costs more to day in the average wheat-growing States than it ever did; so, too, with corn; and the market price the world over runs down each year. Now there is a chance to relieve agriculture. There are around the Gulf States jute and ramie lands from which vast quantities of fiber may be grown, giving material for an industry amounting to millions. Sorghum and beets are being planted throughout the whole country. The sugar lands of Florida are being planted by the thousands of acres, and just when by the introduction of these new industries the agriculture of our country is to be diversified, gentlemen say, "Let us try a new experiment, and tempt the American people into giving bounties to our manufactures." I do not believe in it. [Applause.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] shall not outdo me in consideration toward the farmer. He can not show a disposition to do more for the farmer than I would do. When my colleague voted a bounty to the ship industries and big corporations of this country that were running ships, I voted against it——

Mr. KELLEY. When was that?

Mr. BAYNE. And I was willing to bestow a bounty upon the farmers of this country, instead of subsidizing those big ship industries.

Mr. KELLEY. When was it I voted for bounties to any industry?

Mr. BAYNE. It has been my province while in public life, so far as I had the ability and wisdom to do so, to look well to the interests of the poor and struggling as against the rich. That is my position to-day, and there I shall stand so long as I may remain in public life.

Mr. KELLEY. When did I vote for bounties?

Mr. BAYNE. I am opposed to giving bounties to wealthy corporations. I am willing to give a bounty to the sugar producers of this country, and if there be any farming industries which are languishing and suffering, and if a bounty can rescue them from that condition, none would vote for such a proposition more cheerfully than myself.

Mr. FUNSTON. They do not want your bounty.

Mr. BAYNE. That is the trouble.

Mr. FUNSTON. We want to be protected just as you are protected.

Mr. BAYNE. I understand that feeling to a certain extent, and I admire that independent spirit which would declare itself reluctant to receive a bounty.

Mr. MCKENNA. Why do you want to force a bounty upon them?

Mr. BAYNE. This bounty system has been tried in Germany; it has been tried in France; it has been tried in the State of New Jersey. There is no reason in the world why the Government of the United States should not resort to it, and these industries, by means of such a system, be placed upon their feet and made stronger and stronger. As I have said, I am willing that the bounty in this case shall be 2 cents a pound, or 2½ cents a pound, or 3 cents a pound.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] will allow me, I will ask the gentleman from Kansas whether it is not true that the State of Kansas itself has voted a bounty on the production of sugar?

Mr. FUNSTON. I will answer that question; and I will say that if the General Government undertakes to pay a bounty the result will be just what it has been in Kansas, a dissatisfied people. The people will rise up and say, "We do not want any more of it." You can not point to a single instance where a bounty has stood for five years, and the people who paid the bounty have approved of it, whether it was a bounty for wolf scalps or rabbit scalps or anything else. [Laughter.]

Mr. HITT. Our Government paid a fishing bounty for a long series of years.

Mr. KELLEY. That was a measure looking to the fostering of our Navy.

Mr. HITT. Still, it was a bounty.

Mr. KELLEY. It looked to establishing a school for American seamen.

Mr. BAYNE. I now take cum grano salis the statement of my friend from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] that the people of his State do not want a bounty. I find that the sugar-producers there have already accepted one. I did not know that fact before. Their objection to a bounty from the National Government does not arise from a feeling of pride or independence, as I had imagined, but from the fact that there is a lingering fear in the minds of the people of Kansas that they might not get their bounty for any continued period of time.

Mr. PETERS. Allow me to say——

Mr. BAYNE. I can not. The people of Kansas will not feel the bounty paid by the Federal Government. Nobody has felt the tariff duties in this country. Even the sugar duty paid by the consumers to the extent of $58,000,000 is not felt by the mass of the consumers. They hardly know they are paying it. Those who make the calculation and look into the matter know they are paying it, of course. The duty placed on sugar to foster that industry has not resulted in its development to the extent of supplying the wants of the consumers of the country. If there be a chance for the development of that industry so as to enable the producers of sugar to supply the wants of the people of the United States, you can reach that end only by paying a bounty.

Mr. PETERS. Will the capital of the country furnish plants in Kansas, for instance, to make sugar under a bounty as well as under a protective duty?

Mr. BAYNE. Why not?

Mr. PETERS. But will it?

Mr. BAYNE. Why not? If this proposition becomes a law it will be as much a law of the United States as the present law or the Mills bill if it becomes a law.

Mr. PETERS. You do not regard it as stable as the tariff?

Mr. BAYNE. I should regard myself placed in this position, I should regard the party placed in this position, I should regard the Government as committed to this position, that if the duty be taken off of sugar and a bounty be given to the producers of sugar, one would be the consideration for the other; and if the bounty were ever repealed, it would be the bounden duty of the Government to restore the duty.

Mr. PETERS. Is it not a fact the moment your production reached within one-half of what was necessary to supply the consumption in this country there would be a cry raised for its repeal?

Mr. BAYNE. No, I think not. When that time comes that the sugar producers produce one-half of the sugar consumed in the country, I am in favor of restoring the duty, because it would look then as if we were going to produce the amount necessary to supply the wants of the consumers.

Mr. PETERS. Actuated by that fear capital will not furnish the plants necessary for sugar production.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not think capital will be apprehensive if we make a law and put it upon the statute-book. The credit of the Government is committed to it and capital will know that all they have to do is to go to the Treasury and get their pay.

Mr. PETERS. I know this to be the fact, that instead of ten plants we expected in Kansas this year we will only have three, and the main reason is the fear that the tariff on sugar will be reduced. They have put them off until next year to see what the Mills bill will do.

Mr. BAYNE. That has been the effect of the Mills bill on all the industries of the country.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Are you able to put iron and glass on precisely the same footing you propose to place sugar; that is, to take them off the free-list and give a bounty to those who produce them?

Mr. BAYNE. I have already stated that I am in favor of protecting every industry in this country where the home producer can supply the wants of the country or nearly supply them. As to iron and glass, the home manufacture can supply the wants of the country fully. As to the sugar consumption and production, they have been running in an inverse ratio to each other; that is to say, the consumption has been constantly increasing while the production has been as constantly running down.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does not my friend from Pennsylvania know that the sorghum process has not only been established and developed, but it has been established and developed to such an extent that the result in Kansas and elsewhere has been to show we have now obtained a process by which a very large amount, and perhaps all, of the sugar required in the United States can be produced by our own people? Does not the gentleman know in reference to the production of sugar we have reached within the last twelve months an entirely new era in that regard?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know those facts. They may be correct. I hope they are correct; but what I want to do is to relieve the taxpayers of this country of $58,000,000 a year——

Mr. MILLS. I ask the gentleman to yield to permit a motion that the committee now rise. It is near 5 o'clock.

Mr. BAYNE. I want to finish this sentence.

I repeat, I wish to relieve the tax-payers of $58,000,000 a year, and I want to pay the home producer of sugar 2 or 3 cents a pound to enable us to do so.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Would the gentleman apply the same principle to manufacturers of glass?

Mr. RYAN. Why not apply it also to tin-plate? Would the gentleman agree to pay a bounty upon the manufacture of tin-plate? None of it is produced here.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon. And then (the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived) the House, in obedience to its previous order, took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. MACDONALD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the order of business be pursued to-night that was adopted on last Friday night, each member present being permitted to call up one bill from the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WILLIAM C. LORD.

Mr. REED. I call up the bill (H. R. 7202) granting a pension to William C. Lord.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to place on the pension-rolls the name of William C. Lord, of Portland, Me., at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The essential facts in this case are set forth in claimant's memorial, herewith appended:

"I, William C. Lord, of Portland, in the county of Cumberland, State of Maine, aged seventy-eight years, certify on oath that I enlisted in the United States Navy in the month of March, 1840, and served on the sloop of war Concord about three years and two months. Said sloop was wrecked in the Mozambique Channel 1842. At that time we lost our captain, purser, and thirty men. I remained on said wreck about two months; was then taken off by a Spanish brig named Union. I have made diligent inquiry to ascertain the whereabouts of any survivors of that wreck, and from the information I have been able to obtain I have reason to believe that I am the only survivor of that wreck.

"Again, in 1858, I enlisted in the United States Navy and served on board the following vessels, namely: On the Delaware, about three months; on the Hartford, some over two years; again on the Niagara, about eighteen months; was finally discharged from the service in April, 1862. The dates above given are as nearly correct as I can now remember. I refer Congress to the records of the Navy Department for a verification of my service in the Navy.

The following affidavits set forth the necessities of the claimant:

"I, Jacob McLellan, of Portland, in the county of Cumberland and State of Maine, aged eighty years, certify on oath that I have been acquainted with William C. Lord for the past seventy years. In or about the year 1840 he enlisted in the United States Navy, and served therein for a number of years (off and on). Mr. Lord is now about seventy-eight years old; he lost his wife in the early part of this winter, and is now left alone in the world; he has no property whatever, and is now wholly dependent upon his daily labor for self-support; he has no children or relative to look to for aid in his declining years; therefore, by reason of his long and faithful service in the Navy and by reason of his age and dependent condition, it would be an act of mercy, as well as justice, on the part of Congress to grant him a naval pension.

"I, Charles B. Varney, of Portland, Me., merchant, aged sixty-three years, certify on oath that I have been acquainted with William C. Lord for about forty-five years. In about 1840 he enlisted in the United States Navy, and served therein, off and on, until about 1862. Mr. Lord is now about seventy-eight years old. He has no wife, children, or relative to aid him in his declining years; neither has he any property from which he derives any income, but is wholly dependent upon his daily labor for support. I have personal knowledge of the facts herein stated, and that knowledge was acquired by reason of my long acquaintance with him. I have no interest in this claim whatever.

Claimant does not allege that he incurred any pensionable disability in the service; but in view of his long service, commencing in 1840, the hardships incurred, and his old age and necessitous circumstances, your committee feel justified in reporting the bill back favorably and recommending its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MATILDA WILKINS EMORY.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to call up the bill (S. 2547) to increase the pension of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Matilda Wilkins Emory, widow of the late Brig. Gen. William H. Emory, United States Army, and to pay her a pension of $50 per month from the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the same order be made in this case as in the others heretofore reported to the House by the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that their consideration be postponed until the 12th day of July, the previous question being ordered with the privilege of debate for a limited time upon them, and also in some cases the right of amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that order being made.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read. That ought to be done in order to show that even a recommendation of that kind on the part of the committee is proper.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report. Before the completion of it,

Mr. CONGER said: I think the committee have heard enough of this report, without proceeding further with that part of it relating to the military service.

Mr. RANDALL. I owe the committee an apology. I did not write the report. If I had done so, it would not be so lengthy.

Mr. McMILLIN. As this seems to be quite a lengthy report, and as a considerable portion of it has already been read, I shall not insist upon the further reading, but ask that the entire report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it be printed in the RECORD, and go over, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, to be voted upon in a full House.

Mr. CHEADLE. That is the suggestion.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Indiana and myself have conferred together, and I ask unanimous consent, in consequence of that conference, that this bill may be reported to the House on the same day with those bills that have heretofore been made a special order.

Mr. CHEADLE. On the 12th of July.

Mr. RANDALL. And under the same conditions with the other bills.

Mr. CHEADLE. I hope that will be done.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

General Emory was graduated at the United States Military Academy and appointed brevet second lieutenant, Fourth Artillery, July 1, 1831, and from that time was in continual active service until his death, on the 1st day of December, 1887. He had been promoted step by step for gallant and meritorious services in the field, and was at the time of his death brevet major-general.

Mrs. Emory, the widow, is now nearly seventy years of age. She has no one to assist her in earning a living. She now supports two daughters and herself from the small pension of $30 which she is now receiving from the Government.

Your committee believe the bill a meritorious one and within the line of numerous cases passed by this committee. We therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The committee beg leave to attach to and make part of this report the statement of the military service of William H. Emory, compiled from the records of the office of the Adjutant-General, and also the letter of the surgeon of the United States Army showing the cause of General Emory's death.

OFFICE OF THE ATTENDING SURGEON, UNITED STATES ARMY,
No. 1814 G STREET NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1888.

SIR: At the suggestion of General Augur, I have the honor to inform you that the death of General W. H. Emory was attributed to renal cirrhosis, a form of Bright's disease. It was in my opinion an expression of a general degeneration induced by premature senility caused by hard work and exposure endured by General Emory in the military service.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. M. O'REILLY,
Surgeon U. S. Army.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March, 1888.

Statement of the military service of William H. Emory, late of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office.

He was graduated at the United States Military Academy and appointed brevet second lieutenant Fourth Artillery July 1, 1831; promoted second lieutenant July 1, 1831; resigned September 30, 1836; appointed first lieutenant Topographical Engineers July 7, 1838; and promoted captain April 24, 1851; appointed major Second Cavalry March 3, 1855; transferred to First Cavalry May 26, 1855; promoted lieutenant-colonel First Cavalry January 31, 1861; resigned May 9, 1861; appointed lieutenant-colonel Sixth Cavalry May 14, 1861; promoted colonel Fifth Cavalry October 27, 1863; retired with the rank of brigadier-general July 1, 1876, under act of Congress approved June 26, 1876.

He was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers March 17, 1862, and major-general of volunteers September 25, 1865. He was honorably mustered out of the volunteer service July 15, 1866. He received the brevets of captain United States Army December 6, 1846, "for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of San Pasqual;" of major United States Army January 9, 1847, "for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of San Gabriel and the Plains of Mesa;" of lieutenant-colonel United States Army October 19, 1857, "for meritorious and distinguished services as commissioner for running the boundary line between the United States and the Republic of Mexico;" of colonel United States Army May 27, 1862, "for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Hanover Court-House, Va.;" of brigadier-general United States Army March 13, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Fisher's Hill and in the campaign of the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia;" and of major-general United States Army March 13, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia."

He was on graduating leave from July 1, 1831, to November 4, 1831; with regiment at Forts McHenry and Severn, Md., to December 14, 1832; at Fort Moultrie, S. C., to April 25, 1833; at Forts Hamilton and La Fayette, New York Harbor, from May 7, 1833 (on leave October 12, 1834, to January 18, 1835), to May 21, 1836, and in the Creek Nation, Alabama, from June 14 to September 30, 1836.

Upon re-entering the service he served as assistant topographical engineer on improvements of harbors in the Delaware River from some time in February, 1839 (on leave September, 1842, to January, 1843), to some time in March, 1843; in the Topographical Bureau at Washington, D. C., to some time in May, 1844; as assistant in the Northeastern boundary survey to some time in June, 1846; with General Kearny's expedition (in the war with Mexico) as chief topographical engineer and acting assistant adjutant-general to some time in February, 1847, and at Washington, D. C., preparing his report of the expedition to some time in December, 1847; in the war with Mexico as lieutenant-colonel of Hughes's Regiment of Maryland and District of Columbia Volunteers to some time in July, 1848; awaiting orders at Washington, D. C., to some time in December, 1848; astronomer for the demarcation of the boundary line between California and New Mexico to November, 1851; in charge of the Mexican boundary survey and commissioner for running the boundary line between the United States and Mexico to some time in October, 1857; with regiment at Fort Riley, Kans., from November 23, 1857, to April 29, 1858; in the Utah expedition to July 12, 1858; en route to and at Fort Arbuckle, Ind. T., to July 4, 1859; on scout against hostile Indians to September 23, 1859, and at Fort Cobb, Ind. T., to December 20, 1859; on leave to January 12, 1860; member of a board to revise the programme of instructions at the United States Military Academy to April 24, 1860; on a tour of inspection in the Department of the Pacific to some time in March, 1861; en route to and commanding regiment and engaged in concentrating troops at Forts Smith, Ark., and Cobb, Arbuckle, and Washita, Ind. T., and retreating with them to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., where he arrived May 31, 1861, when he ascertained that his resignation had been accepted May 9, 1861. He proceeded to Washington, D. C., and was appointed lieutenant-colonel Sixth Cavalry, to date May 14, 1861; recruiting and organizing his regiment to October, 1861, which he commanded in the defenses of Washington, D. C., and in the Army of the Potomac to March 27, 1862; commanding a brigade of cavalry in the Army of the Potomac to July 5, 1862, and the First Brigade, Second Division, Fourth Army Corps to September 28, 1862; commanding United States troops, also engaged in the organization of a division of infantry at Baltimore, Md., to November 10, 1862; commanding United States troops en route to and in the Department of the Gulf to January 3, 1863; the Third Division, Nineteenth Army Corps to May 20, 1863; the defenses of New Orleans, La., to August 31, 1863, and the Third Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, to September 20, 1863; on sick leave to November 5, 1863; commanding First Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, to May 2, 1864; the Nineteenth Army Corps to July 6, 1864; and a detachment of the Nineteenth Army Corps en route to Washington, D. C., in the Army of the Shenandoah, and in the Middle Military Division, to March 20, 1865; commanding United States troops in the Middle Military Division to April 22, 1865; the Department of West Virginia to August 5, 1865, and the District of West Virginia to January 15, 1866, when mustered out of the volunteer service.

He was on leave from January 16 to February 15, 1866; commanding regiment (and in addition the garrison of Washington from October 11, 1866, to August 30, 1867, and the Department of Washington from August 31, 1867, to August 14, 1868, and from March 12 to 16, 1869), at Washington, D. C., to July 10, 1869, and at Fort McPherson, Nebr. (on leave May 25 to July 19, 1870), to November 22, 1871; commanding the Department of the Gulf November 28, 1871, to March 27, 1875; awaiting orders to October 11, 1875; president of a retiring board at Washington, D. C., to July 1, 1876, when he was retired as a brigadier-general by act of Congress approved June 26, 1876. By direction of the President he was assigned to duty according to his brevet rank of major-general while exercising the command of the Department of Washington, by paragraph 25, Special Orders No. 426, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, August 27, 1867.

He was again, by direction of the President, assigned to the command of the same department according to his brevet rank of major-general, by General Orders No. 10, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, March 5, 1869. By General Orders No. 66, November 1, 1871, from War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, he was assigned to the command of the Department of the Gulf, and by paragraph 3, Special Orders No. 429, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, November 3, 1871, he was, by direction of the President, assigned to duty according to his commission of brevet major-general.

He died December 1, 1887, at Washington, D. C.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

WILLIAM A. HUMES.

Mr. HUNTER. I call up the bill (H. R. 9731) granting a pension to William A. Humes.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William A. Humes, late a private of Company —, Thirteenth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9731) granting a pension to William A. Humes, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

It is shown by the proof on file in this case that claimant was enrolled and duly mustered into the United States service for three years at Lexington, Ky., as a private in Company I, Twenty-first Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on the 3d day of October, 1861. That while serving in that command at Columbia, Ky., in January, 1862, he contracted typhoid fever which resulted in rheumatism of back, or lumbago, on account of which he obtained a furlough and went to his home. That after he recovered sufficiently for military duty he enlisted as a private in Company I, Thirteenth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and was honorably discharged therefrom on the 10th day of January, 1865.

He filed an application for pension on the 26th day of April, 1883, and alleged in his declaration disease of back, as a result of typhoid fever, but the claim was rejected on the 2d day of December, 1885, on the ground of desertion and the refusal of the Adjutant-General of the Army to remove that charge from his military record.

The proof is conclusive as to the origin of the disease, its continuance since discharge, and existence at the present time, and it is quite manifest that claimant joined the most convenient command when able for military duty with no other than a high patriotic motive, and with no intention whatever of violating any military or other law in so doing.

In view of the foregoing facts your committee feel that this is a meritorious claim, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Add the letter "I" after "Company," in the sixth line.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BELLE R. CLEMENTS.

Mr. HUTTON. I call up the bill (S. 2549) for the relief of Belle R. Clements.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Belle R. Clements, widow of the late Bennett A. Clements, surgeon United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. HUTTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2549) granting an increase of pension to Mary Isabella R. Clements, have considered the same, and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The report of the Senate committee fully sets forth the facts in the case. They are as follows:

"[Senate Report 1424, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2549) for the relief of Belle R. Clements, have re-examined the same and report:

"This claim was reported adversely May 8, 1888, on the ground that 'there is no testimony on file showing that the pension she is now receiving is not adequate for the present support of claimant, and her own statement that she is entitled to $50 per month, on account of her late husband's long and faithful service, is not deemed sufficient to warrant favorable action.'

"The bill was recommitted May 25, 1888, additional testimony having been filed as follows: In affidavit executed May 22, 1888, claimant states that she was married under the name of May Isabelle Clements, but that, her maiden name being Rutherford, the initial R. has since been habitually inserted in her correspondence and so used as a part of her name, and that the name Belle is simply a contraction of Isabelle; that at the time of her late husband's death he was the senior major in the Medical Corps of the Army, and had been for three months eligible and entitled to promotion to the grade of lieutenant-colonel, which vacancy was caused by the retirement of Surg. Gen. Robert Murray, and that he failed to receive his promotion for the reason that the vacancy in the grade of Surgeon-General remained unfilled for several months; that the late surgeon's service was exceptional, owing to his long marches on the frontier, in the Seminole war, and the war of the rebellion; that he was principal operator in the field hospitals of the Army of the Potomac, and was constantly engaged in most difficult and trying surgical operations; that the constant strain to which he was subjected undermined his health and made him less able to resist the attacks of disease than he otherwise would have been; that his death was due primarily to pneumonia, which resulted in the rupture of a blood vessel; that she has no other source of income than that now allowed by the Government; and that she has two minor children receiving each a pension of $2 per month; that her necessities are pressing and hard to endure.

"In a letter dated May 23, 1888, John Moore, Surgeon-General United States Army, states that he knew the late officer from the first year of his service in the swamps of Florida to the time of his death; that there was not another medical officer in the Army who was so continuously on duty, or so frequently on kinds of duty where great hardships were undergone or great responsibility incurred; that during his thirty years of service, with the exception of three or four months at the close of the war, when broken down by sickness, he never had but three months' leave of absence; in this respect a record unequaled in the service; that as there is no similar example of devotion to duty in the medical service in the Army there can be no good reason to fear that this increase of pension would become a precedent for other claimants; that the widow is greatly in need of the increase asked for, and that the writer sincerely hopes the claim may receive favorable consideration.

"Claimant's explanation of her change of signature, referred to in the former report, a copy of which is hereto appended, seems to be satisfactory, as all of the papers signed by her are in the same handwriting; and her statement that her necessities are pressing and hard to endure is corroborated by Surgeon-General Moore, General George Crook, and Surg. Gen. John B. Hamilton, of Marine-Hospital Service.

"The facts in the claim seem to warrant favorable action, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, this is another of the increase bills, and I ask unanimous consent that the same order be made in this case as in the preceding one; that is, that it be made a special order for July 12 under the same conditions as the other bills.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MRS. CATHARINE SINNOTT.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask to call up the bill 5490, granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Sinnott.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Catharine Sinnott, widow of Patrick Sinnott, otherwise known as Edward Clark, late a member of Company F, Fortieth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay her a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5490) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Sinnott, respectfully report:

Mrs. Catharine Sinnott is the widow of Patrick Sinnott, who enlisted and served as a private, under the name of Edward Clark, in Company F, Fortieth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

The evidence on file in the Pension Office seems to satisfactorily show that the soldier, prior to his enlistment, was a healthy, able-bodied man. From the records of the Surgeon-General's Office it appears that during the last month of his military service he was sick in hospital at Richmond, Va., with intermittent fever, until the time of his final discharge May 24, 1865.

It also appears in evidence that from the time of his discharge the soldier was an enfeebled, broken man, incapacitated in body and mind.

He died November 4, 1867, less than two and one-half years after the termination of his army service.

There is a discrepancy concerning the immediate cause of his death—the public record stating it as "consumption," and the attending physician as "inflammation of the brain." There is also other testimony on file, of acquaintances and neighbors, that after his discharge from the service the soldier labored under apparent brain difficulties as well as physical infirmities.

The case, in brief, is this:

A healthy, able-bodied young man, twenty-three years of age, enlisted in the Army; he was in hospital sick with intermittent fever from April 24, 1865, to May 24, 1865, when he was discharged the service; he returned home broken and disabled in body and mind, and, after lingering in that condition through less than two and one-half years, died either of consumption or inflammation of the brain, and in the circumstances disclosed your committee think it of slight importance to determine which was the immediate cause of death. He leaves surviving him his widow, poor and dependent upon her own manual labor for her support.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. DELILAH WHIPPS.

Mr. MACDONALD. I call up the bill (H. R. 3764) for the relief of Mrs. Delilah Whipps.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Mrs. Delilah Whipps, widow of Lloyd Whipps, late a private in Capt. Joseph J. Jones's company, in the war of 1812, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3764) granting a pension to Delilah Whipps, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The husband of the claimant, Lloyd Whipps, was a member of Capt. Joseph T. Jones's Company, of Colonel Bowie's Thirty-fourth Regiment of Maryland Militia, from July 22 to July 25, 1814, and in Captains Veich's and Jackson's companies from July 25 to July 31, 1814. He was granted a land warrant, No. 88729. His widow's claim for pension under the general laws was rejected on the ground of insufficient service.

It appears by a report from the Third Auditor, United States Treasury Department, that four days' pay was allowed to privates in Captain Jones's company for going to rendezvous and returning home. By counting the days of enlistment and of discharge we have ten days of actual service with the companies, which, with four days' travel, make the requisite period of fourteen days required in this class of cases under the general law.

The claimant is seventy-eight years of age, and in poor financial circumstances.

Your committee are of the opinion that the soldier's service was sufficient to warrant the allowance of a pension to his aged widow.

They recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HIRAM R. ELLIS.

Mr. FORD. I call up the bill (H. R. 881) granting a pension to Hiram R. Ellis.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hiram R. Ellis, formerly first lieutenant and adjutant of the Twenty-eighth Michigan Infantry, and pay him a pension as of the rank of first lieutenant, in lieu of the pension allowed him under the general pension law of the rank of sergeant of Company I, Fifth Michigan Cavalry, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 881) having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

The claimant was a sergeant in Company I of the Fifth Regiment Michigan Cavalry during the war of the rebellion. In September, 1864, he was promoted to be first lieutenant and adjutant of the Twenty-eighth Regiment Michigan Infantry, in which capacity he served until the close of the war.

He afterwards applied for a pension upon the ground of a disability from hemorrhoids contracted in the line of duty. A pension was granted him by the Bureau of Pensions as of the rank of sergeant. He now seeks to be pensioned as of the rank of first lieutenant.

From the papers on file in the Pension Office and from numerous affidavits submitted to the committee, they find the following facts:

That Ellis was first annoyed with hemorrhoids in July, 1863, while he was serving in the capacity of sergeant, but that he speedily recovered from said ailment and continued in the performance of his duties without intermission or recurrence of said disability until after he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant. That at the time of his said promotion he was in good health and performed the duties of his position without physical hindrance until he went on a march with his command from a point 20 miles north of Gallatin, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn., on or about the 4th and 5th of December, 1864. Said march was a continuous one and occupied about thirty hours' continuous time. After said march and upon his arrival at Nashville, the claimant discovered he had contracted a serious case of hemorrhoids, caused by the exertion and exhaustion consequent upon said march. That thereupon and thereafter said disability became permanent and firmly established.

The above facts have been substantiated by affidavits submitted to this committee, two of which affidavits are hereto annexed. Your committee believe that the disability from hemorrhoids which Ellis contracted while he was serving as a sergeant had been entirely cured a long time before he was promoted to be first lieutenant, and that the disability from which he now suffers was incurred originally while acting as first lieutenant as aforesaid, and they therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Allegan, ss:

In the matter of petition of Hiram R. Ellis, late first lieutenant and adjutant Twenty-eighth Regiment Michigan Infantry Volunteers.

Personally appeared before me, a notary public duly authorized to administer oaths in said county and State, William B. Williams, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That affiant was camp commandant of the said regiment of Kalamazoo, Mich., during the months of August, September, and October, 1864; that during that time and on and after some time in August the petitioner was first lieutenant and adjutant of said regiment, and was almost constantly in my presence at headquarters while on duty; that I had good opportunities to become informed as to his physical condition; that I have every reason to believe, and do believe, it was good—at least he performed the duties of his office in a very satisfactory manner; that had he been affected with any ailment or disease to a noticeable degree during the period above named, I should probably have observed it; that his apparent good health continued until the regiment left Kalamazoo for Louisville, Ky., on the last of October, 1864. I saw petitioner subsequently at Louisville, Ky., early in the following November, and he was then in the enjoyment of his usual good health, and was as active and interested in the performance of his duties as usual.

Affiant further states that he has no interest, either direct or indirect, in the presentation of this petition, and that he makes this affidavit solely for the purpose of aiding in doing justice to a good soldier and worthy citizen.

W. B. WILLIAMS.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Allegan, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 4th day of January, A. D. 1888; and I further certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant before he signed the same, and that I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the matter of this petition.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Calhoun, ss:

In the matter of petition of Hiram R. Ellis, late first lieutenant and adjutant Twenty-eighth Regiment Michigan Infantry, for change of rank.

Personally came before me, a notary public in and for said county and State, Norris J. Frink, whose residence and post-office address is Marshall, Mich., and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid petitioner as follows:

At the organization of the aforesaid regiment I was captain of Company A, and my official duties with the adjutant were necessarily frequent, to such an extent that I saw and conversed with him during the months of September, October, and November, 1864, several times each and every day. Aside from that, we were together socially much of the time, and I am confident that if the petitioner had at that time been in ill health or suffering from disease of any kind to an appreciable extent I should have known it. What I wish to say is that if he was in any way afflicted with disease it did not prevent him from performing his duties in an active and energetic manner.

He continued to be as active and energetic as almost any officer in the command, until while the regiment was engaged in conducting a wagon train from Camp Nelson, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn., in the month of November and early part of December, 1864, the petitioner was subjected to a severe and exhaustive strain upon his body by continuous saddle riding, and particularly the day and night before reaching Nashville, Tenn., he was continuously in the saddle, and after that complained of severe suffering from piles, as the result of the exhaustive nature of his duties on the occasion referred to. I was constantly associated with him from that time on until the regiment was mustered out in June, 1866, and know that he at times complained of suffering from piles while the command was in the service.

I believe that his permanent disability from piles was the result of the arduous duties he performed on or about the 4th or 5th days of December, 1864, and that his disability, if he had any, prior to that time, would not be considered as affecting him to a pensionable degree.

I know the petitioner to be a man of good reputation, and one whose statements can be relied upon, and make this affidavit solely that justice may be done a worthy ex-soldier and a worthy man.

I further declare that I have no interest in his petition, except as above stated, and am not concerned in its prosecution.

NORRIS J. FRINK,
Late Major Twenty-eighth Michigan Infantry.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant; and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said claim, nor am I concerned in its prosecution.

Witness my hand and seal this 13th day of January, 1888.

[SEAL.] JAMES M. PARSONS,
Notary Public, Calhoun County, Michigan.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARSHALL BURTRAM.

Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky. I call up the bill (H. R. 9029) for the relief of Marshall Burtram.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marshall Burtram, of Lewis County, Kentucky, late first sergeant in Company K, Fortieth Kentucky Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9029) for the relief of Marshall Burtram, have had the same under consideration and make the following report:

Marshall Burtram, Company K, Fortieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, was enrolled on the 19th day of August, 1863, at Grayson, Ky., and was honorably mustered out with company December 30, 1864, as first sergeant.

While at Camp Lebanon, Ky., October 15, 1864, from lying on the ground and other exposure he contracted a severe cold, which resulted in lung disease. He was treated in the hospital at Lexington, Ky. He has taken medicine since his discharge from the Army, but has not improved in health. From the affidavits of his comrades his statements are sustained as to his exposure and cold and lung disease.

Jarrett and John Zurus state that they were intimately acquainted with claimant for a number of years prior to his enlistment, and to the best of their knowledge he was a stout, healthy man.

John Patten, a comrade, was on guard some time with claimant, and says:

"The night being damp and cold, claimant contracted a severe cold. He was very hoarse and complained of his lungs during the remainder of his term of service; affiant was with him during the time above referred to."

This was in October, 1864. The said Patten further stated that "claimant was ordered to a certain cross-road on the road leading from Lebanon to Salt River, in command of a guard of ten men; they remained on guard some time," and while so on guard and in line of duty he contracted the cold complained of and disease of lungs.

Lieut. H. E. Evans, of Lexington, Ky., states that—

"At Lebanon, Ky., October 15, 1864, claimant contracted a severe cold, which affiant believes affected his lungs. Prior to this time claimant was a stout, healthy young man, and after October 15, 1864, he complained more or less of his lungs until he was discharged."

Jarrett and John Zornes say that they believe that claimant is not able to earn enough to support his family, and they are well acquainted with him and have been for many years.

Dr. Lewis A. Grimes, the examining surgeon, certifies:

"In this applicant I find pain (slight) at base of chest and beneath the sternum; frequent cough, attended with expectoration of pearl-colored sputa, not readily mixing with water; deep and full inspiration, provoking severe cough, moist bronchial rales, resonance percussion, and the vocal resonance not materially affected, respiratory member somewhat weakened over upper portion on both sides, fast walking for fifteen minutes in front of my office provoking cough attended with sputa; a little or very small streak of blood. Should say applicant had chronic bronchitis."

The claimant applied for a pension—No. 349068. His claim was rejected because the Commissioner decided that his disease was not contracted in the service.

Your committee therefore make this favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out "Burtram" wherever that name occurs in the bill and insert "Burtrum."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. CATHARINE K. WHITTLESEY.

Mr. VOORHEES. I call up the bill (S. 2274) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine K. Whittlesey.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Catharine K. Whittlesey, widow of the late Maj. J. H. Whittlesey, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6289) introduced by Mr. VOORHEES, have considered the same in connection with bill S. 2274, and report back the latter bill (S. 2274) with the recommendation that it pass as a substitute for the House bill referred to.

They adopt as their report the statement of facts correctly set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 966, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2274) granting an increase of pension to Catharine K. Whittlesey, have carefully examined the same, and report:

"The claimant, Catharine K. Whittlesey, widow of Maj. James H. Whittlesey, filed her declaration for a pension, by reason of the death of her husband of disease contracted in the service of the Government, September 2, 1886. A pension was granted January 28, 1887, "for malarial poison and resulting disease of the liver," rating the pension to which she was entitled at $17 per month, commence-ing August 2, 1886. The bill asks that the widow be pensioned by special act of Congress at the rate of $10 per month.

"The husband of the claimant graduated in 1844; promoted a second lieutenant September 18, 1845, first lieutenant October, 1847, captain October 22, 1854, and major of the Fifth Cavalry November 12, 1861; retired as major November 30, 1863. He was in active service of the Government in Louisiana in 1845; in the military occupation of Texas to January 29, 1846; in Kansas June, 1846; served in the Mexican war, 1848; on field service in New Mexico to November 13, 1851; stationed in Kansas in 1854; New Mexico in 1855; in Oregon in 1861; with the Fifth Cavalry in the Army of the Potomac to May, 1862; on special duty at Harrisburg to February, 1863; mustering and disbursing officer at Concord, N. H., to February, 1865; commanding Camp Randolph, Madison, Wis., to July 3, 1865; recruiting service to February 4, 1867; on special service at Winchester, Va., to June, 1868; professor of military science, etc., at Cornell University, New York, to February 21, 1870; secretary and treasurer of the Soldiers' Home near Washington, D. C., to July 5, 1881.

"The above record shows that Major Whittlesey was continuously in active service from 1844 to May 21, 1867; that he was on frontier duty; that he served in the Mexican war, and was especially noticed for gallantry at the battle of Buena Vista. The evidence in the papers further shows that he was in numerous Indian engagements, and exposed to severe hardships during these expeditions; that after he had been retired by reason of physical disability he was assigned to special duty for nineteen years, in all of which positions he gave satisfaction to his superior officers. There are but few that can show a prouder or more honorable record in the service of his Government than Major Whittlesey.

"The Commissioner of Pensions, under what he construes to have been the cause of the death of Major Whittlesey, as shown by certificate of disability dated in 1852 and under the strict letter of the law, has given the widow the pension only of the widow of a first lieutenant, while the record shows that he held the rank of captain in active service for nine years and of major for two years before he was retired, and that he was in active service or assigned to special duty with the rank of major from 1861 to 1881, a period of twenty years. The cause of death, as certified, was malarial fever, and the record shows that after his service in the Army of the Potomac in the Peninsula he was granted sick leave for malarial trouble. At that time and for a year anterior to it he held the rank of major. D. L. Huntington, surgeon, United States Army, certifies, under date of August 28, 1886, as follows:

"'This is to certify that I was the medical attendant of Maj. J. H. Whittlesey, United States Army (retired), during the years from 1876 to 1880, both inclusive, while he was an officer of the Soldiers' Home, near this city. During this period he suffered more or less continuously and severely from chronic inflammation of the liver, and with attacks of acute inflammation of the deodenum. I am inclined to believe from his condition and history that this trouble orignated in the line of his duty while an officer of the Army in active service, and was due to exposures incurred in the early part of the civil war.'

"If this certificate is to be taken as true, the widow of Major Whittlesey, under the law and as a matter of right would be entitled to a pension at the rate of $25 per month, the rate allowed the widow of a major.

"Your committee would recommend that Senate bill 2274 be amended, in line 8, by striking out the word 'forty' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'twenty-five,' and as amended the bill is reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. CATHARINE PETERSON.

Mr. WICKHAM. I call up the bill (H. R. 3913) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Peterson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Catharine Peterson, widow of Anthony Peterson, late first lieutenant Company F, Thirty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteers, to date from the 1st day of July, A. D. 1880, the date of the death of said Anthony.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 3913, beg leave to submit the following report:

Anton Peterson, the husband of the applicant, who is a widow, was a first lieutenant in Company F, Thirty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and also a captain of Company G, One hundred and seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry. At the time of his death he was receiving pension for hernia incurred while such lieutenant.

The application for a pension by the widow has been rejected by the Pension Bureau, on the ground that the disease, angina pectoris, of which her husband is said to have died, had no pathological connection with the hernia for which he had been pensioned. This determination was based upon a report made by medical referee, to whom the case had been referred. In his report the referee used the following language:

"I consider it best to adhere to the rejection of this claim. In the first place, hernia is not one of the causes that of itself is likely to produce the effect on the nervous system which is herein described, and it has not so far been recognized as a cause of angina pectoris by any authority in medicine. * * * In my opinion, no pathological sequence can be established between hernia and angina pectoris."

Much evidence of medical gentlemen acquainted with the deceased, and his condition for a long period prior to death, was taken.

Dr. Charles H. Rockwood testified, November 4, 1880, that he had practiced medicine fourteen years; that he had been well acquainted with the deceased for eight years prior to that date, and knew that he had suffered a long time with hernia; had been unable to work on account of it, and that he had died on the 1st day of July, 1880, from angina pectoris, superinduced by his physical condition and hernia.

In another affidavit filed in August, 1881, he says that three or four days before his death the soldier described to him his symptoms, as follows:

"Sharp, cutting pains in right inguinal region, and darting and shooting pains affecting the right and left thoracic region, especially the left, in the region of the heart; severe pain in the left shoulder and extending down the arm. Did not see the soldier again till called to his death bed. Held a post mortem and found heart in a healthy condition, but somewhat atrophied; hernia not strangulated; stomach and intestines in healthy condition. From all symptoms gathered from friends and personal observation, affiant pronounces it a case of angina pectoris, superinduced by an excessively nervous condition of the system, originating primarily from the hernia and its surroundings."

The same gentleman, in another affidavit dated March 14, 1883, says that he lived "next neighbor" to the soldier two or three years, and "presumes that he saw him every day" during that time; that he "had many talks with the soldier about his complaints;" was aware that he suffered a great share of the time on account of hernia and effects upon a naturally nervous temperament; that the soldier told him, affiant, that he "often suffered from severe pains from the hernia and surrounding parts, such as severe darting and cutting pains through various parts of the body, as the abdomen, legs, arms, shoulders, and chest;" that as stated by the affiant in former affidavit, three or four days before soldier's death he had a conversation with him in which he described his feelings as follows: That he had "sharp, cutting pains in right inguinal region, darting and shooting pains affecting the right and left thoracic region, especially the left, in region of the heart, and that taking everything into consideration, affiant sincerely believes that soldier's nervous prostration was occasioned by hernia; that he died from the effects of the hernia upon an exceedingly nervous temperament in the form of neuralgia of the heart or angina pectoris."

The same witness further testifies, in an affidavit filed January 2, 1884, substantially as in former affidavits, adding that from all the symptoms as described to him, the soldier's pains from the hernia, together with an exceedingly nervous condition of the system, originating directly from the hernia, he pronounced it a case of angina pectoris. The hernia, with the shooting and darting pains, produced and was the cause of the same.

Dr. Allen Cross also testified, in an affidavit filed September 3, 1881, that he had been practicing medicine for thirty-nine years; that he knew the soldier well and intimately; knew that he was suffering from hernia in inguinal region, and compelled to wear a truss; that he, affiant, had been consulted in the case; and that he had "no doubt that the rupture was the cause of the soldier's death, as it ofttimes prostrated him, causing exhausting pains and symptoms of angina pectoris."

Dr. N. S. S. Cromwell testified, in an affidavit filed January 2, 1884, that he had practiced medicine for five years; that he had been acquainted with the soldier four or five years; that he agrees with Dr. Rockwood's statement that under existing circumstances and the condition of the soldier when accompanied with the pains, as stated by Dr. Rockwood, and in affiant's opinion, death would ensue from the cause named (hernia), which would produce angina pectoris, as in the case of the soldier.

Dr. R. B. Collier testifies, in an affidavit filed January 2, 1884, that he is a regularly educated physician in actual practice; that he is acquainted with Dr. Rockwood, and concurs with him in regard to the soldier's case.

Your committee are led irresistibly to the conclusion that the death of the husband of the applicant was caused by the hernia which originated in the service, and for which he was at his death receiving a pension.

The medical referee in his decision proceeds on the theory that the soldier died of angina pectoris, which he says could not pathologically proceed from hernia. It will be observed that the physicians in charge and acquainted with the soldier's case do not say without qualification that he died of angina pectoris. Dr. Cross says that the rupture "caused exhausting pains and symptoms of angina pectoris." Dr. Rockwood says that from all the symptoms, etc., "he pronounces it a case of angina pectoris." But while they say this, all the doctors who testify, four in number, are united and confident in the opinion that the soldier's death proceeded from the hernia. Their evidence shows conclusively that for years he suffered in the inguinal region severe and continued pains; that they extended to the other parts of the body, including the left thoracic region; that he constantly grew weaker, the pains continuing until his death. No other cause of his death appears, nor is it even hinted at in any of the evidence in the case, nor in the medical referee's report.

If there could be any reasonable doubt that the continued, excessive, and prostrating pains from the hernia, having their legitimate effect upon a naturally nervous temperament, caused the death of the soldier through their effect upon his heart, such doubt, your committee feel, should be solved in favor of the applicant, and they do therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. FANNIE A. BOYD.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I call up the bill (H. R. 9963) to increase the pension of Mrs. Fannie A. Boyd, widow of Capt. O. B. Boyd.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Fannie A. Boyd, widow of Capt. O. B. Boyd, Eighth United States Cavalry, to $30 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving, to date from the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9963) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Fannie A. Boyd, have considered the same and report as follows:

Capt. Orsemus B. Boyd entered the military service of the United States as a corporal in Company I, Eighty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry, on the 16th day of September, 1861. He was then but seventeen years of age. He was in active service and was mentioned for gallantry at Roanoke Island, N. C., in battle. For his bravery he was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and forty-fourth New York Volunteers, on September 5, 1862. It is stated that in this company he commanded his father and elder brother, who were private soldiers therein.

On February 14, 1863, he was honorably discharged from the One hundred and forty-fourth New York Volunteers, having accepted a cadetship at the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y. He was graduated therefrom and appointed a second lieutenant, Eighth Cavalry, June 17, 1867; promoted first lieutenant October 13, 1868, and captain June 26, 1882. He died in camp, near Grafton, N. Mex., July 23, 1885, of "acute dysentery incurred in line of duty." Nearly all of his period of service was spent with his regiment in Arizona, Texas, and New Mexico, where he assisted in developing our great inland resources. He died at the early age of forty-one, after twenty-four years of faithful and gallant services in the interest of his country.

The claimant, Mrs. Boyd, is now a pensioner as the widow of Captain Boyd, at the rate of $20 per month. Her late husband left her no property of any kind, and she has none of her own. She is herself in ill health, brought on, as she claims, by the exposure which she endured while with her husband in the Southern Territories. Her family physician, Dr. J. S. McLain, certifies that "she is suffering from a physical disability which would prevent her gaining a livelihood by her own endeavor." Her children are not old enough to render her a support, but rather to demand a mother's attention and care.

Your committee report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "fifty," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty."

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be sent over to the full House under the same conditions as in the other cases.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CATHARINE PETERSON.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, the bill (H. R. 3913) has already been acted upon by the committee, but I ask unanimous consent to recur to it in order to move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The permission asked by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] is granted.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to amend the bill by striking out all of the bill after the words "Ohio Volunteers," in the eighth line.

Mr. WICKHAM. I do not object to the amendment of the bill so as to eliminate the provision for arrears.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

After "Ohio Volunteers," in line 8, strike out "to date from the 1st day of July, A. D. 1880, the date of the death of said Anthony."

Mr. MCMILLIN. It has been the custom of Congress for ten years to grant no arrears in these cases.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALEXANDER J. COLLINGE.

Mr. CONGER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2176) granting a pension to Alexander J. Collinge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander J. Collinge, late a member of Company A, Thirty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2176) granting a pension to Alexander J. Collinge, respectfully report:

That Alexander J. Collinge was a sergeant in Company A, Thirty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers. He enlisted in September, 1861; re-enlisted as a veteran in 1864, and was finally discharged December 16, 1865.

Upon re-enlisting, he was granted the usual furlough promised and given to veterans upon their re-enlistment, and furnished Government transportation to Chicago, Ill.; and, while traveling to his home upon said furlough, in April, 1864, he was injured by an accident to the railroad train upon which he was. The soldier, in his affidavit, states the circumstances of said accident as follows:

"When passing through the State of Ohio, near Crestline, the train on which he was met with an accident, which he understood was caused by cattle on the track. He knows he was thrown from his seat in a coach, and the next circumstance he has any remembrance of was he was in a hotel in Crestline in a bed, cared for by some parties not known to him. He was told that he was pinned in between two seats when found."

The permanent injury to the soldier by said accident was a serious double hernia.

Dr. Charles M. Clark, late surgeon of the soldier's regiment, testifies:

"He (said Collinge) reported to me the 26th day of May, 1864, with a double inguinal hernia (oblique) while I was at Bermuda Hundred, Va., the said hernia being caused by railway accident while on his way home on veteran furlough. He was a sound man at date of enlistment. The circumstances of his case I remember by reason of having applied truss, etc."

His claim for pension has been rejected upon the ground that the soldier was not in the line of duty at the time of receiving said injury, because section 4700 of the Revised Statutes provides that soldiers on veteran furlough, while "with the organization to which they belong, shall be regarded in the administration of the pension laws in the same manner as if they were in the field or hospital."

The ground upon which rejection in this case was founded seems to your committee extremely technical and inequitable. The facts are that veteran furloughs were offered as inducements to re-enlistment; that Collinge was upon detached service at the time the members of his regimental organization re-enlisted and departed upon their veteran furlough; that he also re-enlisted, but started upon his furlough at a little later date than his comrades, because they had already gone when he rejoined his regiment from said detached service; that he received the same veteran furlough as his comrades and was furnished Government transportation in the same manner; that his injury, which has most seriously disabled him (as appears by the report of the examining board of surgeons, on file), was received through no fault or negligence upon his part.

Your committee think that, in view of the circumstances above mentioned, the soldier's claim for pension is equitably entitled to the same consideration as if, at the time of receiving said injury, he had been "with the organization" to which he belonged. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARIA HULSE.

Mr. CARUTH. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9911) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Hulse.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Maria Hulse, dependent mother of Silas Hulse, who was a soldier in the Mexican war, and subsequently joined the regular Army of the United States, and was killed in the service of his country.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9911) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Hulse, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant is the mother of Silas Hulse, who was a private in the Mexican war under Major Churchill, and subsequently enlisted in Company D, Third United States Infantry (February 27, 1849), and was killed accidentally by a wound at Sante Fé, N. Mex., August 23, 1849. The records are incomplete as to full circumstances of death, but it is accepted at the War Department as being accidental and in line of duty.

The claimant, Mrs. Hulse, is now in her eightieth year, in destitute circumstances, almost blind, and dependent upon the charity of her friends and neighbors, and she has been dependent upon her own manual labor for support ever since the death of the soldier, her only son. She had two daughters, but they are now dead.

Many prominent citizens of Louisville, Ky., unite in a petition for her relief.

Her claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau because there is no general law allowing a pension to mothers or widows of soldiers who died prior to March 4, 1861. In a similar case the honorable Commissioner of Pensions has recommended the passage of a special act to meet the deficiency of the general law.

Your committee believe that a pension should be granted to this old and destitute mother, whose son's death in the military service of his country has deprived her of his assistance in her time of need.

Your committee recommend the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

C. T. MAPHET.

Mr. PETERS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 217) granting a pension to C. T. Maphet.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls C. T. Maphet, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, he having been a private in Company D, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Cavalry, and now living at Olcott, in Reno County, Kansas.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 217) granting a pension to C. T. Maphet, submit the following report:

Charles T. Maphet enlisted August 12, 1863, as a private in Company D, Fifteenth Kansas Cavalry, and was discharged for disability January 27, 1865, on account of sore eyes. The evidence of the disability of eyes in service and since discharge is complete. Dr. W. D. Hoover, who had charge of the hospital at Paola, Kans., in 1864, says that his eyes were badly inflamed and that he treated them. First Lieut. Abraham Ellis, of the same company, says that in the latter part of November or fore part of December, 1863, the soldier took some inflammatory disease, which resulted in sore eyes.

The case at the Pension Office was rejected because it was claimed that the disease existed prior to enlistment; but Dr. J. B. Davis, his family physician, says he knew him from 1861 and he was sound at enlistment, and that he was entirely free from any ailment of the eyes at or prior to that time. The only evidence of weak eyes is the opinion of the surgeon recommending his discharge. We think, however, the evidence of the family physician, who knew him at the date of his enlistment and who says he was sound, should be taken in preference to the opinion of the surgeon, who did not know him at enlistment, and who can only express an opinion at the time of his discharge. But admitting that the soldier's eyes were weak at the time of enlistment, the fact remains that the Government accepted his service in the condition he then was, and for eighteen months he discharged all the duties imposed upon him.

It is not a violent assumption that if the soldier had remained at home receiving proper care he would have soon entirely recovered from the disability, even if it existed. The Government accepted his services, and it resulted in a very serious injury to his eyes, for it is abundantly shown that the disability was much more serious when he was discharged than it was claimed to be when he enlisted.

Your committee insist that eighteen months' faithful service ought to act as an estoppel on the Government from setting up a claim of prior disability.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARTIN N. KELLOGG.

Mr. RICE. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1556) granting a pension to Martin N. Kellogg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin N. Kellogg, a Mexican war veteran, who served in Company H, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $72 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

On motion of Mr. CHEADLE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1556) granting an increase of pension to Martin N. Kellogg, have considered the same, and report, adopting the statement of facts as presented in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 346, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"Martin N. Kellogg, late of the Sixth regular United States Infantry, has been in receipt of a Mexican war survivor's service pension since the 29th January, 1887, under the act of that date, at $8 per month. His disability is that of total blindness, with which he has been afflicted many years; and his condition, aside from such pension, is that of helplessness and entire dependence on his wife and minor daughters.

"His character and conduct during over thirty years' residence in Minnesota have been without reproach, and are favorably certified to from personal knowledge by Messrs. Ramsey, Sibley, and Marshall, three ex-governors of that State, with whose testimony the member of the committee making this report would, if permissible, most cordially concur. The act in question makes no provision for allowances based upon degrees of disability, and the rate is limited to that he now receives. The pensioner is sixty-six years of age, and in his disabled condition can not long be a recipient of the public bounty.

"During his closing years the country can better afford to make him comfortable than to permit him to remain in want; and to that end the committee report favorably upon the bill and recommend its passage."

Your committee also deem it proper to present the statements of ex-Governor Marshall in full, as follows:

"ST. PAUL, January 10, 1888.

"I certify, on honor, that I have known Martin N. Kellogg, who has made the within affidavit, for about thirty-seven years. I believe him to be a man of truth and veracity. He is a man of strictly temperate habits and of good moral character. From his general physical appearance in all the years I have known him, I believe he has been a man of impaired health, and think it quite credible that his affliction of blindness has come indirectly from the exposure and sickness which he had in the Army, as he states. I know the truth of what he says about his indigent circumstances.

"WM. R. MARSHALL,
"Ex-Governor of Minnesota."

This statement is concurred in by ex-Governors Alexander Ramsey and Henry H. Sibley and ex-United States Senator Henry M. Rice.

Your committee report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE E. WELLS.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 965) granting a pension to George E. Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the name of George E. Wells, late a member of the Sixth Ohio Independent Battery, be placed on the pension-roll of the United States, by the Secretary of the Interior; and that he be allowed and paid hereafter the sum of $24 per month, as in the case of other pensioners.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment adding at the end of the bill the words, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the amendment be not agreed to, and that there be inserted in lieu of the words recommended by the committee the following: "And that he be paid a pension of $8 per month from the date of the passage and approval of this bill." The report in this case is quite long and I think I can make a statement which will present the facts more briefly. The whole question in the case is as to whether or not at the present time the claimant is disabled in a pensionable degree. He was granted a pension until July 5, 1882, at the rate of $4 per month. It was proven by the evidence that when discharged in 1865 he was discharged because of paralysis incurred in the service. The proof was strong upon that point; there was no question about it; and the pension was granted in 1882 at the rate of $4 per month, carrying arrears up to July 5, 1882, when it was to cease because of a so-called lapse in the evidence at that time. He applied to be reinstated.

I should say, by the way, that within a couple of years after he came home from the Army, having served in the artillery branch of the service, he participated in a celebration which took place in his town, and was so unfortunate as to have his right arm blown off above the elbow. Of course, he does not claim a pension on account of the loss of his arm, but his case is one which justifies at least reasonable latitude in passing upon the merits of the claim and the evidence by which it is supported. As I said before, the whole question is whether the disability exists now in a pensionable degree. The committee in their report find from the testimony in the case that he is totally disabled for the performance of manual labor. It is proper to say, too, that there was certain evidence before the committee which was not before the Pension Department. The committee propose to amend the bill by inserting the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." That would place the claimant in this position: He must go back to the Department and fight over again the old question as to whether there is a pensionable degree of disability. I would rather have the bill thrown aside entirely than passed in that form, because the controversy on that point has already been carried on for several years between the claimant and the Department. Therefore, I propose that the amendment of the committee be rejected, and that in lieu thereof there be inserted a provision granting a pension at $8 per month.

The amendment of Mr. BOOTHMAN was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY KELLEY.

Mr. HIRES. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 945) granting a pension to Mary Kelley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary Kelley, widow of Daniel Kelley, late private of Company B, of the Eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, and pay to her a pension, subject to the rules and regulations of the Pension Office.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 945) granting a pension to Mary Kelley, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Mary Kelley is the widow of Daniel Kelley, who served as a private in Company B, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, from July 23, 1861, to July 26, 1864. Her claim for pension has been rejected by the Pension Bureau, on the ground that the fatal disease, inflammation of stomach, of which he died September 16, 1876, was not chargeable to the military service.

Is is alleged that the disease was a sequence of chronic rheumatism contracted in the service. This claim is not admitted by the medical referee.

It is of record that the soldier contracted anasarca and rheumatism, and was treated therefor in the service; and that he was a great sufferer from the latter until death, is conceded. It is also shown that for some weeks prior to death he was hardly able to move without assistance, and while in this condition received a severe fall, after which he was never able to get up again. The fall caused a stoppage of the bowels, and finally died of gastritis, as diagnosed by the attending physician, who, however, had no knowledge of the soldier's previous condition.

In support of the claimant's allegation that chronic rheumatism was the principal factor in the soldier's death cause, she has filed an able medical opinion of Dr. E. H. Bell, of Philadelphia, Pa., a medical expert upon this class of cases, in which it is held that rheumatism might superinduce gastritis and death. He also refers to several medical authorities, among which, G. B. Wood's Practice, volume I, page 535; Dacosta's Medical Diagnosis, third edition, page 444; Chomel, Des Dyspepsies, and J. Russel Reynolds's System of Medicine, 1880, volume 3, pages 53 and 55. He quotes from the latter as follows:

"Weakened states of general system or of the stomach, which diminishes the secretion of the gastric juice, are also frequent causes of inflammatory irritation. Inflammation of the stomach has also been observed to follow the retrocession of gout and acute rheumatism. Reference is also made to Audral, Clin. Med., vol. 2, page —, where the author states, 'I have observed a case where the retrocession of the pains from the joints was followed by vomiting and diarrhea.'"

Of this, however, the medical referee says there is no evidence. The death of the attending physician from discharge to death precludes the possibility of procuring medical evidence on that point. Being established, however, beyond any question that the soldier was reduced by reason of rheumatism to such an extent as likely to produce the results admitted by the highest medical authorities as sequential thereto, it is the opinion of your committee that whatever doubts there may remain should be solved in favor of this poor and aged claimant, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. VIRGINIA GRIER.

Mr. MAISH. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 123) granting a pension to Mrs. Virginia Grier.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Virginia Grier, widow of William N. Grier, late brevet brigadier-general and colonel of the United States Army; the pension of the said Mrs. Virginia Grier to be at the rate of $30 per month.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 123) granting a pension to Mrs. Virginia Grier, have examined the same and report as follows, to wit:

In view of the advanced age of the claimant (she being nearty seventy years old), and in view of the long and honorable services of her late husband, General William N. Grier (exhibited in the annexed statement from the Acting Adjutant-General), your committee recommend that the accompanying bill do pass.

The military record of General Grier is attached hereto and made part of this report.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 11, 1888.

Statement of the military service of William N. Grier, late of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office.

He was a cadet at the United States Military Academy from September 1, 1831, to July 1, 1835, when graduated and appointed brevet second lieutenant First Dragoons; promoted second lieutenant June 15, 1836; first lieutenant April 14, 1838; captain August 23, 1846; major Second Dragoons April 20, 1861; lieutenant-colonel First Cavalry February 15, 1862; and colonel Third Cavalry August 31, 1866; retired December 15, 1870.

He received the brevets of major March 16, 1848, "for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Santa Cruz de Rosales:" of colonel May 5, 1862, "for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Williamsburgh, Va.," and of brigadier-general March 13, 1865, "for faithful and meritorious services during the war."

He joined his regiment in October, 1835, and served therewith in the Indian Territory to October, 1837; on leave to March, 1838; on recruiting service to June, 1839; with regiment in the Indian Territory to September, 1840; on duty at the United States Military Academy from September 14, 1840, to June 20, 1841; with regiment in Kansas, the Indian Territory, and Iowa to June, 1846, and in the war with Mexico to July, 1848; on leave and conducting recruits en route to regiment to July, 1849; with regiment in New Mexico to (participating in expedition against Apache Indians, being engaged in the skirmish at "Too-koon-kurré Butte," Red River, New Mexico, November 17, 1849, where he was wounded in the left breast) June, 1852; on recruiting service to October, 1854; with regiment in New Mexico to August, 1856; on the march to and in California to April, 1857; on leave to October, 1857; with regiment in Washington Territory and Oregon (being engaged in expeditions against the Spokane and other hostile Indians) to August, 1861; en route to Washington, D. C., and from October 11, 1861, to April 21, 1862, was inspector of cavalry in the Army of the Potomac; he commanded his regiment in that army to August 4, 1862, being engaged in the Peninsular campaign, and was wounded in the battle of Williamsburgh, Va., May 4, 1862; superintendent volunteer recruiting service and chief mustering and disbursing officer for the State of Ohio to September, 1862; on court-martial duty at St. Louis, Mo., to February, 1863; superintendent volunteer recruiting service and chief mustering and disbursing officer for the State of Iowa to June 12, 1865; assistant provost-marshal-general, superintendent volunteer recruiting service, and chief mustering and disbursing officer for the western division, State of Pennsylvania, to April, 1866; superintendent mounted recruiting service to May, 1868; conducting recruits to and from July 12, 1868, commanding his regiment in New Mexico to May, 1870, and in Nevada to October 16, 1870; and under surgical treatment at San Francisco, Cal., to November 27, 1870; with regiment at Camp Halleck, Nev., to December 15, 1870, upon which date he was retired, at his own request, after thirty years' service, under the act of July 15, 1870.

He died at Napa Springs, Cal., July 8, 1885.

J. C. KELTON,
Acting Adjutant-General.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be laid aside and reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. LOANDA SHERMAN.

Mr. GEST. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to Mrs. Loanda Sherman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Loanda Sherman, widow of Urial Sherman, who was a private in Company A, of the One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LANE) is as follows:

The committee beg leave to report that they have considered this case and adopt the Senate report herein as their report, and recommend that this bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 1253, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to Mrs. Loanda Sherman, have examined the same, and report:

Claimant is the widow of Urial Sherman, who enlisted as a private in Company A, One hundred and eighteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, August 15, 1862, and was transferred to Veteran Reserve Corps August 31, 1864, and mustered out of the service September 2, 1865.

Claim was rejected December 28, 1887, on the ground that the cause of the soldier's death, pneumonia, was not due to the rheumatism or chronic diarrhea of service origin; neither claimed nor shown to have been otherwise chargeable to his military service.

The testimony in the case is as follows: In her affidavit, filed February 20, 1886, claimant states that she is unable to furnish the testimony of her family physician, showing the continuance of her late husband's disabilities each year since he returned from the Army, for the reason that he was disgusted with treatment while in the service, and consequently had no medical treatment until the time Dr. Ferris attended him, whose affidavit is already on file.

The records of the War Department show the late soldier treated for hemorrhoids, chronic rheumatism, and lumbago while in the service.

In affidavit filed August 29, 1885, Henry M. Fortney, of New Sharon, Iowa, testifies that the soldier contracted chronic diarrhea in the service, disabling him for military duty.

In affidavit filed August 29, 1885, John Wright, of Blandinsville, Ill., testifies that the soldier was a sound and able-bodied man prior to his enlistment into the service; that he contracted chronic diarrhea and rheumatism in the service, and continued to suffer from the said disabilities to the date of his death, in 1874.

In affidavit filed August 29, 1885, N. A. Alton, of Blandinsville, Ill., testifies that the soldier was suffering with chronic diarrhea at the date of his return from the service, and so continued to suffer to the time of his death.

In affidavit filed August 29, 1885, George W. Conkey, of Fountain Green, Ill., testifies that the soldier was a perfectly sound man at the date of his enlistment into the service, and that he continued to suffer from chronic diarrhea and general debility from the time of his return from the service to April, 1874, the date of his death.

In affidavit filed August 29, 1885, Dr. Leonard F. Ferris, of Fountain Green, Ill., testifies that he was well acquainted with the soldier for several years before his enlistment into the service, and he believes that said soldier was in good physical health, and if he had been otherwise affiant would have known it; that he treated him in July and August, 1868, for chronic diarrhea and general debility, and for the same cause in April, 1873; that the soldier had considerable derangement of the liver and frequent attacks of rheumatism, for which he took more or less patent medicine; that he treated the soldier again in January, 1874, for the same form of disease, and at this time he had, in addition to his former disease, a form of bronchitis; that he began treating the soldier again on April 1, 1874, for bronchitis and pneumonia, and treated him on April 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on which last-mentioned day he died; that the case was so complicated and the soldier's general disability was such that he could not be relieved.

In affidavit filed May 9, 1886, Dr. Ferris testifies that at the time of the soldier's last sickness his system was much worn out by diarrhea and rheumatic attacks from which he had been suffering, and that for a considerable time before his last attack he had been having a form of bronchitis, and that the soldier took cold, which brought on pneumonia, which, owing to his weak condition, resulted in death; that the soldier's health had become so impaired by chronic diarrhea and rheumatism, and his vitality so reduced, that the final attack of disabilities mentioned proved fatal.

In affidavit filed November 3, 1887, Dr. Ferris testifies substantially as above.

It is shown by the evidence in the case that the late soldier contracted chronic diarrhea and rheumatism in the service, and continued to suffer from the said disabilities to the date of his death. His case was also complicated with bronchitis and pneumonia, believed by the physician who attended him during his illness to have been superinduced by a debilitated condition of his physical system, consequent upon continued attacks of chronic diarrhea and rheumatism.

The cause of rejection is not warranted by the facts in the claim, and the case should have been allowed under the general pension laws, in accordance with the recommendation of the examiner who submitted it for admission.

The evidence is sufficient to have granted the soldier a pension on account of chronic diarrhea and rheumatism from the date of his discharge from the service to the time of his death, had he applied. It is nowhere shown that the claimant's death was caused by pneumonia alone, but all the proof is to the effect that he died from a complication of diseases, among which was chronic diarrhea and rheumatism.

The claim seems to be a meritorious one in every respect, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JANE ANN BURNS.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3897) for the relief of the widow of Col. M. W. Burns.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jane Ann Burns, widow of Michael W. Burns, late lieutenant-colonel Seventy-third Regiment New York Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act (subject to all other limitations and provisions of the pension laws), the same to be in lieu of all other pension paid him.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) is as follows:

The claimant herein, Jane Ann Burns, is the widow of Lieut. Col. Michael W. Burns, of Seventy-third New York Volunteers, whose death from disabilities incurred in the service occurred December 7, 1883. Previous to his death, in 1880, he filed declaration for pension, alleging gunshot wound in left breast, August 27, 1862, at the battle of Kettle Run, Va. It was a contusion, and caused him great trouble and pain, and was the cause of constant suffering until he died, as above stated. The claim was allowed in favor of the widow for gunshot wound and resulting heart and kidney disease, and the rate was fixed at $20 per month.

The bill under consideration asks that the pension of claimant be increased to $50 per month, on the ground of long and faithful and efficient services of the dead soldier and the needy condition of the claimant.

His army services were marked by great energy, and he was always found in the front ranks leading and encouraging his men on to victory. The committee deem it unnecessary to go into details in regard to Colonel Burns's military career while serving his country in the late war.

The following letter addressed to the chairman of this committee will show the value of his services:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., June 18, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: Understanding that a bill is before your committee to increase the pension of the widow of General Michael Burns, deceased, I have the honor to state that this officer entered the Army as a subordinate in the Second Fire Zouaves, New York, in April or May, 1861, which regiment was the fourth raised by me, forming part of the Excelsior Brigade. He continued to serve under my command in the Second Division of the Third Army Corps, and afterward in the Third Army Corps until the last campaign, when he served under Hancock in the Second Corps until the close of the war. He was an officer of great merit and distinction, rising almost from the ranks to the grade of colonel and brevet brigadier-general. Each promotion was given him for meritorious and gallant conduct in battle.

"Beloved and appreciated by his regiment and the troops of the division and corps in which he served, his memory is warmly cherished by his comrades and by a host of personal friends in New York, to whom he was well known, and all of them, comrades and friends, deeply sympathize with his widow in her bereavement. General Burns was a generous, open-handed soldier, earning his own living in civil life after the war, and refused to ask for a pension, although deserving it for the severe disabilities from which he suffered and which prematurely shortened his life by reason of exposure and pulmonary affection contracted in service.

"Deprived of her only support in consequence of the death of her husband, caused by disease contracted in the service, the small addition of $30 a month to her pension now asked for is only a slight recompense and recognition of the gallant services rendered by General Burns. General Burns left no estate, and his widow is solely dependent on her pension for support.

"Very respectfully,

"D. E. SICKLES,
"Major-General, United States Army (retired).

"Col. C. C. MATSON,
"Chairman Invalid Pension Committee."

In view of Colonel Burns's valuable services and the further fact that his widow, by his death, is left without adequate means of support, the committee believe the relief asked for in the bill ought to be granted. We therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I move to amend this by bill striking out, in lines 8 and 9, the words "subject to all other limitations and provisions of the pension laws," which seem to be surplusage; and also to amend at the end of the bill by inserting "her" instead of "him," which is a typographical error.

Mr. MACDONALD. In regard to the first amendment proposed by the gentleman, I suggest it may operate against his bill. In one case this session I had occasion to have those words inserted. If it should be necessary under the bill to ask for an increase the pensioner would not get it unless words of this kind were in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Very well; I withdraw the first amendment, and ask a vote on the amendment to strike out "him" and insert "her."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask that this bill go over to be considered with others of similar character on the evening of July 12.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will take that course. The Chair hears none.

CARRIE V. MILLER.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I call up the bill (S. 3021) granting a pension to Carrie V. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carrie V. Miller, a volunteer nurse in the late war, and pay her at the rate of $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

Your committee adopt the report of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 1466, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

Among the testimonials which accompany the petition in support of the bill granting a pension to Mrs. Carrie V. Miller, as a volunteer nurse during the late civil war, is the following from the eminent physician, Dr. D. W. Bliss, dated May 2, 1884:

"I recall with great pleasure the efficient and most valuable service performed by Mrs. C. V. Miller as a volunteer hospital nurse in the Department of Washington during the late war. I am sure much suffering was prevented and many lives saved by her timely and judicious personal attention. She spent her time and money without stint, and deserves special consideration for the sacrifices she made in expressing and sustaining a vigorous Union sentiment. This was the more noticeable from the fact that she was a Virginian by birth and education, and the only member of her family who cultivated Union sentiments.

"Very respectfully, etc.

"D. W. BLISS."

The above from Dr. Bliss explains very satisfactorily, in general terms, the character and quality of Mrs. Miller's services. But no general language can convey a distinct impression of her works of charity and beneficence. This can be gained only from narratives of individual experience, such as is furnished by Corporal Francis F. Downing, of Company F, One hundred and eighth New York Volunteers, who, under date of June 16, 1879, wrote as follows of Mrs. Miller to the late President Garfield:

"I was a corporal of the One hundred and eighth New York State Volunteers, Company F, and lost my right leg at Fredericksburgh on the 17th day of December, 1862, under Major-General Burnside. On Christmas Day I arrived at Washington, and for a period of six months lay first at Trinity Church and then at St. Elizabeth's Hospital. Typhoid fever set in when I was exhausted by loss of blood and exposure, and my life was despaired of by the doctors. But this good woman nursed me back to strength and life.

"It was her money which brought my wife from Rochester, N. Y., to my bedside and maintained her during three weeks of waiting for the crisis in my fever, and then at her own expense returned her to Rochester, besides giving her $36 in cash. Mine was not an exceptional case by any means, but this noble lady, who was simply a volunteer nurse, spent her time and her fortune in the care of the wounded soldiers, furnishing at her own expense wines and delicacies not otherwise to be procured. It is my earnest wish that you will assist this good woman, to whom I owe my life. I am not alone in wishing her well, and many names should sign this letter instead of mine alone, but that I know not where my comrades are; some are dead; all are scattered.

"Yours, respectfully,

"FRANCIS F. DOWNING."

In addition to the above, and other evidence not quoted, General Augur, retired, called on the chairman of the committee and corroborated the statements made as to the value and efficiency of Mrs. Miller's services as voluntary nurse during the war, and of her contributions to the comfort of invalid soldiers, and stated that the same occurred within his observation and official knowledge.

A case so clear and meritorious as this needs only to be dealt with on the basis of justice; and it is not to excite sympathy, but merely to state truth, that the committee add that ill health and reverses have brought the beneficiary under the bill to great need.

The committee, cordially approving the bill, recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH RIDDLE.

Mr. JOSEPH. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 9732) granting a pension to Sarah Riddle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Riddle, mother of James H. Riddle, late a private of Company J, First Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) is as follows:

It appears from the evidence on file in this case in the Pension Bureau that the husband of claimant, James M. Riddle, was enrolled as a private of Company E, of the Fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, on the 12th day of October, 1861, and died in service on the 25th day of October, 1863; that on account of the death of said soldier claimant's name was placed on the pension-roll, and remained there until the 29th day of April, 1865, when it was stricken off because of her marriage with William Owen. This union proved to be quite an unfortunate one for claimant, as her husband, who was a trifling, worthless fellow, soon deserted her, leaving her in destitute circumstances, with five helpless children to support.

She applied for and obtained a decree of divorce, which restored her to the name of her first husband (Riddle), and she now asks to be placed on the pension-roll as dependent mother of James H. Riddle. It is shown by the records of the War Department that claimant's son was enrolled and mustered into the United States service as a private of Company J, First Regiment Kentucky Cavalry, August 20, 1861, at Cumberland County, Kentucky, to serve three years; was taken prisoner at Philadelphia, Tenn., October 20, 1863; died October 29, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga., while a prisoner of war.

She, as the mother of the above-named soldier, filed application for pension on the 12th day of September, 1883, and alleged in her declaration that her son died of scurvy, in Andersonville prison, Georgia. Claimant can not state date of death.

Notwithstanding the strong proof hereinafter quoted in support of the case, the claim was, by the Commissioner of Pensions, rejected upon the following grounds, to wit: That there is no period for which pension could be allowed claimant, she having remarried, as shown by her statement, April 29, 1865, and failed to file her claim for pension until after June 30, 1880.

In support of this allegation, claimant filed the affidavit of Charles W. Simpson, Cumberland County, Kentucky, who states that he saw James H. Riddle while he was dead, and saw him buried on or about the 20th December, 1862. Affiant was a member of the First Kentucky Cavalry.

Also, the affidavit of Isaac Garner, which is on file, states that he saw James H. Riddle when he was dead, and saw him buried on or about the 20th of December, 1862.

J. C. Riddle, of Cumberland County, Kentucky, late comrade of claimant's son, states that he was a private in Company J, First Kentucky Cavalry; was acquainted with James H. Riddle in said company; that James H. Riddle was a son of J. M. and Sarah Riddle; that on or about the — day of April, 1863, he was captured and paroled and went back to his company and was sent to his home, and when he started to his home in Cumberland County, Kentucky, James H. Riddle give to him $20, and told him to give it to his mother, which he did, and that the said son, James H. Riddle, contributed to his mother's support prior to said time by working on a little farm.

Ruth J. Johnson, of Clinton County, Kentucky, states that she was personally acquainted with Sarah Riddle and also her son James H. Riddle, and prior to and at the time he enlisted in the United States service he contributed to his mother's support.

J. S. Johnson, of Cumberland County, Kentucky, states that he was acquainted with Sarah Riddle and her son James H. Riddle several years before he enlisted in the service, and that said James H. Riddle, to his (affiant's) own knowledge contributed to his mother's support prior to his enlistment in the service by working on a small farm then in the possession of the mother's husband.

The committee find that applicant was the mother of deceased; that her son was an unmarried man, as stated in her application; and that she was dependent on him for support.

In view of which your committee feel that the case appeals strongly to the generosity of Congress, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM JACK.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I call up the bill (H. R. 2776) granting a pension to William Jack.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Jack, late a private in the Seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) is as follows:

This soldier was granted a pension of $8 per month, commencing May 12, 1871, for chronic rheumatism, which was afterwards increased to $12 per month, commencing May 28, 1877. Afterwards, on the 29th day of November, 1879, on complaint that his disability was not contracted in the military service of the United States, he was dropped from the roll of pensioners.

A great deal of testimony has been taken and filed in the Pension Office in support of the original application, in support of the complaint upon which he was dropped from the rolls, and in support of an application to restore him to the rolls, which was rejected.

From this evidence it appears that William Jack enlisted on the 12th day of November, 1861, in Company H, Seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged therefrom on the 21st day of November, 1862, on surgeon's certificate of disability. The surgeon's certificate describes the disability as follows:

"Laxity and weakness of the ligamentous tissues surrounding the ankle-joints, rendering him unable to march any distance."

The soldier claimed, and in support of his original application satisfied the Pension Office, that this condition, which has grown worse ever since his discharge, together with a similar affection of the hands, was caused by rheumatism contracted in the line of his duty as a soldier, near Falls Church, Va., about the 5th day of October, 1862.

Three different examining surgeons reported in the case—Dr. Charles L. Wilson, February 2, 1871; Dr. R. W. Enon, September 4, 1873; and Dr. A. B. Frame, September 6, 1875, and May 28, 1877—and all agreed that the disability resulted from rheumatism, and their opinions were corroborated by the testimony of neighbors of the soldier, who had known him from childhood, showing that he never had rheumatism prior to his enlistment, but suffered with it continuously from the time of his return from the Army. Pending the proceeding to drop him from the rolls a special examiner took the testimony of eighteen witnesses, among whom were a number of those who had before testified in support of the soldier's claim, and notwithstanding they had before testified that he had been afflicted with rheumatism from the time of his return from the Army, and notwithstanding the instructions to the special examiner provided that he should inquire "whether he (the soldier) had rheumatism or any disability to his lower extremities," yet the question as to whether he had rheumatism was hardly referred to during the examination of these witnesses, and the fair inference is that the fact that he was so afflicted could not be successfully questioned.

The examiner, however, sought to show that the soldier's feet were deformed from birth, and the evidence taken by him undoubtedly does show that the soldier, in the language of his neighbors, was "pigeon-toed" or "reel-footed," and very awkward of movement. Yet he was accepted as a soldier, served more than a year, was in battle, and came home so disabled in his hands and feet as to be incapacitated for manual labor, and we are of opinion that the doubts which arise upon the evidence should be resolved in his favor. Jeremiah C. Woodyard, who made the complaint upon which he was dropped from the rolls, afterwards testified in support of an application to restore him to the rolls that, "upon full investigation, he is satisfied that said claimant is entitled to pension by reason of the existence of the disability alleged," and in a letter to the Commissioner of Pensions, dated May 26, 1884, said:

"He is poor and very illiterate. He could work some before he went in service, but could do nothing to amount to anything after he came out. Some shark told him to claim his feet were twisted in the service; hence I reported him. On investigation I found that he had been disabled (or at least I think so) in the service. I should have called your attention to the matter sooner, but I supposed that it was final. You will receive testimony from other parties soon. He should have applied for rheumatism and general debility."

Now, if Mr. Woodyard had investigated properly before he made his complaint he would have learned that the soldier did apply on the ground that his disability was caused by rheumatism, and upon that ground the pension was granted and none other.

There is a strong affidavit on file from Dr. G. H. Carpenter, who was his family physician before and after his army service, supporting his claim for restoration, which reads as follows:

"I hereby certify that I have recently seen William Jack, late private in Company H, Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and state in addition to my former affidavit that the said claimant is now not only disabled in his feet, but also in his hands, all of which members are so distorted by rheumatism that he is unable to perform any manual labor whatever.

"I understand his pension was withdrawn by reason of a belief that an operation on his feet caused his deformity. I was in Athens at the time the operation was performed and advised him against it. The operation did no good, but was not the cause of his deformity. In proof of this is the accompanying deformity of his hands, which has gradually increased since his discharge. The operation spoken of was, to the best of my recollection, about two years after his discharge from the service. He had no rheumatism prior to enlistment, and no hereditary predisposition thereto. I was family physician for some years prior and subsequent to his enlistment, and have no knowledge of there being rheumatism in the family.

"I regard the case of William Jack a meritorious one, and his rheumatism was undoubtedly contracted in the service. Instead of his pension being withdrawn, it should, in my judgment, have been largely increased. I further state I have no interest in the prosecution of his pension claim. My post-office is Cleveland, Ohio.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS STRODDER.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8087) for the relief of Thomas Strodder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to place the name of Thomas Strodder, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment United States Colored Volunteers, on the pension-rolls, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) is as follows:

The claimant, Thomas Strodder, enlisted September 2, 1864, in Company K, Fourth United States Colored Troops, and was discharged September 5, 1865, on muster-out of his regiment. He claimed a pension on the ground of gunshot wound in left leg and right shoulder and saber wound of left arm. His claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that he did not receive the wounds in the service.

There is undoubtedly some conflict in the testimony, but much of it arises from the hearsay character of some of it from different people not giving the same literal account of the same transaction, and from mere negative testimony opposed to positive statements.

Witness after witness testifies to the reception of the wounds by the claimant, some as eye-witnesses serving with him at the time, others as observers of his condition immediately afterward, others as dressing the wounds in his tent, and others still as attending him in Detroit after his discharge, during a period of illness and enfeeblement, arising from his injuries, of several months' duration. For some reason the special examiner refers to most of these witnesses as of doubtful character and their testimony as "rambling," "confused," etc. The last statement is not sustained by the depositions on file, for as a rule they are clear accounts of the facts testified to.

There may be uncertainty as to a date, a minute or a second, or as to whether a wound was in the foot or ankle, or on the left or right side, uncertainties as to matters which no person used to legal proceedings would give any weight to, because, after a long lapse of time, as every one knows, and in a matter not of personal interest, witnesses are apt to be uncertain. So true is this that absolute agreement as to details is regarded as an indication of a manufactured story.

As to the credibility of the witnesses, those who are assailed are assailed by unsworn testimony—mere expressions of opinion, without a showing of the means of knowledge of the persons making them. As an example, certain witnesses in Windsor, Ontario, are reported untrustworthy because the chief of police of Windsor says that they are, and that they have gone into the employ of a sleeping-car company on the cars. As every one knows, these companies are particular as to the integrity of their employés and require testimonials from responsible persons before employing them. Strodder's own statement is very straightforward.

He was examined by the examiner personally, and his story bears the intrinsic marks of truth. He is a colored man, uneducated, and not over-bright; his witnesses are men of his own color, laborers, whitewashers, boarding-house keepers, and other people in an humble station. There is only one way to ascertain the truth, namely, to weigh the inherent worth of the statements obtained by the special examiner against his opinion as to their credibility. Some of the people he believes untruthful are known to the member making this report to be truthful.

Strodder is very much incapacitated by his wounds. He is in advanced age and has been trying for nearly ten years to secure relief.

We recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move to amend the bill by inserting before the word "fourth," in line 5, the words "One hundred and," so as to read "One hundred and fourth Regiment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA M. ARNOLD.

Mr. ADAMS. I call up the bill (H. R. 8075) granting a pension to Anna M. Arnold, widow of John Arnold.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place upon the pension-rolls the name of Anna M. Arnold, widow of John Arnold, late of Company C, Forty-first New York Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. LANE) is as follows:

The committee beg leave to report that they have considered this case, and find that the soldier, John Arnold, husband of the claimant, enlisted June 6, 1861, in Company C, Forty-first Illinois Volunteers, and received a shell wound in action, which resulted in amputation of the right arm, for which he was pensioned. The stump of the right arm never healed, causing irritation and necrosis of the bone, and ultimately convulsions, which caused his death December 2, 1886.

The claim of the widow for a pension was rejected on the ground that the soldier's death from convulsions was not the result of amputation of the right arm, for which he was pensioned, and that his death was not due to his military service.

The testimony in this case shows that the soldier was sound physically and free from convulsions prior to his enlistment, and that it was not a hereditary disease in his family. The stump was a short one, the dressing ragged, as the arm was torn away by a shell, and resulted in inflammation of the bone, necrosis of bone, and convulsions, and then death.

The soldier left the claimant, his widow, and five children under sixteen years of age, and left nothing to support them when the pension he drew was stopped at his death.

The committee think that a liberal consideration of the testimony warrants the conclusion that the soldier's death was traceable to his army service, and therefore recommend that this bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMILY J. STANNARD.

Mr. GROUT. I desire to call up the bill (S. 2657) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Stannard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily J. Stannard, widow of the late George J. Stannard, brevet major-general of volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month, from and after the passage of this act, instead of the pension she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

A similar bill, granting a pension of $75 per month to Mrs. General Stannard, has been favorably reported by this committee, and is now awaiting the action of the House.

Believing the case to be eminently meritorious, the bill is herewith returned, with the recommendation that it pass; amended, however, by striking out the word "one," in line 5, and the word "hundred," in line 6, and inserting therein instead the words "seventy-five."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I believe this bill is of the same class as those which have been passed over.

Mr. GROUT. I think if the gentleman will examine the bill he will see that it is not of the same class. The report which has been read is the report on the Senate bill. The report upon the House bill states the circumstances more fully.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is one of those cases where an increase of pension is proposed.

Mr. GROUT. But there are special grounds for the increase asked in this case. This application is based upon the invalidism of Mrs. Stannard, who is paralyzed, and can neither feed nor dress herself. She has also an invalid daughter. In the report upon the House bill there is a letter which more fully explains the grounds on which it is proposed to allow this increase.

This is not the usual case of pensioning a widow who is in ordinary health; the special circumstances in this case are that this widow, besides being entirely destitute, is in a helpless condition physically, and has also an invalid daughter.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I happen to remember the case of General Paul, who was shot in such a way as to cause blindness during the remainder of his life, and who for a period of twenty years was a great sufferer. The bill to pension his widow is now on the Calendar, but it goes over.

Mr. GROUT. In that case is the widow disabled?

Mr. MCMILLIN. She is not.

Mr. GROUT. But this widow is disabled.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We do not pension widows on the ground of their disability, but on account of their relation to the soldier who may have been disabled or killed.

Mr. GROUT. Yes; and we take their children and pension them when they are disabled. Here is a daughter; the pension is not in her name, but is granted to the mother, covering the whole ground of disability, the daughter being a helpless invalid as well as the mother. A reputable surgeon of the city of Burlington certifies the mother can neither feed nor dress herself.

The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions reported in this case favorably a pension for $75 a month, the only one he will consent to. The special grounds which are stated are taken as entirely sufficient to justify the exception. The gentleman, I hope, will see that it need not go over on that account.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us hear the House report read.

Mr. GROUT. The Senate report was read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You stated there were additional facts.

Mr. GROUT. Only what I have stated as in the House report.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understood you to state there were additional facts.

Mr. GROUT. I have stated them from the report of the House Committee. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have made a report on both the Senate and House bills. General Stannard was one of the most distinguished officers of the war. His widow is incurably paralyzed, and the daughter is a permanent and incurable invalid. On that state of facts an increase of $75 a month was recommended. One or more of the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions who have heretofore voted against increase of pension voted for this one, saying it was an unusual and extraordinary case. The report is a long one.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the wish of the committee?

Mr. GROUT. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the House vote on it.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the House bill 9543 will be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MRS. MINERVA EAGLE.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, the bill (H. R. 8988) to increase the pension of Mrs. Minerva Eagle was called up for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to increase the pension to $50 per month of Mrs. Minerva Eagle, widow of Commodore Henry Eagle, who was an officer of the Navy of the United States from 1818 to 1882.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8988) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Minerva Eagle, have considered the same and submit the following report:

The record shows that Henry Eagle, the late husband of the applicant, was appointed a midshipman in the Navy January 1, 1818; served in succession on the Independence, the Macedonian, Washington, and Erie until promoted to lieutenant, to rank from March 3, 1827; then served on the Natchez, the receiving ship at New York; the Erie, at the naval rendezvous, New York; and on the Yorktown until commissioned commander, to rank from June 4, 1844. Performed land duty until October, 1847, when ordered to the home squadron. During the period of eight months he was military and civil governor of Frontera, Tobasco, Mexico; also collector of the port.

In September, 1849, he was ordered to special duty under the Bureau of Construction, and remained there until December, 1852. He then was ordered to command the Princeton, and on September 14, 1855, was promoted to captain. April 25, 1861, mail and telegraph communication being interrupted between Washington, D. C., and New York, he volunteered to the commandant navy-yard, New York, to carry dispatches to the Navy Department; on arrival at the Department he volunteered for the command of the gunboat Monticello (late Star), and was ordered to command that vessel.

May 19, 1861, he was engaged in the attack on Sewell's Point Battery, Virginia; May 31, 1861, he was ordered to command the Santee; August 4, 1862, he was promoted to commodore from July 16, 1862; and on January 1, 1863, was placed on the retired list; April 21, 1863, ordered to special duty at Washington, D. C.; October 7, 1865, detached and ordered as inspector of the eighth light-house district; July 21, 1866, he was detached and placed on sick leave. He died at New York on the 26th of November, 1882.

His widow is pensioned at $8 per month under the Mexican pension act of January 29, 1887. She was married to the officer in August, 1833, and is now in her seventy-second year.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CHEADLE. Let it go over to be considered July 12, under the same conditions as the bills already postponed to that date.

Mr. WHEELER. I am willing to accept $30 a month, rather than let it go over, as it can not be considered then, there being twenty cases already postponed to that time.

Mr. CHEADLE. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman consents to let it go through at $30 a month.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RALPH P. WILBORN.

On motion of Mr. OSBORNE, by unanimous consent, the committee took up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9733) granting a pension to Ralph P. Wilborn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ralph P. Wilborn, late a private in Company F, Twenty-first Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to dispense with the reading of the report.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9733) granting a pension to Ralph P. Wilborn, having had the same under consideration, make the following report:

It appears from the records of the War Department that claimant was enrolled and mustered into the United States service at Camp Andy Johnson, September 30, 1861, as private of Company F, Second Regiment Kentucky Infantry, to serve three years, and was mustered out with company at Victoria, Tex., December 9, 1865.

He filed an application for pension on the 24th day of March, 1880, and alleged in his declaration that while he was in the service and at home on furlough in the State of Kentucky on or about the 15th day of February, 1864, he was wounded by gunshot by guerrillas, and further stated that said parties attempted to rob and murder him by shooting at and wounding him in the left arm 2 inches below the shoulder-joint.

Notwithstanding the strong proof hereinafter stated in support of the case, the claim was rejected by the Pension Office upon the following grounds, to wit:

"The claimant was not in the line of duty when he received the gunshot wound."

In support of the said allegation the claimant, Ralph P. Wilborn, makes oath and says that on or about February 15, 1864, while at home on furlough, in the State of Kentucky, he received a gunshot wound at the hands of a party of guerrillas, who attempted to rob and murder him by shooting him in the left arm 2 inches below the shoulder-joint; that he was in line of duty and under the charge of Capt. John Evans when he received said wound, and that he is only able to work about half of his time.

He also states in an affidavit, filed September 14, 1883, that there was no person at his house at the time said guerrillas came there except his family, consisting of his wife and three small children.

John R. and Nancy Lyons, of Barren County, Kentucky, state on their oath as follows: That they are well acquainted with Ralph P. Wilborn, and have been for the last forty years past, and know that he enlisted as a private in Company F, Twenty-first Regiment Kentucky Infantry, and that while in the service of the United States as a soldier, in February, 1864, while he was at his home in Barren County, Kentucky, he received a gunshot wound. The affiant, Nancy Lyons, says that on or about February 15, 1864, at night, the applicant came to her father's, Joseph Lyon's, house, Barren County, Kentucky, and he had a fresh wound of left arm; seemed to have been done by gun or pistol shot. Applicant told this affiant and her father's family at the time that a squad of guerrillas had come to his house and arrested him, and as they started out of his house he broke loose from them and ran; while running they fired at him, wounding him in four places, but none of the wounds were of a serious nature, except the wound of the left arm.

James Briggs and A. C. Jones, of Barren County, Kentucky, state on oath as follows:

That they were at applicant's house, in Barren County, Kentucky, in February, 1864; applicant was then suffering with gunshot wound of left arm. The applicant and his family told them at the time that the applicant had been arrested the day before by some guerrillas, and, in making his escape from them, he was wounded in his left arm.

They also state in their affidavit that they know the above statement to be true and correct, by reason of their acquaintance with the applicant, by reason of living close neighbors to the applicant prior to and subsequent to the late war, and by being members of the same company and regiment, and by being at their homes, in Barren County, Kentucky, on furlough at the time applicant was wounded as aforesaid.

Hon. D. L. Hawkins, Assistant Secretary of the Interior Department, to whom this claim was appealed after being rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions, and after affirming the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions, closes up his opinion by using the following language, to wit:

"If the applicant can show to the satisfaction of Congress that the wound was received at the time alleged, without any fault or improper conduct on his part, and because of his connection with the service, the claim would seem to be one for favorable legislative action."

The committee have carefully considered all the evidence in the case, and find that the soldier re-enlisted as veteran volunteer January 3, 1864, and that he was granted thirty days' veteran furlough, and while at home on said furlough was wounded by a band of guerrillas, from no fault or negligence on his part.

Your committee therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABEL G. RANKIN.

Mr. McKINNEY. I ask consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to Abel G. Rankin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abel G. Rankin, late of Company F, Tenth Maine Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to Abel G. Rankin, having considered the same, beg leave to adopt the report of the Senate committee as its own, which is as follows:

"This claimant is now receiving a pension of $50 a month for total and permanent disability, requiring the constant aid and attendance of another person, under the act of June 18, 1874. The act of June 16, 1880, provided that all persons then on the rolls at $50 a month should thereafter receive $72 a month instead; but it made no provision for such pensioners as might subsequently to its passage become disabled to the same degree.

"Rankin's case in such a one. He became totally disabled since the passage of the said act, and consequently receives only $50 for the same disability that would entitle him to $72 if it had reached the total and permanent degree previous to its passage.

"Abel G. Rankin enlisted May 3, 1861, as a private in Company F, Tenth Maine Volunteers, and served until July 20, 1866, being mustered out as brevet major, having received his commission to that rank from President Johnson, in recognition of his gallant and meritorious services, and having won his way from a private up, through all the intermediate ranks, on his own merit. He served in all over five years and three months. He is now paralyzed and unable to help himself at all. His physician, Dr. J. F. Robinson, testifies that 'he has been in an entirely helpless condition since January, 1886, and I have no reason to believe that he can recover.'

"Several cases involving the same principle have been reported favorably by this committee during this session, and a general bill correcting the discrepancy in the present law has passed the Senate and is now before the House.

"The condition of Mr. Rankin is such that early action appears to be necessary, as his early decease is apprehended."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARTHA J. RUSHFORD.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 9540) granting a pension to Martha J. Rushford, widow of John Rushford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the restrictions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha J. Rushford, widow of John Rushford, late of Company F, Sixteenth Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The claimant, Martha J. Rushford, was the wife of John Rushford at the time he was mustered out of the service, May 13, 1865. The soldier was a private in Company F, Sixteenth Wisconsin Volunteers, in the late war, having enlisted December 28, 1863. The soldier drew a pension at the time of his death for asthma contracted while in the Army. He died January 29, 1881. Claimant filed application March 31, 1881.

It appears that the deceased had the measles while in the Army and was under treatment therefor, which greatly injured his health; that a discharge on that account was tendered him, which he refused to accept, and remained in the service to the close of the war. His family physician testifies that after his discharge his health was very poor; that he frequently treated him for bronchial difficulties and for catarrh of the stomach and bowels and general impairment of the system.

Dr. Clark Gapen, of Madison, Wis., the State member of board of examining surgeons, after examination of the soldier, states in a letter:

"They, the board, find him dying of cancer of neck, but that the asthmatic attack claimed in his application was abundantly vouched for by the family and townspeople."

Dr. John A. Rice testifies he visited the deceased a short time before his death. He found him very low and weak "from the combined effects of tuberculosis of the lungs and from cancer of the face, and from which troubles he thought said soldier would die."

Dr. D. O. Bennett examined him about one year previous to his death and found him suffering from a cancer, at which time he understood from the patient that his left lung was diseased. He noticed he had a bad cough at the time, but made no examination of his lungs.

The soldier's pension was rejected on the ground that the soldier died from a cancer not contracted in the service.

It is apparent that the diseased condition of the soldier as he came from the army promoted, if it did not wholly give rise to, the cancer, and that the diseased lungs and asthma contributed largely to his death. The claimant is poor and was left with a large family of children, and it is quite apparent if the deceased had not entered the military service his chances to live till the present day were as good as other healthy men.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HANNAH BABB HUTCHINS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. DOCKERY, the Chairman) was the bill (H. R. 5098) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a Senate bill, No. 1540, of the same title, which the Clerk will report, if there be no objection, in lieu of the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah Babb Hutchins, a volunteer nurse in the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension during life of $25 per month, in lieu of the one now received by her.

The report on the House bill (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

Mrs. Hutchens is now drawing a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and asks by this bill to have it increased to $25. The records show that Mrs. Hutchens entered the service as a nurse almost at the beginning of the war, and continued her valuable services until July 31, 1865. It also appears that while acting as nurse, at the Harewood Hospital, in Washington, she received a severe fall, thereby fracturing her ribs and injuring herself otherwise severely, from which injury she has never recovered.

During her long service as a nurse she spent money freely to relieve the necessities of the soldiers in the hospitals. In this way, according to the testimony of many distinguished persons connected with the hospital service, she spent more money than she received from the Government.

Mrs. Hutchens is now about seventy-eight years of age, in a condition of absolute destitution and ill-health. She is indorsed by physicians, by the Army Nurse Association, and by prominent citizens of the State of Maine.

That her services were exceptional and that she incurred a very severe disability in the service is conceded. She can not, in the very nature of things, live many years, and as there are precedents for granting to nurses the rate of pension asked for in this bill there seems to be no good reason why this faithful and distinguished nurse should not receive the increase of pension asked for.

There being no objection, the Senate bill was considered, an amendment striking out the words "during life," in the seventh line, adopted, and the bill as amended laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill H. R. 5098 was ordered to be reported to the House to be laid on the table.

JEPTHA A. JONES.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (S. 1173) increasing the pension of Jeptha A. Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jeptha A. Jones, late lieutenant and captain in the Eighty-fourth and One hundred and thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, and increase the pension paid to him to $72 per month.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

This committee adopts the Senate report, and recommends the passage of the bill:

"The claimant, Jeptha A. Jones, while serving as lieutenant in Company D, Eighty-fourth New York Volunteers, was severely wounded in the head at the battle of Bull Run. The wound affected his mind, and on account of this he was discharged; after remaining out of service for about a year, however, he re-enlisted as captain of Company G, One hundred and thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, and remained with his regiment until November, 1863, when his old wound compelled him to resign his commission.

"On account of his injuries he was, about a year ago, stricken with partial paralysis and his mind and speech have become affected so that there is no hope of his recovery. There is no doubt about his being totally and permanently disabled. He is now drawing a pension of $50 a month for total helplessness, under the act of June 18, 1874. By the act of June 16, 1880, all pensioners who were then on the rolls at $50 receive $72 a month; but those that have since become totally disabled receive but $50 a month. Thus, by a discrepancy in the law, he receives only $50, while others who have the same degree of disability are receiving $72. There is a general bill (S. 1000) which has passed the Senate whose object it is to remedy this defect.

"Your committee, in view of the exceptional urgency of this case, recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DANIEL K. HARRIS.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 9920) granting a pension to Daniel K. Harris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel K. Harris, late a member of Company I, Fifty-eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The claimant herein was enrolled on the 23d day of September, 1864, in Company I, Fifty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 25th day of June, 1865. In application for pension filed May 27, 1880, he alleges that while on the march from Richmond, Va., to Alexandria, Va., on or about the 18th of May, 1865, by reason of the long marches and heavy loads he was compelled to carry, he contracted piles, which grew worse on his going into camp at Washington, D. C.; that the piles as above stated continued to affect him badly until discharged and have seriously affected him ever since. He was not treated in hospital for the reason that they were on the march, and he was, four weeks later, discharged. The claim was approved for rejection January 4, 1883, on the ground of—

"No record or medical evidence of the existence of piles in service or at date of discharge, and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence of origin in service and in line of duty."

Dr. William A. Bailey, examining surgeon, says:

"I find Daniel K. Harris is in good health except hemorrhoidal tumors that sometimes bleed; pain in bowels and thin in flesh. Judging from his present condition and from the evidence before me, it is my belief that the said disability did originate in the service aforesaid in the line of duty. In my opinion the said Daniel K. Harris is one-fourth of total incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from the cause above stated."

The evidence produced substantiates the fact that the claimant was sound prior to and at the time of enlistment, and free from piles.

Thomas S. Andrews testifies that he has been a near neighbor of claimant's since 1852; has lived with and worked for him, and says from his own knowledge that when claimant was enrolled in the service he was a sound, hearty man, and free from any disease whatever, and that he was and always has been free from piles.

James A. English, James Green, and Charles W. Morgan testify substantially as above.

The claimant testifies that he can not get the affidavit of the surgeon or assistant surgeon of his regiment, for the reason that he was not treated by them for the piles. Also, that his company officers did not know what was the matter with him, and that he himself did not know the full nature of his disease until immediately after his return home, when he was examined by his family physician, Dr. J. D. Gray, who treated him from discharge, off and on, for said disease, until his death in 1870.

James Green and Charles W. Morgan, who were members of the same company, testify that while claimant was in service and in line of duty, on or about May 18, 1865, on the march from Richmond, Va., to Washington, he contracted piles. They also testify that they have seen claimant every few days since his discharge, and know that said piles have continued to affect said claimant from the time he contracted same to the present time, greatly incapacitating him from following manual labor for a living.

Thomas A. Anders and James Green also testify as to the continuance of said disability up to the present time.

Dr. George R. Reynolds treated claimant for piles from 1871 to 1876. He says he remembers this case quite well aside from the data of his books, and knows that from his first treatment, in 1871 until the last two or three years, there has been a time nearly every year when claimant would have serious trouble, lasting from one to three or four weeks, with piles. He can not state how much he has been continuously incapacitated for manual labor, but he does know that claimant has been wholly unable to work at times for a number of years because of piles.

After a careful consideration of the case, the committee are of the opinion that the evidence establishes the fact—

1. That claimant was sound and free from piles prior to and at the time of enrollment.

2. That it is substantially proven, and all the circumstances point to the fact, that claimant's disability occurred in the Army, and in line of duty, as stated.

3. That said disability had been continuous to the present time, as shown by neighbors who have seen him almost daily since discharged, and by medical evidence, except from date of discharge to 1870, when his family physician died.

The committee therefore believe this to be a meritorious case, and submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LYDIA CALHOUN.

Mr. ROMEIS. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 486) granting a restoration of pension to Lydia Calhoun.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lydia Calhoun, widow of William Calhoun, of Company I, Twelfth Michigan Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

Lydia Calhoun, or Calhoon, was pensioned November 29, 1864, as the widow of William Calhoon, who was killed at the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862, while serving as private in Company I, Twelfth Regiment of Michigan Volunteers. She continued to draw her pension until March 30, 1868, when she remarried to one Josiah H. McElfatrick, whereupon her two minor children by the soldier were placed upon the pension-roll and continued to draw pension until March 25, 1877, when the younger child became sixteen years of age.

The second marriage of Mrs. Calhoun was not a happy one. For years prior to her separation from her second husband, by reason of his neglect to support her, she was compelled to take in washing and sewing to provide for the necessaries of life. At the January (1881) term of the court of common pleas of Lucas County, Ohio, this claimant was granted a divorce from said Josiah H. McElfatrick, on the ground of neglect and adultery, the decree of said court restoring to her the name of Calhoun. Shortly after this divorce McElfatrick died.

The claimant is dependent upon her own efforts for support, and being now fifty-eight years of age, after years of hard toil, her strength is failing her.

Her good character is certified to by the mayor of Toledo, Ohio, where she resides, and many other prominent citizens, all of whom join in the request to Congress to grant her relief in her declining years.

The case seems meritorious, and Congress having granted relief in similar cases, your committee feel justified in returning the accompanying bill with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the words "restoration of" in the title of the same, also strike out the words "restore to," in line 4, and insert therein the words "place on."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEWIS DAVIS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill (H. R. 5903) for the relief of Lewis Davis, a soldier of the war of 1812, is a bill which was returned by the Senate with an amendment, in which amendment concurrence is recommended by the House committee. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill, on page 1, line 4, after the word "month," by inserting "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this will be reported to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. PERKINS. Before that motion is submitted, I would like to ask if it is the understanding that those members not recognized to-night will be recognized in their order at the next pension evening?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Chair; but if the same order is adopted, the Chair will certainly follow that order.

Mr. PERKINS. I was asking if such an order had been agreed upon to-night?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. MAISH. Recognitions are altogether in the discretion of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry pension bills with various recommendations.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 7202) granting a pension to William C. Lord;
A bill (H. R. 5490) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Sinnott;
A bill (H. R. 3764) for the relief of Mrs. Delila Whipps;
A bill (H. R. 881) granting a pension to Hiram R. Ellis;
A bill (H. R. 2176) granting a pension to Alexander Collinge;
A bill (H. R. 9911) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Hulse;
A bill (H. R. 217) granting a pension to C. T. Maphet;
A bill (H. R. 945) granting a pension to Mary Kelley;
A bill (H. R. 9732) granting a pension to Sarah Riddle;
A bill (H. R. 2776) granting a pension to William Jack;
A bill (H. R. 8076) granting a pension to Ann M. Arnold, widow of John Arnold;
A bill (H. R. 9733) granting a pension to Ralph P. Wilborn;
A bill (H. R. 9540) granting a pension to Martha J. Rushford, widow of John Rushford; and
A bill (H. R. 9920) granting a pension to Daniel K. Harris.

Amendments to bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 9731) granting a pension to William A. Humes;
A bill (H. R. 3913) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Peterson;
A bill (H. R. 965) granting a pension to George E. Wells;
A bill (H. R. 8087) for the relief of Thomas Strodder;
A bill (H. R. 8988) to increase the pension of Mrs. Minerva Eagle;
A bill (H. R. 5903) for the relief of Lewis Davis, a soldier of the war of 1812;
A bill (H. R. 9029) for the relief of Marshall Bertram; and

A bill (H. R. 486) granting a restoration of pension to Lydia Calhoun.

The titles of the last two bills were amended to conform.

BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 5098) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins; and

A bill (H. R. 9543) increasing the pension of Emily J. Stannard.

SENATE BILLS PASSED.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally ordered to a third reading; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed, namely:

A bill (S. 2274) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine K. Whittlesey;

A bill (S. 1556) granting a pension to Martin N. Kellogg;

A bill (S. 123) granting a pension to Mrs. Virginia Grier;

A bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to Mrs. Loanda Sherman;

A bill (S. 3021) granting a pension to Carrie V. Miller;

A bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to Abel G. Rankin; and

A bill (S. 1173) granting a pension to Jeptha A. Jones.

Amendments to Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to a third reading; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 2657) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Stannard; and

A bill (S. 1540) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins.

Mr. SPOONER moved to reconsider the several votes; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS POSTPONED.

Bills of the following titles, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House, were postponed to the evening session of July 12 next, under the order heretofore made:

A bill (S. 2547) for the relief of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory;

A bill (S. 2549) for the relief of Mary Isabel R. Clements;

A bill (H. R. 9963) to increase the pension of Mrs. Fannie A. Boyd, widow of Capt. O. B. Boyd;

A bill (H. R. 8142) increasing the pension of Mrs. Rochie Brien Buell;

A bill (H. R. 3897) for the relief of the widow of Lieut. Col. M. W. Burnes.

WILLIAM C. TILLY.

Mr. BUTLER. I call up the bill (H. R. 4270) granting a pension to William C. Tilly, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to inscribe on the pension-rolls the name of William C. Tilly, late a private of Company B, Fourth Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Volunteers," in the sixth line, and insert "at the rate of $8 per month from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for adjournment having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

Also, petition of members of the Presbyterian Church of French Creek, W. Va., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. G. M. THOMAS: Petition of J. H. Bower, for relief—to the Committee on Patents.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 7, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WILLIAM M. CAMPBELL, JR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 9181, entitled "An act granting a pension to William M. Campbell, jr."

This beneficiary was not enrolled in the service of the United States until August 5, 1862. Previous to that time he had been a member of the same regiment in which he was so enrolled, and was in the service of the State of Kentucky.

He alleges that in the month of February, 1862, he was vaccinated with impure virus, and in the same month contracted mumps. He claims that as a result of these troubles he has been afflicted with ulcers and other serious consequences.

It is perfectly clear that at the time these disabilities were incurred, if they were incurred, the claimant was not in the military service of the United States.

The records show that he deserted September 16, 1862, a little more than a month after he was mustered into the United States service; that he was arrested April 25, 1864, one year and seven months after his desertion: that he was restored to duty by general court-martial with loss of pay and allowance during absence—the time lost by desertion to be made good—and that he was mustered out July 16, 1865.

This enactment seems neither to have law nor meritorious equity to support it.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 6, 1888.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, the message and the accompanying bill were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HARRIET E. COOPER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 8807, entitled "An act granting a pension to Harriet E. Cooper."

The husband of this beneficiary served as a major in an Illinois regiment from September 3, 1862, to April 1, 1863, when his resignation was accepted, it having been tendered on account of business affairs.

He was pensioned for rheumatism from April, 1863, and died October 3, 1883.

It is admitted on all hands that Major Cooper drank a good deal, but the committee allege that they can not arrive at the conclusion that death was attributable to that cause.

There is some medical testimony tending to show that death was caused from rheumatism, but one physician gives it as his opinion that death resulted from rheumatism and chronic alcoholism.

The physician who last attended the soldier testifies that the cause of death was chronic alcoholism. This should be the most reliable of all the medical testimony, and, taken in connection with the conceded intemperate habits of the deceased and the fact that the brain was involved, it satisfies me that the rejection of the widow's claim by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the cause of death was mainly intemperance was correct.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 6, 1888.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, the message and the accompanying bill were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

VAN BUREN BROWN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 6431, entitled "An act for the relief of Van Buren Brown."

The beneficiary named in this bill was discharged from the Army September 11, 1865.

He filed an application for pension in the Pension Bureau May 19, 1883, alleging chronic diarrhea, rheumatism, spinal disease, the result of an injury, and deafness.

His claim was very thoroughly examined and reopened and examined again after rejection and rejected a second time.

The case is full of uncertainty and contradiction. Without discussing these features, I am entirely satisfied that a pension should not be allowed for the reason, among others, that three careful medical examinations made in 1883, 1884, and 1886, failed to disclose any pensionable disability.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 6, 1888.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, the message and the accompanying bill were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NATHANIEL D. CHASE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 367, entitled "An act granting a pension to Nathaniel D. Chase."

This beneficiary enlisted September 3, 1863. The records show that he was admitted to a hospital March 3, 1864, with a disease of a discreditable nature, and by no means connected with the military service, and that he was discharged from the Army May 20, 1864, upon a certificate of paralysis of left arm which came on suddenly February 20, 1864, and that the cause was unknown, but believed not to be incident to the service.

He filed an application for a pension in June, 1864, alleging paralysis of the left arm from causes unknown to him.

This claim was not prosecuted at that time, and the claimant re-enlisted in January, 1865, and served until September 5, 1865, without any evidence of disability appearing upon the records.

He renewed his claim in 1870, stating that he was first taken with a pain in his left arm about March 1, 1864, and that it became partially paralyzed.

It will be observed that thus far in his application he gives no explanation of the incurrence of his disability which leads to the belief that it was related to his service.

In a letter dated May 31, 1864, his captain states that he can but think that the disability of the claimant was the result of his folly and indiscretion, and that he feels it his duty to decline giving him a certificate.

In 1880 the claimant stated the cause of his disability was an injury to his arm while expelling a soldier from a railroad train at Augusta, Me., he acting as provost guard at the time.

Upon this allegation the case was reopened at the Pension Bureau.

In reply to a letter from the bureau, the captain of claimant's company stated that he had no knowledge of such an injury. The same officer, in a letter dated February 25, 1887, expresses the belief that the disability of the applicant, if any existed, was caused by the injudicious use of mercurial medicine, self-administered, for venereal disease contracted at Augusta, Me., in January, 1864, and that such was the rumor among his comrades when he was sent to the hospital.

I can not believe that an injury was sustained such as was specified by the applicant in 1880, and that nothing was said of it either in the claim made in 1864 or in 1870. In the absence of this or some other definite cause consistent with an honest claim, we are left in the face of some contrary evidence to guess that his arm was injured in the service.

The application of this beneficiary is still pending in the Pension Bureau awaiting further information.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 6, 1888.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, the message and the accompanying bill were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JULIA A. THOMAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact in the case of Julia A. Thomas, administratrix, etc., vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MCCORMICK, for one week.

To Mr. SCULL, till July 11, on account of important business.

To Mr. GLASS, for this day, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MILLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour for reports of committees.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. MILLS. The Committee on Military Affairs has been deprived for some time of the morning hour which belongs to them; and I propose to yield to them this morning.

The SPEAKER. The regular order, then, is the consideration, for one hour, of business called up by committees. The call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs, which was passed over informally on account of the absence of the chairman.

SALE OF FORT OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 671, and that it be now considered in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 761) to provide for the sale of the site at Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be considered in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better consider the bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEELE. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. COX in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of the site at Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to sell the military reservation known as Fort Omaha, near the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, and such of the buildings and improvements thereon as can not be economically removed to the new site herein provided for. In disposing of said property the Secretary of War shall cause the grounds to be platted in blocks, streets, and alleys, if in his judgment it would inure to the benefit of the Government in making sale of said site, having due reference to the requirements of the houses and buildings located on said grounds, in such cases as they may be sold with the ground. The Secretary of War shall also cause the lots, lands, and buildings to be appraised and sold at public or private sale, and not less than the appraised value, having first been offered at public sale. The expense of advertising, appraisement, survey, and sale shall be paid out of the proceeds of said sale, and the balance paid into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is authorized and shall purchase suitable grounds of not less than 320 nor more than 640 acres in extent, to be situate within a distance of ten miles of the limits of said city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, and construct thereon the necessary buildings, with appurtenances, sufficient for a ten-company military post, to be known as Fort Omaha, in accordance with estimates to be prepared by the War Department; and a sufficient sum of money, not exceeding $200,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to comply with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the title to the lands authorized to be purchased under the second section of this act shall be approved by the Attorney-General.

SEC. 3. That section 1 of this act shall be of effect when the purchase of a new site provided for in section 2 shall have been effected.

Mr. STEELE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCSHANE].

Mr. MCSHANE. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH].

Mr. MAISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. In the absence of the chairman of the committee, I desire to call up the bill (S. 186) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, etc.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, be, and the same is hereby, further amended, so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1225. The President may, upon the application of any established college, or university, within the United States having capacity to educate at the same time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, detail an officer of the Army to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof, but the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed fifty from the Army, and ten from the Navy, being a maximum of sixty, at any time, and they shall be apportioned throughout the United States, first, to those State institutions applying for such detail that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading object shall be the practical instruction of the industrial classes in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics; and after that, said details to be distributed, as nearly as may be practicable, according to population. Officers so detailed shall be governed by general rules prescribed from time to time by the President. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice by the students of any college or university under the provisions of this section, and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case, in double the value of the property, for the care and safe-keeping thereof, and for the return of the same when required."

SEC. 2. That the said section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the said act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, saving always, however, all acts and things done under the said amended section as heretofore existing.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs were read, as follows:

In line 9 of section 1, before the word "college," insert "academy."

In line 12 of the same section, after "Army," insert "or Navy."

After the word "required," in line 36 of the same section, insert the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the detail of officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy as professors in scientific schools or colleges, as now provided by act of Congress approved February 26, 1879, entitled 'An act to promote a knowledge of steam-engineering and iron-ship building among the students of scientific schools or colleges in the United States;' and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government on the terms and conditions hereinbefore provided to any college or university at which a retired officer of the Army may be assigned as provided by section 1260 of the Revised Statutes."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, this bill is in the House. I therefore move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is in the House—not in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FORD. The effect of the bill is to appropriate money.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question for the House to decide. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] moves that the committee rise.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There are other bills of our committee in the Committee of the Whole. I think we had better consider those bills before the committee rises. Here is a bill which I desire to call up.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] withdraw his motion?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The bill just read is not the only one of the committee's bills in Committee of the Whole. I have another bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw his motion?

Mr. STEELE. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the motion will be voted down.

Mr. STEELE. There is nothing to keep us from going back into Committee of the Whole immediately after this bill is disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We may have trouble in the House in doing so.

Mr. STEELE. Not at all. This hour is given to us. I hope the chairman of the committee will not press this motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have one bill which it will take but a single moment to consider.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. STEELE that the committee rise, there were—ayes 57, noes 25.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7452) for the relief of the Southern Illinois Normal University.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that this bill is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is now in session; but the bill in question is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I now renew my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. GEAR. There is a bill (H. R. 1387) for the relief of the volunteers of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry which should be taken up; it is in the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa calls up the bill which is specified, and which is in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. It is also on the Private Calendar.

The motion of Mr. STEELE that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill S. 671, had directed him to report the same to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FORT OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the reading of that bill will be now in order.

Mr. STEELE. It has been read.

The SPEAKER. Not in the House. The gentleman has the right to have it read.

The bill was again reported.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the report been read?

The SPEAKER. It has not been read, the Chair is informed.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the report. There is no limitation, as far as I can understand, upon the amount to be expended in the purchase of the site.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania be satisfied with a statement of the facts?

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better have the report read. I want to know whether there is any limitation as to the cost of the site.

The report (by Mr. LAIRD) was read, as follows:

Your committee have considered the same subject-matter in H. R. 1618, and favorably reported the same to the House prior to the passage of the Senate bill.

Your committee now recommend that Senate bill 671 be substituted for the House bill 1618, and that the House bill 1618 lie on the table.

Mr. RANDALL. That gives no information.

Mr. STEELE. The bill provides that it shall not exceed $200,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Let that part of the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

And a sufficient sum of money, not exceeding $200,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to comply with the provisions of this act.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not a limitation upon the purchase of the site at all. It is open to the construction that there may be under the operation of this bill an expenditure of $200,000 for the purchase of a site; and then we would be necessitated to break the limit as stipulated there for the erection of the buildings.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggest an amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not prepared an amendment, but there ought to be a limitation upon the cost of the site, so that there will be enough left to complete the buildings, keeping the whole appropriation within the amount specified in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that the language be used, the cost of the site and buildings not to exceed a certain sum.

Mr. RANDALL. That is already fixed in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; it is not. I ask the gentleman's attention to the language:

And a sufficient sum of money, not exceeding $200,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, etc.

Now, that is not a limitation, I think.

Mr. STEELE. Suppose that you insert an amendment providing that a certain amount of this shall be used for the purchase of a site and the remainder for the buildings.

Mr. HOLMAN. That the cost of the site and buildings included shall not exceed $200,000.

Mr. RANDALL. But I think there ought to be some estimate as to the cost of the site.

Mr. STEELE. Then let an estimate be made first with the understanding that the estimated cost of the site and of the buildings shall not exceed $200,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest an amendment of that character, that the site and buildings shall not exceed $200,000.

Mr. STEELE. I accept that.

Mr. RANDALL. But that is not sufficiently explicit. What I want to provide is that the cost of the site shall be, say, 33 per cent., and then that the remaining 66 per cent. may be used in the construction of the ten-company post, and that the total shall not exceed $200,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can accomplish his purpose by providing that not more than one-third of the appropriation may be expended for the site.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, and that the other two-thirds may be expended in the construction of barracks for a ten-company post, as I understand it is to be.

Mr. STEELE. Let me suggest that you limit the cost of the ground to a certain percentage of the total amount, and the balance to be appropriated to the construction of the buildings, which shall not exceed the remainder.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to prepare the amendment in accordance with the idea suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was read, as follows:

Provided, That not more than one-third of the said sum shall be expended in the purchase of the site, and the whole expenditure for the site and improvements shall not exceed $200,000.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. McSHANE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the bill H. R. 1618, on the same subject, will be laid on the table.

DETAILS OF OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 186 to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, etc. This bill has been read once in Committee of the Whole. If it is desired, I can explain it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in the House and no point of order has been made on it so far.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill has not been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FORD. It was not referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman makes the point of order that it must go there under the rules of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I believe every member on this floor will vote for the bill if he understands the effect of it. It has already been read. It simply provides for the detail of certain additional officers. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. STEELE. It makes no appropriation and does not make additional detail. It only fixes the status of officers now detailed. Under a bill previously passed engineers of the Navy were cut out of detail, so that it is necessary to pass this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It simply relates to the detail of officers.

Mr. KERR. I hope this bill will be considered in Committee of the Whole, because I wish to make an amendment.

Mr. STEELE. The amendment can be made in the House.

Mr. KERR. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill, but simply to make an amendment to the bill.

Mr. STEELE. You can do that in the House just as well as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KERR. If I can offer the amendment in the House, very well.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, of course, can only give the bill a very hasty examination under the circumstances, but it does not appear from such an examination that the bill makes an appropriation or requires one to be made.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. KERR. I move to strike out of the bill all that part beginning after the word "first," in line 16, and ending at the word "distributed," in line 24.

Mr. FORD. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. KERR. To let the President in the appointment of these officers use his own discretion as to where they shall go. We have an institution in my district with five hundred students, and there is a detail there.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] that if this bill leads to protracted discussion it will be withdrawn. We have but a few minutes left.

Mr. KERR. That is all I have to say. I offer the amendment and ask for its consideration. Our agricultural colleges under the provisions of their grants are required to have officers detailed there for instruction in military affairs and military tactics. That is the condition of the grant. I do not think such a provision ought to be placed in the bill.

Mr. STEELE. Let the amendment go in. There will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

After the word "first," in line 16, strike out as follows:

"To those State institutions applying for such detail that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading object shall be the practical instruction of the industrial classes in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics; and after that said details to be distributed."

Mr. RANDALL. How will the bill read as amended?

Mr. FORD. It leaves the detail in the discretion of the President.

Mr. RANDALL. I want the bill read as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

And ten from the Navy, being a maximum of sixty at any time, and they shall be apportioned throughout the United States as nearly as may be practicable according to population.

Mr. RANDALL. That proposes to take from the active-list and the active service so many naval officers and so many Army officers. It does not apply to the retired officers of the Army or the Navy.

Mr. GEAR. There is a clause that does.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman states the law provides for it now.

Mr. GEAR. If the gentleman will read the last section he will see.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the Clerk read it.

The Clerk read section 2 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the said act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, saving always, however, all acts and things done under the said amended section as heretofore existing.

Mr. NELSON. I am opposed to the amendment as I understand it. The clause it is intended to strike out ought, above all others, to remain in the bill. Under the grant made by Congress to States, known as the agricultural college grant, the colleges were required to give military instruction in order to avail themselves of the grant.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am sure my friend from Minnesota does not desire to imperil the passage of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. That provision ought not to be struck out.

Mr. FORD. The bill provides that in the distribution of these details of officers agricultural colleges shall have the preference because they are institutions having Government and State aid, and it was thought best by the committee to give such institutions the preference over any mere private enterprise. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I yielded to the gentleman only for a minute, and he cannot move the previous question. I wish to make one statement, and then I will yield to him for that purpose. The provision proposed by the gentleman from Iowa to be stricken out vitally affects our State university. We have been trying for years to get a military instructor, and striking this out will put us in a worse position than we have been in before. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. I demand the previous question upon the amendment and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. OATES. I hope the previous question will not be ordered upon the bill, because I desire to offer an amendment.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, and Mr. OATES called for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 13.

Mr. OATES. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill from consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can do that only by unanimous consent. Amendments have been offered and the previous question has been ordered, so far as the House in the absence of a quorum could order it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH].

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to report at this time from the Committee on Military Affairs the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 195) electing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to fill vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of members of the present board of managers on the 21st day of April, 1888.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That Col. Leonard A. Harris, of the State of Ohio; General John A. Martin, of the State of Kansas; and General John F. Hartranft, of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and they are hereby, elected managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to fill vacancies caused by expiration of the terms of office of the present board of managers on the 21st day of April, A. D. 1888.

Mr. MAISH. I ask that the joint resolution be now put upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAISH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GENERAL WILLIAM F. SMITH.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9396) for the relief of General William F. Smith.

The SPEAKER. This is a private bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered at this time.

Mr. ROGERS. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]

asks unanimous consent that this private bill be considered in this hour. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William F. Smith, late major-general United States volunteers, to the position of major-general in the Army of the United States, and to place him on the retired-list of the Army as of that grade, the retired-list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no pension shall be paid to the said William F. Smith, but this proviso shall be no bar to any claims for pension that the widow or children or other heirs of said William F. Smith may have after his decease.

Mr. ROGERS. I understand that the beneficiary of this bill is not now in the Army, and that the object of the bill is to restore him to the Army and put him upon the retired-list.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. The effect, therefore, will be to restore the salary connected with the office.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Three-fourths of the salary.

Mr. ROGERS. Then you put an officer who has resigned back upon the retired-list, and pay him the salary?

Mr. ROGERS. This proposition is to put back upon the rolls an officer who has resigned and pay him two-thirds of the regular salary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We are simply following precedents of this session. General Pleasonton and others have been put on the retired-list in this way.

Mr. ROGERS. I will not press any objection; but I wanted the House to understand the proposition.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to consider this bill on this call?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, having just stated that the bill could only be considered by unanimous consent, has caused the bill to be read, and has asked whether there is objection.

Mr. OATES. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that under the rule prescribing the course of business for this hour no private bill can be considered. The hour is only for the consideration of public bills which have been previously reported by committees.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then, if the gentleman from Alabama thinks it necessary to object, I withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

RELIEF OF IOWA VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. This is also a private bill. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] asks unanimous consent to concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1387) for the relief of the volunteers of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry. The amendment of the Senate to the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the act entitled 'An act in relation to bounties,' approved April 22, 1872, be amended by striking out the words "before August 6, 1861;" and said act, as hereby amended, shall have full force and effect from April 22, 1872.

"SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to reconsider the claims of all soldiers and their heirs who may have been denied the bounty of $100 granted by the act of April 22, 1872, under any construction of said act which has since been modified or rescinded, and such claims shall, if found correct and just, be allowed and paid, provided the soldiers were enrolled or enlisted for three years prior to July 22, 1861, under the proclamation of the President of the United States of May 3, 1861, and the orders of the War Department issued in pursuance thereof, and were actually mustered into the service of the United States and honorably discharged."

Mr. SPRINGER. This appears to have been originally a private bill, but by the Senate amendment it is made general.

The SPEAKER. The House passed a private bill, and the Senate, by this amendment, proposes to make it a public bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think this bill ought to be duly considered. It seems to be very sweeping in its provisions.

Mr. GEAR. The House passed a bill for the relief of members of the Fourth Iowa Volunteer Infantry. The Senate amended it by making it apply to about 1,500 persons. The auditor of the State of Iowa, Hon. William A. Day, in a letter to Senator ALLISON, has urged the passage of the bill. That letter can be read, if desired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has this amendment been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir; and reported favorably.

Mr. GEAR. The report is unanimous.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the Senate amendment at this time? The Chair hears none.

The question being taken, the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. GEAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, which involves the payment of about $600, due to a college in Illinois. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

Mr. BLAND. Has the consideration hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. BLAND. I object to anything in this hour except the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. BLAND. I will hear the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] withdraws his objection until the bill has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7452) for the relief of the Southern Illinois Normal University.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to relieve the Southern Illinois Normal University, at Carbondale, Ill., from all money responsibility for so much of the ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said university under bond dated August 21, 1878, as was destroyed by fire on November 25, 1883.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BURROWS. It seems to me this hour ought not to be taken up with the consideration of private bills. If the committee has not any public measure to present, it should give way to another committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. BURROWS. I am not going to object; but I think the time of the House ought not to be occupied in this way.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON], who desires to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. LAIRD. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make his proposition in that form. He can ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is this a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The rule provides that this hour shall be set apart for the consideration of public bills previously reported. As the Chair now understands, this bill has not been reported, but the gentleman from Nebraska desires to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from its further consideration.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is it not in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not, if the bill is still in the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LAIRD. This bill has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The bill does not appear on the Calendar.

Mr. LAIRD. This is a Senate bill; a House bill similar in purport has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. I call up the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill the title of which will be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the whole bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suspend the business of the House until order is restored.

Mr. BLAND. I understood the gentleman from Illinois moved to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It is now in order to call up this bill for consideration, but the bill is in committee, and the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] is to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill, and that the House proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the bill be read subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not upon either Calendar, and is, therefore, not before the House.

DETAILS OF OFFICERS TO EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. FORD. I now call up from the House Calendar the bill (S. 186) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, etc. In accordance with the previous understanding, I will withdraw the demand for the previous question and allow amendments to be submitted.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the committee will be reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill has already been read. There are amendments pending reported by the committee, and an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

Mr. HOLMAN. But the bill has now been renewed, and it ought to be read; but I will not insist upon that.

Mr. FORD. Let the amendments of the committee be reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, be, and the same is hereby, further amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1225. The President may, upon the application of any established college or university within the United States having capacity to educate at the same time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, detail an officer of the Army to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof, but the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed fifty from the Army and ten from the Navy, being a maximum of sixty, at any time, and they shall be apportioned throughout the United States, first, to those State institutions applying for such detail that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading object shall be the practical instruction of the industrial classes in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics; and after that said details to be distributed, as nearly as may be practicable, according to population. Officers so detailed shall be governed by general rules prescribed from time to time by the President. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice by the students of any college or university under the provisions of this section, and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case, in double the value of the property, for the care and safe-keeping thereof and for the return of the same when required."

SEC. 2. That the said section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the said act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, saving always, however, all acts and things done under the said amended section as heretofore existing.

The amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs were reported, as follows:

Add to the first section the following proviso:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the detail of officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy as professors in scientific schools or colleges as now provided by act of Congress approved February 26, 1879, entitled 'An act to promote a knowledge of steam-engineering and ironship building among the students of scientific schools or colleges in the United States;' and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government on the terms and conditions hereinbefore provided to any college or university at which a retired officer of the Army may be assigned as provided by section 1260 of the Revised Statutes."

Also, after the word "established," and before the word "college," insert the word "academy."

Also, after the word "Army," in line 12, insert "or Navy."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote on the amendments of the committee will be taken in gross.

There was no objection, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KERR's amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the words "United States," in line 16, down to and including the word "distributed," in line 24, as follows: "First, to those State institutions applying for such detail that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading object shall be the practical instruction of the industrial classes in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics; and after that, said details to be distributed."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

Mr. OATES. I move an amendment, to which I think there will be no objection. I move to strike out, in lines 25 and 26, the following words:

Officers so detailed shall be governed by general rules prescribed from time to time by the President.

Mr. FORD. There is no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What will be the status of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is unfinished business and will come up the first thing in the next hour assigned to the consideration of bills, and the Committee on Military Affairs has time to complete this bill if it can be done in an hour.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope there will be an extension of the hour for five minutes in order to complete this bill now.

Objection was made.

TARIFF.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and the pending amendment is that moved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 329 to 361, inclusive, of section 2, and insert as follows:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, all tank-bottoms, sirups of cane juice or beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, and all molasses testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for in the act, shall be exempt from duty: Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty at the rates provided by law at the date of the passage of this act.

"All sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound. Molasses, testing above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 1½ cents per gallon.

"Maple sugar, 2 cents per pound of crystallizable sugar contained therein as ascertained by polariscope.

"Maple sirup or molasses, 4 cents per gallon.

"Glucose or grape sugar, 1 cent per pound. Sugar candy, not colored, 5 cents per pound; all other confectionery, not specially enumerated or provided for, made wholly or in part of sugar, and on sugars after being refined, when tinctured, colored, or in any other way adulterated, and on all chocolate confectionery, 10 cents per pound: Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty as provided by law at the date of the passage of this act: Provided further, That for the encouragement of the production of sugar and molasses there shall be paid a bounty to the producers thereof in the United States, when made from beets, sorghum, imphee, or other sugar-cane raised in the United States, as follows:

"On sugar, 2 cents per each pound of crystallizable sugar contained therein as ascertained by the polariscope.

"On molasses, testing above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 6 cents per gallon; testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 4 cents per gallon.

"And the bounties provided for in this act shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

Mr. KELLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to occupy more than five minutes, the Chair would suggest some agreement had better be come to now on that subject.

Mr. KELLEY. I certainly shall desire more than five minutes, but how much I can not tell.

Mr. KERR. I move that the gentleman be allowed thirty minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print as a portion of my remarks of July 3 the following editorial from the Chicago Tribune of June 23, 1888, the leading Republican paper of the Northwest.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may do so under the general leave to print on this bill.

The editorial is as follows:

A GRAVE BLUNDER IN THE PLATFORM.

* * * * * * *

The Tribune does not propose at this time to enter into any discussion of the Republican tariff plank; but desires before it is too late to ask the attention of the delegates to the extraordinary demand for the repeal of the whisky tax. The platform first declares in favor of repealing the tax on alcohol used in the arts and for mechanical purposes—a policy which has always been met with the objection that it would be impossible of enforcement on account of frauds, and would amount virtually to free whisky. However that may be, the platform goes on to declare further:

"If there should still remain a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the Government, we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes [whisky and tobacco] rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system at the joint behest of the whisky trust and the agents of foreign manufacturers."

Four years ago the Republican party pledged itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and reduce the surplus. Now it is made to demand the placing of whisky and tobacco on the free-list in order to prevent any reduction of the surplus by correcting the inequalities of the tariff or by reducing the sugar tax. The Republican tariff platform of 1884 in substance declared:

"The Democratic party has failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus. The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus."

Is putting whisky on the free-list an honest redemption of this pledge?

It is hard to believe that the convention intended to repudiate the pledge in the platform of 1884 and to substitute a demand for free whisky. It is still more difficult to believe that Republican voters favor such an extraordinary flop, or will under any circumstances approve the policy of cheapening intoxicating drink as a method of getting rid of the surplus when there are so many other and better ways. Can the party leaders venture to go before the people with such a platform and hope that the fearful blunder committed by the framers of the platform will be overlooked or excused? Certainly the Democrats will not ignore it. If the blunder in the platform is not corrected before adjournment every Democratic procession this fall will carry banners stigmatizing the Republican party as a free-whisky organization committed to the doctrine of cheap rum and dear sugar. There is no precedent for recalling and amending a platform after its adoption and promulgation, but it ought to be done in this instance.

A precedent should be made. The committee on resolutions ought to report an amendment striking out the plank in favor of free whisky, and declaring instead that the tax on liquor and tobacco shall be retained to meet the increasing expenditures for pensions and for the defrayment of service pensions.

Correction can be made and adopted by the convention in a few minutes. If the frightful blunder into which the convention was misled is not corrected, it will cost the Republican party tens and possibly hundreds of thousands of votes.

The Tribune desires to go on record as insisting with the utmost emphasis that before final adjournment the convention shall recall and correct the blunder in question.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania want?

Mr. KELLEY. I can not tell how much; I may be interrupted by questions; but I shall not exceed a half hour, and I want to occupy the time continuously as far as possible to reply to speeches assailing the Republican platform and the system of protection made by the gentleman from Illinois and my colleague from the Twenty-third district.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize the gentleman for thirty minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am a Republican and am devoted to the doctrines of my party and the declarations of its national conventions. I am a protectionist, and believe that the system of protective duties has exalted our country to its present magnificent industrial position, and that it is essential to the maintenance of that position and the further development and progress of our country. I was therefore no little surprised to hear my friends, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and my colleague from the Twenty-third district [Mr. BAYNE], make direct assaults upon the platform recently adopted by the Republican party at Chicago and upon the protective system, and practically deny its capability of doing in all industries what they admit it has done in some of them.

The recent Republican convention had evidently had its attention called to the assault that was proposed to be made on the American protective system, and in favor of the antiquated and now abandoned system of imperial bounties. The language of the platform, though it does not refer in express terms to the proposed system of bounties, does say:

> We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the President and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America.

The American Government has never fallen in with the imperial habit of granting bounties in support of industries. The system was proposed to the country under the highest auspices under which it could have been proposed, for it was under the auspices of George Washington, the then first President of the United States, in a plan developed by his remarkable Secretary of the Treasury, Alexander Hamilton. Ninety-eight years have passed since then, and in no instance has a bounty been granted as a direct stimulus to an industry.

We sustained the infant fisheries by bounties avowedly as a school for a volunteer navy. It was an administrative measure of the Government, and not in connection with any branch of the general industrial system of the country.

But, Mr. Chairman, the convention did not stop with the extract I read. It went on to say:

> The Republican party would effect all needed reduction of the national revenue by repealing the taxes upon tobacco, which are an annoyance and burden to agriculture, and the tax upon spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes, and by such revision of the tariff laws as will tend to check imports of such articles as are produced by our people, the production of which gives employment to our labor, and release from import duties those articles of foreign production (except luxuries) the like of which can not be produced at home. If there shall still remain a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the Government we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system.

That is the latest authoritative declaration of the doctrine of the Republican party, and it is assailed vitally here in the seats of Republican members, from whose suggestions I dissent in the name of the Republican party, at whose birth I was, and to whose interests I have been devoted from that time to this.

But it is said that sugar constitutes an exceptional case, in that we are paying extraordinary and inordinate duties on that commodity. If that be so, graduate the duties, make them right and proper, but remember your party declares not for the establishment of the imperial system of bounties, but for the maintenance of the American protective system. That is the duty you owe if you are liege party men and respect the last declaration of your party's creed.

It is argued, and has been asserted in this debate, that protection does not so operate as to stimulate development of the sugar industry. When honest John Swartz, an old farmer, was elected from Berks County, Pennsylvania, by beating that scholarly gentleman and diplomatist, J. Glancy Jones, who had avowed himself a free-trader, the tariff was under revision. The story went through Pennsylvania, and Mr. Swartz never contradicted it in social circles, that when his party friends gathered around him to persuade him that duties were added to the cost of imported articles, and would make out a seeming case, honest old John would wait patiently and listen to the end—and my friend from New York [Mr. COX], who does me the honor to listen, probably remembers the incident of Mr. Swartz's membership of the House—and say "Vell, it does look very much dot vay mit dem dings. I can't contradict you mit dem. But I tell you von ding, it don't work dot vay mit pig-iron." [Laughter.]

And doubtless my friends who favor this bounty project are thoroughly convinced that though protective duties operate that way with everything else, they do not "work so" with sugar, whether it be grown or made from sorghum produced in the States in the heart of the continent or from beets along the Pacific shores or upon the newly redeemed lands from cane in Florida, where they are draining and redeeming swamp and overflowed lands which are capable of producing sugar-cane equal to the finest that has ever been produced upon the island of Cuba, where they can produce cane with two months' additional growth over that of Louisiana, so that a stalk in a Florida cane-field that does not tassel is a curiosity, while a stalk in a Louisiana cane-field that does under ordinary circumstances tassel is a curiosity. In other words, that the cane of Florida is worth 25 per cent. more for sugar producing than the cane of Louisiana.

Mr. BAYNE. What is the life of cane in Florida?

Mr. KELLEY. Its season is two months longer than it is in Louisiana. I did not calculate the exact number of days. I have it from a report made by Louisiana experts who had been sent to Florida by the sugar exchange.

Mr. BAYNE. How many years?

Mr. KELLEY. I saw one bed that had not been replanted in seventeen years.

Mr. BAYNE. In Florida?

Mr. KELLEY. In Florida. Twenty years is the extreme life of a Cuban bed, and they say that in Southern Florida it will run longer. There may be some exaggeration in the statement. In Louisiana I think they plant every third or fourth year.

Mr. BAYNE. Three years is the average in Louisiana.

Mr. KELLEY. I know, but the two months' difference in growing time gives Florida as long a sugar season as Cuba has. I am not speaking lightly.

Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was not quite candid when he said protection did not stimulate the production of sugar in Louisiana. Sir, war is the science of destruction carried into practice by nations. Louisiana is even now recovering from five years of war, during which her cane-fields were overgrown and her machinery and the buildings that housed it went to decay. Impoverished by war, ruined as the people of all the Confederate States were, their banks gone, their insurance companies without capital, their private fortunes exhausted, a people who had been making about 500,000,000 pounds of sugar per year found that in 1864–'65 they could produce but 10,800,000 pounds, though in 1861–'62 they had produced 528,000,000 pounds. Now, sir, beginning at the close of the war with wasted estates and fortunes broken, they have, under protection, raised the crop from less than 11,000,000 pounds to 303,000,000 pounds in 1882–'83. In the decade from 1867 to 1876, inclusive, they raised 1,121,000,000 pounds of sugar. In the next decade the 1,100,000,000 had grown to 2,297,000,000 pounds, or largely more than doubled in a decade. Sir, I would plant myself upon the record of Louisiana's sugar growing since the close of the war to prove the beneficence of the American protective system which gentlemen propose to set aside in favor of what the American people would not adopt for Hamilton and Washington and what they would not sustain if this House could be tempted to perpetrate the folly of trying to put the industries of the country under such a form of protection.

Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I denounced our friends on the other side of the House as humiliating me, and destroying the generous conception I had had of my country's attainments and possibilities; there was nothing we proposed to do that they would admit we could do, and said that many things ought, therefore, to be put on the free-list. Little did I then think I should hear Republican echoes of those anti-American suggestions. "We do not want protection on sugar, because in this barren country, with no competent people to occupy it, we can not do what every people east of the Atlantic are doing and have successfully done for themselves and their country—make our own sugar!" Why should we in this country, with that Pacific Slope more fertile on the average for all its vast area than Sicily herself is within her contracted limits; with those interior States so like to Germany and the portions of France in which the beet thrives and sugar is the main source of personal wealth and national revenue, cry, "Oh, no, the Germans and the French can do it but Americans can not grow cane, beets, or sorghum and make sugar?" Give these industries fair play among the protected industries of the country and in ten years there will be no outcry that you are paying duties on foreign sugars or to enrich a sugar trust.

Take the sorghum industry. In the district of my friend from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] they have been struggling for years. It is three or four years since Mr. Harkinson, an old friend of mine before he became a citizen of Kansas, returned with three of his fellow-citizens from investigating the growing of sugar beets and the manufacture of sugar in Germany, and sat an hour with me in yonder cloak-room. Last year, having introduced under the supervision of the Government the distributive process which that committee had brought home with them, sorghum was grown and manufactured with a profit of more than 100 per cent. beyond that derivable from wheat or corn in the neighborhood in which it was grown. The sugar was made successfully in commercial quantities and sold at profitable prices in the markets of Kansas and neighboring States. The success was so great that ten factories were to have been planted in different parts of Kansas, mainly, if not exclusively, by New England capital.

This brings me to the great advance recently made in the methods of sugar growing and sugar manufacturing. With sorghum the factory must be in the center of an area, not extending more than 6 miles around. Sorghum, unlike cane, will not bear distant transportation; and therefore the establishment of the sugar industry in a State plants in the midst of the farmers a factory and a non-agricultural laboring people and furnishes home markets for those other products of the farm which will not bear distant transportation—vegetables, fruits, butter, lamb, veal, and other articles, many of which are the charge, not of the farmer, but of his wife and daughters. There is no more beneficial object that can be placed before our American farmers than the production of sugar in our Northern States, whether from beets or sorghum.

Sir, the seed of a fair crop of sorghum is almost as valuable as a crop of corn, and more valuable than an average crop of oats. More people have been fed on sorghum flour, ground from the seed of that sugar-bearing plant, than have been fed on wheat. So historians say; so scientists say. And where sorghum is grown abundantly for its seed, its fodder, its sugar, and its paper "stock" obtained from the refuse after the saccharine juice has been extracted, the seed alone is often worth more than an ordinary crop of oats. Now, why, at this time, when science has come forward and by its new method of manufacture added from 20 to 25 per cent. to the value of the sorghum cane, of the ordinary sugar cane, and of the beet; why, when in Germany and other lands they are abandoning the old system of large plantations and expensive works, and are establishing central factories to take the productions of the farmers within 6 miles around and convert them into commercial sugar; why, I ask, shall Republican voices be raised in slander of their party's platform, saying: "No; we can not make sugar; we are incompetent, but we are willing that you may give bounties to those who produce the few pounds of sugar we have shown ourselves able to make?" I am not that kind of a Republican. I am not that kind of a protectionist. Since the close of the war prostrate Louisiana has built up her sugar industry to almost equal what it was before, and now millions of dollars are being invested in separate establishments in Florida and California, and hundred of thousands in separate establishments in Kansas. Protection is doing its just and proper work, and if the people who have within a few months past taken to reading Hamilton's advocacy of the bounty system will let us go on, we shall collect no duties on sugar and give no bounties to "trusts" upon the seaboard when our sugar shall be grown and made over the whole surface of our country.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, but I do not wish to annoy him.

Mr. KELLEY. You do not annoy me, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say as preliminary to my question that I feel that the gentleman from Pennsylvania who now has the floor [Mr. KELLEY] is about the only one in this Chamber who was thoroughly indorsed by the Chicago platform. [Laughter and applause.] And now I want to ask him this question: Is it not a fact that under that platform as adopted we have no right to cut down or disturb the existing tariff on sugar?

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, no. That platform pledges tariff amendment.

When I made my speech, opening what I thought the Republican side of the argument, in response to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], a distinguished editor of Chicago denounced me as a "chattering old crank," and that eminent editor of my own city who presides over the Philadelphia Times published it for the edification of my children, under the heading of "What a Republican editor thinks of Judge KELLEY." Yet when the convention came together delegates did as the gentleman [Mr. NELSON] has suggested. They said: "Here is a man who since 1881 has pleaded with his countrymen, argued with them, has stumped the country, has almost impoverished himself by publishing pamphlets demanding that we should follow the example of the fathers of the country and leave internal taxes as a reserve for the National Government for time of war; that we abolish them; that we put the accursed thing, whisky and alcohol in all its forms, under the charge of the respective States of the Union, where it can be both taxed and policed, and where, if States, cities, and counties wish to derive revenue from such sources, the revenue derived from the causes of drunkenness and crime will go into the treasuries that have to bear the expense of vice and idleness and hereditary insanity engendered by taxed but unpoliced whisky." Yes, the convention did indorse me, and I am now ready to say, in the language of Simeon of old, Lord, lettest Thou now Thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen the glory of the Republican party. [Applause.]

Mr. MCKENNA obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. As no time has been fixed for the closing of this debate, the Chair, in the absence of objection, has allowed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to speak for thirty minutes. If there be no objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] will be allowed to occupy the same length of time. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I would like——

Mr. MCKENNA. I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has seen proper to place an unwarranted construction upon the platform of my party, and then to arraign me for not accepting it. I would like time to make reply to the gentleman.

Mr. MCKENNA. I do not yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] will proceed.

[Mr. MCKENNA withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have some understanding as to the time. I want a little time myself on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has not been limited on this paragraph. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desire to speak beyond the five-minute limit?

Mr. CANNON. I think I shall want ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed fifteen minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, when I concluded my remarks yesterday upon what to my mind was a plain business proposition, in harmony with the Republican platform, with good legislation, I did not expect to speak further on this subject, and I would not now were it not that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], who has so much more reputation in the country than I have, has seen proper to arraign this amendment which I have offered and my position upon it as un-Republican. Now, if the gentleman is correct about that, if the Chicago platform means what he says—and he alone of the sixty millions of people in the United States has the right to construe it—if I can not combat his right to construe it for me, then, to be consistent, I should get off the platform and not pretend to stand upon it. I want to speak in all kindness, for I have no feeling of unkindness towards the gentleman, nor have I ever during my service in the House of Representatives entertained any feeling of unkindness towards him, and if I differ with him radically and positively in his construction of the platform, I beg to assure him I do it respectfully. He would not ask me to sit still in the House and hear him place the party to which he and I belong in a position which to my mind it does not occupy, and if he did I would not comply with his request.

Now, then, what is the platform? The gentleman read a portion of it. There are several resolutions. I am not going to read much of the platform, but as I read it touching the tariff it is substantially as follows: It declares in favor of "such revision of the tariff laws as will tend to check imports of such articles as are produced by our people, the production of which gives employment to labor, and releases from import duties those articles of foreign production, except luxuries, the like of which can not be produced at home."

That is the platform on that point. With that declaration I am in entire harmony, according to my best judgment, and the amendment which I offered yesterday is in entire harmony with that declaration of the principle. There are two kinds of customs duties recognized by the platform, one protective, the other for revenue only. It will be remembered that our Democratic friends, when they had more courage than they have now and did not want to cheat anybody, put into two of their platforms a declaration in favor of "a tariff for revenue only."

Now, what is a tariff for revenue only, and what is a tariff for protection? I will say a word upon this point, and then pass on and apply it. A tariff for revenue only is a tariff levied upon articles that we do not and can not practically produce in this country in sufficient quantity to substantially satisfy the demand of our own people, while a tariff for protection is a tariff levied upon such articles as we do practically produce in this country, or while it is evident we can by following the protective policy in a reasonable time—not in twenty-five years or a hundred years, but in a reasonable time—produce them in sufficient quantities to substantially satisfy the demand therefor in our own country, thereby giving profitable employment to labor and in the end cheapening the product to the consumer.

The Republican platform, as I understand it, condemns the tariff for revenue only and indorses the tariff for protection.

If it means anything else, I am not for it, If it means that, I am for it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] and the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] say, "Why do you not propose to pay a bounty on steel and wool and articles of that kind?" The answer is that substantially the steel and iron industries, and the woolen and the cotton industries, and a great many others, under a far less protection than sugar has received, have been so developed in this country that they do practically supply the home demand and are growing year by year; and I propose a bounty for the production of sugar in the United States, not that I am in favor of a system of bounties, but for the reason that a bounty would only cost $6,000,000 and free sugar would relieve the people of $60,000,000 of taxation annually and from $30,000,000 of profits they are compelled to pay to the sugar trust annually, and for the additional reason that under nearly a century of enormous protection a sugar interest has been built up in Louisiana that produces one-tenth of the sugar we consume and it may not be just to forsake even that small industry, and for the additional reason that in some parts of the country, Kansas and California, it is alleged they can develop a sugar-producing interest from sorghum and beets, and I am willing to give them a fair trial, especially as the people would save $84,000,000 annually by trying the experiment.

I say again I am not in favor of bounties as a rule, but I think under all the circumstances this is a proper exception. Nor are we without precedents in this matter, for we have given bounties for the promotion of the fisheries for many, many years, bounties for the establishment of the salt industry in Michigan, bounties for the construction of railways and canals, bounties for the establishment of our merchant marine, bounties for the promotion of agriculture, and for many other purposes.

But if the voting a bounty for the production of sugar in the United States is a stumbling-block in the way of gentlemen, while I am willing to vote it, yet I am for free sugar, with or without a bounty.

Now I will speak to my Democratic friends a moment, and I will ask them, what is the reason you leave the tariff on sugar? What is the reason that in cutting the duty down from 82 per cent. you still leave it at 68 per cent. ad valorem, higher than the duty on any other class of goods? You have said several times and you say now that you do that because it is a tariff for revenue and not for protection. In that you are entirely consistent with the principles you have enunciated, namely, that in revising the tariff you will not have free trade at once all along the line, nor a revenue tariff only, at once, on everything, but that you will travel in the direction of a tariff for revenue only. I believe I represent you properly. That is the reason you keep it.

Now, what are the facts about sugar? I spoke of them yesterday. I say that practically this tariff upon sugar is substantially a tariff for revenue only. "But," says my friend Judge KELLEY, "we can produce sugar in this country." Yes, sir; and we can produce tea in this country. Would you therefore argue because our former Commissioner of Agriculture induced people to try to produce tea in this country that we should levy a tax on tea? The platform does not mean that.

Mr. KELLEY. My statement was that we could produce sugar commercially and at a profit, not merely that we could produce it.

Mr. CANNON. I answer the gentleman as I have answered heretofore, that for almost a century sugar has received continuous protection, an average of two, yes, three times higher rate than any other class of articles, yet we produce less than one-tenth of what we consume. We produce far less than we did thirty years ago, and while we imported before the war 500,000,000 pounds yearly, we now year by year import over 3,000,000,000 pounds, and it is increasing all the while. I deny that we are substantially producing sugar commercially at a profit or that there is any prospect of our doing so. We do not need the revenue from sugar, and if you will put sugar on the free-list the people could afford to buy every pound of sugar produced in this country and throw it into the sea, and they would then save yearly $75,000,000 by the operation.

Resuming my remarks, I want to say again that the tariff now standing upon sugar is equivalent to 82 per cent. ad valorem. You Democrats propose in the Mills bill to reduce it to 68 per cent. ad valorem, whereas in that bill the average rate of duty, including the duty on sugar, is 48.31 per cent. Why do you fix the duty on sugar away up above everything else? You say it is a revenue tax—a tax substantially for revenue only.

Now, just one word about this. Judge KELLEY said that in the last ten years there has been a great increase in the production of sugar. Let us see about that. I was surprised that my friend Judge KELLEY should pick out an exceptional year in that period of ten years and read the figures to this House as an evidence of the increased production of sugar in the State of Louisiana. I have before me a table; I will take these statistics in periods of five years.

Mr. KELLEY. . I took them in periods of ten years.

Mr. CANNON. I will take them every fifth year. In 1870–'71, 144,000 hogsheads of sugar were produced in Louisiana; in 1875–'76, 144,000 hogsheads; in 1880–'81, 218,000 hogsheads; in 1886–'87 145,000 hogsheads—substantially the same that was produced seventeen years before. And yet, a quarter of a century after the war has closed, the gentleman talks about the "ravages of war" and its effect upon this industry. Does not the gentleman know that, commencing with the close of the war and the breaking up of slave labor, the South, under a system of free labor, has, in respect to cotton and nearly all its products except sugar, bounded forward 50, 100, and sometimes 200 per cent.? I say again, as I said yesterday, that in seventeen years there has been paid into the Treasury of the United States $700,000,000 of taxes upon sugar, and the importation has been $1,200,000,000. I say again that during the last thirty years the imports on sugar have been substantially two thousand millions of dollars, and the tariff upon that importation $1,000,000,000 and more.

Of the three thousand million pounds consumed in this country, how much do you think is produced here? Three hundred million pounds. From these facts I say that the sugar tax, from the protection standpoint, when it claims to legitimately stand among the protected industries of the country, is a bastard and an intruder and a fraud. It is a free-trade cuckoo's egg in the protection bluebird's nest and should be rolled out. [Applause.]

I again call attention to the Mills bill and the schedules. What do they show? We find the sugar tax now at 82 per cent ad valorem, and it is proposed to reduce it to 68 per cent. Then there are various reductions along through the schedules, and these reductions, including sugar, leave an average rate of 48 per cent. ad valorem. My amendment, if adopted, will make a further reduction to less than 35 per cent. When you Democrats go home and enter your canvass you will say, "Ah, there is 48 per cent. of protection enforced upon the people of this country." Yet over one-fourth of all the duties paid in this country come from sugar; and you propose to maintain that duty, with but a small reduction, because it is a revenue tax and a revenue tax only. And, in view of all these facts, the gentleman from Pennsylvania rises in his place and says that not only is he the father of the Chicago platform, but that this is the construction, and that every man claiming to be a Republican must stand on that platform according to that construction. I accept and indorse the platform, but repudiate the construction. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. You are the only gentleman in the House who understood me to say that.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will take it all back, if you did not say it. I always inquire for the motives of men when they disagree with me or my own motives when I disagree with them. It is a safe thing to do.

Who are interested in this matter? The sugar man of Louisiana? No; the bounty proposed takes care of him. The sugar men from sorghum in Kansas and elsewhere? No; the bounty takes care of them. Who is interested in it?

Mr. KELLEY. There is no bounty and there never will be one. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman knew when I spoke of bounty I merely spoke of the proposition in reference to a bounty. The gentleman is too big a man to interject such a statement upon any such pretense.

Mr. KELLEY. You did not put it, "the bounty will take care," but "the bounty does take care."

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman may posture in that way, playing upon words, if he chooses to do so. I had to respectfully differ with the gentleman in former years. I respect his character and defer to him on account of his experience, but it is not the first time in the House of Representatives when he undertook to draw the line and to say this is Republicanism and that is Republicanism, and when I refused to go with him——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.

Mr. KELLEY. I suggest that the gentleman be allowed to proceed ad libitum until he concludes his remarks. He will not transcend the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman proceeding to the conclusion of his remarks?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CANNON. I was trying to find out the motive of gentlemen who have spoken to-day. If my amendment is adopted one thing will happen. I explained Saturday the one and thirteen one-hundredths of a cent of profit now obtained by the sugar refiners on each pound of sugar. They stand in the Mills bill and will continue to extort by its provisions. I explained that their profits amounted to $30,000,000 a year. My amendment will affect the sugar refineries in the gentleman's city of Philadelphia. It affects the sugar refineries in New York City. It will affect them in San Francisco. I can not help that. I respect the gentlemen for representing their constituents; but I do not want them to undertake to read me out of the party because I do not altogether agree with them. So much for the sugar refineries, and I say to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA], when he attempts to read me out of the party, that $9,000,000 worth of sugar came in free under the reciprocity treaty every year from Hawaii to San Francisco from plantations owned and farmed, I am told, by Californians, which has its value substantially doubled by the tariff on sugar the moment it is landed free of duty in that port. The greater always controls the less.

Mr. MCKENNA. If that principle of gravitation applies to prices as you contend it does, why are you afraid of the Canadian smaller product pushing out the larger American product? Why did you not vote for free lumber if you believe in the principle?

Mr. CANNON. I have refused to yield. When I have plenty of time I do not object to yielding, but when somebody jumps up and chips in with something 10 miles off from what I am talking about my patience then gives way a little. [Laughter and applause.] I was asking what would happen in case my amendment is adopted? It is plain the men who own the plantations in the Sandwich Islands and who raise sugar there bring it into the United States free, and then substantially have it doubled by the tariff law operating on all the rest of the sugar imported the moment it arrives in San Francisco. They would lose four millions a year profit cut off by amendment—profit which comes without any equivalent. But the gentleman from California says that this whole problem is solved, that under the guidance of Claus Spreckels California will lead in the production of beet sugar in sufficient quantity to supply the consumption in the United States.

If you are going to solve the sugar question while your distinguished citizen, Claus Spreckels, is posturing and going to build the biggest refinery in the world at Philadelphia; if you are going to supply the entire consumption by sugar made out of beets in California, there is nothing left to talk about. But if that is so, why does Mr. Spreckels build a refinery in Philadelphia?

There are several planks in the Republican platform, and I moved this amendment in harmony with them. A tariff for revenue only is the kind of tax this is. There is another plank in the Republican platform in reference to trusts which I wish to have read. I ask my colleague [Mr. HITT] to read it for me.

Mr. HITT read as follows:

We declare our opposition to all combinations of capital organized in "trusts" or otherwise to control arbitrarily the condition of trade among our citizens, and we recommend to Congress and to the State Legislatures in their respective jurisdictions such legislation as will prevent the execution of all schemes to oppress the people by undue charges on their supplies or by unjust rates for transportation of their products to market. We approve legislation by Congress to prevent alike unjust burdens and unfair discriminations between the States.

Mr. CANNON. I commend that plank in the Republican platform to the consideration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the gentleman from California; and more, Mr. Chairman, I commend it to the consideration of the other side of this House. Here is a trust, as everybody knows and acknowledges, and is necessarily so, because after a generation has passed the sugar imported into the United States is found to be increasing, while the sugar produced in the United States is decreasing in quantity. Come, now, and let us cut that trust up by the roots.

A MEMBER. How about the coffee trust?

Mr. CANNON. There is no tariff upon coffee. There may be a trust, but it takes care of itself and breaks up the men who go into it. This trust has its feet planted in the law, and I want to take the foundation away from it. Let us do our part. That is what I am for.

But, Mr. Chairman, one further remark and I am done. Much legislation can be had, ought to be had, and will be had, as I said the other day; the Navy will be built up, the fortifications will be constructed, the ordnance made or purchased, our great sea-ports will be fortified, and we will be able to protect the citizens of our country at home and abroad by economical, just, and proper expenditures of the public money.

General pension legislation will be had to do even-handed justice to the soldiers of the late war, and when these things are done and when we have reduced the revenues, taking it off of articles where it produces revenue only and off tobacco, then in the course of time if anything else is to be taken off, rather than turn the laborer back upon the small wage, rather than forsake the protective system, and then only, we will take the tax off of spirits. [Applause on the Republican side.] Why does the gentleman from Pennsylvania say that is heresy? I tell you now, in the presence of the House and the country, so far as the country will take notice, and in the presence of my constituency, before whom I stand for re-election, asking them for their ballots, if now or hereafter I have got to choose between taking the tax off of sugar, which is a revenue tax only, and taking the tax off of spirits, I will take the tax off of sugar. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In conclusion, I appeal from the construction placed upon the platform by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the platform itself, and so far as I am concerned I am ready for a vote upon the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, coming from a section of the country interested in the production of sugar, in which marvelous progress has been made in that production from sorghum cane, I naturally feel a deep interest in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

If I understand the doctrine of protection, it aims to protect every product that can be successfully produced in the United States. If that be the doctrine of protection, then so far as it applies to this question of producing sugar, we will inquire, first, can sugar be successfully produced in the United States? And if it can be, then no friend of protection will understandingly or knowingly oppose giving protection of some kind to the industry.

I know that it has been charged in this debate that the production of sugar has been decreasing for a number of years; that the product of sugar in the United States to-day is not equal to what it was prior to the war. But that does not do away with the fact that sugar can be successfully produced in the United States. That fact, in my judgment, has been demonstrated beyond question. Concede that certain circumstances which are ulterior in their character, which are outside and independent of the interest itself, have resulted in decreasing the production of sugar for the last six, eight, or ten years, this does not by any means substantiate the position that the decrease will continue from now on, in the same, or in anything like the same proportion. On the contrary, we have every reason to believe that the interest is increasing and will increase. Concede that there is a decrease, no man in favor of protection can even withhold that protection, and be consistent, in my judgment, although he is satisfied the production of sugar will be confined exclusively to Louisiana. I would be for protection for sugar to-day, if there was not a pound of sugar made outside of Louisiana, because in order to be a consistent protectionist, I would have to support a law that would protect that industry, even though it existed in only a single State of the Union. Whenever you denationalize protection you destroy its power and its potency in promoting American industries.

It is upon that ground I have argued in favor of protection of industries in which, perhaps, my own State was not directly but only indirectly interested. I can not understand the position taken by gentlemen upon the other side who insist strenuously upon protecting this industry so far as it applies to Louisiana, and yet ignore the doctrine of protection as to all other States. I will state in all candor to my friends from Louisiana, that when they insist upon protection for sugar, because it is a product of the State of Louisiana, they can not, in my opinion, be consistent, without standing by the Republican party in protecting American industries in all the States.

Now, I want to speak of this question with reference to the sorghum industry, because that is the industry in which my people are more directly interested. I assert, without the fear of contradiction, that so far as experience is concerned, so far as past experiments can demonstrate anything, the production of sugar in the United States will from this time on continue to increase, until within the next ten years, we shall not only produce sugar for the consumption of the United States, but we will produce sugar for export to foreign nations.

We are paying out now to European countries——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask that the gentleman be given unanimous consent to complete his remarks, whether the time be longer or shorter than twenty-five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERS. There is an area of country in the United States adapted to the cultivation of sorghum, that is sufficient to produce the sugar of the world. The point has long been demonstrated that sugar can be made from sorghum. That was demonstrated years ago. Sugar of the very highest quality, as my friend from Kansas on my left suggests, sugar that polarizes 98.1 per cent. of sweetness, is made from sorghum. There is no sugar that polarizes as high as the sugar that was made in Kansas from sorghum last year. You can not find it in Germany; you can not find it in France; you can not find it in New Orleans; you can not find it anywhere in the world. You can not find sugar made in any of these countries that polarizes 98.1 per cent. Yet under a skillful chemist from the Agricultural Department, who applied this test, sugar that was made at Fort Scott last year, polarized 98.1 per cent.

Now, I come to the question whether sugar can be successfully made from sorghum so as to increase the product. Prior to the experiments at Fort Scott, the juice had been extracted from the cane by the roller process, or the pressure process, which had been used to extract juice from the cane in Louisiana. But the difficulty with that machinery, although it was the most perfect that human ingenuity could make, was that it extracted only about 55 per cent. of the saccharine matter. There was an absolute loss of saccharine matter of 45 per cent. That was one reason why sugar could not be profitably produced from sorghum. The genius of man at once went to work to devise some method by which more of this saccharine matter could be extracted from the cane. Attention was directed to other countries, and finally it was ascertained that by the diffusion process more of this saccharine matter could be extracted. That diffusion process was brought two years ago to Fort Scott.

It was demonstrated that it did extract a much larger per cent. of the saccharine matter; but because of too much scientific knowledge, the making of sugar was not a success, even after the saccharine matter had been extracted from the cane. It seemed to be a theory of scientists that this saccharine matter must be manipulated in a certain way in order to produce sugar in paying quantities, and instead of giving it a decent and respectable chance to make sugar, its very production was curtailed by scientific manipulation; so all the investigations and the experiments two years ago in Kansas proved a failure, not because we were unable to extract a sufficient amount of saccharine matter, but because, after having done so, we could not produce enough sugar to make the industry profitable.

But this was overcome last year, and the diffusion process was more thoroughly tried and experimented upon, and as a result, instead of securing only 55 per cent. of the saccharine matter from cane, we secured by the diffusion process 97 per cent., and instead of securing from this saccharine matter about 56 pounds of sugar to the ton, we secured over 100 pounds of sugar to the ton in addition to the sirup that was also made from the same matter, from 15 to 25 gallons per ton.

Mr. GEAR. How many tons are raised to the acre?

Mr. PETERS. An average of 12 tons to the acre.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. BAYNE. Did you undertake to produce or did you produce sugar in Kansas before you had a bounty?

Mr. PETERS. Oh, yes; we produced sugar from sorghum in Kansas six years ago.

Mr. BAYNE. In any considerable quantity?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. How much is the bounty?

Mr. PETERS. Two cents a pound upon all that polarizes above 90; but that bounty is limited in amount to $15,000 annually.

Mr. BAYNE. So that you have protection and also a bounty of 2 cents a pound on your Kansas sugar.

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir. I want to state, however, in answer to that, that the bounty has had no effect whatever upon the production of sugar in Kansas; not a particle.

Mr. HERMANN. Did not the Commissioner of Agriculture, after numerous tests and experiments and a great deal of investigation, almost despair of being able to produce sugar successfully in Kansas or elsewhere from sorghum?

Mr. PETERS. That was two years ago; but in his report on the experiments last year, he emphatically declares that the question is settled beyond peradventure.

Mr. HERMANN. And were not those experiments largely assisted by the bounty which was offered by the Legislative Assembly?

Mr. PETERS. Not in the least.

Mr. RYAN. Not at all.

Mr. PETERS. The bounty has had nothing to do with the development of the industry, so far as it was developed last year.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How much aid had you from the General Government?

Mr. PETERS. I can not answer the gentleman from Iowa as to the exact amount; but I am informed by my colleague [Mr. RYAN] that about $60,000 was expended of the last appropriation. A considerable proportion of that went for the purchase of machinery.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will my friend state how much sugar has been produced in Kansas for consumption in the last six years?

Mr. PETERS. I can not state exactly. The works at Fort Scott worked up about 600 acres of cane last year, and my colleague from the Fort Scott district [Mr. FUNSTON] says that they produced 235,000 pounds of sugar.

Mr. FUNSTON. C sugar.

Mr. PETERS. Yes, coffee C sugar. Anybody who knows what that is can understand just the kind of sugar that was made at the Fort Scott works.

Now I want to go on with my statement in relation to the production of this sugar. As I said before, last year we were able to produce over a hundred pounds and in many instances 115 pounds the first run from a ton of cane, and in addition to that from 5 to 20 gallons of sirup.

To show what the interest of the farmer is in this industry, I state that any farmer with a team can plant and grow and harvest, 50 acres of this cane, and the average yield per acre in Kansas was about 12 tons. That gives for one farmer 600 tons of cane, which sold last year at $2 per ton, yielding him $1,200 for the labor of himself and team upon 50 acres of ground, and requiring at the outside only about four months' time to plant, grow, and harvest the crop. Every one can see at a glance why it is that the farmers in the belt of country where this cane can be raised, are interested in the development of the industry.

Mr. FUNSTON. And none are interested more than the people of Illinois.

Mr. PETERS. And, as my colleague says, none are interested more than the farmers of Illinois, and the farmers of the entire Union, wherever they live within the belt in which the cane can be successfully produced.

Aside from this, there is another very important item to be taken into consideration, and that is that the cane is almost a certain crop. Drought does not materially affect it; the grasshopper does not affect it. It can be raised almost surely every year in this belt of country, regardless of rainfall or of atmospheric or climatic influences.

I have said that two years ago we had too much science, and therefore did not produce sugar successfully after we had obtained the saccharine matter; but last year it was left to work itself out, passing from the diffusion battery into the vacuum pan, and from that into the centrifugal, and from the centrifugal into the barrel. I made a trip to Fort Scott during the sugar season last year. I went to the field and saw the cane cut; I saw it loaded on the wagon; I saw it hauled upon the scale; I saw it taken to where it was cut up into small pieces; I saw it go into the diffusion battery, and from that into the vacuum pan, and then into the centrifugal, and I saw it come out sugar in the barrels; so that I know what I am talking about, because seeing is believing, and I not only know that sugar was made, but I know that it was made in the quantities I have stated, because I saw the ton of cane weighed and saw the sugar that was produced weighed. Not only that, but I saw the Government chemist from the Agricultural Department here polarize it; and it polarized 98.1 per cent.

Is there any use in talking to a Kansas farmer or a Kansas man who has had a practical eye-witness knowledge of this matter, about doing away with that tariff, because, forsooth, we can not increase the production of sugar in the United States? I say—and I believe it is the feeling not only of the Commissioner of Agriculture, but of the people of Kansas, and of every citizen who has investigated the subject—that only a few more years of protection are needed to make Kansas the sugar State of the world. That is what we are fighting for; that is why we are opposed to this proposition of bounty.

I would be glad if some man could tell me with the assurance of certainty, that a bounty would step in and take the place of the tariff and insure us the capital to develop this infant industry of Kansas. But there is no man who can give me such assurance. Logic can not give it; eloquence can not give it; argument can not give it. Logic is a power in the forum, but it can not command capital. Capital is ever sensitive; and when you go to it with your fine speeches and your eloquent sentences, capital turns to the experience of the past and says: "Notwithstanding your logic, notwithstanding your eloquence, which falls pleasantly upon the ear, business principles tell us we can rely only on the experience of the past." So the Kansas farmer, the man interested in the development of this industry, says: "We know that the capital will be forthcoming to furnish the plant to develop this industry in the United States if reasonable protection is continued; we do not know, we can not tell, that this capital will be forthcoming if you do away with this protection and substitute for it a bounty." In short, it is better to rely upon a certainty than to experiment upon an uncertainty.

As I stated yesterday, after the result of these experiments in Kansas last year, preparations were made for the establishing of numerous plants to manufacture sugar in Kansas, four of them in the district from which I come. Yet because of untoward circumstances, because of the threat involved in this very cry for tariff revision, because of this to a large extent, but two of these plants are being put in to-day. The capitalists of the East, who promised the money with which to put in these plants, have said: "We will wait another year; we will wait until we see what Congress will do; we will wait until we see whether the tariff is to be so changed that capital can not reasonably expect profitable remuneration for its investment." So this year is to be passed over. A plant is being put in at Topeka, the capital of my State; the plant at Fort Scott is being enlarged, and a plant at Conway Springs, in my district, is being put in. This is the extent of the present operations.

I plead on behalf of my people, that you will not strike down this infant industry, which presents to the agricultural portion of my State so grand an outlook for the future. I plead with my friends on this floor that they will not by their act strike down this industry, throttle it in its very infancy—an industry which promises so much relief to the agricultural people of this country, who need the fostering care of the Government.

There is another point to which I wish to call attention in connection with this question of bounty. I have said I am not in favor of a bounty, because it is an uncertainty. We do not know that under the uncertain stimulus of a bounty, capital will furnish the money to put in these plants. A bounty is unstable; and for this reason, capital, being timid, will not take the chances under a bounty law. Capitalists know also that if the production of sugar should increase until this bounty, instead of amounting to five or six million dollars annually, should reach thirty or forty million dollars, there would come up a cry from all parts of the United States demanding the repeal of the bounty act, and it would be repealed. The experience of every legislator in this House teaches him that this must be the effect if such an increased amount of bounty should be paid by the General Government.

But there is another consideration connected with this question. When you do away with the protective duty upon sugar and put in its stead a bounty, you place the consumers of the United States in the power of the foreign producer of sugar. If there is a foreign trust—and there are foreign trusts, because the Empire of Germany is nothing more nor less than a sugar trust—if there are foreign trusts, then in doing away with this protection and substituting a bounty, you place the consumers of the United States in the power of these foreign trusts. Do away with these $52,000,000 of revenue—I believe that was the amount—derived from the importation of sugar in 1887——

Mr. KELLEY. Sixty-eight millions.

Mr. NELSON. Fifty-six millions.

Mr. PETERS. Do away with these fifty-two millions or fifty-six millions or sixty-eight millions of revenue, paid as duty upon sugar; let this money be used, as it would be used, to crush out the production of sugar in the United States, and how soon would every plant that produces sugar in this country be destroyed?

Do away with the tax now provided by law, and foreign sugar, temporarily reduced in price below cost, would flood this country, and the Louisiana planter and the Kansas manufacturer could not produce sugar to compete with the price. The great foreign sugar trusts, the great amount of capital engaged in the production of sugar outside of the United States, would say, we can afford to lose a cent on every pound of sugar we send into the United States next year if we can crush out the product—which, I understand, was 300,000,000 pounds last year. When every sugar plant in Louisiana, when every sugar plant in Kansas, New Jersey, California, and Texas has been closed up, then we would be in the power of these men, who are sending us millions of pounds of sugar every year—we would be in their power, because we would have no product of sugar to regulate the price in the United States.

Thus, having suffered a loss of a cent a pound for one year, and having destroyed the sugar industry in this country, they could turn round next year and make up the loss, by raising the price high enough to reimburse themselves fully. That will be the natural result.

I have heard so much about this question of trusts, I am sorry that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] is not in his seat, because he has been so grandiloquent upon this question.

One of the charges is, that the Republican party fosters and encourages trusts. Now, the facts in history refute the charges which are made. Men throughout the country who seek to fasten the charge on the Republican party of dereliction in this regard, lose sight of the great fact that the Republican party has not held power in this House, but for two years since 1875.

When you talk on the other side about trusts, I wish to say to you, the greatest and most iniquitous trusts to-day are Democratic trusts. Take the Standard Oil Company; it is a Democratic trust. It has representatives high up near the Democratic throne. Take the sugar trust in America to-day, and it is a Democratic trust. Take the iron trust, and it is a Democratic trust.

When you come to charge this question of trusts upon the Republican party, as my friend from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] did, you will close your eyes to the facts.

A MEMBER. Do not forget the whisky trust.

Mr. PETERS. And there is the whisky trust, which is also a Democratic trust. That trust, which is so dear to the Democratic heart, has its inspiration, its motive power direct from the Democratic party. So gentlemen who go on enumerating trusts as having been fostered and encouraged, should know they are Democratic in their inception and Democratic in their tendencies and exist by the grace and permission of the Democratic party.

I want to call attention to the fact to which I have already alluded, that the Forty-fourth Congress, the first in which the Democratic party obtained power since the war, came in on the 4th of March, 1875, with 74 Democratic majority in the House. The Forty-fifth Congress, which came into power on the 4th of March, 1877, had 18 Democratic majority in the House. The Forty-sixth Congress, which came into power on the 4th of March, 1879, had 22 Democratic majority in the House. The Forty-seventh Congress, which came into power on the 4th of March, 1881, had 16 Republican majority, and this was the only Republican House we have had in this country since 1874.

How was it in the Forty-eighth Congress? That Congress, which came into power March 4, 1883, had 81 Democratic majority in the House. The Forty-ninth Congress was reduced almost one-half, with only 42 Democratic majority, which came in March 4, 1885; and the Fiftieth Congress has 15 Democratic majority in the House, showing that the majority is growing beautifully less; and in the coming election it will disappear entirely and the majority will be placed where it ought to be, on this side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But I say to you that if trusts have been fostered and encouraged by the Republican party, why is it that your side with its majority in all these years has not brought forward some proposition to crush them out? No sooner can a law be brought before the House for the purpose of strangling every trust in the United States than I will jump to my feet in its support, and by my voice and my vote render what aid I can, to secure its passage. I have been ready and hoping for something of that kind for years. I have been hoping that the investigation on the part of our Committee on Manufactures would have borne some good fruit. But it seems to me that this long session of the Fiftieth Congress is to pass away without results from that investigation.

I appeal to my friends and to every man who is in favor of protection, either local or national, to stand by this industry and give us a chance to develop it. Let us save to the people of the United States and to the Government of the United States this $100,000,000 of money that we have been annually paying out to foreign countries for the sugar consumed here. Let us produce it for ourselves, and we will not only save the amount of money I have suggested, but it will employ in the avenues of labor thousands upon thousands of the working classes of to-day.

I believe as firmly as I can believe anything that if the law is allowed to stand as it is that in the course of ten years we will produce a sufficient quantity of sugar to meet the wants of our consumption in the United States. That is what I am pleading for. I plead, because it is not only in the interest of the Kansas farmer, in the interest of the Kansas business man, but because it is in the interest of the poor men throughout the United States, and because it is in the interest of the laboring men all over the country.

I beseech you now, under the cry that there may be an exorbitant profit in the trust, not to strike at the interests of farmers and the laboring men of this country. [Applause on on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEBER. I desire to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, which does not affect the question of rates, but is designed to effect a classification of the sugar schedule. I wish to have that voted upon after the proposition now pending before the committee has been disposed of, for it is evident that if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is adopted by the House, no classification or schedule will be necessary. I presume that the remainder of this evening will be devoted to the proposition now before the committee, and if I may have the permission I would simply offer the amendment, because it is offered in good faith, and I believe will commend itself even to gentlemen on the other side, that it may be printed in the RECORD, and that I may have the floor on Monday for the purpose of explaining its provisions. If that arrangement can be made I have no desire now to interject something that is not pertinent to the subject that is before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not undertake at this time to promise recognition to the gentleman on Monday. There is a long list of those desiring recognition.

Does the gentleman wish to offer the amendment now?

Mr. WEBER. I would like to submit it to be printed for the information of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is offered only for information now?

Mr. WEBER. The discussion of the amendment at this time will perhaps divert the minds of gentlemen from the question immediately under consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WEBER. And I presume that our friends on the other side of the House are not particularly desirous, judging from the liberality with which they have extended the time for the discussion to this side of the House, in order that Republicans could air their contentions before the country—I say, that they are not immediately desirous of disturbing that procedure, but seem perfectly willing that these gentlemen should go on; and acting upon that assumption, that it will go on and occupy the remainder of the evening, I do not desire to interfere with the amusement or enjoyment of gentlemen on the other side, but will simply ask consent to submit the amendment now, to be taken up when it is in order for action. I offer it as a practical measure and desire to be heard in support of it and hope to convince gentlemen on the other side, if the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois fails, that here is a way to strike at the trusts and without disturbing the rate of duty proposed by gentlemen on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to have the amendment read or printed in the RECORD?

Mr. WEBER. Let it be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines 329 to 346 inclusive and insert the following:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color shall pay duty on their polariscopic test as follows, namely:

"All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above seventy-five degrees, shall pay a duty of 1.15 cents per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree not above ninety degrees shown by the polariscopic test they shall pay thirty-two thousandths of a cent per pound additional.

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, testing by the polariscope above ninety degrees and not above ninety-one degrees, shall pay a duty of 1.90 cents per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree not above ninety-seven degrees shown by the polariscopic test they shall pay five-hundredths of a cent per pound additional.

"All sugars testing by the polariscope above ninety-seven degrees shall be classified with sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color.

"All sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color shall be classified by the Dutch standard of color and pay duty as follows, namely:"

Mr. WEBER. I ask unanimous consent that I may be heard upon this amendment after the pending amendment has been voted on.

Mr. DINGLEY. You do not need unanimous consent for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands this to be an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. WEBER. I do not understand the parliamentary effect; but I desire to have the amendment voted on in good faith after the pending proposition has been disposed of. It is clear if the proposition offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] be adopted, this will be of no use. If it be not adopted, I submit my amendment as a reclassification of the schedule offered by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman simply has the amendment read at this time for information, and later on will offer it. The Chair understands that to be the situation. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. WEBER. I yield the floor upon that understanding.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I am for the Cannon amendment for the reason that to me it is a sound, practical business proposition. Given that by the adoption of that amendment you save, first, to the consumers of this country about sixty millions of money which is now levied by the tariff; second, that you save a direct contribution taken from the people of this country which is now given to the sugar-refining trusts in profits of $30,000,000 annually, and by the imposition of a bounty or the contribution of a bounty you appropriate only six or seven million dollars; and therefore the great saving to the people is between eighty and eighty-four million dollars annually.

Now, it seems to me that the proposition should commend itself to the good sense of people on both sides of the House. It is not a question of Republicanism or Democracy. It is simply the application of a business principle to a business interest.

Mr. Chairman, I criticise the arrangement of the tariff on sugar from two standpoints: First, 90 per cent. of it is a tariff for revenue, because 90 per cent. of the sugar we use is not grown in this country. It is in the nature of a direct tax on the people the same as if we levied a tax on coffee, tea, spices, or any other thing which we do not grow or produce in this country. Take the acreage of sugar to-day. Why, sir, there were in 1880 but 227,000 acres in cane. In the State of Louisiana there were but 181,000 acres. Reduce that in the way we compute acreage in our country. Every county in the West has sixteen townships, making 378,000 acres of land. Now, there were in sugar in 1880 in Louisiana only eight townships; not quite half the acreage of the county in which I have lived for many years. In this whole country there are only ten townships engaged in the cultivation of sugar. Gentlemen from Kansas and elsewhere object to a bounty, and say they have no right to believe there will be anything stable about a bounty. Let me ask those gentlemen if, in case the Democratic party comes into power in this House and in the Senate in the Fifty-first Congress, they expect any continued protection to sugar or anything else, if gentlemen on the other side are to be believed in their arguments?

Mr. CONGER. They will protect sugar if they do not protect anything else.

Mr. LAIRD. They will protect Louisiana.

Mr. GEAR. It may be so, but I do not believe it. They will not do it if their arguments on the Mills bill are true.

The crop of sugar has been constantly reduced from year to year. People may stand up here and talk until they are dumb, but they can not disguise the fact that there is less sugar produced in this country than there was years ago. The production of the last five years as compared with the production of the five years previous to the war shows 25 per cent. less in hogsheads and value. The whole value of the sugar produced in this country from 1823 to 1887, inclusive, at the present market rate only amounted to a little more than $600,000,000. Think of that! And yet the people of this country have paid in the shape of a direct tax in the last seventeen years over $700,000,000!

Is not that a direct tax on the people? Out of the $60,000,000 collected during the year 1887, my State of Iowa paid one twenty-ninth of the tax, or $2,000,000. They ask me by my vote here to help to relieve them of that tax, and I stand ready to do it so long as I am honored by a seat in Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with regard to a bounty. We in Iowa can raise sorghum as well as they can in Kansas. We can raise sorghum to the limit of 200 miles north of the north line of Kansas. You can raise it up to the center of Minnesota. You can raise it in Wisconsin. Let me say to gentlemen on the floor that the beet, of which they talk so much in California, can be raised up to the Forty-second parallel of latitude, and contains 1 per cent. more of saccharine matter than it does in Europe; equally as much as in California; and we of Iowa are as much interested in that development as you of Kansas and California.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Iowa desire?

Mr. GEAR. I think I shall want about ten or fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the time of the gentleman will be extended according to his request.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GEAR. The sugar-cane in this country is an exotic. It is not indigenous to this country, as it is to Cuba, and it can not be raised here by any means so long as we have our present climatic influences. If you will take the standard author [Mr. Bouchoreau], whom every gentleman upon this floor who has investigated this question will recognize as an authority upon this subject, you will find that he runs over a period of years, commencing in 1823 and extending up to the present time, and tells when and how the cane was damaged or ruined in Louisiana by frost, when and how it was damaged and ruined in that country by rain; and you will find from the facts he produces that you can not produce it in this country as it can be grown in Cuba and elsewhere. Therefore it seems to me that we should use all means in our power to give our people this article of great and prime necessity at the lowest possible price that we can.

That is one of the reasons why I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. My friend from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], whom I have known for many years and whose name in the Mississippi Valley during the last half century has been a synonym for integrity and high business standing, will, I think, indorse the statement that they can not burn as fuel the refuse cane in his State as they do in Cuba without resorting to very large expenditures for a certain kind of furnace. In Cuba they take the cane and throw it out upon the ground, and in five or six days they can use it as fuel, but in Louisiana they have to use this by a new process. Until they employed it a large proportion of their fuel was obtained from the floods of the great river which penetrates their State. Now, however, by large expenditure they are enabled to obtain fuel from the refuse cane.

Another reason why I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is this:

The present arrangement of the tariff schedule is an outrage upon the people of America. Thirteen years ago I was here as the representative of a business association of Western and New York merchants trying to get the then Committee on Ways and Means to so adjust the tariff that the common sugars might be admitted at lower rates of duty instead of having the trade thrown into the hands of the great refining trust. Mr. Chairman, there has not been in twenty years a single hogshead of sugar imported into the United States of the quality known as grocers' sugar. My friend, Mr. GAY, who has been a planter for a great many years, recollects well when he used to make sugars which were described as "fair," "fully fair," "good," "prime," and "choice." Those were the sugars that were used almost exclusively among the farmers in the Mississippi Valley, and the numbers that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] proposes to admit free—12, 13, 14, 15, and 16—are of that class; yet every man, woman, and child in this country is compelled to pay to the great refining trust $2.40 a hundred for the use of that kind of sugar. Sugar is not as cheap here as it is in Europe, and it is almost the only article that goes into the consumption of a family of which that can be said.

In England, in France, or in Germany, you can buy sugar of that kind at the rate of from 20 to 25 pounds for a dollar—that is the way we sell sugar out West, so many pounds for a dollar—as against 10 or 12 or 15 pounds for a dollar in this country, and that difference is owing to the arrangement of the tariff schedule. Now, under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], sugars of these grades come in free, and at the same time those who wish to use higher grades of sugar like white A, crushed, or granulated, can get them cheaper than they do now, because his amendment provides for a duty of only three-tenths of a cent. per pound. That amounts to a dollar a barrel, and, on the sugars used in this country, it amounts to $10,000,000 a year, which seems to me ample protection for the sugar-refining interest in this country. It should be remembered that the labor employed in that industry is largely unskilled. It is only the chemists and the skilled sugar boilers who handle the sugar in New York and Philadelphia and Baltimore that receive high wages. The remainder of the labor employed in the business is the lowest priced labor known to us in this country, and it seems to me that a difference of $10,000,000 is ample to protect the refiners in their trade.

Sir, I will go as far as any man in protecting the legitimate industries of this country; and I stand fair and square on the Chicago platform. I need no certificate for my Republicanism. It does not need that I, who have stood up in Iowa for Republican principles for thirty-five years, who helped to wrest the State from the Democratic party and to keep it in line as the banner State of Republicanism, should say that I stand in full harmony with that platform. But, sir, there is not one jot or tittle of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that disagrees, in my judgment, with the Chicago platform. While I know that gentlemen may differ honestly in that regard, I can not be read out of the Republican party because I am in favor of giving free sugar to my people, even if the measure be coupled with a bounty. I believe that the effect of this bounty would be beneficial to the country. I believe that every farmer in my district who has a farm adapted, as all our farms are, to the cultivation of sorghum or beets, and I also believe that every farmer who tills any part of the 33,000,000 acres of choice land in Iowa of which we boast so much, will rejoice to see the Fiftieth Congress vote a bounty of 2 cents a pound on sugar, in accordance with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, and a corresponding bounty on molasses. Why? Because he can then go to the Treasury of the United States and get that money as fast as he produces the certificates of his product.

Why, sir, my State, with Kansas, took the lead last year in this matter of bounties. We are an enterprising people out there; we believe in developing our State. And the General Assembly of Iowa at its last session made an appropriation to promote the development of this product. This is not a new question with our people; and so long as I retain a seat here I propose to vote in favor of giving the one hundred and ninety thousand people whom I represent on this floor a reduction of tax on that which is a necessary article on the breakfast-table and the tea-table of every American family; and I wish to extend the benefits of this system to the people not only of my district but of the State and of the country at large. This will be a vast saving of money. It is, in my judgment, the easiest way to reduce this much-talked-of surplus. At one sweep of the pen you can save a direct tax of $58,000,000, less the six or seven million dollars proposed to be given as a bounty. Do our Louisiana friends want a better bounty than that? Will not a bounty of 2 cents a pound stimulate every planter in Louisiana to advance the production of sugar? And, by the way, there are only twelve hundred of those planters. Think of it! Sixty million people are taxed annually $58,000,000 for the benefit of twelve hundred people in a section of country embracing nine or ten townships! Again, the profits of the sugar trust, under this classification, are estimated at $30,000,000 annually. Much has been said about the vast amount of capital used in refining sugar and the large number of hands employed in the sugar refineries. Why, sir, the number of refineries in 1880 was only 49; the number of hands employed 5,357; wages paid annually, $2,875,032. Think of it, again, an additional tax $30,000,000 a year levied on the consumers for the sole benefit of this sugar trust.

Mr. Chairman, I say, in justice to ourselves, in justice to the consumers of sugar, that they should be relieved from this enormous tax on this, which is one of the prime necessities for every man, woman, and child in the country.

I do not doubt what my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] said in regard to the future of Florida; but I have been waiting to see the development of Florida and Louisiana on the sugar question until now I am getting to be somewhat advanced in years. I take up from year to year the reports made in regard to that industry, and I find that, instead of progressing as we do in the West, instead of the annual product of sugar increasing, as does our annual production of hogs and cattle and wheat and oats and dairy products, the sugar production of Louisiana is going down, down, down. And there is a reason for this decline. The sole reason is to be found in the fact that their climate is not adapted to the production. No man can raise a sugar crop in Louisiana when the season is adverse. Again, if this amendment shall be adopted you at once put an end to the frauds which so notoriously exist in the coloring and undervaluation of sugars in New York and at other ports. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment offered by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and I trust in all earnestness that every Republican—ay, and every Democrat—on this floor will vote heartily in favor of that amendment as a business proposition. There is no politics in it.

Mr. Chairman, if I have any time remaining, I yield it to my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] asks unanimous consent to yield the remainder of his time to his colleague. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to discuss this subject somewhat fully; but my colleague has presented my views so much more ably than I could do that I will content myself with submitting a few additional suggestions.

For one I do not intend to remain silent in my place, on the theory advanced perhaps by some that we should keep silent on the sugar question and let the matter go over to the Republican Senate. A man by silence may tacitly commend an evil proposition. If the tax on sugar should be reduced, our duty is clear, as well as the duty of the Senators. For one I concur in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and thank him for his courage and ability in submitting the views which he has presented. It will certainly be news to any member of this House who was a member of the late Republican national convention to be told that in advocating this amendment he is acting in the teeth of the Republican platform. No gentleman has yet indicated wherein the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois conflicts with that platform; and I challenge any one here and now to show such conflict. That platform declares in substance that whatever revision or reduction is necessary shall be taken from our import duties. Does it name any particular article that is to be made the subject of the reduction? Does it name sugar, iron, or any of the articles covered by your import duties? Not one; such questions are left to the wisdom of Congress.

Mr. BAYNE. My friend will allow me to remind him that the Chicago platform does not say that any reduction which may be made shall be taken from import duties; it favors a repeal of the tobacco tax and a revision of the tariff in such a manner as to protect articles of home production and to take the duties off such things as we do not produce.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Very good; that is exactly what I say in substance, and what the platform meant to say, that the revision of the tariff should be so made as not to endanger American industries. That is the Chicago platform—nothing more and nothing less. Now, the only question for us to consider in dealing with this question of sugar is whether it comes within the range of the Republican doctrine of protection. If it does, I am opposed to touching the sugar industry.

But no gentleman has shown here that sugar should longer be protected by this Government. Our protection has utterly failed to bring sugar within the range of our protective policy. Why? Because it has been demonstrated that it is an industry that can not be built up and has not been built up to meet the wants of our people. If it can be demonstrated that it will meet the wants of our people, then it is an industry which comes within the range of our protective policy, and should have that recognition.

Mr. FUNSTON. It has been shown. It has been done in the last twelve months, at Fort Scott, in Kansas.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now, my good friend from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] brings me to the very proposition in my mind. The only ones who have attempted to meet this question as presented in this discussion are the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], the one claiming that California, with its beets, and the other that Kansas and the other great Western States, with sorghum, practically can meet the conditions demanded by our people in regard to the consumption of sugar. But have they given us one scintilla of proof of their ability to do so?

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Have they given us any evidence in support of the statements they have made?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, abundant evidence.

Mr. RYAN. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No, gentlemen, you have not given us any evidence. You have been experimenting for a number of years. You have admitted yourselves that your own State of Kansas gave you annual bounty of $15,000; you admit that the General Government came to your aid with $60,000 in Kansas; and yet when I ask what you have done to show that you are capable of producing sugar even to meet a small proportion of the wants of your own people for domestic consumption I have no response.

Mr. FUNSTON. Oh, yes, you have.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. None that meets the question. And not only that, but I hold in my hand a statement just received from the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations showing that $299,500 have been paid out up to and including 1888, and expended for the purpose of making tests of the different kinds of sugar produced, including the sorghum sugar, in this country; and it is admitted that $60,000—I think it is $90,000—have gone to the State of Kansas on that account. And yet, Mr. Chairman, with all of this in aid of your system, my eloquent friend from Kansas asks for five, six, or seven years more of experimental work to demonstrate what he believes can be done.

Mr. PETERS. Oh, no.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What! shall we hold up to the people of this country a proposition to pay out $90,000,000 annually to protect this industry which will not meet their wants in any proper degree?

Mr. FUNSTON. We do not want another hour.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And when you confess that you have utterly failed to meet the wants of the people for consumption?

Mr. FUNSTON. We have only had three months to work in, and we have developed 750 pounds of sugar to 1 acre of cane.

Mr. GEAR. And it cost 25 cents a pound to produce it

Mr. FUNSTON. If you plant every sixteenth acre in the State of Kansas in sorghum you will produce as much sugar as you import today, and in five years you will produce the sugar at 2½ cents a pound, if you will just let us alone and not interfere with our progress.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You may boil down all of your arguments and the sum of them can be epitomized by singing "in the sweet by and by." [Laughter.] It is all you can do, give promises for the future.

Mr. FUNSTON. We have already done it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. We have been dumping money into your experimental works and we have no results. You do not do what you promised.

Now listen, gentlemen; we have the law in our hands. We meet again here in December. This is not going to be the last American Congress. The argument on facts which appeal to our senses will be quick to reach our understanding in the way of producing suitable legislation upon this subject in the future. Let your arguments be based on the facts as you will then have developed them. If you gentlemen can make the sugar, if this is not still an infant industry that you can wean, one that you can take its mouth from the nursing bottle, we will be here to take care of you. I have as much interest in this as my good friend from Kansas has. The soil of Iowa will go further than Kansas to raise sorghum.

Mr. FUNSTON. Oh, no; I beg pardon.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No gentleman need beg my pardon for telling an incontrovertible fact. The soil of Iowa surpasses in fertility the soil in any part of the country.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh!

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended. Our Republican friends have been hearing from their constituents. I ask that the time be extended fifteen minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I am very much obliged to my colleague for his request for an extension of my time and to the committee for its indulgence; but I had declared myself on this subject before even my good friend from Iowa opened his lips on the subject of the tariff, so that I am in the logical attitude of the speech I made in this House, and if the gentleman will find what my record was in Iowa, he will ascertain that I have been advocating this very doctrine upon the stump for years past. I stand by the record that I then made, and I do not see any reason to change that position at this time.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have said that I do not think our friends from California or from Kansas have shown that this sugar they talk of producing has been so far a successful experiment, or that it can be produced in sufficient quantities to meet the wants of our people.

They have not brought themselves within the rule to claim the benefit of the great economic principle of protection. When they do I will be swift to throw my voice and vote and influence in favor of protecting them. But until that time comes I protest against a tribute of $100,000,000 to foreign pockets, taken from the pockets of the people of my district and of my country. I want that distinctly understood. No matter what difference may exist around us we should kindly and courageously meet our duty, and he who flinches from that duty will have the harder time in the future, in my judgment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with some interest to the remarks of my colleagues from Iowa, Colonel HENDERSON and Governor GEAR. I dislike very much to differ from these gentlemen on any question; but on this question of sugar I think there is room for a difference of opinion. I do not agree with my friend, Judge KELLEY, in saying that a man can not stand upon the Republican platform and hold that it is right to have free sugar. The question is one of fact. But if there is reason to believe the American producers of sugar can ultimately produce enough to supply the American market they ought to be encouraged by a protective duty; but it ought to be a reasonable duty. If you examine this proposed tariff schedule you will find that the average duty on the whole list is, as is claimed, about 41 per cent. Now, we ought to be just in our tariff. If they would reduce the tariff on sugar to 40 per cent., one-half the present rate, it would reduce the surplus to the extent of $28,000,000 a year. That would be a considerable reduction, and at the same time it would afford as much protection to the sugar industry of the United States as the average of the protective duties placed upon other articles. That seems to me the correct position on this question, for I do think we have reason to believe we can produce our own sugar.

The other side of the House say they will maintain a duty of 68 per cent. upon sugar, while they propose to put a number of Iowa products upon the free-list. I appeal to gentlemen and ask, is that just? I hold it is not. Our friends on the other side of the House are wonderfully disturbed about free whisky. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, is especially excited on the subject, and yet four years ago he expressed the same sentiments I hold to-day upon the subject. He then said:

We now have over $100,000,000 from whisky and tobacco and other internal-revenue taxes; but they are on the same principle as the tariff taxes, on consumption, and fall on the poor, and should be largely decreased.

When I made the statement on three or four occasions formerly before this House declaring this position I am sorry gentlemen on the other side did not utter a whisper of approval. I thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] for calling the attention of the country to the fact that when the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means assails the position of the Republican party on this question to-day he is assailing his own position as declared four years ago.

In regard to this question of sugar I shall ask leave to print as part of my remarks a letter I received from a gentleman in Iowa, a man who has given this matter some attention, who has produced a good quality of sugar from sorghum by an apparatus of his own invention and manufacture. He has a patent on an instrument for eliminating the moisture from the sirup, and has sold a good article of sugar in my own town for years. I will not detain the House any longer, but will ask leave to print the letter as part of my remarks. I do not approve of it in full, but it shows that the position of the Iowa Legislature giving a bounty of 2 cents a pound in Iowa for the production of sugar is, in his judgment, sound. The position of my colleagues from Iowa is that the protection by the Government should be taken off while the State is putting a bounty on. This does not seem to be harmonious policy.

The letter is as follows:

TRAER, IOWA, May 6, 1888.

SIR: Mr. E. E. Taylor tells me that you wish to know what I think about taking the tariff off sugar, and also what I think about paying a premium on sugar manufactured in the United States. I am not in the business, and therefore have no personal ax to grind. The experiments last season have proven that with sugar at present prices, using the diffusion battery and vacuum-pan, sugar can be made from sorghum anywhere where corn will mature, but with the tariff off it is not likely that the necessary capital would be invested in an enterprise while there is no certainty that even present prices will be maintained for any length of time in the future. Even the planters in the South were afraid to put in the best machinery on account of the continual racket about high tariff and free trade, but give them assurance that the tariff on sugar will not be reduced for the next ten or even five years, or if it should be reduced a premium of say 2 cents per pound would be paid by Government on home-made sugar, and other States should do as Kansas and Iowa have done, pay a State bounty, it would be but a short time till factories would spring up all through the East, West, and South, and give us sugar at such rates that beet sugar could not compete. In my opinion the proper thing to do would be to let the tariff on sugar alone and use the proceeds to stimulate home manufacture. You will notice that whether sugar is put on the free-list or not, the Government should pay a bounty on home-made sugar. The Hawaiian sugar, under the reciprocity treaty, comes in free. There they get all the way from 3 to 7 tons sugar to the acre of cane, and still they claim they can hardly make ends meet. There is no other nation on earth has as great an extent of sugar country as the United States, and it is a pity that we only make about 12 per cent. of the sweets we consume. Please excuse my using a pencil, as my hand is too unsteady to use a pen.

With much respect, I remain, yours truly,

JOHN STUART.

To Mr. DANIEL KERR.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I would like to ask my colleague a question. Does not the Cannon proposition include a bounty?

Mr. KERR. Yes, sir. I will do my friend the justice to say that there is no proposition on this side of the House that will take away the protection from any American industry. But they propose to put it in a form that I do not believe will meet with the approval of the American people. The Government has never yet given a bounty, and it never will maintain bounties as a permanent line of policy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GEAR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I happen to know the gentleman who wrote that letter to my colleague. I would like to ask my colleague if that man would not be just as well off with a bounty of 2 cents from the Government as with a tariff of 2 cents?

Mr. KERR. Of course, so far as that particular man is concerned, it would be just the same.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to express my opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for the reason that in my judgment it proposes a system entirely different from that of protection, and enunciates that system, in so far as the gentleman can do so, as a measure of the Republican party and as a doctrine of the Republican party.

I suppose I inherit my belief in the doctrine of protection. I was taught it in college, and as a college president taught it to classes. My belief in it is intelligent, thorough, and sincere; and just because of that belief to-day I am opposed to what seems to me an entirely novel and a wholly alien policy proposed by this amendment as Republicanism. In the Forty-seventh Congress some gentlemen may remember that as a protectionist, and just because of my sincerity and earnestness as a protectionist, I resisted measures which seemed to me to be an imposition upon protection, to be counterfeit and unjust.

With that same sincerity and earnestness to-day I oppose this attempt to initiate a system of bounties in lieu of the system of protection. It is not Republican in my judgment. I am frank to accord to every gentleman the same right which I claim for myself to make his own interpretation of the Republican platforms, all of which I hold when fairly and correctly interpreted, and to follow his own judgment in applying them to legislation; but I express my own judgment by protesting against this proposition. This new doctrine—new, I mean, in the Republican fold, new as a Republican policy—this new doctrine is proposed to us for the avowed purpose of reducing the revenue of sixty or even of ninety million dollars, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] states it, which is now paid upon sugar by the consumers, and the impression is sought to be made upon the House that unless this new bounty theory, this monarchical and imperial method, be adopted, that burden can not be reduced. Why in the world can we not reduce this revenue under the doctrine of protection by reducing the duty on sugar?

Mr. BAYNE. Are not bounties also a Kansas method as well as a monarchical and imperial one? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. After the sorghum industry had been established the Legislature of Kansas voted a small bounty, but that bounty has had no more to do with the development of the sugar industry in the State of Kansas, as gentlemen have repeatedly alleged in this debate, than a fly has to do with the turning of a wagon-wheel, or than tin-plate has to do with the true doctrine of protection, and my friend can take the tin-plate and roll it under his tongue as a sweet morsel if it does not cut him. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Is my friend in favor of free sugar without a bounty?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, I do not believe I am. [Laughter.] Nor with a bounty.

Mr. CANNON. Is my friend in favor of reducing the tax upon sugar one-half or two-thirds?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, well, if my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will allow me. Those are simply matters of detail. But what he proposes is not a matter of detail, but of principle and doctrine, and may be illustrated thus. The majority of the members of this House in going to their rooms take the street-cars. That conveyance is akin to the established doctrine of protection as held by the Republican party and as applied to the collection of revenues; but my friend now proposes to say that we must all hire carriages—that is, must adopt his bounty method. That is an illustration of his position on this bounty business as distinguished from the system of protection. And the gentleman says that in order to reduce the sixty millions of revenues from sugar we must adopt that method. I say that the revenue can be reduced by lowering the existing duties, and I am ready to reduce them on sugar.

Mr. CANNON. How much?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, now just keep your seat. [Laughter.] My friend will please pardon me, but I want to go on. That is a mere matter of detail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I have not occupied time on these questions, and should like about ten minutes more.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That, Mr. Chairman, is a mere matter of detail. The question as to whether sugar shall be made free, or whether the duty shall be reduced, and, if so, to what extent, are questions of detail, and when we come to deal with details I will be ready to express my belief by my vote, or to come as near expressing it as one can by a vote in this House. But that is a wholly different proposition from the one which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] submits. He proposes by this amendment that we shall throw aside the doctrine of protection, shall abandon the great system under which for decades the nation has prospered, and shall take up a new doctrine and adopt a new system and shibboleth, that of bounties. Now, as a protectionist I am opposed to that new shibboleth. I stand here as a protectionist and claim that whatever is fair as to any other article included in the great American system of industries is fair as to sugar, and that whatever rule should be applied to other articles should be applied in this case also.

The statement has been made upon the floor that our sugar product is decreasing. I was shown a few moments ago by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] some figures which demonstrate that the crop this year is 310,000 hogsheads—I think more than double the amount which has been heretofore stated, namely, 145,000. But be that as it may, as was said by my colleague before me [Mr. PETERS], the development of the sorghum process has really placed the sugar industry of our country in the attitude of an infant industry, in so far as sorghum and beet sugar are concerned; so that it runs directly in conflict with the idea of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], for if I understood him correctly yesterday he claims that the doctrine of protection applies only to industries which are already so far developed that they can supply the demands of the people of this country.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. BAYNE. My claim was that the theory of protection applies in this way: However limited the industry, give it a fair trial; and if after fair trial it meets the wants of the country, then it is worthy of protection. I claim that the sugar industry has had a fair trial, and has failed to show any such result.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Very well; take that statement of the gentleman. Within two years this late process has been discovered, tested, and established as successful. Therefore, whatever may have been the experience with the sugar industry prior to that time, you now begin a new era; and I believe that the State of Kansas alone, if a proper duty be retained upon sugar, will within ten years be able to supply to our whole people all the sugar of that class which they can use.

Mr. BAYNE. How much did it produce last year?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not know, and I do not care. You might as well have asked when the telephone was invented, "How many telephones are in use?" The question in such a case would not be how many telephones were used, but whether the telephone had proved successful in transmitting sound. I do not care if there was but a single hogshead of sugar produced last year in Kansas. My colleague [Mr. FUNSTON] can give the exact figures.

Mr. FUNSTON. Two hundred and thirty-five thousand pounds were produced in three months of last year, at a profit of $15,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But as I said, that is an immaterial matter. The question is whether this new process, if properly nurtured, does not bid fair to supply the American market. I call the attention of gentlemen on the other side of the House to this fact—that precisely what is true as to the increased percentage of production from the sorghum cane is also true as to the increased production of saccharine matter from the sugar cane. I have not the least doubt that this new process will add about 20 per cent.—perhaps more, perhaps less—to the product from the Louisiana cane. But my point is this: enough has been developed, enough is to-day known, to justify the House in at least continuing the application of the doctrine and system of protection, as against this new-fangled theory of bounty, and in so adapting the duties under the doctrine of protection as to relieve such burdens as should be relieved and at the same time protect this industry.

As to "trusts," there is no man in this House who is more opposed to them than I am, as is very well known. Besides, any man who intelligently and really understands this doctrine of protection must see that it contains within itself the safeguard for the consumer and for the throttling of any "trust," in securing competition among manufacturers. I am ready to cut down the duty on the refined article to such an extent as will wholly destroy any possible "trust;" but I am not ready to break down an industry which affects the whole West and every farmer in it, which proposes to give to America in all decades to come what sugar it will need, and in that way prevent the continued payment of the many millions which in past years have been raised on imported sugar. A grander opportunity for diversifying agriculture, for opening a new, profitable, and certain crop to our farmers, has not occurred since the invention of the cotton-gin. And both as an advocate of the greatest of American industries and as a thorough protectionist and Republican, I am vigorously opposed to the bounty theory embodied in the amendment.

Mr. HOLMES. So far as concerns the question that has been raised in this discussion, of whether a man who advocates a particular amendment stands on the Republican platform, I wish to say this is not the time nor the place to discuss that proposition.

With respect to the merits of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I am opposed to any proposition that demands bounties for an industry of any kind, and particularly the sugar industry. I think I express the sentiment of the people of my district when I say we are not prepared to foster by a bounty one agricultural industry at the expense of another. I know of but two recognized principles in reference to this question—one is protection, the other is free trade. This matter of a bounty presents neither protection nor free trade; and while it may or may not be recognized in the Republican platform, I think such a system bad policy, bad ethics, and bad financial legislation. If the farmers of my State are to pay the farmers of Kansas or the sugar-growers of Louisiana or any other State a certain amount upon the beets or the sugar-cane which they raise, are we not entitled to a similar allowance for every bushel of wheat or oats that we raise? If bounties are to be paid on one branch of agricultural industry, are we not entitled to bounties on all? Will not the farmers who are expected to pay this bounty be the first to rise and say, "We want a bounty on everything we raise?"

The farmers of Kansas, we will say, get 2 cents a pound bounty on sugar. They get 2 cents protection by the tariff. That makes 4 cents. That makes it reasonable, if we consider the worth of property at all. In Louisiana they are raising sugar year by year. They are raising less now than in 1861 and 1862. The philosophy of protection has had no effect upon it. It is not an infant industry.

I introduced a bill at the beginning of Congress to put sugar on the free-list. I stand by that proposition now. I am in favor of it. It is no longer a question of protection. The gentlemen who are in favor of putting our flax on the free-list, as well as everything else we raise, should try free trade in reference to their particular productions; and if it works well let us try it still further.

Now, sir, I am opposed to all bounties upon agricultural products. It involves an evil we can not see the beginning or end of. I should like to agree with my able colleagues, Colonel HENDERSON and Governor GEAR, on this question, but I can not do so. I should regard it as a great evil to introduce a system of subsidies and bounties to foster the growth of our industries.

I say as soon as the surplus is gone, when there is no more surplus to provide bounties, it will be one of the crying questions of the hour how to get rid of them. If we give a bounty to the producers of sugar now, it will not be long before we will have other producers asking from the Congress of the United States bounties also upon their productions.

Another thing. This whole sugar industry is embodied in a trust. It has been denied there is any trust. Gentlemen get up here with countenances child-like and bland and deny the existence of any such trusts. They deny that the effect of those trusts is to establish a monopoly and make prices higher.

Now, sir, I know there are trusts, and every man of ordinary intelligence in this House and throughout the country knows there are trusts, and that there is no more gigantic monopoly than the sugar trust. It is gotten up for the benefit of twelve hundred planters in Louisiana. It is high time, therefore, we began to destroy that trust. It is time the House should put itself upon record against the continuance of that trust, and against the continuance of any of these trusts or combinations. It is time their influence over the people of the country should be put an end to.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not take the floor for the purpose of entering upon an elaborate discussion of the question before the House, but simply to correct some errors under which some gentlemen seem to be still laboring. I do not care to refer to the political feature of this discussion further than to say that in my judgment it will be a sorry day for the great American system of protection when we apply the bounty system to any of the industries of this country.

Some gentlemen seem to be laboring under the impression that as yet there have not been any developments arising from experimentation with sorghum which justifies the declaration that we can produce in this country sugar adequate in quantity for our home consumption. They forget that those results which promise the most grow out of experiments which have been commenced only in recent years.

The experiments with sorghum are of recent date. When Dr. Colyer was in the Agricultural Department he undertook experiments in that line. They were experiments simply in the laboratory of the Agricultural Department. They were commenced only in 1878 and continued by him up to 1882. They were followed by other experiments under Professor Wylie, if I remember aright. Those experiments were so promising that in 1885 Congress made an appropriation of $50,000 to continue them. The results of the experiments under that appropriation were so encouraging that some gentlemen engaged in the industry in my own State. They did not succeed, for they encountered the difficulty of extracting from the cane a sufficient quantity of the saccharine matter to make it profitable. Still Congress, following up the appropriation of 1885, made another appropriation in 1886 of $94,000 for further experimentation.

The present Commissioner of the Agricultural Department had given this subject the most careful attention. It was his judgment, and he did not hesitate to declare it, that by proper experiments processes could be discovered that would make sorghum sugar manufacture successful in this country. Hence when that $94,000 was appropriated his whole heart and intelligence were devoted to the accomplishment of that desired result.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MCKENNA. I move, by unanimous consent, that the gentleman be allowed to proceed until he has concluded his remarks.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RYAN. The commissioner abandoned the old process; and of the $94,000 he expended $60,000, or about that, in the State of Kansas. Much was expended in producing a diffusion battery and other machinery for experimental purposes.

He put in that establishment one of the most intelligent experts in this country with the most favorable results. It was developed by experiment there that, whereas in the past by other processes not more than 66 pounds of sugar could be made from a ton of cane, over 100 pounds could be made and was made, averaging, I believe, if I remember aright, for the entire season 115 pounds to the ton.

I want to call attention to the report made by this officer of the result of his experiments at the Fort Scott mill, under the administration of the present head of the Agricultural Department; and if he be at all reliable, if we can trust to the official information received from him, the question is settled that sorghum sugar can be profitably produced. I will then call attention to the report of Mr. Parkinson upon the subject, a most intelligent gentleman, who was at the head of that establishment. He who reads these reports will have no longer any doubts in his mind about the fact that the question of the profitable production of sorghum sugar in this country has been settled. Of course there have been many difficulties to encounter, and we will have yet many to encounter before we reach anything like perfection. In the first place, the industry has in this country very few skilled or trained men competent to take charge of a mill. You can not operate such an industry successfully without trained men, but that is a difficulty which in the very nature of things time will overcome.

There are some other difficulties. There is a large field for improvement of the machinery which has already produced the results to which I have referred, and further improvements will unquestionably be attained by experiments. Experiments in the development of the quality of the cane itself would be advantageous. These are desirable in order to attain the highest degree of success.

In an industry of this kind, in this crude condition, of this magnitude, of this complex character, it will take some years of scientific endeavor to develop it to a degree of perfection; but at a time when we have demonstrated that sugar can be made from sorghum profitably there ought not to be on the part of those who are in favor of protection to American industries any hesitation whatever in maintaining it among all the other industries of the country covered by the great national system of protection.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will call the attention of the committee to a portion of the report of Mr. Swenson, the intelligent expert who was sent out there by the Government, and whose skillful efforts produced the results very largely to which I have referred, and I shall ask the Clerk to read the marked portions, and hope my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] will listen, for I think he will not then repeat what he said a little while ago, that there was no evidence that we could produce sorghum sugar profitably in this country.

The Clerk read as follows:

Owing to the fact that we were unable to secure a sufficient supply of cane, the work progressed very irregularly. Only twice during the entire season was the battery kept in operation continuously for twenty hours, and during the sugar-making season the diffusion battery was emptied sixty-two times. This entailed no inconsiderable loss, amounting to from 1 to 2 tons of clean cane each time a stoppage occurred.

CANE WORKED FOR SUGAR.

The total amount of cane worked for sugar was 2,610 tons. In this is included all that was used for experiments in filtration and defecation during the first part of the season. I have no record of the exact amount lost in this way. The total amount of first sugar made was 235,476 pounds. This sugar was all washed, and polarized on an average 96 per cent. The total amount of molasses produced was 51,000 gallons.

TRIAL RUNS.

In order to ascertain as nearly as possible the average yield of sugar per ton of cane two trial runs were made.

FIRST TRIAL.

On September 15 a strike was made from 133 tons of clean cane. In order to obtain a better grain 2,600 pounds of sugar were added to the juice after it had been defecated; 2,200 pounds of juice were drawn from each cell.

The following is a record of this experiment:

Sucrose in mill, juice from chips	10
Glucose in mill, juice from chips	3.41
Solids not sugar, juice from chips	3.20
Ratio of sucrose to glucose	2.94
Co-efficient of purity	60.03
Sucrose in diffusion juice	7.91
Glucose in diffusion juice	2.60
Solids not sugar, diffusion juice	2.59
Ratio of sucrose to glucose	3.04
Co-efficient of purity	60.04
Sucrose in defecated juice	8.34
Glucose in defecated juice	2.4
Solids not sugar, defecated juice	2.46
Ratio of sucrose to glucose	3.47
Co-efficient of purity	63.6
Total weight of first sugar ..... pounds	17,608
Sugar added to juice ..... do	2,600
Total yield of first sugar ..... do	15,008
Total yield of second sugar ..... do	2,330
Total yield of molasses ..... gallons	2,230
Yield per ton:
First sugar ..... pounds	113
Second sugar ..... do	17.5
Molasses ..... gallons	15.5
First sugar polarized	93
Second sugar polarized	88.7

Temperature in battery was between 75° and 80° C.

SECOND TRIAL.

Eighty-six tons of clean cane were worked, 54 tons on October 1 and 32 tons on October 2. All was boiled in one strike. No analyses were made on October 2, and unfortunately the complete data can not therefore be given. The juice was not enriched, as in the previous trial.

The following are the results:

Yield of first sugar ..... pounds	9,222
Yield of second sugar ..... do	1,988
Yield of molasses ..... gallons	1,462
Yield per ton:
First sugar ..... pounds	108
Second sugar ..... do	23
Molasses ..... gallons	17
First sugar polarized	97
Second sugar polarized	88

AVERAGE YIELD OF SUGAR.

Making fair allowance for cane and juice lost in experiments during the first part of the season, the average yield of first sugars will be fully 100 pounds per ton, polarizing 97. A strike of average molasses boiled to string proof yielded 12½ per cent. of the weight of the masse cuite in sugar, containing 88 per cent. of sucrose. This is at the rate of 28 pounds per ton of cane. Had the entire crop been boiled for seconds the average yield per ton of cane would not have been less than 128 pounds of sugar and 16 gallons of molasses. From a financial standpoint, the advantage of working for seconds depends entirely on the sirup market. In my judgment it would not have paid this season, as the market is better than for years past. The entire product of 51,000 gallons has already been sold at a good price.

AVAILABLE SUGAR.

It is at once apparent that the old method of calculating available sugar must be abandoned. According to this rule there would be but 61.6 pounds available sugar per ton of cane in the diffusion juice of the first trial, when, as a matter of fact, 130½ pounds were obtained. It would therefore seem that instead of preventing an equal weight of cane-sugar from crystallizing, the glucose and other solids not sugar in the juice prevented only two-fifths of their weight of cane-sugar from crystallizing. This is also borne out by the data furnished by the analysis of the juices during the entire season.

CONCLUSIONS.

In reviewing the work the most important point suggested is the complete success of the experiments in demonstrating the commercial practicability of manufacturing sugar from sorghum cane.

2. That sugar was produced uniformly throughout the entire season.

3. That this was not due to any extraordinary content of sugar in the cane, but, on the contrary, the cane was much injured by severe drought and chinchbugs.

4. That the value of the sugar and molasses obtained this year per ton of sorghum cane will compare favorably with that of the highest yields obtained in Louisiana from sugar-cane; and, taking into consideration the much greater cost of the sugar-cane, and that it has no equivalent to the 2 bushels of seed yielded per ton of sorghum cane, also our much cheaper fuel, I say without hesitancy that sugar can be produced as cheaply in Kansas as in Louisiana.

M. SWENSON.

Now I call attention to the report of Mr. Parkinson. Here it is:

To the Board of Directors Parkinson Sugar Company:

GENTLEMEN: I respectfully submit for your consideration the following report of the operations of the works of your company for the season just closing:

It is provided in our contract with the United States Department of Agriculture that certain experiments in sugar-making shall be made by the Department with certain machinery of its own and at its own expense, using the company's plant and machinery. * * *

As you are aware, the crop of cane contracted for last spring was very much less than the capacity of our works to consume. It was considered prudent to limit our danger from loss, by reason of the experimental nature of the work, and at the same time to have sufficient cane to determine thoroughly the value of the work on a practical manufacturing basis. This has been done, though it is now apparent that had the crop been twice as large, the expenses for working it would have been relatively much less. Indeed, a crop double the size of the one just finished could have been worked in about the same time, and at a comparatively trifling additional expense.

The plans, methods, and processes which have made the work of the season successful beyond our most sanguine expectations were adopted early in the season, so that the risks incident to experiments taken into account when contracting for a crop were reduced to the minimum. The fact that at least a portion of these highly successful processes were not tried and adopted last season was no fault of your company, nor of any one connected with this season's work.

To arrive at the cost per ton of cane worked, let us take the working of a single average day, when in full operation, and apart from the cost of experiments referred to.

The capacity of our factory, aside from deficient centrifugals, is limited to the capacity of the diffusion battery. Working twenty-two hours per day, this battery can comfortably handle 135 tons of chip or cleaned cane. This represents a capacity of field cane, or cane with seed tops and blades, of about 170 tons. To handle this, aside from curing and handling seed, cost us per day of twenty-two hours, when running regularly, as follows:

1 weighmaster, at $2	$2.00
1 team, pulling cane onto storage racks, at $2.50	2.50
5 men, unloading and getting cane to cutters, 22 hours, at 12½ cents	13.75
1 man, cutting machine, at 15 cents	3.30
1 man, cleaning machine, at 12½ cents	2.75
1 man, grinder, etc., at 15 cents	3.30
1 man, oiler, at 15 cents	3.30
3 men, diffusion battery, 1 at car and 2 above, at 12½ cents	8.25
1 man, diffusion battery, director of battery, at 20 cents	4.40
2 men, defecating, at 15 cents	6.60
2 men, double effects, at 15 cents	6.60
1 man, strike-pan, at $5	5.00
1 man, hot room, at 12½ cents	2.75
1 man, barreler, at 12½ cents	2.75
2 men, centrifugals, at 15 cents	6.60
1 man, machinist, at $3	3.00
2 men, engineers, at 20 cents	4.40
5 men, firemen, at 15 cents	16.50
2 men, roustabouts, at 12½ cents	5.50
1 man, water-boy	2.00
1 man, night watch	1.50
2 men, foremen, at $2.50	5.00
Total cost of labor	111.75
Oil, etc	2.50
Coal, 23 tons slack, at 90 cents	20.70
Total	134.75

This makes the cost of working a ton of cleaned cane, with a factory of the capacity of ours, about $1 per ton for labor and fuel, or 90 cents per ton of field cane. The cost per ton for salaries, insurance, wear and tear, etc., must depend, of course, not only upon the size of the salaries and other general expenses, but the number of tons worked. This plant, rated as above, is capable, in seventy days, of working 9,450 tons of chips, or 11,900 tons of field cane. There is necessarily considerable expense in preparing for the season's work, and again in closing up. Allowing liberally for this and for the proper management and control of the works, we may still bring our total expenses, outside the cost of labor and fuel, at $1 per ton upon the above basis. Add to this the cost of labor and fuel, and we have $2 per ton as the total cost per ton of working cleaned cane.

These figures are fully verified by our pay-rolls, coal bills, and other expenses while working to our capacity during the season, separated from expenditures in the completion and changing of machinery directly connected with experiments made. And to work a factory with a capacity at least one-half greater than this one would require very little additional expense except in the matter of fuel, and that would be relatively less. It seems to me a very conservative basis, with a factory of the capacity of ours, to place the actual cost of manufacture at $2 per ton of cane; and with such a factory as I have indicated, and with a season of, say, seventy days, it is safe to place the cost of manufacture at considerably less than that sum. It requires but little figuring upon this basis, and with the cost of cane at $2 per ton, and the yield of cane and product secured this year, to show that we have here developed a business of great interest and profit to our State and nation.

To run a factory at the maximum profit it must be operated constantly during the working season. The loss this season by reason of the irregular operation of the factory for the want of sufficient cane was very considerable. During the whole season the factory was operated but three whole days of twenty-two hours each. Some idea of the loss from this source may be gathered from the fact that not less than 2 tons of chips were lost at each break in the operation of the diffusion battery. Sixty-five such breaks or stoppages were made while running for sugar. With a larger crop of cane and better arrangements for delivery upon the part of the larger contractors, but little or no difficulty from this source need be apprehended in the future.

	Tons.
Total cane bought	3,840
Total seed-tops bought	437
Total field cane	4,277

This represents the crop, less about 30 tons of seed-tops yet to come in, from about 450 acres of land. There were something over 500 acres planted. Some of it failed to come at all, some "fell upon the rocky places, where they had not much earth, and when the sun was risen they were scorched;" so that, as nearly we can estimate, about 450 acres of cane were actually harvested and delivered at the works. This would make the average yield of cane 9½ tons per acre, or $19 per acre in dollars and cents. * * *

Of the total cane worked, 162 tons were consumed in experiments with our cutters and cleaning machinery before the cane was ripe enough for use for either sirup or sugar. No product whatever, not even seed, was saved from this, nor from 10 tons additional brought in since the factory closed down. About 300 tons of mostly down and inferior cane was worked in the early part of the season on the crushers, and without diffusion. The only product from this was molasses, and of that but a small quantity. About 375 tons were also worked for molasses only on the diffusion battery. This, with the exception of 50 tons at the close of the season, and which came in too irregularly to be worked for sugar, was worked before the sugar season began, and comprised such down patches and poorer quality of cane as could be gathered, mainly on the lands belonging to the company. It was an open question whether very poor cane could be worked successfully, even for sirups, on a diffusion battery. Nothing in this direction had hitherto been attempted. The total yield of molasses from this source, and from which no sugar has been taken, is 4,157 gallons. From this are sold 3,157 gallons, for $726.71 net. The remaining 1,000 gallons are still on hand, and are worth 25 cents per gallon.

	Tons.
Deducting from total tonnage, less seed	3,840
Amount not worked for sugar	897
We have total cane and leaves for sugar	2,943

The total number of diffusion cells worked for sugar is 2,643. The weight of a cell of chips is 1,975 pounds. With this as a basis there was worked by diffusion for sugar 2,610 tons of clean cane as it entered the cells. Deducting this from 2,943 tons of cane with leaves and blades, and we have 333 tons of leaves and blades. The latter are to us a dead loss. A small portion has been hauled away by farmers for feed, but the bulk of this large tonnage is now fit only for manure. This waste was considerably increased by the failure of our separating-machines, especially in the early part of the season, to properly discharge their duties. This whole subject was new; machines had to be devised, and their adjustment, which is not yet perfect, caused considerable loss of cane. The weight of blades and leaves will not be far from 10 per cent. of field cane. For either feed or fuel, especially where the latter is much of an object, the blades can be utilized so as to at least cover their own cost. At present we figure the loss from this source to seed account.

SEED.

There have been delivered of seed tops 437 tons. As nearly as we can estimate, there are yet to be delivered 30 tons, making in all 467 tons. From the best calculations we can make, and judging from our experience in former years, seed yields about 70 per cent. of the weight of heads, as bought in over the scales, in cleaned seed. Putting it at 60 per cent., and with 56 pounds to the bushel, we shall have 10,000 bushels of cleaned seed. A portion of this, estimated at 1,000 bushels, has, at considerable additional expense, been picked over by hand, head by head, tied into small bundles, and hung up in the dry. This has been done to provide ourselves with pure seed of the different varieties for planting, and to supply a probable want in the same direction from others. For this hand-picked seed we expect to get not less than $2 per bushel. The cost of handling the seed has not been kept separate from the cost of running the factory. The total cost of curing, stacking, and hand-picking will not be far from $700, fully $200 of which has been expended in securing pure and perfectly cured seed for ourselves and others willing to pay the extra price. To thrash and prepare the seed for market the seed will cost about 6 cents per bushel additional. I estimate that we shall get for our seed crop $7,000 net. There will be left of seed tops, after thrashing, fully 100 tons. These are good for feed or fuel.

SIRUPS.

The bulk of our sirups are stored in the large cistern or cellar under the warehouse. The amount on hand we estimate at 50,000 gallons. This includes the whole crop, except the 3,157 gallons sold in early part of season. Of this we have sold, to be delivered within thirty days, and one car-load of which has already gone, 250 barrels, or about 12,500 gallons, at a price that will net us here 20 cents. This sale includes the bulk of our poorest sirups. I think we can safely estimate our sirup product, exclusive of packages, at $10,000. Considering the condition of our factory for work in cold weather, and the limited capacity of our centrifugal machinery, I recommend their sale, without boiling for seconds.

W. L. PARKINSON.

Now listen to extracts from the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture upon the subject:

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE INDUSTRY.

The experiments in making sugar from sorghum, which, as above shown, have been in progress for several years at the expense of private capital and the United States Department of Agriculture, have this year reached so favorable results as to place the manufacture of sorghum sugar on the basis of a profitable business.

The success has been due to, first, the almost complete extraction of the sugars from the cane by the diffusion process; second, the prompt and proper treatment of the juice in defecating and evaporating; third, the efficient manner in which the sugar was boiled to grain in the strike-pan. That these results may be duplicated and improved upon will be readily understood from the showing made in Mr. Parkinson's report, and the descriptions of methods and processes used, and the discussion of the same as they appear in the subsequent pages of this paper.

* * * * * * *

THE YIELD OBTAINED AT FORT SCOTT.

The actual yield obtained was 234,607 pounds of first sugar, from 2,501 cells. If, now, the cell be taken as a ton, the yield of first sugar was 234,607 ÷ 2,501 = 93.8 pounds. Enough of the molasses was reboiled for a second crop of crystals, and the sugar separated, to ascertain that 15 to 20 pounds per ton of cane represented could be obtained. Calling it 15, we have for the entire yield 93.8 + 15 = 108.8 pounds per ton of cleaned cane. This is a larger yield than is obtainable according to the heretofore accepted theory. There is some uncertainty about the weight of a cell, which may account for the discrepancy between the theoretical and the actual results. It is possible, however, that the theory may need reconstruction. In any case the yield actually obtained is most gratifying.

I have made no mention in the above of the exceptionally large yields of some special strikes made during the season. One strike gave 109 pounds of merchantable sugar for each cellful of chips. The seconds from this would doubtless have brought the yield up to 130 pounds. But the general reader and the prospective manufacturer are more interested in average than in special results. It seems safe to assume that a mean of 100 pounds of sugar and 12 gallons of molasses can be made from each ton of cleaned sorghum cane of average richness.

Science suggests several methods for the complete separation of the cane sugar from the grape sugar and the "not sugar," and further experiments in this direction should be the work of the near future. As yet almost nothing has been done towards the development of methods of separating the grape sugar from the not sugar. This subject presents a most inviting field for the chemist.

THE FUTURE OF THE SORGHUM-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The sorghum-sugar industry now seems to have an assured future. The quantities of sugar and molasses and other valuable products obtained from each ton of the cane and from each acre of land well remunerate the farmer for his crop and the manufacturer for his investment and the labor and skill required to operate the factory.

An acre of land cultivated in sorghum yields a greater tonnage of valuable products than in any other crop, with the possible exception of hay. Under ordinary methods of cultivation, 10 tons of cleaned cane per acre is somewhat above the average, but the larger varieties often exceed 12, while the small Early Amber sometimes goes below 8 tons per acre. Let 7½ tons of cleaned cane per acre be assumed for the illustration. This corresponds to a gross yield of 10 tons for the farmer, and at $2 per ton gives him $20 per acre for his crop. These 7½ tons of clean cane will yield—

	Pounds.
Sugar	750
Molasses	1,000
Seed	900
Fodder (green leaves)	1,500
Exhausted chips (dried)	1,500
Total	5,650

The first three items, which are as likely to be transported as wheat or corn, aggregate 2,650 pounds per acre.

Sorghum will yield 7½ tons of cleaned cane per acre more surely than corn will yield 30 bushels or wheat 15 bushels per acre.

In the comparison, then, of products which bear transportation, these crops stand as follows:

Sorghum, at 7½ tons, 2,650 pounds per acre.
Corn, at 30 bushels, 1,680 pounds per acre.
Wheat, at 15 bushels, 900 pounds per acre.

The sugar from the sorghum is worth, say, 5 cents per pound; the molasses, 1¾ cents per pound; the seed, one-half cent per pound.

The products give market values as follows:

750 pounds of sugar, at, say, 5 cents	$37.50
1,000 pounds molasses, at, say, 1¾ cents	17.50
900 pounds seeds, at, say, one-half cent	4.50
Total value of sorghum, less fodder	59.50
The corn crop gives 1,680 pounds, at one-half cent	7.40
The wheat crop gives 900 pounds, at 1 cent	9.00

Thus it will be seen that the sorghum yields to the farmer more than twice as much per acre as either of the leading cereals, and as a gross product of agriculture and manufacture on our own soil more than six times as much per acre as is usually realized from either of these standard crops.

In order to use to the best advantage the services of the specialists of the business, it has been proposed to establish at convenient places auxiliary factories which shall carry the processes so far as to prepare sirup for the strike-pan. This sirup will be stored in suitable tanks or cisterns and worked for sugar after the close of the season for handling cane. In this way the working season for the central factory may be prolonged to occupy almost the entire year. The auxiliary factories will cost about half or two-thirds as much as the complete factory, capable of taking care of the same amount of cane. As thus arranged, the central factory will, in addition to its own regular season's work, take care of the sirup from two or three of these sirup factories.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, here is the most satisfactory evidence regarding the success of the sorghum-sugar industry. The conclusion of Mr. Swenson is that the experiments have developed the fact that sorghum sugar can be made as profitable as cane sugar is made in New Orleans, and perhaps more so. Now this, you must bear in mind, gentlemen, is but the discovery of yesterday as it were. As yet there has been no time or opportunity for further development; no time or opportunity for the investment of capital in this enterprise. Capital will be slow to engage in an enterprise and an industry of that kind, even with the fact scientifically ascertained that sugar can be made profitably from sorghum. Capital is timid. It always invests in new enterprises slowly and with reluctance. It finds difficulties here to encounter. It finds it difficult in this industry to get skilled labor to operate the mills. But capital will in due time engage in this enterprise; it will engage in it when the conditions of protection are stable and will warrant and invite the investment of capital. But so long as the friends of protection are assailing this industry on the one hand and the enemies of protection are in power on the other we can not expect capital to engage in it.

Putting sugar on the free-list is fatal to the industry. Isolating it from all the other industries protected by a tariff and applying to it the bounty system exposes it to constant menace. You would scarcely embark with fair success upon the manufacture before a howl would go up from the consumers for a repeal of the bounty. It would at once become the foot-ball of politics. That doubtful and uncertain sort of protection would be fatal to it, for capital would not touch it. If it is worthy of the fostering care of Government at all it should be left to the guardianship of the same protective system that fosters all the other industries of our country. If not, then it should go upon the free-list. I repeat, it has been demonstrated that sorghum sugar can be made in this country a great commercial success. I confidently look for the States of Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, and Kansas to manufacture sugar for the world ten years hence. It is certain to be a source of profit to the farmers of those States beyond all calculation, and I regard it as one of the most important objects to which Government can extend aid in this country, for it will give to agriculture millions of dollars annually, and employment to thousands upon thousands of our people.

Now we are paying over a hundred millions annually to other countries for sugar. As we increase in population our consumption increases and the more we pay to other countries. If we are true to our own agriculture, if we are true to this industry, if we are true to ourselves, the time is near at hand when those millions will be paid to our own farmers and laborers instead of, as now, to the farmers and laborers of foreign countries.

The Mills bill strikes a vicious blow at all agricultural products except this and rice. To the extent this industry, of such vast promise, needs protection, let it be in common with all our other great industries by the American system of tariff protection. Doubtless the present tariff on sugar is far above protection point. Let us then ascertain the exact rate of duty required for its protection and then make that rate the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is next on the list.

Mr. LAIRD. I do not care to speak at present.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like about fifteen minutes. I do not think I shall occupy all that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], who is not now in his seat, proposed to put an interpretation upon the platform adopted in Chicago. To that interpretation I object. I dissent from his construction entirely. It is his privilege, as it is that of every American citizen, to put his own construction upon that platform and upon everything else. I for one accord the largest liberty upon these subjects. But if the platform of the Republican party adopted at Chicago means anything it means substantially to support the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. One of the propositions in that platform is that the Republican party declares itself in favor of such revision of the tariff as releases from import duties articles of foreign production except the luxuries, the like of which can not be produced at home. Sugar is just one of those things.

Mr. WEAVER. Can not we produce it?

Mr. BAYNE. We can not produce it in anything like adequate quantities. We can produce tea here in a hot-house; but does any one pretend to say that because we can produce tea in a hot-house, therefore we will protect it, and make it pay a duty?

Mr. WEAVER. Tea is not an established industry; sugar is.

Mr. BAYNE. Sugar is an established industry only in the sense of being a partially established industry, one that has had a long trial, and yet we have failed to produce it to such an extent as to supply the wants of the American people. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Is tin-plate an established industry?

Mr. DINGLEY. It was until the duty was reduced.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Is it protected?

Mr. BAYNE. No; because the duty is too low. We can produce all the tin-plate in this country that the American people will consume if you will put the duty up to 2.2 cents per pound.

Mr. WEAVER. Could we not do the same thing on sugar?

Mr. BAYNE. No; not even if you put the duty up to 5 cents a pound. I will tell you why. I was in favor of a bounty on sugar, and I am still in favor of it. I was in favor of that bounty in the interest of California, Kansas, and Louisiana. I did not want to deprive the industry in either of those States of the advantage which it is deriving now from the protective tariff. I prefer giving that industry a bounty in those States in order that it may build itself up; make itself a strong industry, if it lies in the power of the people of this country to make it such. But can it be made such since we have got down to this proposition? I do not believe you will ever make the sugar industry in this country one that will supply the wants of the American people, though you may place the tariff at 4, 5, or 6 cents per pound and pay a bounty as large almost as you can think of, a bounty of 4 or 5 cents a pound. I do not believe it can be done in this country. Why? Because there is a law of nature intervening between that industry and its prosperity in this country which no act of Congress can overrule. I had occasion in 1883, being one of the very few members here who were in favor of free sugar, to say that that was one thing settled, so far as this matter is concerned, by law of nature, and no act of Congress can overcome that law.

Now, take the case of Florida, cited by my colleague [Mr. KELLEY]. You plant cane in Florida. Perhaps Florida is more favored than Louisiana. I do not know whether it is or not; but cane will live there three or four years.

What is the average life of the cane in Louisiana? Three years. What do you ascertain when you go across to the little island of Cuba? You will find that the average of the cane there is eighteen years.

Mr. GEAR. The average life of the cane in Louisiana is three years, unless interrupted by frosts or by wet spells.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from Iowa tells me that the average life of the cane in Louisiana is three years, unless interrupted by frosts or wet weather. What is the average life of the cane in Florida? Three or four years, perhaps a little more favorably adapted to the culture than Louisiana. The average life in Cuba I have shown is eighteen years.

Now what is the condition of that industry in Cuba? I am told but one-twentieth of the lands of Cuba, susceptible of cultivation for the production of this cane for the manufacture of sugar, is in cultivation; and that nineteen-twentieths of that island susceptible of the cultivation of cane remains uncultivated. Now what folly does it seem to talk of producing cane in Louisiana or Florida, where the average life of the cane is but three or four years at best, and of producing sugar from sorghum or from beets in this country when but one-twentieth of the island of Cuba adapted to the cultivation of sugar is being worked, and nineteen-twentieths of it susceptible of cultivation, has not been touched! You are simply trying to controvert wholly a law of nature by a law of Congress. It is antagonizing a law of nature by a law of Congress. The effort will prove utterly futile. Notwithstanding my assertion that it will prove utterly futile, that there is no hope of producing the sugar we consume, I was willing to pay a bounty to the people of Louisiana, California, and Kansas on the sugar they produce and give them a chance to build up that industry for the future; but I do not think that the sugar manufacturer of California, the big sugar manufacturer of California, ever intends to make his sugar out of the product of the beet of California. Your big sugar manufacturer of California has gone to Philadelphia and has located and established there. Does he intend to take the beet all the way from California around to Philadelphia and there manufacture it into sugar?

Would he not save the cost of transportation if he put that plant in California and manufactured his sugar there? Why, it is evident that he is not placing his reliance upon the beet of California. The man who knows more about sugar-making than perhaps any other man in California, and far more than any man upon this floor, takes his big five-million plant away from California and locates it in Philadelphia. Where is he going to get the sugar that he proposes to refine? Not from California, but from Cuba and the Sandwich Islands and other countries that export it to us.

Mr. MCKENNA. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENNA. Do you think that Mr. Spreckels is such an awful ass as to put $500,000 into a factory that he does not expect to use?

Mr. BAYNE. I understand he has put five millions into a plant in Philadelphia.

Mr. MCKENNA. And he expects to use that, if you will permit him. He has taken $5,000,000 to your State, which has been built up to prosperity under the protective system, and now one of its Representatives here is among the first to strike a blow at this industry.

Mr. BAYNE. I did not yield for a speech. I say the fact that he has put that plant in Philadelphia shows that he intends to manufacture sugar obtained from the cane of Cuba and the Sandwich Islands and other countries from which we import sugar. That is obviously his intention, because I can not believe, as my friend suggests, that Mr. Spreckels would be such an ass as to put up a costly plant of that kind in Philadelphia and bring the beets all the way from California to Philadelphia to manufacture them there into sugar, thus incurring the vast cost of transporting them across the continent, when he might avoid it by manufacturing them where they are grown. It is perfectly obvious that he does not intend to depend upon California for his material.

Mr. MCKENNA. He does not have to do that. There is enough sugar beet produced in California to employ his factory there also. The great trouble with the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that he will not receive proof of anything. If anybody should tell him that the Pacific Ocean sloshes on the western side of the continent he would probably decline to believe it or to accept proof of the fact.

Mr. BAYNE. We are altogether without proof. We have had sugar bounties paid in Iowa for several years; we have bounties paid in New Jersey for a number of years; we have had a bounty of 2 cents a pound in Kansas for I do not know how many years.

Mr. PETERS. Sixteen months.

Mr. BAYNE. Sixteen months; is that all? Well, we have had this sugar bounty paid in several States, and yet the sugar industry of New Jersey is languishing.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do you want to know the reason?

Mr. BAYNE. No, I do not want to know the reason. [Laughter.] I know the fact. The sugar industry of New Jersey, I say, is languishing; the sugar industry of Iowa amounts to nothing; the sugar industry of Kansas is full of promise and hope, as described by the worthy Representatives of that State upon this floor, but the sugar industry of Kansas will "peter out" just as the sugar industry of New Jersey has done, and just as the sugar industry of Iowa has done.

Mr. KERR. I wish to say——

Mr. BAYNE. Well, I "wish to say," too, and I have the floor. [Laughter.] The reason is that the attempt to nourish the sugar industry by protection, and the attempt to build it up by the aid of experimental schools and appropriations from the Treasury for the purpose of ascertaining the best methods of taking the saccharine matter out of the beet or the sorghum—all these are attempts to overthrow a law of nature. The law of nature is that the cane plant will grow better in a warm climate like Cuba or the Sandwich Islands, will have a longer life, and will yield far more saccharine matter than it will in this country. That is nature's law and you can not overcome it, and it is perfect folly to attempt to do so.

A MEMBER. Then how did they succeed in making sugar in France and Germany and other countries of Europe?

Mr. BAYNE. Simply because labor over there was so cheap that they could afford to make sugar at almost any disadvantage, and yet supply their own wants.

Mr. GAY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes.

Mr. GAY. Does the law of nature in Russia prevent the successful cultivation of the beet, and the successful manufacture of beet sugar?

Mr. BAYNE. I think not.

Mr. GAY. Have we any climate in the United States, from East to West, within the vast range of our territory, that is not more desirable for almost any article of cultivation than the climate of Russia?

Mr. BAYNE. I believe that our climate is altogether more favorable to the production of the beet and sorghum, and of other things also. I fully agree to that. But it will be borne in mind that Russia gave a bounty.

We are all aware that Russia gave a bounty, Germany gave a bounty, France gave a bounty. The sugar industry in each of those countries has been fostered for a great many years by bounties, and by means of this encouragement large quantities of sugar have been produced, France and Germany actually exporting sugar. But it should be remembered that the geographical position of those countries is such that they can not avail themselves, as we can, of proximity to the Island of Cuba, to the Sandwich Islands, and points in the South American States where the cane grows and has long life, and where the saccharine matter can be obtained with infinitely less labor and cost. By reason of our proximity to the Island of Cuba we can readily obtain from that island the raw material; or if we reduce the tariff duties as proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, we can import sugar so that it can be supplied to the American consumer at a very low figure.

Mr. GAY. Is the gentleman aware that the Island of Cuba has never produced one-half of the amount of the consumption of the United States?

Mr. BAYNE. I believe that is the fact; but I am told (though I may be wrong about this) that of the land adapted to sugar production in Cuba not more than one-twentieth is in a state of cultivation.

Mr. GAY. Do you believe in building up the Island of Cuba at the expense of the sugar-producer of America?

Mr. BAYNE. I have said over and over again that, although I believe we can never succeed in producing sugar enough in this country to supply our own wants, I do not wish to abandon the sugar industry in Louisiana or Kansas or California. I want to pay that industry a bounty of 2 cents a pound. If gentlemen representing those States say 2 cent will not be enough, I am willing to give 2½ cents a pound, or if that is not enough, 3 cents a pound.

Mr. WILKINSON. The gentleman is very generous!

Mr. BAYNE. I do not wish to abandon the sugar industry of the United States. I do not wish to do anything prejudicial to the prosperity of Louisiana or Kansas or California. I want to strike down no industry. But I do not want the people of the United States to continue to be taxed to the amount of $60,000,000 a year for the purpose of protecting one-eleventh of the sugar that is consumed in this country. That is not in the line of the theory of protection at all. The theory of protection is that the protected industry must either be able to supply the home demand, or must be of such a character that it may within a reasonable time be so built up and strengthened as to be able to supply the domestic consumption.

Mr. KERR. Does any government ever give bounties except with the view of creating a permanent source of supply of the particular article?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know whether any government ever does that or not; it does not make any difference to me. I am not guided by what may have been done.

Mr. KERR. If the gentleman does not believe we can ever produce in this country our own supply of sugar why should he propose to begin now a system of bounties, when according to his own doctrine it will be a waste of money?

Mr. BAYNE. Because these people think they can build up their industries; they promise that they will do so, and I want to give them a chance. It is fair to keep faith with them in this respect, and I want to do so.

Talking about bounties, I want to say that a great many of us seem to be disposed to give bounties in certain directions. We have been voting, I do not know how many years (I am not responsible for it), in favor of giving bounties to the shipping industries of the country.

Mr. KERR. Because——

Mr. BAYNE. Never mind; I know the reason why. We have voted bounties, as suggested yesterday by my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT], to the fishing industry. We seem to have an inclination to give bounties in different directions.

A MEMBER. A bounty was given on salt in Michigan.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes; a bounty was given in Michigan for the production of salt.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. Just one word more. While I do not object to a bounty, I do object to compelling the people of this country to pay upon sugar $60,000,000 of taxation which ought not to be imposed upon them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to submit any remarks at this time on the political aspect of this question, nor as to what is the proper construction of the Republican platform. I leave that for the present to my venerable friend from Pennsylvania, Judge KELLEY, and to the experienced and distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and to the various gentlemen on the other side who have ranged themselves under the hostile banners of those two eminent and redoubtable leaders. When they settle their family difficulty among themselves and agree upon the proper interpretation of their platform, then possibly we may desire to discuss it.

The sugar tariff as a business proposition is an important matter. There are several observations I desire to submit before this debate is ended. The sugar industries stand in a peculiar relation. We raise in America, in the State of Louisiana, a certain amount of sugar, I presume fairly to be estimated at about 9 per cent. of what is used by our people. We import under our reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands about 8 per cent. of the amount used in America. And we import, subject to duty, 83 per cent.

I do not mean to say that these figures are absolutely accurate, but they are approximately so. The amount of duty paid by the American people last year was over fifty-six millions of dollars ($56,515,601.57).

Now that is only one-half of this question, large as that is. On the other hand, every pound of sugar imported into America upon which duty is paid is raw sugar. The present schedule was so framed that no sugar is imported in its refined state. The importation of refined sugar is so small as to be comparatively nothing.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will not that be the result of the bill framed by the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The schedule in the present law remains untouched in its nature by the Mills bill. The sugars upon which duty is paid are imported in their raw state and are refined in America.

The sugar-refining business, therefore, is a very large industry, in which many millions of dollars have been invested.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will not the margin between raw and refined sugar which exists under the present law be materially diminished by the Mills bill, so that there may be imports of refined sugar?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not believe there would be such imports under the schedule framed here. Is not the margin left so that there would be no imports?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is conjectural. We materially reduce the margin, but whether we reduce it enough to permit imports remains to be seen. There can be if we reduce the margin. We have reduced the margin $1 a barrel.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I was going on to say that on the sugar question the first half is different from the second half; the interest of Louisiana and the southern portions of America in the production of cane sugar is entirely different from the interest of sugar refineries, which under our tariff is very large. Many millions of dollars are invested in these refineries. They employ a large number of workmen. To each of these two halves of this question are attached incidental questions of great complexity.

Mr. GEAR. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Not now. The agricultural side of this question is that contingent possibility of great increase in the production of sugar in Louisiana, Texas, and Florida, by the growth of cane, the great increase under scientific researches and industrial improvement by the culture of sorghum, which can be raised in all parts of America, and the still more promising possibility growing out of beet culture in California and elsewhere. Each of these affects a large part of the American agricultural population.

To the other half of this question is attached the fact that there is indubitably a compact trust of great power, by means of which a tax can be laid on the American consumers of sugar, which results in a large profit to the trust and a considerable addition to the burden of the American people. Therefore, when the Committee of the Whole comes to consider this question, it has to consider it in the light of these various aspects. It is one, therefore, I hope outside, as it struck the Committee on Ways and Means and strikes me this afternoon, of the temporary struggles of contending parties and beyond the new sectional aspect of particular agricultural interests alone, although this is most important. It is to be considered in a broader view, and our action taken with a purpose to do what is the best under all the circumstances surrounding Congress now.

We can not shut our eyes to the fact, however much we may dispute about it here in the committee, that there are annoyances, inequalities, and burdens to the manufacturers of America growing out of this tariff; and that there are burdens which we ought to remove from other industries. We can not shut our eyes to the fact that the various organizations of labor in this country have grown up out of the spirit of discontent and restlessness because of the present condition of affairs.

Now, to take the entire $56,000,000, which is the net revenue from sugar, and the $31,000,000 of revenue, which is about that derived from tobacco, making $87,000,000 in all, absolutely renders this Congress unable to take any burden elsewhere off the manufacturers of America, or give relief to the tax-payers and consumers in any other direction, and thus remedy any just cause of discontent that labor which has organized itself into these bodies may have. It necessarily postpones for the present, if it does not indefinitely put off the day of, a true revision of the tariff.

It, therefore, was impossible, in our view of the case, to take all these duties off. It seemed unjust to do it in the light of the teachings of the last twenty-seven years with justice to the interests of the sugar refiners. It was impossible to do it in justice, in view of the teachings of years past, to the sugar producers of Louisiana; but higher than either of these interests in the minds of some of us, it was impossible to do it without deliberately determining to leave this whole tariff untouched, including all of its inequalities, exactions, and burdens, exactly as it now stands, and have all hope of any revision postponed, by the simple reduction from the public revenue of this $56,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that the gentleman be permitted to proceed without interruption.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I should like to have a few moments longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from Kentucky will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. For this does not light a single furnace fire; it does not put into operation a single wheel; it does not give a single hour of added labor to the wage-earner; it is simply a reduction of revenue by so much by a reduction of taxation. Of course it is a relief to the tax-payers of the amount of the duty, for indubitably the duty on sugar is added to the cost of the sugar; and it would be, without that duty, cheaper, unless the destruction, if that would follow, of our sugar refineries or of our sugar-producing interests in the country might thereby, by the want of, or by the lessening of, competition, raise temporarily the price we might have to pay to those who produce and refine it.

But this would be all. Undoubtedly it would to that extent tend to relieve; and that is the whole extent of the relief it would afford. It is therefore a question when we come to make sugar free, as to whether the American Congress will relieve the consumers of the country by no other possible remedy; whether it will remove from the manufacturers, who have to pay enormous duties for the crude material, that duty which prevents them from competition with the other foreign producers. We believed, we now believe, that as there must come into the market, as there must be used by the American citizens, a certain amount of finished product, that the true wisdom for this Congress, seeking to reduce the public revenues, was to let our system be so altered with such moderate, conservative, and cautious changes, as would admit into our country the crude material rather than the finished product, so that the American worker could take that crude material and fashion it into the finished fabric; and that the profit of that manufacture should go to the American manufacturer, rather than to continue this system unchanged, by which the crude material is largely excluded and the finished product largely imported, whereby the American workingman does not get the benefit of that much labor, and the American manufacturer is cut off from the profit of that much manufacture, while the American consumer pays the difference between that which may be cheaply and profitably manufactured here in America and what he has to pay by reason of the duty and increased cost. Our proposition all through runs in that direction.

Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, and all propositions tending to free sugar, run in precisely the opposite direction. Whether you call it a tariff for revenue only, or by whatever name you choose to designate it, whatever political figure it may cut in the canvass as a business proposition, the proposition of the Ways and Means Committee is, so far as the revision goes, whatever distance it goes, which is but a short distance, in the direction of furnishing to the American manufacturer the crude material which he must work up into the finished product, that thereby he may become prosperous, that thereby the added labor may be furnished to the wage-workers of America; and as the manufacturer becomes prosperous, and the laborer becomes prosperous and contented, more material will be needed.

That material the American producer will find a market for. The man in America who has the material to sell can sell it to no one but a prosperous manufacturer. There can be no prosperous manufacturer without contented labor, so that our recommendation is in the line of prosperous manufactories built on cheap raw material for the purpose of furnishing to the American laborer and the American producer of raw material a stable, a constant, and a profitable market. The proposition on the other side leads in precisely the opposite direction.

Therefore the consideration of the duty imposed on sugar raises the whole issue as to the proper methods of tariff taxation, and, indeed, of all national taxation. It raises not only the question as to the effect of this tax upon sugar, but it forces upon us a consideration of the burden of this tax as compared to other taxes which must either be substituted or maintained in order to make up for the loss of revenue which the repeal of this tax would bring about.

It is unquestionably true that there should be and will be an abatement of taxation in order that the present excess of revenue may cease, that the expenditures may be more carefully revised, and that there shall be no idle accumulation in the public Treasury. But in the consideration of the method of such reduction of revenue it is important to consider the burden of each tax, and to discriminate among all the taxes now imposed, in order that the relief given shall not be limited only to the sum of the tax now paid, and which the Government receives, but may also relieve the people from a heavy tax which the people now pay, but which the Government does not receive.

Every tax, no matter on what levied or how collected, must be paid by the productive industry of the country. It must also be paid out of the current product; it is so much taken from the income—the reward of labor of each year—and must be subtracted from that gross income before the support of the people is taken therefrom. To whomsoever paid, whether to the Government, to the manufacturer, or by some mysterious process of distribution divided among the Government, the manufacturer, the importer, the laborer, and the consumer, it must be deducted from the income produced by labor before any part of that income can be applied to either the necessities or comforts of life.

No tax is a blessing—every tax is a burden; and the only possible defense for the exercise of the sovereign power of taxation is the inexorable demand of public necessity. The money must be absolutely needed for governmental purposes, and as the amount thus needed can be raised in the end only by taxation, such taxes ought to be laid as will bear with the greatest impartiality and uniformity and the least burden. The duty upon sugar is a tax. The Louisiana sugar being about 9 per cent. of the quantity used in America, the burden of this tax can be correctly estimated and exactly measured.

This tax practically imposes no incidental and additional burdens which unjustly weigh upon the payers of the taxes, imposed in reality for the benefit of classes and to aid other and no more deserving citizens in building up these private enterprises and making profit thereon. It is impartially distributed and equitably imposed. No tax can be more uniformly and widely laid. It is a tax on consumption. It is unfortunately a tax on what has become a necessary of life, and therefore relatively the poor pay more than the rich. As I believe all taxes are burdens, I do not advocate the sugar duty as a good thing; but as revenue must be raised by taxation, I do assert that in the present condition of our industrial enterprises and of our Treasury that in the assortment of taxes it is most unwise to repeal the duty on sugar; that of all our tariff taxes it is the easiest to be borne, the most uniform and impartial, and producing the largest revenue at the smallest cost and the least hardship.

The proposed bill takes from the revenue from sugar $11,346,707.98, and an average reduction on the present rates of 16.40 per cent. This is larger than the average reduction proposed by the committee in the pending bill, and, under all the circumstances, seemed the best that could be done. And I do not hesitate to appeal to the Committee of the Whole to vote down all amendments to this proposed schedule, which is the result of much labor, of frequent consultations, and of an earnest desire to reach a safe and just conclusion.

One word about bounties. The day for bounties is over. We might as well look these questions squarely in the face. The drift and current of public thought and the development of mankind are all in one direction.

The day is over when out of the National Treasury money taken from the people by taxation shall be paid to one private individual as a bonus to him for his private enterprise. It may temporarily survive in some of the States. It may be tried as some doctors try enormous doses of calomel or great bleeding. But it is over. It can not last. It is absolutely illusive. It is more so than the temptations on the Mount of Temptation. If the gentleman's proposition were adopted to-day and a bounty was given on sugar it would not last as long as the gentleman's term to which he will be re-elected. That is at an end.

It is true a protective tariff and a bounty are in some respects alike. Each is a bonus paid in the end by taxation upon the people for the private benefit of persons interested in enterprises that the Government thinks it due to the general good that they should be encouraged, but the result is private profit, private aggrandizement. Each is based on the conception that Government is paternal, and has a right to raise by taxation money for private purposes. The difference is that in the case of a bounty it is openly done. It is done by name. It is paid by the public Treasury. It is paid confessedly out of the money raised by taxation. It is so done that it can be accurately measured. If it be honest, if it be legitimate and the cause be proper, it may be made to appear plausible. The country knows how much it is paying; it knows to whom it is paying; it knows for what it is paying.

The protective tariff is a bonus paid to persons interested in these industrial enterprises. It is paid indirectly. So far as the amount is in the shape of duties and goes into the Treasury it is added to the cost of the foreign article, but exactly how much is added the purchaser never ascertains. So far as it operates upon a domestic article which comes in competition with the article upon which the duty is laid it is paid to the manufacturer, but the consumer does not know how much is paid, nor does he know to whom he pays—whether to the producer, that is, the manufacturer, or whether by some mysterious process of distribution part goes to the Government, part to the manufacturer, and part to the laborer. He pays it in an indirect way. The pill is sugar-coated. He would not pay it, and the system would not live ten years, if the amount that he had to pay thus indirectly and the person to whom he paid it could be definitely ascertained and definitely known.

But the day of the bounty is over. It is a mere illusion. Whatever votes it may obtain in this House, whatever strength it may have in the other House—and, of course, I mean no disrespect, it will operate as a pure sham. It is only a shadow; altogether a shadow. It will do no good to anybody except in one aspect. It will be an object-lesson by which the American people will somehow be more apt to learn what is a protective tariff and a bonus under it.

But it will not be adopted. It will not be adopted in this House. I do not believe even it will come as an affirmative proposition from the Senate. But if it does I have no idea it will be adopted by this Congress or any other Congress. It is simply a salve to the conscience of a protectionist who wants to get rid of the sugar duty, but does not exactly see how he can consistently do it, or it is to enable such a protectionist to get votes from somebody to help him carry it out.

Really at the bottom the reason for the repeal of the sugar duty, whether it be consciously realized or not, is with most of the gentlemen who are in favor of it simply because it holds out the hope that a duty so large if removed will give safety to the other protected industries which ask for duty. They imitate the ship-owner throwing over the least valuable of his goods to prevent his ship from foundering in a storm. It is like a man sacrificing part of his load to the wolves that are behind him to delay them in their progress. It is solely that so much revenue being taken away and the surplus being so much reduced this reformation, this revision of the tariff may be prevented.

I did not mean to take up so much time, Mr. Chairman. I only want to say in conclusion that I do not believe this question can be settled by the repeal of the tobacco and sugar tax; that in my judgment the American people, without regard to politics, have made up their minds that this tariff shall be revised; that these duties which are too great shall be reduced, and that those industries which have been built up under this tariff shall be cautiously and justly treated, that there shall be no recklessness in it. I believe the reason why the Mills bill, so much denounced, so often ridiculed, spoken of so lightly by gentlemen on the other side, has steadily grown in popular commendation [derisive laughter on the Republican side] is because it is a moderate, conservative, fair offer of a tentative proposition which can not injure any industry and which may be a benefit to all.

Mr. REED. What does the gentleman mean by a tentative proposition? On the way; on the road; a temporary stopping-place on the road?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Has the gentleman finished his question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. "Tentative," according to my view, does not mean anything about stopping on the road; nor is this bill a stopping on the road, nor is it meant to be, so far as I am concerned. It is meant to be an honest effort to revise the present tariff as to the matters that are touched by it, and will on the one hand give to the industries which at present have protection a fair and just protection according to that system which they believe in, and yet on the other hand will give to the purchaser of the goods which they manufacture the chance to have a fair and open competition in the American markets, so that trusts, monopolies, and combines can not take advantage of our acts and our tariff to make higher prices than are fair and just. That is what I mean. I trust it is satisfactory.

Mr. REED. Fair competition in the American markets with what?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. A fair competition in the American markets in all the necessities of life which have to be bought by the American people.

Mr. REED. Fair competition with what?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. With what?

Mr. REED. Yes; with goods from where?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. From wherever may be necessary in order to give a fair price to the man who earns his money and pays for the goods. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We propose that the man who is an American citizen, laboring for the support of himself and his family, shall not be compelled by the operation of American laws to give an exorbitant price for that which he has to buy. That is what I mean. I mean only that, but I mean that frankly; there is no concealment about it.

And now I want to say in conclusion, as the gentleman has asked his question, that as to the matters which this bill has touched (leaving those untouched for future adjustment) our hope is, our belief is—I say it with whatever value it may carry, which may be little in the eyes of the gentleman, but it is the result of much study and of great labor—we do believe that this bill if passed will, as to its more important schedules, as, for instance, the woolen schedule, result in giving to the woolen manufacturer a new and brighter day of prosperity, will drive from the American market the products that now come in from the foreign manufacturers, and will give the wool-grower of America a stable market; and I am in favor of it because I am in favor of the American workmen and the American wool-grower rather than of the foreign workman and the foreign wool-grower. [Jeers and derisive applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX. I am sure that the gentlemen on the other side, after having had the debate all to themselves throughout the day, will let us have a little say here without interruption.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman will have unlimited time.

Mr. COX. We have greatly enjoyed the debate of Republican gentlemen. Although you seem to be on different sides, yet, after all, you are together on the main idea connected with the tariff. In the earlier discussions upon this theme, years ago, when Mr. Speaker Kerr and Mr. Senator BECK and others were debating it here, I remember that gentlemen on this side who believed in the liberalities of commerce and the revision of our custom duties, often used the significant word "bounty." They undertook to express by it the per cent. of the tariff tax that was paid by the consumers, and not to the Treasury, but paid to parties and classes outside the Treasury.

"Bounty," sir, was the word. It has received new meaning to-day. In those discussions it was vehemently denied that the Republican party believed that the tax levied on the people in the shape of protection was a gratuity. But ah! how "truth creeps unawares upon caution!" Some of you proclaim to-day, openly and boldly, that you favor a bounty of some $6,000,000 to aid the sugar interest in lieu of "protection." When you desire to place sugar on the free-list, or partially so, you mean to be just to your idea of protection, by what? Why, by giving a bounty. In making that proposition the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is by no means inconsistent.

After all, is not a protective tariff based on bounties? Is not the tax, however insidiously, paid in cash? We all know that a tariff, by its peculiar operation, is more indirect and elastic in its boutifulness than a mere percentage on so much a pound, as on sugar, bestowed on the planter. Still, in the long run, it is no less a bonus or bounty. It is a sum given by the Government gratis, for the purpose of encouraging a peculiar kind of industry which otherwise would not exist or would fail.

In other words, gentlemen, your proposition makes the Treasury an eleemosynary institution. It pauperizes an honorable occupation. How proud and glad I was to see my highly respected friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], in the present tense and first person singular, offer to give away my constituents' money out of the Treasury to foster one occupation, and to the amount of $6,000,000 [laughter]. He tendered it without their asking for it, or asking us for it. Oh, how benevolent these gentlemen are with other people's money! Now, whether it be a bounty indirect in the form of protection, or a bounty direct, at so much a pound from the Treasury, its maintenance signally and logically illustrates the sophistry of all your fallacy in favor of protection, when you audaciously deny that a large proportion of the money taken from the people by the tariff never enters the Treasury, but goes to fatten the greed of the manufacturer.

It can be demonstrated that on all of the various articles that make up the tariff schedules five times as much of the unwarranted tax goes to interested and selfish parties outside of the Treasury as the amount that goes into the Treasury for revenue.

Sugar is a peculiar article. Sugar brings into the Treasury some $56,000,000 a year. All of that sum is revenue except some six millions. That sum is very kindly provided by the bountiful amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The fifty million of dollars which sugar brings into the Treasury is "revenue only." As a Democrat I believe in the doctrine of a tariff for revenue only. I applaud any proposition that creates such a relation as that to sugar.

But I would not pay a bounty in any guise on the production of sugar. I could not do that consistently with principle and platform. As one who does not believe in the creed of protection, I can not vote for bounties. They have no possible or constructive warrant. I would not do it in any way, however generous it might seem. As soon as you commence paying bounties on one article, where can you justly stop? You have to pay them on another and another, and so on without end. You can not help it. It is the only route to reach reasonable equality in the mode and fact of taxation; and when you reach that equality, all are burdened and no one aided.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Would you make sugar free?

Mr. COX. Now let me go right along. You had a good time on your side, all among yourselves, to-day. We were so happy to see you enjoying it. [Laughter.] You were like two colored people I have heard of down in Florida. They disputed all day about something, although they were both on the same side of the question. [Laughter.] That was the case with our Republican brethren here to-day. [Laughter.] They were each and all for protection—each and all for a bounty—one by an outlay of money, the other by adding to the cost of the article to the consumer, which, all the same, the producer received. Both desired the exaction, only they differed as to the mode.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Why does the gentleman locate that story in Florida? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Well, you may locate it in New Orleans, if you please. [Laughter.] On a former occasion I undertook to show what would be the percentage of bounty paid on pig-iron, cotton goods, and various other articles under the tariff. From the calculation then made I concluded that my proposition was approximately correct when I said that the great body of the tax paid by the people under the tariff never entered the Treasury, and that in effect the Treasury became a great charitable institution—the almoner of the people's money to help favored classes.

Gentlemen on the Ways and Means Committee have had in sugar a difficult subject to deal with. Sugar is a useful article in life. As an "infant" industry it is a good thing when made into candy [laughter], and I only wish that some of my friends on the other side—I am not looking at the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]—had had a little more saccharine matter in their early days. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. You are like all Democrats. You look right at me and then say you are not doing it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I am a little cross-eyed. I was looking at another man. [Laughter.]

If the tax on this necessary article of sugar, amounting to upwards of fifty millions of dollars, were the only tax paid on this article by the people, we might be more content, but there are vast sums, which I once computed here, paid under our protective system to the sugar refineries. The percentage of profit has been enormous, even before the trusts began to combine. Hence, the question has come to be one of popular interest beyond ordinary tariff schedules. It is a question whether protection has aided the home sugar production. If protection has not aided it, what will? No wonder gentlemen in good faith turn to bounties. If protection has failed to supply one-tenth of the sugar needed for home consumption, will bounties do any good to that end?

I am free to say, sir, that as between protective bounties and bounties in cash, I would, in case I were compelled to choose between them, prefer the open and candid bounties in cash. But I am not bound to choose either on principle or by the Constitution. I would prefer, in case of a choice, to do as we used to do with codfish, pay a bounty outright, and make a precious pretense of helping some remote interest.

The existing sugar duties well illustrate the theory of tariff protection in its most favorable aspect, yet they totally fail to accomplish their ostensible object. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would make the protective theory effective and plain to the commonest understanding by taking out of the pockets of the people $6,000,000 and paying that sum flagrantly to the sugar-growers. This is an operation that would perhaps if sugar were freed save sugar consumers $50,000,000 next year, and a proportionately larger sum each year following.

By this method, if applied to other tax-protected products, we could soon reduce the surplus revenues while "protecting" home industries! For example, we might pay directly to the constituents of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] $6.72 for each ton of pig-iron produced, and $22 per ton for charcoal bars and blooms, and from $17 to $22 per ton for iron and steel rails. It would only be doing directly what we have been doing indirectly. But I fear the people would not, when the facts were patent, go in that direction. At preset gentlemen draw the bounty-line at sugar and molasses.

I am not sanguine that any system of protection or bounty can save the sugar producing interest in the South. There are reasons for this remark on which I can not now dilate. Planters are unsettled in their condition. They are looking for changes to relieve them. The Times-Democrat, of New Orleans, of 7th January, 1887, said:

> Three years of ruinous prices have demonstrated the fact that however immutable the laws and methods of cultivation may be, the manufacturing business must be progressive here as it is in other portions of the world.

Is it true that this sugar industry is decaying? Can it be that it has no future which tariffs, however high, can help? If so, what good will bounties do to aid them?

Doubtless the sums paid into and outside of the Treasury do have the effect to stimulate the industries, at least for a time. Like other stimulus, it is not lasting and healthy. It defeats the object. Tariffs in giving bounties indirectly are more or less stimulative, just as a direct sum is stimulative to producers; and though the sum may not amount to the full sum of the cash bounty, yet in the end the large amounts paid by the consumer do go into the hands of men outside; otherwise why so much urgency and anxiety about protection?

Sugar is as indispensable as bread. Let us not wonder, therefore, that gentlemen who would cultivate the graces so as to be returned to Congress should seek to reduce largely the tax on sugar. It seems at first to be a popular measure and taking shibboleth. It is very sure to have a large support amongst the people, who will not reflect upon its object and consequences.

I should like to cut off, if I could justly to all other interests, more than $12,000,000 provided by the pending bill.

A MEMBER. Cut off 40 per cent. of duty.

Mr. COX. I do not know what I would cut if sugar only were the means or article for the surplus reduction. The Committee on Ways and Means have done their best, looking over the whole field, in taking off twelve millions, considering the various ramifications of the tariff all through our varied industries.

I was about to say, sir, that sugar is indispensable to human life. It is "necessary" for the nutrition of our bodies. It is needed by all, from the child who uses it in various forms of sweetness, to the man who wants it in his coffee—or I may say who craves it for his "free whisky." [Laughter and applause.] It helps to make blood. It preserves health. It prolongs life.

I have been told by old campaigners—and I see many around me here—by men who used to cross the plains, that they preferred a pound of sugar to that much flour in their emergencies on the route for the sustentation of the body. If you impose on this industry a bounty, then you have only shifting sand upon which to build your economic policy. It will have no permanency. You can not build on it as if it were a rock against which our political elements may beat, and beat in vain. You will be changing it from year to year. Such a policy, therefore, will unsettle business. Bounties have been tried in other countries and have failed. The system always will fail, even when not complicated by trusts and combinations. People will find in time that bounties will not sustain except temporarily their industries.

This sugar question is complicated otherwise than by various grades, standards, refineries, and greediness. I know what gentlemen mean when they talk about trusts. There are in the United States some fourteen sugar refineries. They have an aggregate capital of fifty millions. They control almost the entire consumption and production of refined sugar in our country.

There are trusts in and around the city of New York of potential and perilous magnitude. But the people of that city, led by Democratic and patriotic men, have recently petitioned the attorney-general of that State to take cognizance of the sugar trusts. They contended in their appeal that corporations which have made combinations and monopolies to manage and enhance the price of sugar are amenable to the criminal law. Their appeal to the attorney-general has been heeded. That officer answers them that he agrees with them. If the law be fearlessly executed, these conspirators against the people in their social needs will be penitentiarized. I hope that the officials of that State of New York will so take care of the interests of the people that these chartered or unchartered spoilers of fair and just trade may be suppressed.

Now, gentlemen, I did not intend to speak this warm afternoon. I say again, this side of the House thanks you for your intelligent disputations amongst yourselves this afternoon. [Laughter.] You have given us great satisfaction. In time the truth will arise from such discussions, and if truth prevails we will have no bounties of any kind, direct or indirect, by our legislation. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. REED. It is a great satisfaction to have had a whole day of truth, even if it was followed by twenty-five minutes on the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI, NEAR KANSAS CITY.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10628) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Clay County and Jackson County, Missouri, at a point to be selected consistent with the interests of river navigation, between Kansas City, Mo., and a point within 5 miles below said city, and put it upon its passage. I will say that this bill is in the usual form, approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, and I ask that the reading of it be dispensed with. There are two formal amendments suggested by the Committee on Commerce, which I ask to have adopted.

Mr. ADAMS. Let us hear what this is.

Mr. ROGERS. It is a bridge bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Where?

Mr. ROGERS. Across the Missouri River. It is reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ADAMS. Where to be located?

Mr. ROGERS. Five miles below Kansas City.

Mr. BAYNE. What is the width of the span proposed?

Mr. ROGERS. Four hundred feet, I think.

Mr. BAYNE. Is it approved by the Secretary of War?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir, and the Chief of Engineers. It is in the usual form of bridge bills.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it a high bridge or a draw bridge?

Mr. ROGERS. A draw bridge.

Mr. ADAMS. What are the Senate amendments?

Mr. ROGERS. The first is that—

Equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

And the second is an additional section:

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendments concurred in, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION, OHIO VALLEY.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution at this time, and ask its immediate consideration. I would like to state simply that some days ago the House passed a bill in reference to the centennial exhibition in Cincinnati. There was a proviso to that bill, which requires a declaration on the part of Congress. This resolution is to supply the omission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress passed May 9, 1888, and approved by the President of the United States, entitled "An act making appropriations to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government, and the Bureau of Agriculture, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the Centennial Exposition of the Ohio Valley and Central States, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, from July 4 to October 7, 1888," that the President of the United States may in his discretion make an order directing that any documents, papers, maps, books, or other exhibits which properly and pertinently relate to the establishment of civil government in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio River, may be sent upon an executive order from any of the several Departments in said act named, or from the exhibits now at Cincinnati; and that the appropriation of money in said act to defray the expenses of such exhibits may be applicable, in so far as the President of the United States may direct, to the payment of the expenses of the care, transportation to and return of such exhibits from Marietta; and the same shall be paid from such fund heretofore set apart for each Department, as the President may order.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888, was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GROSVENOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMS AND EQUIPMENTS, DISTRICT MILITIA.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass the joint resolution (H. Res. 161) to authorize the Secretary of War to issue arms and equipments to the militia of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue from the stores of the Army such arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster's stores, and camp equipage, to the militia of the District of Columbia as he may deem necessary for their proper equipment and instruction. The property so issued shall remain and continue to be the property of the United States, and shall be annually accounted for in such manner as the Secretary of War may require.

Mr. ADAMS. Is this an authorization or a direction?

Mr. MCADOO. It simply authorizes the Secretary of War.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCADOO moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOUTH CUMBERLAND BATTALION, KENTUCKY STATE TROOPS.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 9701) for the relief of the officers and enlisted men, and the widows, children, and dependent parents of the officers and enlisted men who served in the South Cumberland Battalion of Kentucky State Troops during the late war of the rebellion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection. The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I give notice that this one-sided business will be stopped after this.

ELEVENTH CENSUS.

Mr. COX, from the Committee on the Eleventh Census, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for taking the Eleventh and subsequent censuses; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived) the Speaker pro tempore declared the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 9, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, its further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate for distinctive paper for United States securities for 1889, and urging the amendment of the sundry civil appropriation in accordance with such estimate; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the General Conference of the Congregational Churches in Maine, praying for the repeal of all legislation which sustains and protects the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as beverages, and praying for further legislation prohibiting the importation and exportation of such liquors; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Knox County, Maine, praying for the passage of such amendments to the interstate-commerce law as will protect the public from existing evils which vitally affect their interests, and prevent further encroachments on their rights; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of C. Brownell, of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of Senate bill 2772, in relation to creating and establishing United States courts in the Indian Territory. This petition contains very valuable information, and is the result of the investigation of the treaties and authorities which have reference to the passage of that bill. This petition is so full of valuable information that I venture to ask that it be printed in document form for the use of the Senate.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of physicians and druggists, citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the repeal of the law classifying druggists as liquor dealers, and which requires them to take out a license of $25 therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented a petition of 66 citizens of Berrian County, Michigan, praying for certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COLQUITT presented a petition of citizens of Harris County, Georgia, praying that amendments be made to the interstate-commerce law whereby certain evils now suffered by the public may be prevented and further encroachments on their rights prevented; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. REAGAN presented the petition of J. H. Rose and 50 other citizens of Van Zandt County, Texas, praying for the passage of a law to prevent common carriers from transporting commodities in cars and other means of conveyance owned by the shipper, and to give informers the fines imposed for violations of the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a petition of citizens of Newton County, Mississippi, praying that certain amendments may be made to the interstate-commerce act; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a petition of sundry citizens of Howard County, Indiana, praying for the passage of certain amendments of the interstate-commerce law to protect them "from any more railway piracy," to use their own language. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of ex-soldiers of the Union Army, praying for the purchase by Congress of the portrait of General George H. Thomas, painted by Miss Ransom; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers, citizens of Lowell, Ind., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 52 citizens of the Fifth and Tenth Congressional districts of Indiana, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER, Mr. EVARTS, and Mr. BLAIR submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, and reported by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY M. BRIGGS.

Mr. SAWYER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the resolution of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

WIDOW OF JOHN A. TURLEY—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the bill (S. 845) granting a pension to the widow of John A. Turley, with the message of the President of the United States, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, with the veto message of the President of the United States, will be referred to the Committee on Pensions, if there be no objection, the message having been already read at length.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I should like to make one remark about the bill and message. I am unwilling to allow these vetoes to pass without a serious protest. I think it is changing our form of Government very rapidly. The fact that it excites no attention is one of the most alarming features.

There have been, in round numbers, since the present Administration came into power, about two hundred vetoes. They have been mainly vetoes of private pension bills. The average pensions are $12 a month, and two hundred such bills would make $24,000 a year. That is about the expense that would be involved if they had all passed.

Now, admitting that they are all wrong, that they ought not to have passed, that the committees of the two Houses are remiss in their duty, that they are negligent and their conduct reprehensible, and that the two Houses are inattentive to the responsibilities which are devolved upon them—admitting all that, is the emergency so great, the necessity so great to save from a few poor people the sum of $20,000 or $30,000 a year sufficient to warrant the Executive in assuming to act as a legislator upon every measure that is presented to him, to vote upon it as he would if in Congress?

It seems to me that no one has suggested or can suggest a reason for changing our form of government to save this pittance. It may be that the committees make mistakes; it may be that there are cases where the death did not ensue or the disability was not the result of injury received in the war, but there were special reasons given, and the committees acted undoubtedly conscientiously in coming to a conclusion.

The persons proposed to be relieved in all these cases are persons in great need, and in nearly all, I think, of the cases some of their relatives, a father, a husband, or a son, served the country in the war. They are poor and needy, and the committees have come to the conclusion conscientiously that they ought to receive this money. There may have been mistakes, but the pittance is so small, and the mistakes, if any, so slight and the necessities of the parties so great, they being poor and needy, and the expense to the Government so trifling, it seems to me that there is no such emergency as warrants the subversion of the whole theory of the Government and warrants the President in assuming the power of a legislator to make an argument against these bills.

There are few bills that pass Congress where a good argument can not be made against them. We hear such arguments made daily. To hear that argument alone seems conclusive; and very likely the President can assign reasons and make good arguments against many bills which pass, which would have considerable weight in a legislative body, because they are argued pro and con, and finally passed by a concurrence of the majority of sentiment. But because the President can make an argument against these poor people and in some cases show mistakes on the part of the committee, does it follow that he should subvert the design of the Government? The use of the power was only given to prevent unconstitutional measures and to protect the Executive from usurpation by Congress. I ask if that is a sufficient reason?

Has he assigned in these vetoes at any time a sufficient reason why the theory of our Government should be subverted? We had better pay millions of dollars every year than to have the precedent established that the President of the United States is at liberty to veto a bill whenever he differs as to the policy of it, when he differs as to the propriety of it, whenever he thinks that if he were in Congress he would vote against the bill.

I simply rose to enter my protest against the exercise of that power. It is simply a difference on a question of fact. He is as liable to be mistaken as the committee. It was never intended that the President should set up his judgment against the investigation of committees on questions of fact. The thing was never thought of in the discussions in the convention which framed the Constitution.

The reason why this power was admitted in the Constitution was to protect the Executive in great emergencies where there should be a unanimity of opinion that the necessity existed. It was stated by Hamilton and others as the reason why this might be safely intrusted to the Executive that it would be rarely exercised, and reference was made to the British Government where it had not been exercised by the Crown since the revolution. It had fallen into disuse, and there was no danger of it being used in this country except in great emergencies. But if it had been contemplated that it should be used where there was simply a difference of opinion it would not have received a vote in the convention that framed the Constitution. This is a new order of things, and I desire for one to protest against it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not proper that a statement like that made by the Senator from Nevada should pass unchallenged. If the conclusion arrived at by that Senator be correct, then the autonomy of our Government is entirely different from what was intended by the framers or as it has been understood by those who have come after them. The plain language of the Constitution is that every bill which passes both Houses of Congress shall be presented to the President and by him approved or returned with his objections to the house in which it originated.

The novel proposition that the amount of money involved in any bill limits and construes the duty of the Executive is so monstrous that to my mind it does not bear even a simple statement. If we are now to assume that only in great emergencies, as the Senator from Nevada says, can the President exercise the executive veto, then what tribunal is to determine when these emergencies arise? Who is to do away with the plain letter of the constitutional provision that every bill, whether it appropriates $1 or $5,000,000, shall receive the approval of the President or be by him returned with his objections to the house in which it originated?

The President of the United States, under his oath of office, is as much required to scrutinize the smallest pension bill that passes this and the other body of Congress and give it his approval or return it with his objections, as to pass upon the largest appropriation bill that was ever enacted in Congress in any year; and to hold anything else is simply to render that provision of the Constitution absolutely nugatory, and to make this what Mr. Hamilton intended it to be, a Government of unlimited Congressional power without any check upon both branches of Congress if they saw proper to pass any bill which came within their idea of what was for the general welfare of the country.

I simply want to say here now that this novel proposition that the amount appropriated in a bill is to construe the Constitution, it seems to me is absolutely without foundation and can not be sustained by any sort of argument.

Mr. STEWART. I think that the Senator from Missouri must have overlooked the discussion which took place when this provision was placed in the Constitution. The discussions all pointed to great emergencies, when the constitutional power of the Executive should be invaded, and not to ordinary legislation. For the President of the United States to occupy his time in determining whether an injury received twenty-five years ago in the war resulted in death, after testimony has been taken by a committee upon that subject investigating it as an original question, I say is a novel proposition, never heard of before, never dreamed of by the framers of the Constitution, and never practiced by the earlier Presidents.

Washington vetoed but two bills, one because he thought it was in conflict with the Constitution, the other because it was a mistake. Jefferson during his eight years vetoed none. John Quincy Adams vetoed none. I can not give the exact number, but up to 1830 there were only a few, eight or ten bills vetoed in all, and up to the commencement of this administration there were only one hundred and thirty-three bills vetoed by the Presidents of the United States during ninety-six years, and in less than three years since this administration commenced we have the enormous number of two hundred, in round numbers.

It seems to me this is a departure from the earlier history. Be it remembered, too, that during the time of all the earlier administrations there were pension bills constantly passed for soldiers of the Revolutionary war, for the war of 1812, and for the Mexican war. The old Committee on Revolutionary Claims is still in existence, and in the earlier period it granted private pensions constantly, and no President put his veto upon one of the pension bills that was passed by Congress. I say of all the private pension bills for the Revolution, for the last war with Great Britain, and for the Mexican war, not one was vetoed, and it was reserved for this Administration to veto in three years two hundred pension bills.

This is the beginning of the veto of pension bills, but it is not the beginning of pension bills, for they were among the first that were passed under Washington's administration, and every one was signed. Jefferson did the same, and so did all the earlier Presidents. During all the history of this country only five pension bills were vetoed previous to the present Administration, and those President Grant vetoed for mistakes made against the interest of the pensioners, for the purpose of correcting such mistakes and doing justice to the persons intended to be benefited.

It seems to me that the understanding of the Presidents of the earlier times of the Constitution as it was is something to be considered, and that this is a new departure. This veto of pension bills, for the purpose of depriving needy beneficiaries who have served their country of a pittance awarded by Congress, as charity or otherwise, is something unheard of in the history of this country. It has been hitherto left to Congress to consider exceptional cases—cases that the general law did not provide for, but which seemed to present peculiar instances of hardship and distress which it was the duty of Congress to relieve. The practice, I say, of passing private pension bills was pursued for a hundred years, and they were never met by vetoes until now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, with the accompanying message of the President of the United States, having been read at length, will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday morning after the morning hour I shall address the Senate upon the treaty now pending between the United States and Great Britain.

OHIO VALLEY CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider House joint resolution 196, which has just come from the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length as in Committee of the Whole, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall hear it read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for information, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That it is the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress passed May 9, 1888, and approved by the President of the United States, entitled "An act making appropriations to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government, and the Bureau of Agriculture, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the Centennial Exposition of the Ohio Valley and Central States, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, from July 4 to October 7, 1888," that the President of the United States may in his discretion make an order directing that any documents, papers, maps, books, or other exhibits which properly and pertinently relate to the establishment of civil government in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio River, may be sent upon an executive order from any of the several Departments in said act named, or from the exhibits now at Cincinnati; and that the appropriation of money in said act to defray the expenses of such exhibits may be made applicable, in so far as the President of the United States may direct, to the payment of the expenses of the care, transportation to and return of such exhibits from Marietta; and the same shall be paid from such fund heretofore set apart for each Department, as the President may order.

Mr. PAYNE. I can explain the joint resolution in a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I understand it. It ought to go to a committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Some doubt arose under the act whether the expense for transporting some of these exhibits from Cincinnati to Marietta and returning them should be paid out of that fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it were only that, I should certainly be in favor of it, because it is clearly the meaning and intent of the original act, but the joint resolution is so drawn that it will authorize the President of the United States, and almost invite him, to send the original ordinance of 1787 establishing the Territory Northwest of the Ohio to Marietta for exhibition. For one I do not want to trust that precious historic document out of the fire-proof place in the District of Columbia where it is kept, because there is danger in respect of any original document of great historic interest in its being carried round the country from place to place for exhibition. I do not want to vote in favor of allowing the President of the United States to send that document from the place where it is now kept, for any purpose whatever.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to correct the Senator. There is not the remotest possibility of anything of that kind occurring. The exhibits are already at Cincinnati, and the question now arises whether the expense of transporting such as may be selected to Marietta and returning them shall be paid out of the appropriation. It involves no new expenditure whatever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection to the matter of expense (we are all for the expense always), but the joint resolution is so drawn that it will give the President authority to do the thing I have described and that was spoken of before the passage of the original joint resolution in regard to the exposition, and which, as I remember it, was opposed (I do not mean in debate, but in conversation about it) by those who thought that it was not a wise thing to intrust to anybody original papers of that character.

I wish, therefore, that my friend would let the joint resolution lie for a few minutes until I can look at the original act and see if it goes any further.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to get it through this morning. I have an amendment that I wish to offer to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS Let it lie for a few minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will send the amendment I propose to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object for the present. Just let it lie aside, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects, and the joint resolution will lie on the table without being referred.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] offers an amendment to be proposed to the joint resolution when it is up for consideration, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the completion or modification of series of objects which in the judgment of the heads of Departments are necessary for the purposes of the act providing for these exhibitions.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to explain the amendment. One of the Auditors of the Treasury has raised some question whether a canoe which is now nearly completed after the model of one a hundred years ago can be completed at the expense of that fund. It is a very simple thing; I do not think it amounts to much; but it is the desire that this provision be made.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 9911) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Hulse; and
A bill (H. R. 9920) granting a pension to Daniel K. Harris.

The bill (H. R. 8183) for the erection of a public building at Opelousas, La., was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (H. R. 10628) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, between Clay County and Jackson County, Missouri, at a point to be selected consistent with the interests of river navigation, between Kansas City, Mo., and a point within 5 miles below said city, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 7452) for the relief of the Southern Illinois Normal University;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 161) to authorize the Secretary of War to issue arms and equipments to the militia of the District of Columbia; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 195) electing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to fill vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of members of the present board of managers on the 21st day of April, 1888.

SAN JUAN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1983) to ratify an act entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan," in the Territory of New Mexico, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

C. K. DAVIS,
WM. M. STEWART,
M. C. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. B. KILGORE,
W. M. SPRINGER,
WM. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

OHIO VALLEY CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the joint resolution relative to the Ohio Valley centennial exposition may now have consideration. I propose to amend the proposition, to fix a limitation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the text in line 12, after the word "maps," by inserting "not original;" so as to read:

Documents, papers, maps (not original), books, or other exhibits, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] moved an amendment which I wish to amend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio he has a right to modify. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution:

And nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the completion or modification of series of objects which, in the judgment of the heads of Departments, are necessary for the purposes of the act providing for these exhibitions, nor to authorize the removal from their places of deposit in Washington City of any original papers or documents or laws or ordinances whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHERMAN subsequently said: I ask that the joint resolution in regard to the Ohio Valley centennial exposition be withheld for the present. I wish to move a reconsideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888, was passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is merely for the purpose of making an inquiry.

THE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is no further morning business, I move to take up Senate bill 2851 for consideration at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read at length is open to amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I have nothing to say beyond what I said before I left the city some days ago. I was not aware that the bill had been read at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read at length on the 12th of June. The question is on the first amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 8, after the word "keep," the Committee on Interstate Commerce reported an amendment to strike out "for" and insert "open to;" in line 12, after the words "upon its," to strike out "railroad, as defined by the first section of this act," and insert "route;" in line 16, after the word "force," to strike out "upon such railroad;" in line 21, after the word "type," to strike out "of at least the size of ordinary pica;" in line 22, after the word "depot," to strike out "or station upon any such railroad" and insert "station or office of such carrier where passengers or freight, respectively, so received for transportation;" and in line 25, after the word "they," to insert "shall be accessible to the public and;" so as to read:

That section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall print and keep open to public inspection schedules showing the rates and fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property which any such common carrier has established and which are in force at the time upon its route. The schedules printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places upon its railroad between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force, and shall also state separately the terminal charges and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates and fares and charges. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type and copies for the use of the public shall be kept in every depot, station, or office of such carrier where passengers or freight, respectively, are received for transportation, in such places and in such form that they shall be accessible to the public and can be conveniently inspected."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 30, after the word "keep," to strike out "for" and insert "open to;" and in line 31, after the word "depot," to insert "or office;" so as to read:

Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act receiving freight in the United States to be carried through a foreign country to any place in the United States shall also in like manner print and keep open to public inspection, at every depot or office where such freight is received for shipment, schedules showing the through rates established and charged by such common carrier to all points in the United States beyond the foreign country to which it accepts freight for shipment; and any freight shipped from the United States through a foreign country into the United States, the through rate on which shall not have been made public as required by this act, shall, before it is admitted into the United States from said foreign country, be subject to custom duties as if said freight were of foreign production; and any law in conflict with this section is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 51, after the word "kept," to strike out "for" and insert "open to;" so as to read:

No advance shall be made in the rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published as aforesaid by any common carrier in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after ten days' public notice, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect; and the proposed changes shall be shown by printing new schedules, or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept open to public inspection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 51, after the word "inspection," to strike out:

Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges may be made without previous public notice; but whenever any such reduction is made, notice of the same shall immediately be publicly posted, and the changes made shall immediately be made public by printing new schedules, or shall immediately be plainly indicated upon the schedules at the time in force and kept for public inspection.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges shall only be made after three days' previous public notice, to be given in the same manner that notice of an advance in rates must be given.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after the word "published," in line 95, to strike out:

But no common carrier, party to any such joint tariff, shall be liable for the failure of any other common carrier, party thereto, to observe and adhere to the rates, fares, or charges thus made and published.

So as to make the clause read:

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall file with the commission hereinafter provided for copies of its schedule of rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published in compliance with the requirements of this section, and shall promptly notify said commission of all changes made in the same. Every such common carrier shall also file with said commission copies of all contracts, agreements, or arrangements with other common carriers in relation to any traffic affected by the provisions of this act to which it may be a party. And in cases where passengers and freight pass over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several common carriers operating such lines or routes establish joint tariffs of rates or fares or charges for such continuous lines or routes, copies of such joint tariffs shall also, in like manner, be filed with said commission. Such joint rates, fares, and charges on such continuous lines so filed as aforesaid shall be made public by such common carrier when directed by said commission, in so far as may, in the judgment of the commission, be deemed practicable; and said commission shall from time to time prescribe the measure of publicity which shall be given to such rates, fares, and charges, or to such part of them as it may deem it practicable for such common carriers to publish, and the places in which they shall be published.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 99, to insert:

No advance shall be made in joint rates, fares, and charges, shown upon joint tariffs, except after ten days' notice to the commission, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect. No reduction shall be made in joint rates, fares, and charges, except after three days' notice, to be given to the commission as is above provided in the case of an advance of joint rates. The commission may make public such proposed advances, or such reductions, in such manner as may, in its judgment, be deemed practicable, and may prescribe from time to time the measure of publicity which common carriers shall give to advances or reductions in joint tariffs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 113, to insert:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier, party to any joint tariff, to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of persons or property, or for any service in connection therewith, between any points as to which a joint rate, fare, or charge is named thereon than is specified in the schedule filed with the commission in force at the time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 120, to insert:

The commission may determine and prescribe the form in which the schedules required by this section to be kept open to public inspection shall be prepared and arranged, and may change the form from time to time as shall be found expedient.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 21, after the word "offense," to insert:

Provided, That if the offense for which any person shall be convicted as aforesaid shall be an unlawful discrimination in rates, fares, or charges for the transportation of passengers or property, such person shall, in addition to the fine hereinbefore provided for, be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that I am authorized by the committee, but there seems to be some doubt as to the meaning of the language used, whether it means "imprisonment in the penitentiary" or not. I think the judgment was that it did, but I am inclined to think it may not, and I am therefore willing that the Senate shall insert, after the word "imprisonment," in line 26, the words "in the penitentiary."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois proposes to amend the amendment by inserting, after the word "imprisonment," in line 26, the words "in the penitentiary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 2, after line 28, to insert:

Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any officer or agent thereof, or any person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, shall knowingly and willfully assist, or shall willingly suffer or permit, any person or persons to obtain transportation for property at less than the regular rates then established and in force on the line of transportation of such common carrier, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each offense.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the same words be inserted in line 42, after the word "imprisonment." I move to insert there the words "in the penitentiary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 2, after line 44, to insert:

Any person and any officer or agent of any corporation or company who shall deliver property for transportation to any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, or for whom as consignor or consignee any such carrier shall transport property, who shall knowingly and willfully, by false billing, false classification, false weighing, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of the carrier, its agent or agents, obtain transportation for such property at less than the regular rates then established and in force on the line of transportation, shall be deemed guilty of fraud, which is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject for each offense to a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. CULLOM. After the word "imprisonment," in line 60, in the amendment, I move to insert the words "in the penitentiary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 2, after line 61, to insert:

If any such person, or any officer or agent of any such corporation or company, shall, by payment of money or other thing of value, solicitation, or otherwise, induce any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or any of its officers or agents, to discriminate unjustly in his, its, or their favor as against any other consignor or consignee in the transportation of property, or shall aid or abet any common carrier in any such unjust discrimination, such person, or such officer or agent of such corporation or company, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent authority within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each offense; and such person, corporation, or company shall also, together with said common carrier, be liable, jointly or severally, in an action on the case to be brought by any consignor or consignee discriminated against in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction for all damages caused by or resulting therefrom.

Mr. CULLOM. After the word "imprisonment," in line 75 of the amendment, I move to insert the words "in the penitentiary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 3, line 12, after the word "require," to insert "by subpœna;" in line 15, after the words "investigation and," to strike out "to that end" and insert "in case of disobedience to a subpœna, the commission, or any party to a proceeding before the commission;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That section 12 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That the commission hereby created shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and methods in which the same is conducted, and shall have the right to obtain from such common carriers full and complete information necessary to enable the commission to perform the duties and carry out the objects for which it was created; and for the purposes of this act the commission shall have power to require, by subpœna, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna, the commission, or any party to a proceeding before the commission, may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 4, after line 15, to insert:

The commission may provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use, and such authorized publications shall be competent evidence of the reports and decisions of the commission therein contained, in all courts of the United States and of the several States, without any further proof or authentication thereof. The commission may also cause to be printed for early distribution its annual reports.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 20, after the word "affirmations," to insert "and sign subpœnas;" so as to read:

Either of the members of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations and sign subpœnas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 11, after the word "duties," to strike out:

Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The commission shall be furnished by the Secretary of the Interior with suitable offices and all necessary office supplies.

And insert:

Until otherwise provided by law, the commission may hire suitable offices for its use, and shall have authority to procure all necessary office supplies.

So as to read:

SEC. 6. That section 18 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. That each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, payable in the same manner as the salaries of judges of the courts of the United States. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $3,500, payable in like manner. The commission shall have authority
